2007

UMass kicks off 2007 season. Page C1 | From Italy to Africa: a summer of travel. Page B1

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily Est. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 81 LO: 51 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | FALL BACK TO SCHOOL 2007

Change looms ahead for UMass

Interim chancellor Cole arrives, fills Lombardi's shoes

By Katie Huston
Collegian Staff

Dr. Thomas W. Cole, Jr., the former president of Clark Atlanta University, began his yearlong appointment as interim chancellor of the University of Massachusetts Amherst on Sept. 1.

The Board of Trustees ratified Cole last month after UMass President Jack Wilson recommended him for the post.

"Thomas Cole is a distinguished educator who has the experience, passion and vision to be an outstanding interim chancellor for our flagship campus in Amherst," said Wilson. "I am confident that he will set a very high bar and inspire others during his time at UMass Amherst."

Cole said he was "pleased and honored" to be named interim chancellor "I was just overwhelmed by the reception that I received," he said.

He made his first visit to the flagship campus on Aug. 15, while a private party was held in his honor.

"It's wonderful, beautiful here," he said.

"I know a lot of great people, alumni, current people on staff, that make a very, positive statement about the kind of quality produced here. This is a university I've always heard a lot of really good things about."

He's filling the shoes of outgoing chancellor John V. Lombardi, who is now the president of the Louisiana State University system.

During Cole's tenure, a 24-member committee appointed by the trustees will conduct a national search for a long-term replacement for Lombardi. Cole has said he does not want to be considered for the permanent position.

Cole served as president of Clark Atlanta University from 1989 to 2002. He was also the president of West Virginia State College from 1982 to 1986, and was chancellor of the West Virginia Board of Regents, one of only four African-Americans to head a public state higher-education system.

From 2004 to 2006, he was the president and CEO of Great Schools Atlanta, a citywide-based local education fund that supports Atlanta Public Schools. He has returned from retirement to take up the position at UMass, where he'll earn $310,000 this year.

"There were other opportunities that I would have come out of retirement for, but I have always had a deep feeling for the special nature and the academic quality of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst," he said. "It truly is an institution that makes a difference for Massachusetts and for

See COLE on page 9

"Forced centralization won't improve the quality of our system... Our experience here will decline if this plan is the blueprint for the future of UMass."
-Mishy Leiblunt, on the "One University Plan."

Wilson presents UM restructuring proposal

By Anna Dolianitis
Collegian Staff

A mid-May proposal calling for the centralization and restructuring of the University of Massachusetts system was put forth by UMass President Jack Wilson and Board of Trustees Chairman Steve Tocco, raising controversy among University faculty and alumni.

The plan, loosely referred to as the "Vision for One University" and the "One University Plan," proposed a collaboration of leadership positions on the five UMass campuses, as well as a consolidation of administrative offices.

"The proposal, really, was an effort on my part to think about what we could better do to enhance the University of Massachusetts and the flagship of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst," said Wilson in an address to the Faculty Senate on May 24.

The plan came under immediate scrutiny in the campus community because of the secretive manner in which it came out to the public. Essentially, the plan was leaked after a dinner meeting May 3 with Wilson and the members of the Board of Trustees.

"The process for formulating the 'One University' plan was fast tracked and highly autocratic," said student trustee Mishy Leiblum, who was present at the dinner meeting.

The dinner meeting was held for the stated purpose of generating a discussion among mem-

See PROPOSAL on page 7

Members of Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc., and UMass Alumni presented former chancellor John Lombardi with a check for $500,001 for the Stockbridge School of Agriculture. The money will be used for an endowed professorship in the school.

UM frat row deal closed

By Eric Artuso
Collegian Staff

Following three years of negotiations, the land known as Frat Row was sold to the University of Massachusetts last June, officially bringing to end an era of partying and pledging along North Pleasant Street.

The land – which used to be home to five fraternity and sorority houses before it was demolished – was bought by the university for $2.5 million, and could be used as an academic site, a UMass official said.

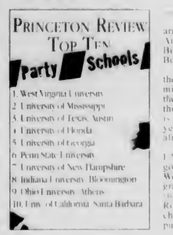
For years, Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc., the company that owned the land for decades, had been in talks with UMass officials.

After both sides went back and forth on an appropriate price tag, they finally settled on March 10, 2006, shaking hands on $2.5 million. It would be over a year before the closing would actually take place and the deal would be complete.

See FRAT ROW on page 9

UMass falls from national list of top party schools

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff



While new students will be drinking in the UMass scenery during opening week, returning students may be drinking up in hopes of restoring the University to its former glory – or disrepute.

UMass, once a staple of The Princeton Review's national ranking of the top party schools, has fallen off the list completely this year. The University placed ninth on the list in 2006 and rose two spots to seventh in last year's collection of The Princeton Review's 62 rankings, compiled in its annually published guidebook, "The Best 366 Colleges." First published in 1992, the guidebook is a comprehensive look at all aspects of the college experience, including faculty, financial aid, and dining services.

According to the review's Web site, the ranking is based on a combination of survey questions directed at UMass students addressing the use of alcohol and drugs, hours of study each day, and the popularity of Greek life.

Though the omission of UMass from the notorious national ranking of party schools could be considered a move in the right direction towards shedding the University's infamous reputation, UMass spokesman Patrick Callahan called the survey "junk science," declaring it as neither credible nor valid.

"The ranking is based on a random opinion survey of a small num-

See PARTY SCHOOL on page 9

$833m needed for 'New Dirt'

Student Union, South College earmarked for replacement

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

For a campus that's been around since 1863, UMass Amherst wears her years well. But lately she's been injecting Botox into her wrinkles.

A new campus report assessed the need for an additional $833 million to invest in facilities over the next five years. According to the report, an extra $524 million is needed for the following five years and $147 million is needed after 10 years.

"[Having the money] makes UMass more competitive for good students and good faculty. We'll be more competitive for grants and part of an engine of success and improvement," said Robert Francis, the assistant vice chancellor for facilities and campus services.

Francis, Joyce Hatch, vice chancellor of administration and finance, James Cahill, director of facilities and campus planning, and other UMass leaders have all been instrumental in analyzing data for the report.

Not only must building needs be addressed and allotted funds,

See NEW DIRT on page 7

Skinner Hall is one of many campus buildings in need of renovation, according to a new report that calls for an infusion of $1.8 million over the next 10 years for infrastructure at UMass.

2007

WWW.OCMP.COM :: 888-211-6267

BELOW ARE THE RESTAURANTS ACCEPTING YOUR MEAL PLAN FOR THE FALL 07 SEMESTER

- Antonio's Pizza/31 N Pleasant
- All Fired Up!/48 Russell St
- Cousin's Market/11 E Pleasant St
- Crazy Noodles Cafe/36 Main St
- Rao's Coffee/17 Kellogg St-NEW
- Rolando's/25 N Pleasant St-NEW
- Pho Noodle Soup/41 Boltwood Walk
- Pioneer Valley Pizza/20 Belchertown Rd
- Pizza Shark/17B Montague Rd
- Sibie's Pizza/481 W est St-NEW
- Subway/189 Russell St
- Subway/4 Main St
- Subway/Hampshire Mall-NEW
- Sugar Jones Cookies/1 E Pleasant St
- Thai Corner/31 Boltwood Walk
- The Pub/15 E Pleasant St
- The Sub/33 E Pleasant St
- Toasted Owl (NOHO)/21 Main St
- Wings/55 University Dr
- Zhang's Kitchen/460 West St
- Union Station (NOHO)/125-A Pleasant St
- Andiamo/485 West St
- Athena's Pizza/65 University Dr
- Ben & Jerry's/19 N Pleasant St
- Bertucci's/155 Otis St
- Big Y/175 University Dr
- Black Sheep/79 Main St
- Bruno's/363 Main St
- GROCERY STORE-Whole Foods Market/327 Russell St-NEW
- Burger King/158 College Hwy
- Chili's/426 Russell St
- Amherst Market/259 Triangle St
- Dominos Pizza/459 Russell St
- DP Dough/96 N Pleasant St
- FATZO'S/25 N Pleasant St
- Fitzwilly's (NOHO)/23 Main St
- Fresh Side Cafe/39 N Pleasant St
- Friendly's/455 Russell St
- The Harp/163 Sunderland Rd
- Judie's/51 N Pleasant St
- Bueno Y Sano/1 Boltwood Walk
- Chicago Pizza/150 Fearing St
- Chili's/426 Russell St
- China Dynasty/351 Northampton Rd
- Cushman Market & Cafe/491 A Pine St
- Joe's Greek Place/367 Russel St-NEW
- Amherst Brewing Company/24-36 N Pleasant St
- Baku African Restaurant/197 N Pleasant St
- Elijah's Boltwood Tavern at Lord Jeffery/30 Boltwood Ave
- Goten of Japan/104 Old Amherst Rd
- Ground Round/Hampshire Mall
- House of Teriyaki/1177 N Pleasant St
- KFC/3 S Maple St
- Bart's Homemade/103 N Pleasant St
- Bruegger's Bagels/170 N Pleasant St
- La Veracruzana (NOHO)/31 Main St
- La Veracruzana/63 S Pleasant St
- Lone Wolf Cafe/63 Main St
- Loose Goose Cafe/1 E Pleasant St
- Newman Center/472 N Pleasant St
- Panda East/103 N Pleasant St
- Panera Bread/351 Russell St
- Pasta E Basta/26 Main St
- Pete's Drive-In/287 Russell St
- Pinocchio's/57 N Pleasant St
- Pizza Hut/424 Russell St
- Primo Pizza Too/255 Triangle St
- Quiznos/181 D University Dr
- Rafters/422 Amity St
- Rt. 9 Diner/453-11 Russell St
- Sbarro/Hampshire Mall
- Souper Bowl/96 N Pleasant St

REMINDER
MEAL PLAN REGISTRATION
BEGINS AUGUST 28TH
SIGN-UP ONLINE OR OVER THE PHONE:
CALL: 888-211-6267
ONLINE: WWW.OCMP.COM

New scholarship to honor fallen UMass soldier

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Lance Cpl. Eric P. Valdepeñas never had a chance to graduate from the University of Massachusetts. Valdepeñas, a marine who put his studies on hold to serve his country, was killed when a roadside bomb exploded near him one year ago this month.

A new scholarship under Valdepeñas's name will allow him to symbolically finish what he started at UMass, said his sister, Karen Ing.

"I know he wanted to go back once he came back from Iraq and hit the books again," said Ing, "but he wasn't able to do that."

The "Lance Corporal Eric Paul Valdepeñas Scholarship" will be awarded to one Isenberg School of Management student every year. The student must display the same traits that Valdepeñas once did as a student.

A native of Seekonk, Mass., Valdepeñas was a 21-year-old sophomore at UMass when his unit was called up in December 2005, and he was deployed to Iraq. A member of the 1st Battalion, 25th Marines, weapons company, and a machine gunner, Valdepeñas was killed on Sept. 4, 2006 while on patrol in the Al Anbar Province. Since Valdepeñas was never able to return to Amherst, Ing said the scholarship was later created "to carry out what he couldn't finish."

The scholarship was spearheaded by J. Brian Palmer, a UMass alumnus and co-worker of Ing. When Palmer first heard that Valdepeñas had been killed in battle, he said he was deeply affected.

Over time, Palmer began coming up with ideas to honor Valdepeñas and his service to the country. Eventually, with the help of Ing, Palmer created the scholarship and committed $36,000 to it.

"I'm pretty proud that someone like that would go to UMass," said Palmer, of North Grafton. "He's a real heroic kid and supporting the University financially, it seemed like the perfect fit."

White Mountains Insurance Group, where Palmer works as the Chief Financial Officer, has also committed $1,000 in matching funds for the scholarship. Applicants for the scholarship must be someone who "actively participates in the community, demonstrates good character and has a documented financial need," states a press release.

Palmer said anyone applying most likely will also have to submit an essay that family members of Valdepeñas would read. Ing said other family members also attended UMass.

"Above all, Brian is honoring Eric's own sense of honor," said Lou Wigdor, a spokesman for the School of Management. Wigdor said the scholarship will kick in this spring and will be awarded to one student per year.

Although the scholarship is being offered to SOM students, Valdepeñas was an engineering major while attending UMass. When composing the scholarship, Ing said the main objective was to build it around the type of person Valdepeñas was.

"Really what we did was we based the scholarship around what embodied Eric," said Ing, "in terms of being a good person, a good moral character, someone who liked to do a lot of volunteer work."

Palmer said he was impressed with Valdepeñas's courageous decision to leave school and serve in the military. Valdepeñas's unit was scheduled to return about a month after he was killed.

"I think what made it difficult and probably a little more touching in a way was that he was so young," said Palmer. "He put himself in harm's way for something he believed in. To me, it just made sense to set up a scholarship honoring that type of dedication."

Eric Athas can be reached at eathas at student.umass.edu.

Eric Valdepeñas, a 21-year-old sophomore, was killed in action last December while serving in Iraq with the 25th Marines.

Campus 'wiki' integrated into classroom curriculum

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

A new Web site, Web encyclopedia (better known as a "wiki") and student resource is picking up speed at the University of Massachusetts. The website, umasswiki.com, created by UMass graduate Gordon Morehouse and Smart Cat Media, acts like the well-known wikipedia.com by providing information and allowing users to edit or add content.

UMassWiki was founded nearly two years ago as an answer to frequently asked questions about the UMass community, but was created outside the classroom.

Smart Cat Media, an alumnus-run business, helped create the site, though Morehouse, a 2007 computer science graduate, works as the site's operator.

"UMassWiki's primary mission is to make information about UMass and the surrounding communities available to students, faculty, alumni and locals," said Morehouse. "From a technical standpoint, the wiki allows multiple students to collaborate on a single page, which can be anything from an article about UMass to a paper for a class."

In April 2007, the Web site already had a million hits. At the end of the spring semester, it received key upgrades, making the site move faster.

The upgrade will prepare UMassWiki for a bigger crowd of users when classes start in September.

At the same time, the site also changed its look to colors inspired by UMass of gray, maroon and white.

The front page of the Web site shows links to the most popular pages, including Bruno's Pizza, a list of bars in Amherst and information on Southwest Residential Area, as well as important dates at UMass and a list of pages that need editing.

UMassWiki is one of the leading student-run wikis for a higher education community, alongside the wikis created at Columbia University (WikiCU), Oberlin College (OberWiki) and Duke University (Dukiki).

The site will also be used to teach two classes this fall. Graduate student Stephanie Jo Kent, who teaches English 112 and Communications 375, will use UMassWiki as a peer editing tool.

"Every version of every article that ever existed is stored on the wiki, and there's an easy way to compare any two versions to see what was added, deleted or changed," said Morehouse. "This makes it a great platform for peer editing."

Kent, a communications major, has already used the wiki to teach classes for three semesters, but will now make the site a much larger part of class as well as homework. Any user on UMassWiki, whether in Kent's class or not, may view work done by students in the class and can even edit it.

A list of the semester's assignments and due dates are also available on the site.

"I believe the way UMassWiki can change the way students do work is through its strengths as a means for peer editing and review," said Morehouse.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury at student.umass.edu.

UMassWiki
Your UMass Encyclopedia
read ★ edit ★ build

Want to write for the Daily Collegian?
E-mail:
news@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 1

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Esterr
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Staigin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Emily Nichols
Asst. Arts & Living Olga Dvochenko
Asst. Arts & Living Evan Mcskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Assistant News Cara Grannemann
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael Kang
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaikie
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the school year at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on revenue generated by advertising. Founded in 1890, the paper is one of the oldest college daily newspapers in the country. It became the Collegian in 1904 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been recognized since January 1996 for excellence. Mail subscriptions are available for the entire year for $150. For more information, call Mercury Mailing Service at 508-746-3385. Periodicals postage paid at Amherst, MA 01002. Postmaster: Send address changes to the Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Katie Huston

Copy Editor
Meghan Murphy

Production Supervisor
Chris Martin

WWW.OCMP.COM :: 888-211-6267

BELOW ARE THE RESTAURANTS ACCEPTING YOUR MEAL PLAN FOR THE FALL 07 SEMESTER

- Antonio's Pizza/31 N Pleasant
- All Fired Up!/48 Russell St
- Cousin's Market/11 E Pleasant St
- Crazy Noodles Cafe/36 Main St
- Rao's Coffee/17 Kellogg St-NEW
- Rolando's/25 N Pleasant St-NEW
- Pho Noodle Soup/41 Boltwood Walk
- Pioneer Valley Pizza/20 Belchertown Rd
- Pizza Shark/17B Montague Rd
- Sibie's Pizza/481 W est St-NEW
- Subway/189 Russell St
- Subway/4 Main St
- Subway/Hampshire Mall-NEW
- Sugar Jones Cookies/1 E Pleasant St
- Thai Corner/31 Boltwood Walk
- The Pub/15 E Pleasant St
- The Sub/33 E Pleasant St
- Toasted Owl (NOHO)/21 Main St
- Wings/55 University Dr
- Zhang's Kitchen/460 West St
- Union Station (NOHO)/125-A Pleasant St
- Andiamo/485 West St
- Athena's Pizza/65 University Dr
- Ben & Jerry's/19 N Pleasant St
- Bertucci's/155 Otis St
- Big Y/175 University Dr
- Black Sheep/79 Main St
- Bruno's/363 Main St
- GROCERY STORE-Whole Foods Market/327 Russell St-NEW
- Burger King/158 College Hwy
- Chili's/426 Russell St
- Amherst Market/259 Triangle St
- Dominos Pizza/459 Russell St
- DP Dough/96 N Pleasant St
- FATZO'S/25 N Pleasant St
- Fitzwilly's (NOHO)/23 Main St
- Fresh Side Cafe/39 N Pleasant St
- Friendly's/455 Russell St
- The Harp/163 Sunderland Rd
- Judie's/51 N Pleasant St
- Bueno Y Sano/1 Boltwood Walk
- Chicago Pizza/150 Fearing St
- Chili's/426 Russell St
- China Dynasty/351 Northampton Rd
- Cushman Market & Cafe/491 A Pine St
- Joe's Greek Place/367 Russel St-NEW
- Amherst Brewing Company/24-36 N Pleasant St
- Baku African Restaurant/197 N Pleasant St
- Elijah's Boltwood Tavern at Lord Jeffery/30 Boltwood Ave
- Goten of Japan/104 Old Amherst Rd
- Ground Round/Hampshire Mall
- House of Teriyaki/1177 N Pleasant St
- KFC/3 S Maple St
- Bart's Homemade/103 N Pleasant St
- Bruegger's Bagels/170 N Pleasant St
- La Veracruzana (NOHO)/31 Main St
- La Veracruzana/63 S Pleasant St
- Lone Wolf Cafe/63 Main St
- Loose Goose Cafe/1 E Pleasant St
- Newman Center/472 N Pleasant St
- Panda East/103 N Pleasant St
- Panera Bread/351 Russell St
- Pasta E Basta/26 Main St
- Pete's Drive-In/287 Russell St
- Pinocchio's/57 N Pleasant St
- Pizza Hut/424 Russell St
- Primo Pizza Too/255 Triangle St
- Quiznos/181 D University Dr
- Rafters/422 Amity St
- Rt. 9 Diner/453-11 Russell St
- Sbarro/Hampshire Mall
- Souper Bowl/96 N Pleasant St

REMINDER
MEAL PLAN REGISTRATION
BEGINS AUGUST 28TH
SIGN-UP ONLINE OR OVER THE PHONE:
CALL: 888-211-6267
ONLINE: WWW.OCMP.COM

New scholarship to honor fallen UMass soldier

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Lance Cpl. Eric P. Valdepeñas never had a chance to graduate from the University of Massachusetts. Valdepeñas, a marine who put his studies on hold to serve his country, was killed when a roadside bomb exploded near him one year ago this month.

A new scholarship under Valdepeñas's name will allow him to symbolically finish what he started at UMass, said his sister, Karen Ing.

"I know he wanted to go back once he came back from Iraq and hit the books again," said Ing, "but he wasn't able to do that."

The "Lance Corporal Eric Paul Valdepeñas Scholarship" will be awarded to one Isenberg School of Management student every year. The student must display the same traits that Valdepeñas once did as a student.

A native of Seekonk, Mass., Valdepeñas was a 21-year-old sophomore at UMass when his unit was called up in December 2005, and he was deployed to Iraq. A member of the 1st Battalion, 25th Marines, weapons company, and a machine gunner, Valdepeñas was killed on Sept. 4, 2006 while on patrol in the Al Anbar Province. Since Valdepeñas was never able to return to Amherst, Ing said the scholarship was later created "to carry out what he couldn't finish."

The scholarship was spearheaded by J. Brian Palmer, a UMass alumnus and co-worker of Ing. When Palmer first heard that Valdepeñas had been killed in battle, he said he was deeply affected.

Over time, Palmer began coming up with ideas to honor Valdepeñas and his service to the country. Eventually, with the help of Ing, Palmer created the scholarship and committed $36,000 to it.

"I'm pretty proud that someone like that would go to UMass," said Palmer, of North Grafton. "He's a real heroic kid and supporting the University financially, it seemed like the perfect fit."

White Mountains Insurance Group, where Palmer works as the Chief Financial Officer, has also committed $4,000 in matching funds for the scholarship. "Applicants for the scholarship must be someone who "actively participates in the community, demonstrates good character and has a documented financial need," states a press release.

Palmer said anyone applying most likely will also have to submit an essay that family members of Valdepeñas would read. Ing said other family members also attended UMass.

"Above all, Brian is honoring Eric's own sense of honor," said Lou Wigdor, a spokesman for the School of Management. Wigdor said the scholarship will kick in this spring and will be awarded to one student per year.

Although the scholarship is being offered to SOM students, Valdepeñas was an engineering major while attending UMass. When composing the scholarship, Ing said the main objective was to build it around the type of person Valdepeñas was.

"Really what we did was we based the scholarship around what embodied Eric," said Ing, "in terms of being a good person, a good moral character, someone who liked to do a lot of volunteer work."

Palmer said he was impressed with Valdepeñas's courageous decision to leave school and serve in the military. Valdepeñas's unit was scheduled to return about a month after he was killed.

"I think what made it difficult and probably a little more touching in a way was that he was so young," said Palmer. "He put himself in harm's way for something he believed in. To me, it just made sense to set up a scholarship honoring that type of dedication."

Eric Athas can be reached at eathas at stuck.at umass.edu

Eric Valdepeñas, a 21-year-old sophomore, was killed in action last December while serving in Iraq with the 25th Marines.

Campus 'wiki' integrated into classroom curriculum

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

A new Web site, Wikipedia (better known as a "wiki") and student resource is picking up speed at the University of Massachusetts. The website, umasswiki.com, created by UMass graduate Gordon Morehouse and Smart Cat Media, acts like the well-known wikipedia.com by providing information and allowing users to edit or add content.

UMassWiki was founded nearly two years ago as an answer to frequently asked questions about the UMass community, but was created outside the classroom.

Smart Cat Media, an alumnus-run business, helped create the site, though Morehouse, a 2007 computer science graduate, works as the site's operator.

"UMassWiki's primary mission is to make information about UMass and the surrounding communities available to students, faculty, alumni and locals," said Morehouse. "From a technical standpoint, the wiki allows multiple students to collaborate on a single page, which can be anything from an article about UMass to a paper for a class."

In April 2007, the Web site already had a million hits. At the end of the spring semester, it received key upgrades, making the site more faster.

The upgrade will prepare UMassWiki for a bigger crowd of users when classes start in September.

At the same time, the site also changed its look to colors inspired by UMass of gray, maroon and white.

The front page of the Web site shows links to the most popular pages, including Bruno's Pizza, a list of bars in Amherst and information on Southwest Residential Area, as well as important dates at UMass and a list of pages that need editing.

UMassWiki is one of the leading student-run wikis for a higher education community, alongside the wikis created at Columbia University (WikiCU), Oberlin College (OberWiki) and Duke University (Dukiki).

The site will also be used to teach two classes this fall. Graduate student Stephanie Jo Kent, who teaches English 112 and Communications 375, will use UMassWiki as a peer editing tool.

"Every version of every article that ever existed is stored on the wiki, and there's an easy way to compare any two versions to see what was added, deleted or changed," said Morehouse. "This makes it a great platform for peer editing."

Kent, a communications major, has already used the wiki to teach classes for three semesters, but will now make the site a much larger part of class as well as homework. Any user on UMassWiki, whether in Kent's class or not, may view work done by students in the class and can even edit it.

A list of the semester's assignments and due dates are also available on the site.

"I believe the way UMassWiki can change the way students do work is through its strengths as a means for peer editing and review," said Morehouse.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury at student.umass.edu

UMassWiki
Your UMass Encyclopedia
read ★ edit ★ build

Want to write for the Daily Collegian?
E-mail:
news@dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 1
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Stogin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Trevor Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Linda Sichak
Asst. Arts & Living Olga Deschenko
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Assistant News Cara Grannemann
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenzwaike
Wire Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper was published as the Index until 1914 and the Weekly Collegian from 1914 until 1938. The Weekly Collegian was published daily until 1967. The Collegian has been independently owned since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413)545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Katie Huston

Copy Editor
Meghan Murphy

Production Supervisor
Chris Martin

Clarkson takes helm of honors college

By Anjo Smith
Collegian Staff

Priscilla Clarkson, the interim dean at Commonwealth College since 2006, was named the permanent dean this past June.

"I look forward to working with Commonwealth College's first-rate staff and faculty to create a new vision that will attract academically talented students from all backgrounds," said Clarkson. "It is an exciting opportunity to help these highly motivated students develop the scholarship, creativity, citizenship and leadership skills necessary to address the complex problems of society."

Clarkson has worked at the University of Massachusetts since 1977, when she began teaching biology, and has also been the associate dean in the School of Public Health and Health Sciences. Before joining the faculty Clarkson was a student at UMass, earning a bachelor's degree in zoology in 1969, a master's in zoology and marine science in 1971 and a doctorate in exercise science and human movement in 1977.

She feels that level of familiarity with the UMass campus, as both a professor and a student, will help her develop a curriculum and extracurricular activities to meet the needs of honors students and maximize their academic experiences.

"I know what it is like to be a student at a large university, and I know what it is like to teach students at a large university," said Clarkson. "I am aware of the many challenges that students face financially, academically and socially. I want Commonwealth College to be a community of scholars where students can maximize and enrich their learning experiences."

She has only been the dean of Commonwealth College for a little over two months, but Clarkson is already making her mark. She has established a strategic planning committee to examine the current curriculum and plan for the future.

Priscilla Clarkson credits her recent appointment as dean of Commonwealth College to her leadership experience.

"We are considering offering [illegible] seminars that will engage students and page their creativity in new ways and increase [illegible] learning experiences and are working with graduate students to run after-school programs and will also [illegible] disadvantaged children's access to college," she said.

Charles Sconyers, provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs, announced Clarkson's ascension to the post, calling Clarkson "ideally suited to lead the Commonwealth College."

"[Clarkson] has had many distinguished leadership positions in the field of kinesiology. She has served as the national president and vice president of the American College of Sports Medicine, as well as president of the ASM Foundation, which helps [illegible] research and other endeavors of the college.

Vernon Cole, editor of the International Journal of Sport Nutrition and [illegible] journal for over eight years, [illegible] the editor-in-chief of Exercise and Sports Science Reviews, [illegible] journal reviewing [illegible] and medicine-based research on sports medicine and [illegible] according to their Web site.

[illegible] from a scientific [illegible] International Life Sciences Institute, as well a member of the NCAA Competitive and Medical Advisory Committee, the [illegible] Research on Sports and [illegible] and the Committee [illegible] Institute of Medicine.

As provost, Sconyers [illegible] the leadership [illegible] on the field of [illegible] Clarkson [illegible] prepare her for the challenges that come with being the dean of Commonwealth College.

"Leadership skills are necessary to move any agenda forward. I have learned how to listen, how to negotiate, how to make difficult decisions, and how to interact with many types of constituencies," she said. "Moreover, these positions have helped me hone organizational skills and realize the value of hard work and dedication."

Clarkson also credits her love of ballet and her work with Pioneer Valley Ballet in helping her develop the characteristics needed to become an effective leader.

"For almost 25 years, I served as a volunteer on the board of directors [of Pioneer Valley Ballet] as well as served as a choreographer for children's ballets," said Clarkson. "These experiences enlightened me to the value of serving the community and also provided me the opportunity to be creative. My ballet training was instrumental in developing my strong sense of discipline."

Clarkson wants students to know that her door is always open for them and she would love to hear from them.

"I am always open to hearing from the students – what they like, what they don't like, what they would like to see happen or not happen," said Clarkson. "If students have ideas or thoughts they would like to share with me directly, they can always e-mail me: clarkson@comcol.umass.edu."

Anjo Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

Assistant AD leaves for URI athletics

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts athletic program underwent a period of transition this past summer, marked by a three-year contract extension for the current athletic director and the departure of Senior Associate Athletic Director Thorr Bjorn.

On July 25, Bjorn announced his decision to leave UMass after 15 years to take on the position of athletic director at the University of Rhode Island. This will make him the 11th Director for URI Athletics. Bjorn says that he intends to oversee the program, which includes 22 intercollegiate sports, and play an important role in budgeting, fundraising and marketing for athletics.

URI offered Bjorn a five-year contract that will pay him $165,000 annually. He began work with the athletic department immediately, but officially started as director in early August.

"The support I received from the athletic administration, Chancellor [John] Lombardi and the President's office was very important during the URI selection process," said Bjorn. "I will be forever grateful to all the people at UMass that helped me to achieve my professional goals."

On leaving UMass, Bjorn says that the athletic department is still in good hands.

"Things at UMass athletics have never been better, and under the leadership of [current athletic director] John McCutcheon, the success is only going to continue," he said. "It is my experience at UMass working with a fantastic staff and great coaches that has allowed me the opportunity to become an athletic director at an Atlantic 10 institution."

Meanwhile, McCutcheon received a contract extension from Chancellor Lombardi, making him the sixth permanent athletic director at UMass. The contract, originally set to expire in February 2009, will now last until February 2012.

Since he was hired in 2004, McCutcheon has led the department's efforts to improve facilities and increased attendance by more than 50 percent in every sport. Additionally, in the past three years, annual donations and corporate sponsorships have reached a record high.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury a student.umass.edu

Athletic Director John McCutcheon recieved a three-year contract extension from UMass this past summer.

Students cheat PRS attendance system

By Emily Nichols
Collegian Contributor

As students return to overlarge classes at the University of Massachusetts this fall, professors from across the University face the looming question of how to keep their students coming to class.

When alternate forms of taking attendance were introduced to the University, many professors thought it would be a quick fix to a big problem. As always, though, students seem to have found ways to get around the system.

The Office of Information Technology (OIT) introduced the Personal Response System (PRS) to UMass several years ago. According to the OIT department, PRS is used to take attendance, to keep students engaged and to evaluate their level of comprehension of the material learned in the class.

However, many professors, especially those who teach large classes, have discovered students signing into class for their friends. German professor Susan Cocalis, who teaches a large lecture, says this is an ongoing problem. When Cocalis confronted students who signed in their friends, the students [illegible] legitimate, [illegible]

[illegible] my class were [illegible] told me about the [illegible] other people, saying [illegible] that one person [illegible] eight or nine people [illegible] the class," Cocalis said.

[illegible] the ombudsman's [illegible] a punishment on campus that [illegible] disputes. Cocalis [illegible] [illegible] other students [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] University policy if the student is graded on his or [illegible] Attendance [illegible] portion of the student's grade and therefore the student is [illegible] grading," she said.

[illegible] Spokesman Steve Sumurdy, who teaches [illegible] classes, feels that students think [illegible] days up to classes [illegible] from other students [illegible]

[illegible] I find [illegible] begging me to [illegible] writing class [illegible] how enough seats [illegible] Then someone [illegible] days and takes that [illegible] class from those dressing up after [illegible] have just denied someone [illegible] the class. It is very self-

Further, students don't realize that they are actually wasting money when they don't come to class. Assuming that a class is three credits, and there are around 25 class periods per semester, each class period equates to around $30. "I don't think the students who don't come to class think of missing class as wasting money. They think if they get the grade, that's what is important," Cocalis said.

Simurda agrees. "I don't know that students put together the idea that they are paying a lot of money to be here for every class that they take," he said. "When they don't show up to class they are essentially wasting money."

Senior Matthew Marhefka is a BDIC major with a concentration in entrepreneurship. He is currently paying for his own tuition.

"Skipping class is something that many students do, but often regret afterward," he said. "When I found out that every class equals about $30, I thought that I was cheating myself, and decided that it was a waste of money to not go to class, especially considering that I pay for my own education and I am essentially throwing my own money down the drain."

Junior hospitality and tourism management major Stephen Tang, who usually skips class two to three times a week, doesn't see his missed classes as a loss.

"The classes that I skip are mostly gen-eds, and the way that I look at it I'm not paying just for classes," he said. "I am paying for the college experience, which includes class, but there is more to college than that."

Emily Nichols can be reached at enichols@student.umass.edu

The Cost of Skipping Class

Assuming minimum 12-credit enrollment and 25 class periods per semester, each class missed in a three-credit course is worth:

In-state:	$8.57
New England Regional:	$15.00
Out-of-state:	$49.69

ISOM renews national search for permanent dean

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

The Isenberg School of Management (ISOM) at the University of Massachusetts Amherst has begun an internal selection process for an interim dean after an unsuccessful national search to fill the position.

According to the provost, the interim dean for the last school year, Soren Bisgaard, has decided not to return to the position. Bisgaard was hired as the interim dean when his predecessor, Tom O'Brien, retired last year after a 19-year tenure.

The new interim dean will serve for a minimum of two years and will be expected to start by the beginning of the fall 2007 semester. Candidates for the position must be a tenured faculty member on campus and have a doctorate or an equivalent terminal degree to apply.

Nominations and applications, including a curriculum vitae, a statement describing how the candidate's experiences and values fit with the position, and at least three references, were received by Aug. 10. Acceptance of nominations and applications began immediately and will continue until the position is filled.

"Provost Charlena Seymour and the faculty and staff in the school are working together to find the right person to guide the school through the next two or three years," said Nancy Buffone, the executive director of the provost's office.

On Aug. 15 and 16, candidates Tony Butterfield, professor of management and Ph.D program director, Eric Berkowitz, the associate dean for professional programs and Ben Branch, professor of finance, held open meetings in the school for faculty and staff.

ISOM offers undergraduate and graduate programs, including two online degrees. Its six departments – accounting and information systems, finance and operations management, hospitality and tourism management, management, marketing and sport management – are all accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB) International. There are nearly 3,100 undergraduate students and more than 875 graduate and doctoral students enrolled in the school.

The ISOM staff includes 95 full-time faculty members and is headquarters to the Massachusetts Small Business Development Center Network, the Center for International Securities and Derivatives Markets and the Virtual Center for Supernetworks.

As for the current open position for dean of ISOM, students of the school should expect to see it filled by their first week of classes of the semester.

"I fully expect that the search committee will make their recommendation to the provost before the end of the month, and we will have a dean in place by Sept. 1," said Buffone.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury a student.umass.edu

UMass Campus Recreation

Flag Football (M/W/C)	9/10
Soccer (M/W)	9/10
Co-ed Softball	9/11
Field Hockey (W)	9/11
Ice Hockey (M/W)	9/13

On The Web
www.umass.edu/campusrec

LATE ENTRANTS SHOULD CHECK FOR EXTENSION DEADLINES

Results you can feel.

- headaches
- neck pain
- back pain
- sports injuries
- auto injuries
- carpal tunnel

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor

Participating provider for HMO's students insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health

228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

UM Faculty Senate criticizes Wilson's One University Plan

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

The recent proposal to restructure the University of Massachusetts system, otherwise known as the One University Plan, has created a stir among the Faculty Senate and other faculty members at the Amherst campus.

The proposal, which aims to centralize the five UMass campuses, has already been approved by University President Jack Wilson and the Board of Trustees. One model in particular draws most of the opposition: a proposal to combine the President and the Chancellor into one office.

"My opinion is that the One University Plan as a complete plan is essentially 'dead on arrival,'" said Faculty Senate Secretary Ernest May, "but the Board of Trustees and President's office continue to attempt to implement pieces of it through management by 'fait accompli.'"

The One University Plan was proposed at the end of the spring 2007 semester, when Wilson addressed a letter to the UMass community outlining the strengths and benefits of the idea.

Wilson also moved changes at the UMass campuses, including the ascension of Michael J. Collins, M.D., as the University-wide senior vice president for health services, J. Keith Motley, Ph.D., as the chancellor of UMass Boston, and UMass Amherst Chancellor John Lombardi's decision to retire after the 2007-2008 school year.

Meanwhile, at the same time of Wilson's letter, Chancellor Lombardi sent a brief update to faculty about his plan to extend his term for one more year to help the president facilitate the transition to the new management.

"As part of the transformation of the UMass system into a strong University with a flagship campus in Amherst, the University will need to restructure its management of the Amherst campus to ensure that the president is directly involved and engaged in the activities of the flagship campus," Lombardi wrote in the letter.

Shortly after Wilson's and Lombardi's address to their colleagues, the Faculty Senate met to discuss the University's future.

Wilson began the meeting, urging Senate members to go by the information in the letters, rather than what was being written in newspapers at the time, such as headlines in the Daily Hampshire Gazette reading "Lombardi in, Wilson out."

Wilson also urged members of the Senate to "give it a shot over the next year," and to "try to work out a plan." He then took questions from members who clearly had strong opposition to the model. Finally, a vote for the proposal resulted in a "no-confidence" vote from the Faculty Senate and the trustees.

"The Faculty Senate's position is that, whether particular centralization initiatives may eventually be deemed desirable or undesirable, the central administration is required by the Wellman document, as an aspect of shared governance, to discuss such proposals with the Faculty Senate and other constituencies prior to attempted implementation," said Secretary May. "That is one of the primary reasons that the general faculty voted 'no-confidence' last spring."

All of the members of the Faculty Senate were asked about their opinion on this matter, however, many felt it too sensitive a subject to discuss at this time.

The next Senate meeting is scheduled for Thursday, Sept. 21.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury a student.umass.edu

The proposed restructuring and centralization of UMass has drawn tire from members of the Amherst campus faculty, despite approval from Wilson and the Board of Trustees.

UMass science update

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Researchers develop tool to assess supernetworks

A new computer tool developed by researchers at the University of Massachusetts seeks to determine the loss of efficiency that occurs when key components of infrastructure like roads, electrical power stations or transmission lines are destroyed.

The tool captures the existing demand placed on a network and how users of a network readjust after a disruption, such as a natural disaster or equipment failure.

According to its developers, the tool will allow decision makers to identify critical infrastructure components and protect them accordingly.

"We expect that the tool will have wide practical applications, since it provides a quantifiable way to identify which network components should be best maintained based on actual usage and costs," said developer Anne Nagurney, director of the Isenberg School of Management's Virtual Center for Supernetworks.

The new tool was developed through funding from the National Science Foundation, by Nagurney and doctoral student Qiang "Patrick" Qiang.

The first results of the study, "A Network Efficiency Measure for Congested Networks," will be published in the August 2007 Europhysics Letters. Additional papers are in press in the journals Optimization Letters and the Journal of Global Optimization.

Professor awarded fellowship to study arsenic contamination

UMass chemistry professor Julian Tyson will be traveling around the world to discover the secrets held by a deadly toxin.

Tyson was recently awarded a $200,000 Discovery Corps Fellowship by the National Science Foundation (NSF) to support his research and educational efforts on the toxic contaminant arsenic. Arsenic is considered by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to be the contaminant that poses the most significant threat to human health.

During his fellowship period, Tyson will be aided by college and middle school students and collaborate with life sciences professors to develop plants and microorganisms that will aid in removing arsenic from contaminated soils and waters.

Through the fellowship, Tyson will travel to Bangladesh, Thailand and Vietnam – all currently dealing with severe arsenic contamination issues – to interact with international researchers.

Chemistry professor Julian Tyson received a $200,000 fellowship from the National Science Foundation to research the toxin arsenic.

Scientist tracks growing spread of Lyme disease

While most people try to avoid the deer ticks that carry Lyme disease, UMass Amherst scientist and assistant professor Stephen M. Rich is collecting as many ticks as possible in an effort to track the spread of the disease in New England.

Rich is an assistant professor of medical entomology in the department of plant, soil and insect sciences – so creepy-crawlers are right up his alley.

Rich received a $40,000 to conduct a Lyme disease survey from the New Hampshire Department of Health and Human Services that began in July 2007.

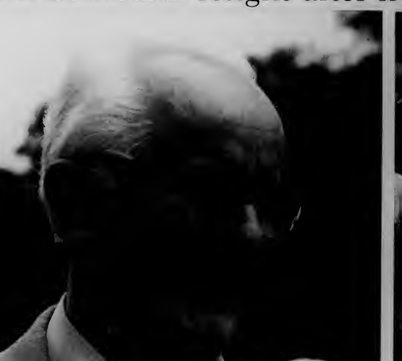
Rich studies tick populations at numerous sites in Massachusetts under an ongoing grant from the National Institutes of Health. Locations range from Cape Cod and the Islands to the Berkshires. He was surprised to find a thriving population of deer ticks halfway up Mount Greylock, one of the coldest areas in the state.

The Rich laboratory also tests ticks submitted by Massachusetts residents for the presence of Lyme disease on a fee-for-service basis. More information can be found at Rich's laboratory Web site at www.umass.edu/richlab.

Chemist receives $175,000 grant to study RNA synthesis

UMass chemist Craig Martin received a four-year, $175,000 grant from the National Institutes of Health to study how a key enzyme changes structure during transcription, the copying of genes to make RNA, which allows genes to regulate cells – and may allow Martin to find the key to human disease.

Martin will focus on a large rearrangement that occurs in the RNA polymerase molecule as it initiates transcription and then changes into a stable complex capable of transcribing thousands of nucleotide building blocks.



"There is a lot of reorganizing of the RNA polymerase molecule during the initial phases of transcription," said Martin. "My research will focus on what structural changes occur and what triggers these changes."

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@umass.edu

2007

John Lombardi resigns after five years as UMass chancellor

KEITH OVERKAMP/COLLEGIAN

Lombardi, shown here in one of his last acts as chancellor, celebrates the sale of Frat Row to the University. He served as the face of UMass from 2002 until this past spring when he announced his resignation. According to Robert Connolly, the spokesperson for the UMass president Jack Wilson, Lombardi left due to "philosophical differences" with Wilson.

JOHN V. LOMBARDI

- 1942 - Born, Los Angeles, California
- 1964 - Married Cathryn Lee, received M.A. from Columbia University
- 1968 - Wrote first of seventeen books titled : The Political Ideology of Fray Servando Teresa de Mier: Propagandist for Independence; received Ph.D. from Columbia University
- 1969 - First child born - John Lee Lombardi
- 1972 - Second child born - Mary Ann Lombardi
- 1985 - Dean of Arts and Sciences at University of Indiana at Bloomington
- 1987 - Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs at The Johns Hopkins University
- 1990 - President of the University of Florida
- 2002 - Chancellor at the University of Massachusetts
- 2003 - Establishes UMass Amherst Foundation, group raises $31 million in recent years
- 2005 - Campus Diversity Plan implemented
- 2007 President of Louisiana State University

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Every day, students from Orchard Hill or Upper Central walk past a white house on a small hill on their way to Worcester Dining Commons. Usually, the house doesn't cross their minds; they're thinking instead of the culinary wonders awaiting them at the DC.

This year, though, something's changed about that house. The lawn is still green and the paint is still white, and it still projects a certain charm. What's different about the chancellor's house is who's living in it.

Dr. John Lombardi, chancellor of the University of Massachusetts system since 2002, stepped down last spring, opting to take a job as President of the Louisiana State University system. Due to disagreements with both UMass President Jack Wilson and the Board of Trustees, Lombardi felt it was his time to step aside.

"The current trustees are now embarked on a plan to rethink and reconfigure the way in which the University of Massachusetts will function," Lombardi told the Associated Press. "And since I don't agree ... it seemed only appropriate for me to think of other opportunities."

John V. Lombardi was born in Los Angeles in 1942 to a college librarian and the president of Los Angeles City College. After receiving his bachelor's degree from Pomona College in 1963, he went on to get his masters and doctorate from Colombia University in 1964 and 1968, respectively. He married Cathryn L. Lee in 1964, with whom he has two children, John Lee (1969) and Mary Ann (1972).

Lombardi went on to hold several administrative and teaching jobs in his career. A specialist in Latin American history, especially Venezuelan, Lombardi held a job as Profesor Contratando at the Universidad Central de Venezuela in Caracas in 1967.

After obtaining his doctorate, Lombardi began teaching for the history department at Indiana University at Bloomington. He worked his way up to dean of the College of Arts and Sciences before he left IU in 1987, when he was given the position of provost of John Hopkins University.

He stayed at The JHU, teaching history in addition to his duties as provost, until March of 1990, when he was offered the job of president of the University of Florida. The ninth president in the history of the school, Lombardi became very popular with the students and alumni and is credited with improving academic standing, increasing the size of the student body and helping elevate the Gators to their current level of performance. He resigned in 1999 as president, but continuing to work at the University of Florida as the director for the Center for Studies in the Humanities and Social Sciences at the University until he took the job as chancellor here at UMass.

During his time on the Amherst campus, Lombardi has been both praised and criticized for his actions. He's responsible for raising the University's standing as a research institute, as well as overseeing the building of the North apartment complex, the first residential development in several years. Lombardi has also been praised as a very charismatic leader with a strong talent for fundraising.

Athletic director John McCutcheon commented on the important role Lombardi played in the athletic programs as well, stressing his "energy, support and ability to articulate the role of athletics on the campus."

"He [Lombardi] was extremely supportive of the efforts we put into athletics, at least over the 3 1/2 years I've been here," he said. "He was instrumental in some of the successes we've enjoyed in the last few years."

However, Lombardi faced heat in recent years for the increase in his [and Vice Chancellor Gargano's] salaries and for his extremely controversial recommendation to award former White House Chief of Staff and Iraq war mastermind Andrew Card with an honorary degree.

Throughout his career, Lombardi has had a reputation for bluntness in his dealings, as well as being accused of having an "abrasive" management style, which reportedly triggered his resignation in Florida. Lombardi himself has defended his bluntness saying, "I find that, while clarity has some disadvantages in the political life of a university, its advantages greatly outweigh them."

This particular management style, however, reportedly caused conflict between the chancellor and the president and Board of Trustees, especially regarding the president's plans to streamline the UMass system, which currently consists of five campuses — Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and the UMass Medical School at Worcester. This conflict was apparently a major factor in Lombardi's resignation.

While President Jack Wilson said that he and Lombardi came to a "mutual agreement" regarding Lombardi's departure, some lawmakers and faculty have criticized Wilson for ousting a popular chancellor for political reasons.

In a comment to the Boston Globe over the summer, John Armstrong, a former UMass trustee who resigned in protest of Wilson's reorganization plan, echoed these sentiments.

"It's a great loss for the University of Massachusetts and Amherst. What it tells me is that people elsewhere in the world understand academic leadership better than the folks here in Massachusetts."

Max Page, president of the UMass Amherst faculty union, wasn't surprised by Lombardi's departure.

"It was clear their [Lombardi and Wilson's] relationship was not going to work out," he said.

Page, a critic of the reorganization plans, has stated that the faculty wants the search for the new chancellor to be a national one, and has apparently passed a resolution opposing the permanent appointment of any interim chancellor, saying that they "don't want a chancellor installed from the president's office."

History professor Bruce Laurie agreed that "John Lombardi was no saint," but his personality had little to do with his departure.

"He could be too blunt and plain-spoken for the faculty, staff and students partial to more genteel discourse. He was opinionated and not inclined to suffer fools ... or simply those he disagreed with," Laurie said. "He would have benefited from tact and discretion. But he was not given the sack for personality flaws or want of charm; he was dismissed because he was too independent-minded and too loyal to this campus for the trustees who have traditionally been troubled by local leaders determined to make this campus what it ought to be – an excellent place to pursue research and learning."

Laurie, who has been a professor at UMass for 36 years, was also critical of those seen as responsible for Lombardi's leaving the campus.

"It is the trustees, sometimes in alliance with lawmakers and leaders of the larger private schools, and sometimes on their own, who have held down this campus. They have done it again – this time on their own," he said. "They are why ours has long been a very good school but not quite an excellent one. They simply cannot bear the thought of excellence at Amherst; it threatens them and their vision of a three-campus system of presumed equals. That is why they want our money – endowment and whatever – and why they deserve our unstinting condemnation. We deserved better and we got it with Lombardi. The campus will miss him. He was as good as it gets in university administration and the best chancellor this campus has ever seen."

Mario De Pillis, professor emeritus of history at U Mass, claimed that the use of the word "confrontational" to describe Lombardi could "undoubtedly, be traced to the Boston pillagers who have anonymously applied the word 'confrontational' as a desperate little calumny to justify their unbelievable coup d'etat."

De Pillis also pointed out that there has been little media questioning of the motives behind the restructuring plan.

"No newspaper has investigated the agenda of ... [Chairman of the Board of Trustees Stephan] Tocco and Wilson," he said. "They [Tocco and Wilson] represent a serious threat to the independence of the flagship campus."

While Wilson himself was unavailable for comment, his spokesperson Robert Connelly reinforced Wilson's earlier comments on Lombardi's departure.

"I think Jack Wilson's point has been all along that he and Lombardi came to a mutual agreement," he said in a telephonic interview.

He claimed that, although there were "philosophical differences" between Lombardi and Wilson regarding the reorganization plans, Lombardi agreed that it was for the best that he take the job at LSU. Connelly also wanted to make clear that the reorganization plans do not amount to "centralization."

"The UMass system shouldn't be [five solo campuses]. They should work together for the good of the students and the Commonwealth," he said.

In response to the aforementioned faculty resolution, Connelly assured that interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, former president of Clark Atlanta University, was not a candidate in the search for a permanent chancellor, and had made that clear himself. A national search has been launched, Connelly said, and will hopefully culminate in the spring with the selection and appointment of the next chancellor.

Lombardi himself declined to comment, being busy with his settling-in at LSU. Besides his career as an educator, Lombardi has also authored several books. In addition, he apparently has a love of automobiles and, with a friend, ran a garage for older model cars for two years.

A farewell ceremony honoring John and Cathryn Lombardi was held Aug. 22 in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu.

2007

COME AND CHECK OUT THE NEW SOUPER BOWL ON STEROIDS

SOUPER BOWL
New England

Homemade Soups • Salads • Panini • Wraps • Desserts
The Original Boba Tea • Premium Draft Beer • Wine by Glass
Bar Menu Available After 4:30pm

104 N. Pleasant St, Amherst
Mon - Sat 11am - 11pm
(413)253-1855

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
From Comedy Central's "Chappelle's Show"
SEPT. 29TH
Host of BET's "We Got To Do Better"
CHARLIE MURPHY
OCT. 6TH From HBO's "Tourgasm" ROBERT KELLY
NOV. 3RD From "The Howard Stern Show" ROBERT SCHIMMEL
SEPT. 15TH From the movie "Little Man" JOHN WITHERSPOON
OCT. 20TH Host of HBO's "Last Comic Standing" BILL BELLAMY
DEC. 1ST Host of BET's "S.O.B." D.L. HUGHLEY

Wilson proposes University restructuring

PROPOSAL from page 1

bers of the Board of Trustees in order to discuss ways to make the University system more efficient, said Wilson spokesperson Robert Connelly.

"It was something people thought was somehow sinister or Machiavellian in some way. People thought of it as a fully articulated proposal created without their knowledge. It was an initiative on [Wilson's] part to key up discussion," said Connelly.

"The purpose of the meeting was to get buy-in from the trustees (including myself) outside of the 'inner clique' that had been working with Tocco and Wilson to develop the plan," said Leiblum.

"No official votes were taken. Wilson and Tocco intended to line up trustees' approval of the vision while they waited for students to go home, faculty to go on vacation, and to bulldoze ahead with the chancellor shuffle and initial implementation of the plan," she said.

The plan included a proposal for a task force, appointed by Tocco and intended to be led by Richard Freeland, the president of Northeastern University who has a 22-year association with UMass Boston. While the Faculty Senate planned to vote "no-confidence" on the task force, the vote was never held.

Governor Deval Patrick announced June 20 that the Governor's Readiness Project would replace the Tocco-appointed University task force.

"I will work with the governor on getting that done," said Wilson.

The plan included a proposal for Michael Collins, who was previously the chancellor of UMass Boston, to become the senior vice president for health sciences and interim chancellor of the UMass Medical School, and Keith Montley to become chancellor of UMass Boston.

Both proposals were approved, and Collins and Montley began their new positions on June 1, according to the UMass Web site. Martin T. Meehan was appointed chancellor of UMass Lowell and assumed his position July 1.

The proposal also addressed whether admissions should be centralized among the campuses. While Leiblum acknowledges benefits of centralization, such as a standardized admissions process and the opportunity to recommend students to other campuses, she said that ultimately, "forced centralization won't improve the quality of our system. While UMass might be ranked higher, the quality of our experience here will decline if this plan is the blueprint for the future of UMass," Leiblum said.

One of the most controversial aspects of the restructuring plan was the proposed consolidation of the offices of president and chancellor, with Wilson presiding over the Amherst campus three days per week, and presiding over the entire University system two days per week. The plan intended outgoing chancellor John Lombardi to remain in office for an additional year, until the beginning of the fall 2008 semester; however, Lombardi left his position to become the president of Louisiana State University.

Wilson's office refuted claims that Lombardi was pressured to leave the University.

"He had some philosophical differences with some of the thoughts about how the University should go forward," said Connelly.

At a mid-May meeting of the Faculty Senate, Wilson was asked if his proposed restructuring was a reflection of his own interest in becoming chancellor of UMass.

"I will not be a candidate," said Wilson at the May 24 meeting of the Faculty Senate.

"I will decline," he added, when asked if he would consider candidacy if the Board of Trustees asked him to serve even if he wasn't a candidate.

Lombardi declined to comment, but Director of the UMass news office Ed Blaguszewski spoke on his behalf.

"The chancellor ... is now focusing on his future challenges at LSU," he said.

Connelly said the controversy is largely a matter of miscommunication. "Because [the proposals] were too numerous, people misunderstood them and made assumptions about perhaps what the motivating factors were," he said. "I think now with the passage of time people have a better sense of what President Wilson was talking about and perhaps don't feel as threatened by the ideas," said Connelly.

Connelly addressed the possible effects of the proposed restructuring of the University system.

"One thing we would quickly stipulate is that, in many areas, the campuses will be creating their own academic programs and conducting their own research on their own," he said.

Connelly specified that administrative areas would potentially experience collaboration, as was done 10 years ago with the consolidation of the payroll, IT and accounting departments in the system. According to Connelly, these changes would mean cost savings to students and their families.

"There has to be some way of achieving efficiencies but still doing it in a way that is still sensitive to the current work force," said Connelly.

"Governor Patrick unveiled a $1 billion proposal for the state to invest in life sciences and try to move forward and become a true global leader in the area of life sciences," said Connelly.

This proposal was a joint effort between the medical school and the UMass Amherst campus.

"Maybe Amherst would have had its own proposal, and maybe neither would have risen to the level of something the governor would have chosen to invest in," Connelly added.

Connelly attributes the success in obtaining the governor's confidence to the collaboration of the campuses.

"Although Wilson has publicly acknowledged that communicating his ideas to the campus community was not handled "in the best way possible," he maintains that "it is the right conversation at the right time for this institution, and it is one worth having together as a community."

"I think most people on the campuses and throughout the system believe it's the right way to go, particularly once they understand what the president means more fully," said Connelly.

The Board of Trustees held a special meeting in Boston Aug. 15 to appoint an interim chancellor, after Lombardi's early departure from his position. The Board of Trustees appointed Dr. Thomas Cole, president emeritus of Clark Atlanta University, as the interim chancellor of the Amherst campus.

"The board will also be creating a committee to conduct a national search for a permanent replacement for Chancellor Lombardi," said Connelly. He added that a recommendation for a replacement is expected by the spring 2008 semester, and a permanent appointment expected for the fall 2008 semester.

"A year from now, this is something that the president is going to continue talking about and I think all of the chancellors now agree that this is a good idea," said Connelly.

"There isn't really a timeline, but it's more of a concept and a philosophical approach than it is a tangible proposal," he added.

Anna Dolsanitis can be reached at adolsani@student.umass.edu

Wilson has come under criticism from members of the UM Board of Trustees and faculty for his calls to centralize the University.

More funds needed to attract faculty, meet student needs but infrastructure maintenance requires more money, too — $74 million over the next 10 years.

NEW DIRT from page 1

Infrastructure includes, but is not limited to, roadwork, athletic field maintenance, work on steam lines and electrical distribution systems.

The total assessment amount addressing campus needs over the next 10 years comes to $1.8 billion.

However, according to Francis, the assessment does not include auxiliary needs, like dining hall, residence hall and campus center maintenance.

New sources of funding will be needed to meet these requirements. The report is the latest piece of evidence as UMass leaders push for a higher education bond bill to keep the University on its current path of growth.

"It seems [like a lot of money] but if you look at the replacement value of all the buildings on campus, it's just a down payment," Francis said.

UMass's current plan is $790 million. Eighty-seven percent is funded by the campus, while the remaining 13 percent comes from the state.

According to Francis, Governor Patrick just published a five-year capital plan for the state with a $5 billion section dedicated to higher education. The cut for UMass would help some of the University's money woes.

As UMass decides which buildings stay and which go, the report placed buildings into one of six categories from "keep and maintain" to "dispose and replace."

The average age of a building on campus is 42 years, anything older than that is in need of replacement or renovation.

Nine structures, including (Old) Chenoweth Laboratory, Cold Storage Building, Fernald, Greenhouse, Hills House, South College, and the Student Union Building, were deemed in need of demolition and replacement.

"In the case of the Student Union, which was built around 1950, it was built for a student body of 12,000," said Francis. "The building no longer meets the needs of the student body and the cost of doing anything to it is more expensive. It's cheaper to replace."

Meeting the needs of the student body means that "the quality of student life depends on having adequate space for student activities, clubs, meetings and assemblies," according to the report.

To draw prestigious faculty to the campus, Francis said it is imperative that UMass keeps up with the times.

"Morrill and Federls are in the process of trying to rebuild their faculty," he said. To do this, they need laboratories and classrooms suitable for modern technology.

The new Building and Condition Report also outline historic or legacy buildings on campus.

Currently, legacy buildings such as the Old Chapel, are only maintained on the exterior. Francis said that UMass waits for a donor to give money for renovation of historic structure on campus.

The original campus was built in three places, the Southwest Hill area (Munson to South College), East Ridge (Fernald to Clark and Wilder Halls), and Lewis Drive area (Hunt to West Experimental Station).

Effects of the current construction and renovation program have been evident throughout campus.

New Dirt signs and construction vehicles are everywhere and campus has had ongoing construction during the summer.

According to Francis, last year the University spent about $200 million on new construction and repair projects.

"Because of the completion of the power plant and Skinner and the continued work on the Integrated Science Building this number will drop," Francis said. The renovated Berkshire Dining Commons, the North Apartments and the Marriott Center for Hospitality Management are some of the newest additions UMass offered students last year.

New construction projects include the Studio Arts Building, Integrated Science Building, Central Heating Plant and renovation of Skinner Hall.

For more information or to download the report, visit www.umass.edu/fp.

Kris Olsen can be reached at kolsen@student.umass.edu.

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to Ani Science	Engin 110	Intro To Chem Engrn	MIE 210	Statics
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro To Ele & Elec	MGT 260	Intro To Law
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to ECE	MGT 301	Principles of Mgt
Anthro 102-A	Arch & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Mech & Indus	MicBio 160	Bio Hi Cancer & Apoptosis
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	Engl WP 111/112		Music 100	Appreciation Intro
Anthro 104-A	Culture/Sex & People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env. Biology	Music 101	Hist of Music
Art Hist 100	Survey: Ancient & Med	EnvSci 112	Land Use Environm.	Music 103	History of Jazz
Art Hist 115	Intro To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro To Environ Policy	Nursing 100	Pers Hl Nursing
Astron 100 1-4	Intro To Astronomy	EnvDes 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 210	Instr Environ & Dev
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	FinMgt 250	Quant Tools Mgt	Nursing 301	Pathophysiology
Bio/BioChem 285	Cell & Molec Biology	FinMgt 300	Fund Of Finance	Nursing 315	Physical Assessment
BioChem 420	Elem Biochemistry	FinMgt 301	Corp Finance	Nursing ???	Mental Health Nurs
BioChem 471	Elem Physical Chem	FinMgt 304	Info Tech Finance	Nutr 150	Under Nutrition
BioChem 523	General Biochemistry	FinMgt 320	Investments	Phil 110	Intro To Philosophy
Bio 100 A1-A4 B D	Intro to Biology I	Forest 528	Forest & Wetlands Hyd	Phil 164	Medical Ethics
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem French I	Physics 100	Concept Physics
Bio 105	Biology of Soc Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Environ Change	Physics 125	Seeing the Light
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 131	Intro to Physics I
Bio 108	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Landscape	Physics 132	Intro to Physics II
Bio 280	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro To Oceanogr.	Physics 139	Intro to Physics
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic earth	Physics 152	General Physics II
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem German	Physics 181	Physics I - Mech
Chem 111/112	Gen Chem-Sci Majors	Hist 111	World Hist 1500-Pres	Physics 281	Comput. Physics
Chem 261/262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 101 A	Western Thought	Physics 421	Mechanics I
Chem 269	Org Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist of China I	PolSci 101 B	American Politics
Chem 471	Elem Phys Chem	Hist 150	Dev Of Amer Civ 1000-	PolSci 121 B	World Politics
CmpSci 105	Intro To Comp. Sci	Hist 151 A	Dev of Amer Civ II	PolSci 162	Constitutional Law
CmpSci 120	Problem Solving w Itnt	HT Mgt 100	Intro to Hosp & Tour	PolSci 255	Am Foreign Policy
Cmpsci 187- A	Program W/ Data Struc	HT Mgt 150	Food Pro Mgt	Psych 100 1-9	Intro To Psychology
CmpSci 287	Prog Lang: Paradigms	HT Mgt 250	Food Service Mgt	Psych??40 A-C	State Of Psych
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	HT Mgt 260	Hosp Personnel Mgt	Psych 241	Methods of Inquiry
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 320	Learn & Cond.
Comm 240	Modes of Hum Comm	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 330	Phys. Psychology
ComDis 210	Intro To Comm. Disor	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutrit	Psych 335	Behav. Endocrin
ComDis 211	Anat & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Prevent. & Care of At	Psych 350	Child Development
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang Disor	Kin 297 A, C	Anatomy & Phys. II	Psych 380	Abnorm. Psychology
Econ 103 A-F	Intro. To Microeconomics	Kin 300	Diets, Supple & Alt	Soc 100 A, H	Race, Gender Class
Econ 104	Intro. To Macrol con	Kin 440	wellness in The Wor	Span 110/126	Elem Spanish I
Econ 203 A-B	Intro. Microecon Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills	Span 126	Elem Spanish II
Econ 204 B	Intro. Macroecon. Pol	Math 101-104	Prel. to Algebra	Span. 311	Ad. Grammar
Econ 305	Mathematical Economics	Math 113	Math For Elem Teach
ECE 572	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Meth. & Prob

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

ATTENTION STUDENTS:
Come see what you've been missing out on!
ATKINS FARMS
Country Market
While grabbing your weekly groceries, stop by our...
• Sushi Bar
• Deli Bar
• Extensive Salad Bar
• Bakery
• Full Service Florist
COME CHECK OUT OUR SPECIALTY FALL PRODUCTS...
Homemade Caramel Apples
Apple Cider
Homemade Fudge
Cider Donuts
ALSO AVAILABLE:
Take - Out Food
Student Care Packages
Corner of Route 116 & Bay Road
South Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 253-9528 * WWW.ATKINSFARMS.COM
JUST A SHORT DRIVE FROM UMASS

Innovation brings record $41.4 million in revenue to UMass

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts generated a record-setting $41.4 million in revenue from intellectual property licensing during the 2007 fiscal year.

Earned from the licensing of University technology that has been developed across all five campuses, this past year's revenue exceeded the previous record of $28.7 million in 2005. Revenue also increased about $13 million in 2007 from the 2006 fiscal year.

The technology has been employed in pharmaceuticals, educational software products, and research tools, and from a one-time sale of previously acquired stocks.

"Surpassing $40 million in intellectual property commercialization revenue is a significant milestone," said UMass President Jack Wilson. "In addition to attracting and retaining faculty that are among the top tier of researchers in their fields in the world, we think it's important to provide an environment that fosters our researchers' ability to bring cutting-edge discoveries to market."

The University only formed a licensing office in 1994, but has seen steady growth over the course of the last thirteen years, according to University officials. In the past year University research from across the five campuses resulted in a total of 174 invention disclosures, 106 patent applications, and 78 technology licenses.

Officials credit the record growth in revenue to the Office of Commercial Ventures and Intellectual Property (CVIP). Licensing officials from within CVIP work closely with University faculty and researchers to determine the commercial potential of intellectual property. Founded in 1995, CVIP protects and markets University technology to interested companies and investors in the business sector.

CVIP, in cooperation with Massachusetts Technology Transfer Center (MTTC), also works with faculty and investors to facilitate the start-up of companies and business utilizing University developed technology throughout the commonwealth.

MTTC was created and funded by the Massachusetts state legislature and former governor Mitt Romney in 2003 to facilitate the transfer of technology and research from universities, hospitals and research institutions to the business sector, according to the MTTC Web site.

"We pursue knowledge and innovation not only for their own sake, but also to build a stronger economic future for Massachusetts, and to bring to fruition discoveries that have the potential to shape better lives for people across the globe," Wilson said.

Recent start-ups affiliated with the University include Sunf.thanol and Advanced Cell Technology, both located in Amherst, Massachusetts.

Sunf.thanol, founded by Dr. Susan B. Leschine of the UMass Amherst microbiology department, is commercializing a newly discovered cost-effective process of producing ethanol from biomass. The technique, developed by researchers at UMass Amherst, avoids adding enzymes to the ethanol during the fermentation period, which effectively cuts the cost of the entire process, according to the Sunf.thanol Web site.

Between its five campuses in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell, and the Medical Center in Worcester, the University of Massachusetts annually spends more than $400 million on research and technology, with over 58,000 undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in academic degree programs.

UMass hosts research on energy use

COURTESY MASSCREST

MassCrest, located in Lederle, supported the 10-week-long program.

BY SARAH SYED
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Ten undergraduates from colleges and universities across the country dedicated the summer to researching solutions to energy demand problems as part of a program funded by the National Science Foundation (NSF) at the University of Massachusetts.

The students spent 10 weeks on campus for the Collaborative Undergraduate Research in Energy (CURE) program, supported by a three-year, $210,000 grant given to both the UMass chemistry department and the campus-based Massachusetts Center for Renewable Energy Science and Technology (MassCrest) by the NSF.

The program included eight projects concerning solar cell energy, microwave synthesis, fabrication of photovoltaic devices, biomass conversion and others.

The students devoted their time not only to research, but also to understanding how researchers from different fields work together on the subject of renewable energy.

CURE director S. "Thai" Thayumanavan, an associate professor of chemistry at UMass and co-creator of the program, alongside assistant professor of polymer science and engineering Bryan Coughlin, explained that the research was unique because it focused on "collaborative research in renewable energy," mixing together students and faculty from the chemical engineering, engineering, and polymer science departments.

Program participants designed and synthesized molecular structures, membranes, and polymers, and engineered plants and microbes for conversion of biomass to fuels.

Student participant Hadiza "Kim" Anaza from Lincoln University worked with semiconductors.

She called the program "an exciting and unique opportunity to work on this very important problem and make an impact."

The 10 students were picked out of an applicant pool of about 100 students from across the country and received a $4,000 stipend, free housing and travel expenses.

Thayumanavan expressed his delight in the summer and the "high-quality applicants," and explained that a rigorous application process, including a strong academic background and compelling personal statement, was required for consideration in the CURE program.

While some students were drawn directly from local area colleges, including UMass, Mount Holyoke College and Smith College, others came from as far as Knox College in Illinois, Luther College in Iowa and North Carolina State University.

Thayumanavan is looking forward to next summer and urges students interested in chemical research to consider the program and visit the NSF Web site for information on future endeavors.

More information about the CURE program can be found at www.chem.umass.edu/masscrest/reu

No 'immediate plans' to develop former Frat Row

FRAT ROW from page 1

"The sale, which we first proposed to the chancellor on January 3, 2006, took four years," said Jim Mulcahy, Treasurer of ATG. "But finally all the paperwork was done."

The grassy parcels on 379, 387, 389, 395, and 401 North Pleasant St. now belong to UMass, but were occupied by fraternities and sororities just a couple years ago.

After the deal to sell the houses to UMass was made official in 2006, ATG told the fraternity and sorority members living in the buildings that their leases would be up at the end of the 2006-06 academic year.

The buildings sat vacant as the 2006-07 academic year kicked off, and were demolished a couple months later. After the water systems and foundations were uplifted, and the land was seeded and graded, it was officially sold to UMass on June 27.

"We don't have any immediate plans to develop the property," said Edward Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information at UMass. He said in the future, the land could be used as an academic site, but nothing is set in stone.

Physical Plant officials and members of the Turf Management Program will be working on the parcels to improve upon the condition of the land, said Blaguszewski. Since it's located at the entranceway of the campus, for now the university just wants to make it look inviting.

"We want to maintain that look," said Blaguszewski. "As we access the master plan, that property can fit into that."

Members of ATG celebrated the sale on Aug. 17 on the grass of their former lot. In one of his final public appearances in Amherst, Chancellor John V. Lombardi attended the Frat Row ceremony, offering final words on the land he recently helped purchase for the University.

One-fifth of the $2.5 million UMass shelled out to buy Frat Row was almost immediately donated back into the university system. Even before the deal was completed, ATG had planned to contribute $500,001 of the $2.5 million to an endowed professorship in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

Once the purchase was made, and the $2.5 million was deposited into the ATG bank, Mulcahy got in his car and drove to the UMass system offices in Boston to hand deliver the $500,001 donation check.

"I actually took the check and drove it to the UMass headquarters in Boston," he said.

The money obtained through the sale has allowed ATG to be debt-free for the first time in almost 70 years, said Mulcahy. He said ATG took its first mortgage out in 1940, and has owed money since then.

With the $2 million leftover from the Frat Row sale, the company was able to pay off all its debt. "We have paid off all of our obligations," he said.

For years, ATG received rent from the fraternity and sorority members living in the North Pleasant Street homes. Since the houses were unoccupied for several months while the sale was getting finalized, Mulcahy said ATG was strapped for cash.

"We went through a full year without any rate income," said Mulcahy. The company had to account for a handful of expenses, including taxes, fire and liability insurance, and general upkeep of the property. During the period, Mulcahy said ATG borrowed some money from ATG alumni.

Although frat tenants were rushed out of the houses after the 2005-06 year, the houses remained in ATG's possession until last June. One of the stipulations of the purchase-and-sales agreement was that ATG had to demolish the buildings before selling it to the university.

During the 11-month standstill, the vacant land went through a few spark incidences. In late September, 2006 someone broke into the empty house, setting one of them on fire. Although serious damage was reported, the arson attempt set ATG's demolition deadlines off to the left.

Late May, about a month before the razing, someone drove onto the land shortly after an afternoon rainstorm. Consequently, the adventurous driver's truck got stuck in the mud. Police were called in and eventually, the man's truck was towed off Frat Row.

Eric Athas can be reached at eathas@student.umass.edu

Members of Alpha Tau Gamma Inc. celebrate the final sale of Frat Row, after an 11-month vacancy of the land during which one house was the target of arson.

Interim chancellor: tenure 'won't be status quo'

COLE from page 1

Dr. Thomas W. Cole, former president of Clark Atlanta University, was recommended for the post by UMass president Jack Wilson.

the world. Thus, it is with pride and enthusiasm that I step forward to serve this great university.

As a newcomer, Cole knows that it will take a short time to get a feel for UMass.

"I very institution has its own culture, its own set of dynamics, and I have to get a feel for what that is," he said. "I want to listen to what students have to say, what faculty and deans and administrative faculty have to say about what the institution is and where it is going."

However, he says, his tenure won't be status quo." His vision for UMass this year? "A lot of aggressive activities that will help move the University forward," he said.

While Cole was at the helm of Clark Atlanta University, the historically black, four-year school became the largest College Fund/UNCF institution. He's credited with doubling [illegible] increasing enrollment from 3,150 to 5,700 students and tripling the annual budget.

As a Texas native, he graduated summa cum laude from Wiley College in 1961 and earned a PhD in organic chemistry in 1966 at the University of Missouri. He also holds honorary degrees from West Virginia State College, the University of Charleston, Wilberforce University and Wiley College.

Cole joined the faculty of Atlanta University in 1966 as an assistant professor of chemistry. He has held a variety of academic titles including chairman of the department of chemistry, the Luther J. Callaway Professor of Chemistry, chair of the Atlanta University Center Chemistry, and provost and vice president for academic affairs.

In the nearly more than 30 years of service to the University, the Clark Atlanta board named a $40 million research center for science and engineering after him.

Stephen P. Tocco, chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees, said Dr. Cole is "the right leader at the right moment for UMass Amherst."

"Thomas Cole is a nationally respected leader and educator," Tocco said. "We have lofty aspirations for UMass Amherst and Thomas Cole is someone who has always aimed high and achieved at the very highest levels.

Cole is looking forward to his year at UMass. "The University of Massachusetts has an extraordinary history and reputation. Any opportunity to be part of that isn't something that you can dismiss," he said.

Katie Thatcher can be reached at kthatcher@student.umass.edu

Officials dismiss rankings

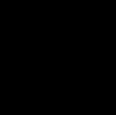
PARTY SCHOOL

[illegible] Dr. Jack Wilson, [illegible] University of Massachusetts [illegible] Amherst [illegible] Lowell [illegible] Dartmouth [illegible] Medical School [illegible] Worcester [illegible] that the university's efforts to improve the University.

According to [illegible] that the methodology [illegible] particular [illegible] flawed that it [illegible] didn't measure [illegible] support [illegible] made at all [illegible] schools' programs.

[illegible] fields [illegible] 158 students [illegible] tently had [illegible] ates.

About [illegible] completed [illegible] Hi's [illegible] passes.



According [illegible] Editor of [illegible] "Best [illegible] any [illegible] graduation [illegible] student [illegible] were [illegible] academic [illegible] academic [illegible] college [illegible] rankings.

"The [illegible] questions [illegible] pointed [illegible] overall [illegible] said. "[illegible] UMass [illegible] Dartmouth [illegible] Princeton [illegible] Brown [illegible] of [illegible] colleges [illegible] is an [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." - Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

So long, Lombardi: a departure of trust

Tucker Merrick

For those of you who have never seen or met Chancellor John Lombardi, you probably never will. If you're an upperclassman, that's too bad, because you missed your chance and it's your own fault. For those who are freshmen, well, that's just too bad.

The now former Chancellor Lombardi was one of the icons here at UMass – along with the 7-foot, 1-inch basketball center Luke Bonner, and the kid who always wears jean shorts and a T-shirt, even in the dead-cold of winter. Students could see John Lombardi descending from his hill-side residence to walk his dog daily around campus, and drive in his old red Jeep. Students knew him, even if they didn't know him. And for a guy who got paid more annually than many people hope to make in a decade, this type of behavior is unusual.

But why did he leave? If you don't already know the story, here's a quick sum-up that reads like "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington." Simply put, John Lombardi was forced out by UMass President Jack Wilson, who felt threatened by Lombardi. Wilson crafted and attempted to carry out this usurpation via his "One University Plan," which he unveiled just last May. As the Boston Globe put it, Wilson plans to "take a greater role in running the system's flagship Amherst campus while continuing to serve as the president of the entire system."

At the same time, Lombardi was told he had one more year as chancellor before he was gone, to return after sabbatical as a professor. Reacting to these back-alley shenanigans, Lombardi took the job as president of the Louisiana State University system, which was in the market for a new president and had Lombardi as the only candidate on their list.

As ridiculous as this all sounds, it is true; it's not some poorly conceived plot that belongs on a flatulent NBC drama. Lombardi was ousted simply because he was doing too his job too well, he had too much support, he was going in an unfamiliar direction, and people were, well, jealous.

The type of job he did was to turn a university in the throes of a $40 million budget cut into nothing less than a burgeoning top research institution, all in a scant five years. He implemented the "Amherst 250" plan, an effort to hire 250 new faculty members over a five-year period. He saved the DuBois Library, and is responsible for the construction of the Learning Commons – not to mention all of the buildings going up that are under the umbrella known by all as "New Dirt." Lombardi got money to flow into UMass. Just recently, the National Science Foundation awarded a total of $21.6 million in research grants, $9.2 million of which went solely to UMass Amherst. Our campus beat out schools like Harvard, MIT and Boston College.

There's a constant and widening rift between the administration and the students and faculty – a fight between 'the ruling class' and everyone else.

But when thinking about a man's legacy, many cannot wait for the opportunity to find fault, and Lombardi will be no different. Soon we will be hearing about how John Lombardi didn't actually walk with the students but rather on top of them, stepping on their rights in exchange for money and campus development. People will say that cash flow and buildings should not have been the main concern; the "Students First" initiative will finally have some perspective from which to critique, as the idea of higher education for all becomes but a memory. Along this stream of thought, Lombardi will also become the master puppeteer behind the intangible accusation toward the loss of "fun" on campus, and why we are no longer one of the top party schools in the nation (God forbid!).

The praise and criticism makes it all too clear that right now UMass isn't sure what it wants to be. There's a constant and widening rift between the administration and the students and faculty – a fight between "the ruling class" and everyone else. The administration sees itself as a parent who simply knows better, and wants to expand our campus, our funds, our enrollment and our prestige. Everyone else is afraid to be lost in the mix, and that this growth will come at the terrible cost of the loss to the right of higher education.

In this precarious situation, trust is fundamental. UMass is moving forward with necessity, but nonetheless at a precariously fast pace, transitioning from a university to a research institution. If you ever met Lombardi, or even heard him speak, you immediately got a sense that he cared about the students. He believed in higher education, something everyone has to grudgingly admit-- whether or not you matched his stride. Now he's gone, and so is that trust. Without that, we really have something to worry about.

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at tucker.merrick@gmail.com.

Welcome to COLLEGE

Michael Cartwright

Welcome to COLLEGE. (I only wish the editor could print the word "college" as it appears on the front of Bluto Blutarsky's infamous sweatshirt.)

After spending the summer debating whether or not you should buy a microwave and refrigerator or simply rent the two-in-one "micro-fridge," you've finally arrived. (Hopefully, you didn't go with the micro-fridge.)

If you play your cards right (breaking off your long-distance relationship as soon as possible) you can make these next four years (or five, or six, or seven) the best years of your entire life. They will surely beat the four years preceding your first divorce.

While some of you may have quickly made yourself at home here, others are decidedly homesick. This column is largely intended for those unfortunate folk – for the girl who's curled up on the bottom bunk in her dorm room, practically sucking her thumb, as her roommate reenacts Vivid videos with her high school boyfriend on the bunk above. (Hey, she warned you over the summer that he might be staying for a few nights, right?)

I'll assume the vast majority of freshman dudes passed the "Superbad" stage a long time ago, and so this column also goes out to those sad stragglers out there. Listen, bros, don't sweat it. Between the low self-esteem that accompanies those "freshman 15" and the flowing Stoli, the goalie is basically being pulled, and well, even Happy Gilmore could score on an empty net.

Anyway, if you're feeling at all uncomfortable, I'd like to ease your discomfort and assist you in the adjustment process by clueing you into a few things about this wild and crazy place they call "The Zoo."

First off, calling it "The Zoo" hasn't been cool since Lou Roe played Beirut with Marcus Camby in Southwest. Please don't run around the dorm rooms during your first round robin, yelling "The Zoo, Baby! I'm an animal! The Zoooooo!" or anything idiotic like that. In fact, calling UMass "The Zoo" is only acceptable if you don't go to school here. (Please don't be confused by the orange-and-purple striped PVTA buses that look like they're on safari.)

And speaking of African safaris, are there any young elephants interested in the Republican Club? If so, you might want to reconsider. While non-conformity is admirable, joining the Republican Club at UMass is kind of like walking through Jerusalem and professing your love for the Third Reich. Then again, if I'm trying to talk sense into a new student who already knows about the Republican Club, I am probably the one who should reconsider. But seriously, there's an RSO for every conceivable interest you have, no matter how random. Look into it.

Another thing to consider: if you're not majoring in Art History, do not, under any circumstances, enroll in Art History 100. You'll end up dropping it the second the professor expects you to memorize 250 photographic slides for the midterm, and then reminds you to keep those slides in mind for the final as well. If you're looking for a gut course, enroll in Theater 100, unless of course you found it challenging to play that Hemlock tree in your sixth-grade musical.

You can make these next four years (or five, or six, or seven) the best years of your entire life. They will surely beat the four years preceding your first divorce.

If you get lost on your way to Theater 100, just remember this: look for the library. It essentially marks the center of the UMass grounds. The 26-story W.E.B. DuBois library is the tallest academic library in the world and serves as the North Star of our campus. It just doesn't get anywhere near the kind of recognition and respect Polaris receives. You see, most people consistently mispronounce the library's proper name, but because it is such a formidable structure, it never gets offended. It might look French ("Doo-bwah"), but DuBois is actually Dutch (Doo-Bose).

I know, I don't really care either – it just seems like something you should know out of respect, at least before you sneak a girl off to one of those little alcoves located on the 16th floor.

These fun-filled years will fly by faster than Tom Green's career. I'm not exaggerating. With that being said, don't be bashful. Get out of the dorms whenever you can, join clubs (even if it is the Republican Club), play intramurals and try to go to class once in a while.

Because if all goes according to plan, the girl who was sucking her thumb on the bottom bunk might be sitting at home during Thanksgiving break, unable to eat a piece of her turkey dinner. And why? Well, you know, she just might be a little bit homesick.

Michael Cartwright is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu

Immigration: a patchy solution

John Gruenenfelder

It's the nice period of summer in southern Arizona when the rains finally come. So now it's still extremely hot, but wet – decent weather for a trip from Tucson to the old mining town of Bisbee. Traveling along highways and back roads, one sight is conspicuously absent: the border patrol. Thanks to a rock slide, the return trip is along Highway 92, running right along the Mexican border, and the scene is similar. Mountains and valleys, but no border patrol.

I'm not particularly distressed by their absence; stopping at border patrol checkpoints becomes annoying quickly. Still, given the amount of vitriol and rhetoric in the government over the issue of border security, you might reasonably expect a heightened presence.

Later, back in town, I passed a truck for a roofing company, the back filled with workers heading home. Nearly all were Hispanic and – given our present immigration situation – I wouldn't be surprised if some were here illegally. But, having grown up here in a city that's nearly a majority Hispanic and so close to the border, I did not see this as even remotely out of the ordinary.

Border security is getting a lot of attention in Washington, though, and this summer saw the near passage and then spectacular defeat of a comprehensive immigration reform bill, all in the space of a few weeks. It began with broad bipartisan support, but as it became ever more clear that a majority of the American public was not happy with the bill, supporters began to jump ship until eventually a mostly Republican opposition kept the bill from passing.

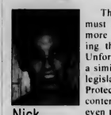
The status quo is what led us to the current mess in the first place.

It was a defeat for the president, of course, who at this point has failed at so many things you almost feel sorry for him (but not quite). In a wider sense, though, it was also a defeat for America as a whole. This country desperately needs reform on the immigration front and this bill, while flawed, represented a large step past the status quo. And the status quo is what led us to the current mess in the first place. Opponents of the immigration bill want the border secured before anything else is done, but I doubt these same people will be clamoring for reform once the border actually is secured (if such a thing does indeed occur during our lifetimes).

A short-term solution called Operation Jumpstart has sent National Guard units from all over the country to assist the border patrol in the four states bordering Mexico. This increase in manpower was supposed to help secure the area while the border patrol hired more agents, but even now the president has recalled some of these units well ahead of any large increase in border patrol strength.

With his first plan left unworkable, the president has now shifted more towards the enforcement-only solution his conservative base prefers. This is yet another shift in the fight. First was a comprehensive solution including both security and a "way forward" for existing immigrants. That was scuttled in favor of tough security-only solution. Supporters of the security-heavy plan, such as Pat Buchanan, want the border sealed and imagine that the problem of existing immigrants will solve itself via attrition.

Now, this new enforcement-only tactic aims to strictly enforce existing immigration and hiring laws and go after the businesses that hire illegal immigrants. Depending how successful this campaign is, backlash from concerned businesses will likely be strong. If this effort has any significant effect, the administration may not like what it has helped to create, nor will, in the end, customers of affected businesses.



These token efforts by Congress have led, unfortunately, to state and local solutions. Not all of these are bad, but states should not need to do it themselves, and there is a complex patchwork of immigration laws developing. A troublesome new law in Arizona requires employers to run checks on all employees with a state agency to ensure that no illegal aliens are employed. This law also contains extremely strong penalties for employers who do not properly vet their new hires.

Closer to the University of Massachusetts, a new plan is underway in New Haven, Conn. to give identification cards to all residents of the city, legal or otherwise. The hope is that these cards will allow illegal residents to come out of the shadows and become more involved members of the community. This particular local solution, at least, is trying to make the situation more bearable for all concerned, though it seems unlikely that people here illegally will be clamoring to get a government ID card.

The comprehensive solution really was the best hope. With Bush now bowing to pressure it won't be returning anytime soon. That is very unfortunate, as the country will need to wait another 18 months until a new president with, hopefully, new ideas. In the meantime, we can look forward to more talk, more debate, and scattered half-baked local solutions while no real progress is made.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at johng@as.arizona.edu.

Laws with loopholes

Nick Milano

The Protect America Act must be a good thing. What is more important than protecting this great country of ours? Unfortunately, though, much like a similar piece of carefully titled legislation, the Patriot Act, the Protect America Act of 2007 has content murky enough to frighten even the most apathetic civil libertarian. This law, voted through both houses of Congress without so much as a whimper of a fight, legalized many portions of the NSA wiretapping surveillance program. When news of the warrantless surveillance program first broke in December of 2005, the Democrats' protests steadily grew into a storm of political attacks on an unpopular president and helped them win control of Congress in the 2006 mid-term elections.

However, just a year later, like a hurricane passing over land, the Democrats' outrage lost its ferocity and the Protect America Act passed with support from all voting Republicans and fifteen Democrats for a 32-vote margin of victory in the Senate. In the House, the situation was no different, as the bill passed with a 44-vote margin of victory, with much of the difference made up by the 41 Democrats who voted for it. This is especially surprising because Nancy Pelosi's election to Speaker of the House was touted to prevent President Bush's pursuit of personal agenda. It is time for the Democrats in Congress to work together and stand up to a president who has reinstated the imperial presidency, defied the system of checks and balances and incensed turmoil in the Middle East.

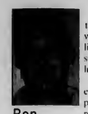
There are two versions of the surveillance program that the National Security Agency has implemented. The first program was the result of an executive order from the desk of President Bush. The second fell under the Protect America Act. Surprisingly enough, rather than check the president's violations of the Constitution and the

The administration's proven disregard for the Founding Fathers' system of checks and balances elevates the need for the Congress to be vigilant.

Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, Congress legalized them. The latest edition grants the president broad powers to use wiretaps without warrants, so broad, in fact, that they eclipse the rights President Bush previously asserted were his.

One of the major additions is the requirement for all telecommunications companies to open their mediums to be tapped. Under the older law, President Bush did not have the legal authority to force facilities to enable the government to wiretap their customers. With Congress bending to the will of the authoritarian agenda, President Bush now has the backing of both the executive and legislative branches of the government to pressure the major telecommunication corporations into giving up their customers' privacy in the name of patriotism and national security.

Secondly, and much more frightening, is the absence of clarity in the act's language. President Bush himself pointed out that the prior surveillance program was limited only to suspected terrorists. The law declares that wiretapping can only be "directed at a person reasonably believed to be located outside the United States." Where is the stipulation that the person in question be a suspected terrorist, gunman, insurgent or al Qaeda member?



Because much of the wiretapping will be focused on foreigners and not Americans, proponents of the law argue few civil liberties will be violated. They will further argue that even if a few Americans are caught up in the wiretapping, it will because they are communicating with people who are most likely a threat to this country. While this may be true, the unclear language is a source of concern. President Bush has used vague language to duck from accusations of assuming powers the Founding Fathers' never dreamed of creating. He has a long and sordid history of signing bills into law then attaching a signing statement, whose own constitutionality is under question, claiming he can ignore certain parts of the law he may disagree with, in essence a line item veto. He has recently claimed executive privilege to prevent White House aides from testifying to Congress under oath about the firing of several federal prosecutors. The administration's proven disregard for the Founding Fathers system of checks and balances elevates the need for the Congress to be doubly vigilant of the rights it grants without so much as a fight.

Now what is there to prevent this president who so disregards Congress's oversight, or future presidents, from tapping the calls of everyone from suspected terrorists to political enemies to common Americans? The NSA can now do so with no questions asked as long as the person is "reasonably believed to be located outside the United States."

It is coming up on nearly two years that the warrantless wiretapping surveillance program became public knowledge. When the story first broke, the sentiment of both the country and the Democrats in Congress seemed to indicate that the administration would be checked before even more civil liberties were cast aside in the name of national security. The 2006 mid-term elections further seemed to signal that the political winds in Washington could change because Democrats seized control of both the House and Senate, but nothing has changed. It is now apparent the Democrat's promises of reform were words merely used to win an election.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Murder: not a slippery slope

Ben Duffy

The greatest thing about liberals is that they are chock full of surprises. Just when you think that you actually share a little common ground with them, they will surprise the heck out of you with an absolutely outrageous new policy proposal.

Until recently, I had no idea that enforcing our immigration laws was a political issue. I thought that it was so remarkably uncontroversial that both sides could essentially agree. Before that, I used to think that pretty much everyone knew that a marriage consisted of one man and one woman. I was wrong in both cases.

Liberals always make you ask the question "What will they think of next?" What idea that most of us think of as patently absurd will they be forcing upon us 10, 20, or 30 years from now?

One great example of this phenomenon is the rising international tolerance for infanticide. No, I'm not talking about killing babies inside the womb; liberals have been defending that now for decades. I'm talking about killing babies after they have been born.

Here is yet another example of "what will they think of next?" Although I can see no meaningful difference between killing a child in the womb and killing a child in the cradle, I have grown used to the idea that some people do not consider the former to be infanticide. The decision to legalize pre-birth infanticide was made before I was born. I have never known a world in which killing a baby in the womb was actually called by its proper name. As long as I can remember, it's always been called "choice."

Still, I thought that everyone could agree that killing a child after birth was murder. I thought that everyone knew that every child has human rights. I was wrong. If you've heard of partial birth abortion, get used to post-birth abortion.

Around the world, the same excuses that have been used to kill the unborn are now being used to kill children who have already been born. Holland recently passed a law legalizing "baby euthanasia," according to a March 2006 article in The Times in the United Kingdom. If a child is born sick, her parents can choose to kill her.

Around the world, the same excuses that have been used to kill the unborn are now being used to kill children who have already been born.

In many other countries, the child doesn't even have to be sick in order to be killed. If the parent is mentally ill, that suffices.

According to a CNN.com story, "postpartum depression is recognized as a legal defense [for infanticide] in at least 29 countries, including Great Britain, Canada, Italy and Australia. [Professor Michelle] Oberman said. Those countries have infanticide laws, which state that when a woman kills a child under the age of one and she can prove that the 'balance of her mind is disturbed' by reasons relating to giving birth, the maximum charge the woman can face is manslaughter."

"The practical result of these statutes is that these women receive probation instead of jail time and they receive sentences that require probation plus counseling," Oberman said in the article.

Probation? For infanticide? In what way does the fact that child was killed by her own mother mitigate the crime?

Philip Resnick, a psychiatry professor at Case Western Reserve University, said in the CNN.com article, "I base infanticide acts, particularly in England … limit it to the first year by law. In other words, if a baby is killed after 364 days, the mother is charged with infanticide, if it's 370 days, they are charged with murder." So there it is: from the day a child is born, the clock is ticking. You have one year to kill your baby and still get away with probation plus counseling.

This trend is coming to the United States, courtesy of the American Left. Just ask Senator Barbara Boxer (D-CA), when she thinks life begins. Former Republican Senator Rick Santorum asked her, "You agree, once the child is born, [and] separated from the mother, that the child is protected by the Constitution and cannot be killed[?] Do you agree with that?"

The simple answer would have been "yes." But that is not what she said. Instead, Boxer said, "I think that when you bring your baby home, when your baby is born … the baby belongs to your family and has rights."

This is the end of the "pro-choice" slippery slope that we put ourselves on so many years ago. A child is only a person if her parents decide that she is, and not one second sooner. That is why Senator Boxer says that children are only protected when their parents bring them home.

We can also look at the case of infamous child-murderer Andrea Yates, a woman who drowned her five children in a bathtub. The Houston chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW), America's leading feminist group, formed an "Andrea Yates Support Coalition," which planned to raise money for her defense. Normal people saw Yates as a bloodthirsty killer, feminists saw a women's rights icon.

I can think of no crime more appalling than a parent killing his or her own child. It is absolutely unbelievable, and yet it is rapidly becoming more acceptable in our society. What will the liberals think of next?

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at benjaminduffy@hotmail.com

Reading between the lines

Greg Collins

Among the most revealing indicators of a university's educational vision are the books the college and its professors recommend for incoming freshmen and current students to read. Here on campus, one element worth noting is the assigned Dean's Book that Commonwealth College students are required to complete. Within the last couple of years, the student committee responsible for choosing the books has made intriguing and appropriate selections whose literary messages belie the prevailing politically correct sentiments common on campus.

Lee Silver's "Remaking Eden," assigned in the fall of 2005, discusses the scientific possibilities of genetic enhancement and cloning. While the book's message was, at times, frighteningly similar to those of Hitler and other supporters of biological tampering, the selection challenged us to reconsider modern day paradigms of abortion, in vitro fertilization and other contentious scientific issues. In contrast to being politically correct, the book conveyed radical notions of what science can do for the "better" of society in the name of progress. It was unfortunate that more students did not question the author's conclusions on moral or religious grounds, especially when he came to speak about the book on campus.

Yet ultimately, "Remaking Eden" was an appropriate selection not because its purpose was to appeal to our emotions or to make us feel better about ourselves, themes common in summer reading books assigned by other colleges. Rather, its message was extreme enough to trump political correctness and cut right to the heart of the author's conclusion: scientific progress offers seemingly limitless methods to make the desired results of human beings achievable. Regardless of whether you embrace this thinking or not, the book's explicit message was so direct that the selection was constructive not because of its sentimentality but because of its straightforward, if radical, conveyances.

This past fall, Kang Chol-Hwan's "The Aquariums of Pyongyang," a memoir about growing up under Kim Jong-Il's oppressive North Korean regime, was written similarly in a non-sentimental and direct fashion. Remarkably devoid of any sweeping emotional anecdotes, the memoir provided a horrifying look at Kim's brutality in a fairly objective manner, as disinterested as one could write from such an immersed perspective.

What matters most is not whether the conclusions derived from the book's social or political message are politically correct or sentimental.

This book manifested itself to be a relevant selection for contemporary affairs, as revelations about North Korea's nuclear ambitions became ever more apparent last fall. Instead of making us fortunate Americans feel remorse exclusively about the boy, the book's detached viewpoint allowed readers to confront the objective realities of Kim's inhumane treatment of citizens and its perilous nuclear weapons plans. Memoirs like these are appropriate selections to read not just for the sake of sympathizing with the author, but also for being exposed to issues – in this case, rogue regimes with nuclear capabilities – which affect not one person but countless others who live in a nuclear age.

Books that discuss issues that affect all human beings, rather than merely isolated individuals or society-designated groups of people, allow readers to dismiss any politically correct or overly sentimental messages that otherwise may be conveyed. If the educational purpose of universities is primarily to inculcate a sense of sympathy within the student body, then "Remaking Eden" and "Aquariums of Pyongyang" failed to adhere to this goal. Yet if it is to expand students' mindset on real-world issues which either directly affect us now, like the nuclear age, or will affect us in the future, like cloning, then these books were unequivocally constructive.

What matters most is not whether the conclusions derived from the book's social or political message are politically correct or sentimental. Instead, it is the thought processes leading up to these conclusions which give the book its universal value. If "Aquariums" merely described personal tragedies within the Kang family, the outer limits of literary criticism would be confined to thinking only about how we are more fortunate than he was and how we feel bad for him. But because it was written in the broader context of the geopolitical stage in an unbiased manner, readers had the opportunity to conceive of and later discuss in class how North Korea's regime will significantly determine the next stage of world history independent of having a personal experience.

Jessica Stern's "'Terror in the Name of God," the Dean's Book selection for this semester, exemplifies a subject matter, terrorism, which similarly will continue to affect every one of us for years to come. Although I have not finished reading the book, it appears as though the selection was once again constructive because it downplays sentimentality and instead highlights urgent global problems.

Let's hope that Dean's Book and all other books assigned in college will be selected and interpreted in the future not based only on their emotional value. More important, they should be chosen and judged in a way that confronts tangible issues like terrorism, which will far outlast both our politically correct sentimentality and ourselves.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at gcollins@collegian.com

If I were a consumer terrorist

Brad Leibowitz

Can anyone tell me what the hell happened this summer with the toothpaste industry? For three weeks straight, every day in the news there was a new finding of counterfeit Colgate toothpaste on the shelves of local stores in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Maryland. Similar recalls happened in areas of China and Canada.

According to the FDA officials and the Colgate-Palmolive Company, the counterfeit toothpaste, which was printed as being shipped from "South Affrica," has traces of a chemical commonly found in anti-freeze solution called diethylene glycol.

Other tubes were labeled as being packaged from the "South African Dental Association." Officials also said that these tubes of dental cream did not contain fluoride.

So I got to thinking. If toothpaste is a hot item in the black market, what other items might show up next that could cause some damage to consumers?

Have we all missed something here? In all the years of seeing Hollywood movies and detective shows like "Justice Files" or "CSI," never once has anyone ever reported or depicted the bustling world of underground toothpaste sales. Illegal fluoride-less toothpaste has apparently being running rampant and no one had any idea.

We have all heard about the black market for body parts and organs. Similarly, we have all heard about the black market for the sales of small and large arms. But the toothpaste black market? Who would have thought?

When I heard about the story I went down to my local CVS to try to pick up a five-ounce tube of counterfeit product, yet to my dismay, I couldn't find any.

So I got to thinking. If toothpaste is a hot item in the black market, what other items might show up next that could cause some damage to consumers? If I were a black market terrorist, by what means would I employ my terror?

My first thought was Listerine mouthwash spiked with clear Tabasco sauce (good prank idea), but then I realized it was too close to toothpaste, and thus it would be monitored too tightly.

From there, my thoughts ran from product to product. Hairspray: put raid in the can instead of the normal product. Eyedrops: replacing the product with liquid mace would cause some problems. Yet the one at which I ultimately arrived was toilet paper.

Of any product I could think of, "TP" seems to me like the one that has the most potential for widespread damage to consumers, on the smallest of levels.

Just think: all a black market mischief-maker would need to do is spray each roll with some kind of itching agent, which would cause the onset of a rash – a clear spray agent, which by smell and feel no one could detect. It is a stupid thought, yet used on a massive scale, something like that could really stop the workday. Dane Cook knows all about this.

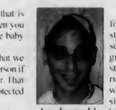
We've all been in the situation. You are at work. It itches, but you can't get to it because of your setting. So for the entire day, you writhe around in your chair, waiting for the one moment to rid yourself of the everlasting itch. It distracts you from work and throws you off your game.

Now just imagine this happening to the entire office. Nothing would ever get done.

See, when it comes to terrorism, I truly believe the men who kill themselves for the sake of engulfing their homelands or to satisfy their gods have it wrong. Sure, killing people sends a message, but it also tells everyone you need to be killed.

The Chinese government had one of the greatest and most successful terror torture techniques ever invented, and it only involved drops of water. Instead of killing people, the Chinese government, when they wanted someone to talk, would strap a person down to a chair with their hands bound and drip small drops of water on them for hours at end.

It might not seem like anything great, but try it yourself. Guaranteed you won't last an hour. They also had a method of torture in which they would let a single centipede crawl on your skin for hours. It didn't cause physical pain, but it was the constant feeling of something crawling on the skin which drove men mad.



So, in a way, I have some admiration for the toothpaste underground. Although they can't spell, as seen in the shipping addresses mentioned above, they understand that it's the little things that can really cause problems.

If there are any smart terrorists, they are the recent counterfeit toothpaste makers. No death, just discomfort. Just the subtle thought of knowing people stopped in front of their mirror before brushing their teeth to ask themselves, "Is this going to get me sick?"

Silly and small, but very smart.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

Wasting away in the 'real' world

Joshua H. Wilder

The ritual of summer vacation for a University of Massachusetts student is a special time. The semester ends, and students are greeted by the ultimate break, starting at the end of May and running all the way until the first week of September. This bellysized break – the equivalent of a high-school vacation on steroids – leaves students with a whole heap of time on their hands.

Whether you have a job, an internship or any other bogus commitment, one thing is for sure: you have an awful lot of time to kill. How to do this? There is no Magic 8 Ball to answer for us, so instead let's just assume that we go with the trend of Americans in general. According to a University of California Berkeley study, Americans spend nine minutes watching television for every minute spent playing sports, exercising or participating in other leisure activities. This is a deeply troubling fact.

It isn't so bad that Americans are turning into a bunch of plus-sized fatty fats; after all, we don't need to go to war or anything. The real issue is what Americans are spending all this god-awful time watching.

Those watching the boob tube in 2007 now have a set of possibilities that were unthinkable to old timers. Not only do we have satellite dishes with 800 channels; we also have high-definition, 48-inch plasma sets to glaze our eyes over for hours on end. But take the remote control and peruse the channel landscape and you are bound to find the crudest, shallowest and all-in-all tackiest programs ever dreamed up by the rodeo clowns known as producers, reality television.

The worst part about these shows is that you don't need to actually watch them to be in the know; the airwaves are inundated with commercials constantly. There are a couple different categories for these ball-breaking adventures in "reality," but they all have the same general premise. They depict the reality of life, by putting average people into completely ridiculous, unrealistic and controlled environments. Sounds real, right?

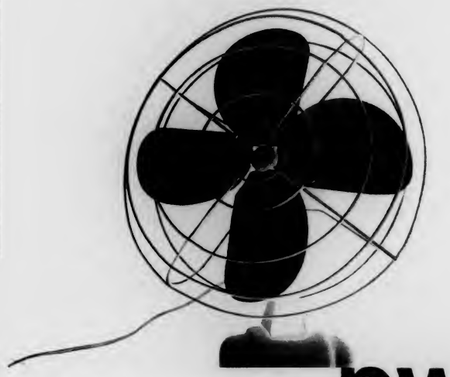
First you have dating shows, where any average person can find the love of their life. This madness started with shows like "Who Wants to Marry a Millionaire," "Temptation Island" and "My Big Obnoxious Fiancé," but didn't really hit their stride until recently when classics like "Flavor of Love," "I Love New York" and, my favorite, "Date My Mom" aired.

It is debatable whether the contestants on all these shows find love, but one thing is for sure – they lose their dignity. It isn't so bad that Americans are turning into a bunch of plus-sized fatty fats; after all, we don't need to go to war or anything. The real issue is what Americans are spending all this god-awful time watching.

Those watching the boob tube in 2007 now have a set of possibilities that were unthinkable to old timers. Not only do we have satellite dishes with 800 channels; we also have high-definition, 48-inch plasma sets to glaze our eyes over for hours on end. But take the remote control and peruse the channel landscape and you are bound to find the crudest, shallowest and all-in-all tackiest programs ever dreamed up by the rodeo clowns known as producers, reality television.

It is debatable whether the contestants on all these shows find love, but one thing is for sure – they lose their dignity.

The worst part about these shows is that you don't need to actually watch them to be in the know; the airwaves are inundated with commercials constantly. There are a couple different categories for these ball-breaking adventures in "reality," but they all have the same general premise. They depict the reality of life, by putting average people into completely ridiculous, unrealistic and controlled environments. Sounds real, right?



First you have dating shows, where any average person can find the love of their life. This madness started with shows like "Who Wants to Marry a Millionaire," "Temptation Island" and "My Big Obnoxious Fiancé," but didn't really hit their stride until recently when classics like "Flavor of Love," "I Love New York" and, my favorite, "Date My Mom" aired.

It is debatable whether the contestants on all these shows find love, but one thing is for sure – they lose their dignity.

There is no doubt that these shows find love, but one thing is for sure – they lose their dignity. It isn't so bad that Americans are turning into a bunch of plus-sized fatty fats; after all, we don't need to go to war or anything. The real issue is what Americans are spending all this god-awful time watching.

Those watching the boob tube in 2007 now have a set of possibilities that were unthinkable to old timers. Not only do we have satellite dishes with 800 channels; we also have high-definition, 48-inch plasma sets to glaze our eyes over for hours on end. But take the remote control and peruse the channel landscape and you are bound to find the crudest, shallowest and all-in-all tackiest programs ever dreamed up by the rodeo clowns known as producers, reality television.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

pwc.tv/ch1

► Hope conquers sweat

Project New Orleans now playing on Channel 1.

*connectedthinking

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

2007

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Arts & Living

Fall back to school 2007 arts@dailycollegian.com

The world beyond Amherst

Dave Master/ Italy

Dave Master/ Italy

Olga Deshchenko/ Ukraine

Olga Deshchenko/ Ukraine

Backpacking through Africa: things I learned the hard way

By Katie Huston
Collegian Staff

"Going to Africa? Are you crazy?"

I'm sure that's what more than a few people thought when I moved to South Africa for 11 months to study and travel.

We associate Africa with poverty, corruption, violence, and AIDS. And I'm not here to argue that everything is fine and dandy on the Mother Continent; there are very real issues.

The problem is, that's where we stop. When you hear about Africa, you hear about disease and failed aid schemes, starvation and war. But you don't hear much about untouched beaches, hiking and trekking, exotic wildlife, vibrant traditional culture, lush rainforest, vast desert, and the kindness, generosity and resilience of the people.

What's more, if we want to understand the problems of these troubled nations, we need to experience Africa ourselves and share what we learn. Simply funneling money into the continent is not the solution.

Africa can be a fascinating and compelling travel destination for just about anyone, whether you're a poor college student living like a local or you're in search of a luxurious safari. Although the airfare's pricey, once you arrive you can usually travel quite comfortably for far less than it would cost in the developed world.

Tourism is what supports many Africans, especially if you seek out local-run enterprises rather than profitable foreign programs. You'll probably get a better deal, and get a much better sense of culture and place while you're at it.

While in Africa, I traveled for 11 weeks to Mozambique, Lesotho, Swaziland, Tanzania, Zanzibar and all through South Africa. It's impossible to give general travel tips for a continent with 54 countries and 8,000 dialects. Africa is bigger than the United States, Europe and China combined, and every country and culture is different.

Here are a few stories, however, that may hold a few general words of advice.

Keep an eye on your stuff

Or better yet, keep it hidden – a bra, ladies, is a surprisingly good place to store all sorts of things, up to and including your cell phone. The bigger your bosoms, the better. Theft

See Africa on page B8

An outsider reflects on Italian stereotypes

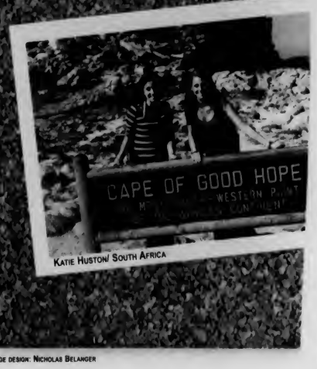
By Dave Master
Collegian Staff

With rolling hills, ancient vacated buildings, magnificent mountain ranges and wine cellars reaching deep into the earth, Italy's character captures onlookers at first glance. The country's 20 regions each have their own unique quality, individually appealing to all kinds of persons.

Tuscany, in just one of Italy's many regions, located along the northwest coast. It is most famous for its Chianti red wine. Chianti is an area within Tuscany where primarily Sangiovese grapes are cultivated, bottled and distributed. Tuscany's hills are populated by rows of vineyards, adding to its picturesque landscape. Wine is of the land, placing the utmost importance and pride into an area's wine production.

Take a quick hike to the region adjacent to Tuscany, Emelia Romagna. This region is located on Italy's west coast with the city of Bologna as its main meatball. Bologna is home of "pasta alla Bolognese," pasta with meat sauce which can be ordered in virtually any American restaurant.

No matter what region, one thing holds true: Italy also produces the most beautiful people in the world. An Italian sporting gym shorts and sneakers in public is never seen, ever. Even the elderly are garbed in silks and suede.



Yes, in this case Italians geographically and aesthetically identify with their homeland. But just as beauty is a mask, the green hills of Italy shroud a deeper truth – deeper than any subterranean wine cellar.

With beautiful people, beautiful landscape, great wine, and great food, where could a country go wrong? What could beauty possibly hide?

To start off, Italians are incredibly lazy, regardless of the region. If someone's toilet is broken, don't bother calling the plumber, unless waiting two years is acceptable. A phone call to the plumber may interrupt his daily coffee break. The best bet is to buy a do-it-yourself toilet fix-it manual, if anyone has ever written one.

Also, Italy has to be the most unnecessarily bureaucratic country in the world. Everyone makes a fuss over buying public transportation tickets, and rightfully so. Lists of laws hidden in some thick book threaten anyone who

See Italy on page B10

Katie Huston/ South Africa

Ukraine offers an authentic taste of Eastern Europe

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

"How one drives on these roads," reads a dusty sign along a highway, "is the true reflection of one's soul." A mere 15-minute drive down a Ukrainian street is enough to conclude that most drivers in the country, assuming the sign tells the truth, have rotten souls. Black as charcoal. The redundant flat fields and countless trees that surround the roads further explain why Ukraine, a nation slightly larger than France and situated in Eastern Europe, is far from being considered a trendy tourist hotspot.

However, if one does manage to survive the typical, widespread reckless driving and explore this once-dubbed "breadbasket of Europe" in depth, the discoveries could be immense. Ukraine is yet to be exploited by tourists eager to hastily sample some culture and feed on souvenirs, this is exactly why this country is able to offer the raw authenticity of its people, traditions and life to its visitors. At times, it is overwhelming and deviant, but those precise experiences are at the heart of all commendable travel.

A Friday summer evening stroll through Kreshatik, the most famous street in Kiev, exposes a capital city in the middle of a social and economic transformation. The long street is tightly lined with designer clothing stores and expensive eateries, fighting for breathing room and customers. The locals, dressed in their Sunday best, walk along Kreshatik slowly, celebrating the end of the week by having a couple of drinks at a nearby bar or by enjoying a lavish dinner with some friends.

Teenagers start out the night by purchasing as much beer as they could physically carry. The legal drinking age in Ukraine is 18 years old, but who bothers to check?

"If the kid is old enough to look over the bar stand, he is old enough to drink," explained a local pub owner. "Life's harsh, you know?"

A brown paper bag around a beer that one plans to drink in public is not a standard in Ukraine. In fact, that notion is absolutely

See Ukraine on page B9

Katie Huston/ South Africa

Page design: Nicholas Belanger

Music festival shines on, despite rainy weather

Third annual Mountain Jam Festival pleases vast audience

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

When circumstance blows you to a paradise mountain village in the middle of nowhere, you have to kick back and enjoy the scenery.

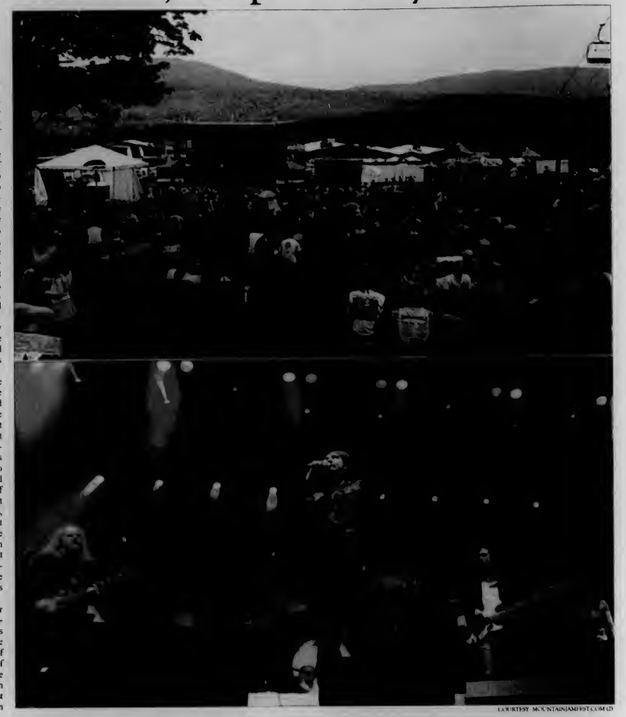
The third annual Mountain Jam Music Festival from June 1-3 in Hunter, N.Y., proved to be a refreshing dose of inspiration and excitement with some music, freaky people and positive vibes all around. Warren Haynes, the festival's organizer and headlining act, brought the heat even in some seriously cold weather – at times it was even a little dangerous. The scene was small and cozy with a tight-knit, communal atmosphere that made almost everyone feel at home on the mountain all weekend long.

The rain storms certainly dampened the fans' bodies, but these music lovers refused to let the weather dampen their moods. During the Umphrey's McGee set, the sun was overtaken by clouds and a storm slowly began to brew in the distance.

Approximately halfway through the set, the rain began to fall and Umphrey's rocked on as the fans got completely drenched. Then the sky turned even nastier and thunder and lighting crept up from a distance. The show was cut short as an announcement was made about the incoming storm and everyone rushed to the lodge, a car, a tent or wherever shelter was available.

A perfect refuge for the rain was the Jerry Garcia art display tent until the storm passed and the crowd proceeded back to the campsite to cook up some tasty food on slightly dampened charcoal grills. Most people at the Hunter Mountain Ski Complex were strong throughout the weekend, not letting the wet weather bother them. Rather, they took it in stride and accepted their fate as though it were a gift from Mother Nature.

Mother Nature also provided some perks this weekend in a truly beautiful part of the country. The Catskill Mountains, which surround Hunter Mountain on all sides, were in full bloom and provided for a breathtaking view. From the campsite, in the middle of the ski slope, the other mountain peaks looked bright, almost neon green with their distant wavy trees blending into one giant mass of explosive color. The weather up in the mountains switched rapidly all weekend from blue skies and sunshine to rain to thunder and lightning, yet it was always welcomed with open arms as an exciting and fresh change. These dedicated music lovers from all over the country continued to rage on for the full three days and took the rain for what it was, a chance to cool off and get away from the hot, burning sun.



Another way to cool off was in the refreshing mountain creek flowing off to the side of the campsites. Adjacent to the winding mountain road that led up to Hunter Mountain ran another mountain creek, which proved to be quite the refreshing swimming spot for the more adventurous of the festival goers. This flowing body of fresh mountain water, known as Catskill Creek, was a little tricky to get to but was truly an amazing site to behold. It was about a 50-foot climb off the highway down to the water, but it was definitely worth the effort. There were miles upon miles of crystal clear glacier water.

At the concert grounds, a wide variety of venders provided for a carnival-like atmosphere that was constantly reflected by the personalities and attire of the fans in attendance.

One girl staked out a spot near the concert ground entrance and yelled, "Free stuff," at the top of her lungs for a good day and a half. Maybe it was her strange multi-colored hair or maybe it was just her unusual willingness to give without asking for anything in return, but whatever it was, most people avoided this karma collector at all costs. The few who did give her a chance, though, realized that she really was giving away free stuff with no hitch. She had a blanket laid out with money, cigarettes, rolling papers, rolling tobacco and more. This is what the festival spirit is all about, to give without asking anything in return – much like camp spirit but in a slightly different way. This girl realized an important lesson, very possibly with the help of some strong psychedelic drugs, that giving is more rewarding than receiving.

Many attendees were strapped for money on this particular weekend, possibly because of the high ticket prices these days, so it was quite common to be approached and solicited by hustlers of all shapes and sizes, selling any type of product you could possibly imagine. One guy even resorted to trying to sell a stolen supermarket shopping cart. This is just something that one gets used to seeing in this type of scene.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MOUNTAINJAMFEST.COM LTD

The third annual Mountain Jam Fest, held in Hunter, N.Y., was a success despite fickle weather. Festival founder Warren Haynes performed with many different musicians throughout the event.

Stuff Happens.®

Which is why you need CampusEdge®Checking from Bank of America.

CampusEdge Checking is free for five years,[1] with no minimum balance. It comes with free Online Banking Service[2] and Mobile Banking Service,[2] including e-mail and text message Alerts. You get free person-to-person transfers, free transactions at over 17,000 ATMs and you even get a Stuff Happens card that's good for a one-time refund[3] of an unexpected service fee.

To get started today, stop by your neighborhood Bank of America or visit us online at bankofamerica.com/bankoncampus

Amherst
75 E Pleasant St
413.549.1949

Amherst - Center
1 S Pleasant St
413.256.2602

Bank of America
Bank of Opportunity™

* No purchase or transaction necessary to enter or win. Must be 18 or older, a legal resident of the 50 United States (including District of Columbia) and a current full-time or part-time student enrolled at an accredited American college or university. Three ways to enter: (1) via text message to short code 72579, key word "BOA" (if you have your college code) or "BANK" (if you do not have your college code); (2) online at bankofamerica.com/bankoncampus or (3) by opening a new Bank of America CampusEdge student checking account offered exclusively at facebook.com from 9/15/07 to 10/31/07. Promotion starts at 12:01 a.m. Eastern Time on 8/1/07 and ends at 11:59 p.m. ET on 10/31/07. Standard text message rates apply. For Official Rules and entry details, visit bankofamerica.com/bankoncampus. Void where prohibited; limit one entry per person regardless of method. Sponsored 2007 by Bank of America Corporation, 100 N. Tryon Street, Charlotte, NC 28255. [1] Free of a monthly maintenance fee for the first five years. Students age 16 and over are eligible for this account. Student status will be validated upon account opening. After the first five years, your CampusEdge account will be converted to MyAccess Checking. The monthly maintenance fee for MyAccess Checking will be waived as long as you have a qualifying monthly direct deposit. Fees for overdrafts and other account-related services still apply. Student checking product in Washington and Idaho is MyAccess CampusEdge Checking.[2] You will be charged access rates depending on your carrier. Web access is needed to use Mobile Banking. Check with your service provider for details on specific fees and charges. [3] Good for a one-time refund of one of the following service fees: overdraft item fee, NSF: returned item fee, overdraft protection transfer fee, stop payment fee, or non-Bank of America ATM fee.
Bank of America, N.A. Member FDIC. ©2007 Bank of America Corporation

Wanna hook up?

Connect with the Comcast Student Bundle.

Comcast High-Speed Internet with PowerBoost™– Leaves dial-up and DSL in the dust. PowerBoost provides a burst of speed—up to 12 Mbps—when downloading huge files like music videos, online games and software.

Comcast Digital Cable with ON DEMAND– All the channels you want most. With ON DEMAND, you can check out everything from movies to sports, original series and more—whenever you want. And many ON DEMAND programs are included for no additional charge.

$79.99 per month for 9 months when you subscribe to both services!

THE HILLS VIP sweepstakes

Go to studentbundle.com and find out how you can live it up L.A. style!

1-866-454-9303

Comcast.

NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO ENTER. Sweepstakes is open to legal residents of the U.S. who are at least 18 years of age. VOID OUTSIDE OF MA, NH, VT, CT, TX, PA, MI, GA AND WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. Enter Sweepstakes by visiting www.hillsvipsweeps.com and completing all required fields on the on-line entry form or by mailing your entry to Pop2Life, Attn: The Hills VIP Sweepstakes, 247 Centre Street, 6th Floor, New York, New York, 10013. Customers who are eligible for and subscribe to the Comcast Student Bundle via www.studentbundle.com or by calling 1-800-COMCAST during the Sweepstakes Period are automatically entered in the Sweepstakes (service must be for a residential location in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, Connecticut, Vermont, Texas, Pennsylvania). Sweepstakes commences at 12:00:01 PM (ET) on August 10, 2007 and ends at 11:59:59 PM (ET) on September 14, 2007. Sweepstakes is subject to Official Rules at www.HILLSVIPSWEEPS.com. Sweepstakes sponsored by MTV Networks, a division of Viacom International Inc. Odds of winning depend upon the number of entries received in the applicable markets. SERVICE OFFER: Offer ends 9/30/2007. Offer only available in participating Comcast systems (and may not be transferred) and is limited to new residential customers, or existing customers who subscribe to Comcast Basic Cable Service only, who have not subscribed to any of the promotional services for the past 120 days, located in Comcast Cable wired and serviceable areas. Offer not available to customers with unpaid Comcast account balances. Offer limited to Comcast Digital Starter and 6.0 Mbps High-Speed Internet access. Advertised prices only available with subscription to both services. If any service is cancelled or downgraded during the promotional period, Comcast's regular charges apply for any remaining services. AFTER THE PROMOTIONAL PERIOD, COMCAST'S REGULAR CHARGES APPLY UNLESS SERVICE IS CANCELLED BY CALLING 1-800-COMCAST. Pricing, programming and services subject to change. Offer savings range from approximately $8.19 to $24.57 monthly (depending on area) over non-promotional rates. Digital Cable and High-Speed Internet services included in offer are limited to a service to a single outlet. Service is subject to Comcast standard terms and conditions of service. Equipment and installation fees are additional. A converter (Comcast's current monthly fee is $3.99) is required for certain cable services. Use of one converter included with Digital Starter Service. A cable modem, which may be purchased at retail or rented from Comcast (Comcast's current monthly fee is $3 (or $5 for Home Networking)), is required for High Speed service. Unless specifically included in offer or service package, equipment fees are additional. Prices shown do not include taxes and franchise fees. Not all programming and services available in all areas. May not be combined with other offers. Cable Service: Certain services are available separately or as a part of other levels of service. Basic Service subscription is required to receive other levels of service. ON DEMAND selections subject to charge indicated at the time of purchase. Comcast High-Speed Internet: Speed references and comparisons for downloads only and compare Comcast 6.0 Mbps to 56kbps dial up and 768kbps DSL. PowerBoost only available with Comcast 6.0 Mbps/8.0 Mbps plans. PowerBoost provides brief bursts of download speed above customer's provisioned download speed for the first 10 MB of a file. It then reverts to the provisioned speed for the remainder of the download. Many factors affect speed. Actual speeds will vary and are not guaranteed. Please call your local Comcast office for restrictions and complete details about service, prices and equipment. Comcast ©2007. All rights reserved.

CTHP-08010701-ASNE

2007

Music festival shines on, despite rainy weather

Third annual Mountain Jam Festival pleases vast audience

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

When circumstance blows you to a paradise mountain village in the middle of nowhere, you have to kick back and enjoy the scenery.

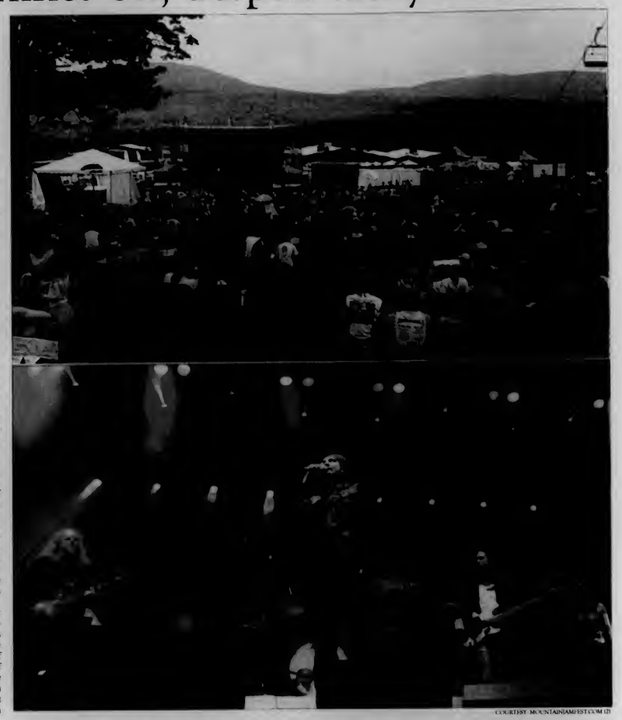
The third annual Mountain Jam Music Festival from June 1-3 in Hunter, N.Y., proved to be a refreshing dose of inspiration and excitement with some music, freaky people and positive vibes all around. Warren Haynes, the festival's organizer and headlining act, brought the heat even in some seriously cold weather – at times it was even a little dangerous. The scene was small and cozy with a tight-knit, communal atmosphere that made almost everyone feel at home on the mountain all weekend long.

The rain storms certainly dampened the fans' bodies, but these music lovers refused to let the weather dampen their moods. During the Umphrey's McGee set, the sun was overtaken by clouds and a storm slowly began to brew in the distance.

Approximately halfway through the set, the rain began to fall and Umphrey's rocked on as the fans got completely drenched. Then the sky turned even nastier and thunder and lighting crept up from a distance. The show was cut short as an announcement was made about the incoming storm and everyone rushed to the lodge, a car, a tent or wherever shelter was available.

A perfect refuge for the rain was the Jerry Garcia art display tent until the storm passed and the crowd proceeded back to the campsite to cook up some tasty food on slightly dampened charcoal grills. Most people at the Hunter Mountain Ski Complex were strong throughout the weekend, not letting the wet weather bother them. Rather, they took it in stride and accepted their fate as though it were a gift from Mother Nature.

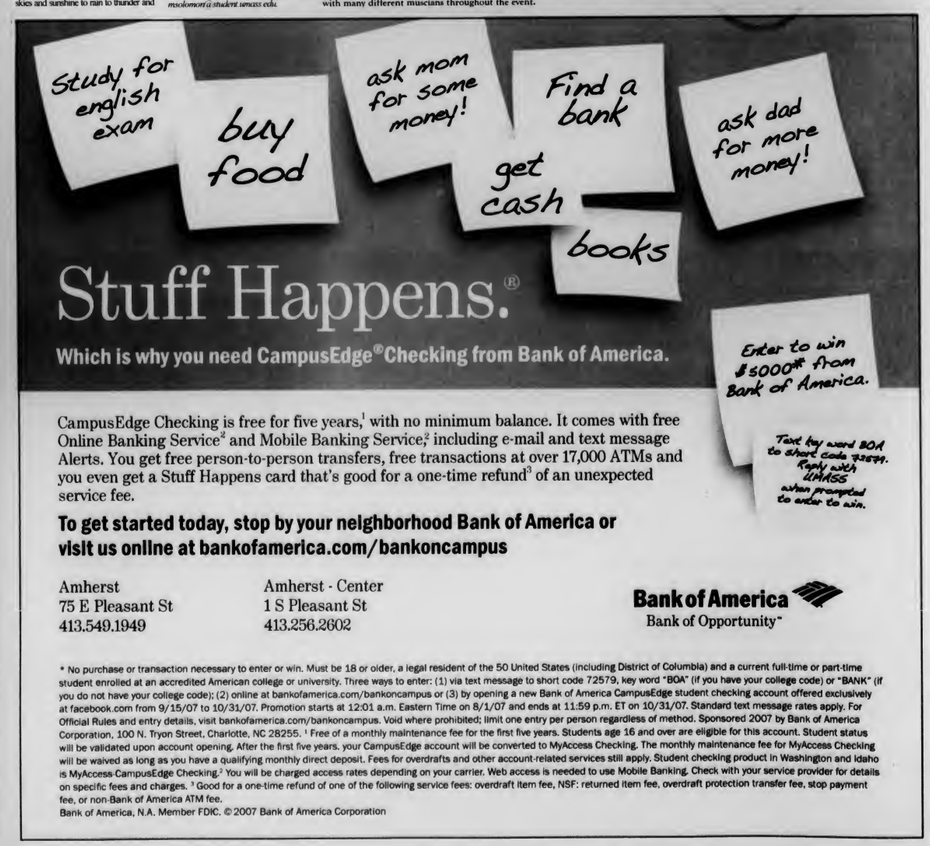
Mother Nature also provided some perks this weekend in a truly beautiful part of the country. The Catskill Mountains, which surround Hunter Mountain on all sides, were in full bloom and provided for a breathtaking view. From the campsite, in the middle of the ski slope, the other mountain peaks looked bright, almost neon green with their distant wavy trees blending into one giant mass of explosive color. The weather up in the mountains switched rapidly all weekend from blue skies and sunshine to rain to thunder and lightning, yet it was always welcomed with open arms as an exciting and fresh change. These dedicated music lovers from all over the country continued to rage on for the full three days and took the rain for what it was, a chance to cool off and get away from the hot, burning sun.



Another way to cool off was in the refreshing mountain creek flowing off to the side of the campsites. Adjacent to the winding mountain road that led up to Hunter Mountain ran another mountain creek, which proved to be quite the refreshing swimming spot for the more adventurous of the festival goers. This flowing body of fresh mountain water, known as Catskill Creek, was a little tricky to get to but was truly an amazing site to behold. It was about a 50-foot climb off the highway down to the water, but it was definitely worth the effort. There were miles upon miles of crystal clear glacier water.

At the concert grounds, a wide variety of vendors provided for a carnival-like atmosphere that was constantly reflected by the personalities and attire of the fans in attendance.

One girl staked out a spot near the concert ground entrance and yelled, "Free stuff," at the top of her lungs for a good day and a half. Maybe it was her strange multi-colored hair or maybe it was just her unusual willingness to give without asking for anything in return, but whatever it was, most people avoided this karma collector at all costs. The few who did give her a chance, though, realized that she really was giving away free stuff with no hitch. She had a blanket laid out with money, cigarettes, rolling papers, rolling tobacco and more. This is what the festival spirit is all about, to give without asking anything in return – much like camp spirit but in a slightly different way. This girl realized an important lesson, very possibly with the help of some strong psychedelic drugs, that giving is more rewarding than receiving.



Many attendees were strapped for money on this particular weekend, possibly because of the high ticket prices these days, so it was quite common to be approached and solicited by hustlers of all shapes and sizes, selling any type of product you could possibly imagine. One guy even resorted to trying to sell a stolen supermarket shopping cart. This is just something that one gets used to seeing in this type of scene.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MOUNTAINJAMFEST.COM (2)

The third annual Mountain Jam Fest, held in Hunter, N.Y., was a success despite fickle weather. Festival founder Warren Haynes performed with many different musicians throughout the event.

CampusEdge Checking is free for five years,[1] with no minimum balance. It comes with free Online Banking Service[2] and Mobile Banking Service,[2] including e-mail and text message Alerts. You get free person-to-person transfers, free transactions at over 17,000 ATMs and you even get a Stuff Happens card that's good for a one-time refund[3] of an unexpected service fee.

To get started today, stop by your neighborhood Bank of America or visit us online at bankofamerica.com/bankoncampus

Amherst
75 E Pleasant St
413.549.1949

Amherst - Center
1 S Pleasant St
413.256.2602

Bank of America
Bank of Opportunity™

* No purchase or transaction necessary to enter or win. Must be 18 or older, a legal resident of the 50 United States (including District of Columbia) and a current full-time or part-time student enrolled at an accredited American college or university. Three ways to enter: (1) via text message to short code 72579, key word "BOA" (if you have your college code) or "BANK" (if you do not have your college code); (2) online at bankofamerica.com/bankoncampus or (3) by opening a new Bank of America CampusEdge student checking account offered exclusively at facebook.com from 9/15/07 to 10/31/07. Promotion starts at 12:01 a.m. Eastern Time on 8/1/07 and ends at 11:59 p.m. ET on 10/31/07. Standard text message rates apply. For Official Rules and entry details, visit bankofamerica.com/bankoncampus. Void where prohibited; limit one entry per person regardless of method. Sponsored 2007 by Bank of America Corporation, 100 N. Tryon Street, Charlotte, NC 28255. [1] Free of a monthly maintenance fee for the first five years. Students age 16 and over are eligible for this account. Student status will be validated upon account opening. After the first five years, your CampusEdge account will be converted to MyAccess Checking. The monthly maintenance fee for MyAccess Checking will be waived as long as you have a qualifying monthly direct deposit. Fees for overdrafts and other account-related services still apply. Student checking product in Washington and Idaho is MyAccess CampusEdge Checking.[2] You will be charged access rates depending on your carrier. Web access is needed to use Mobile Banking. Check with your service provider for details on specific fees and charges. [3] Good for a one-time refund of one of the following service fees: overdraft item fee, NSF: returned item fee, overdraft protection transfer fee, stop payment fee, or non-Bank of America ATM fee.
Bank of America, N.A. Member FDIC. © 2007 Bank of America Corporation

Wanna hook up?

Connect with the Comcast Student Bundle.

Comcast High-Speed Internet with PowerBoost™– Leaves dial-up and DSL in the dust. PowerBoost provides a burst of speed—up to 12 Mbps—when downloading huge files like music videos, online games and software.

Comcast Digital Cable with ON DEMAND– All the channels you want most. With ON DEMAND, you can check out everything from movies to sports, original series and more—whenever you want. And many ON DEMAND programs are included for no additional charge.

$79.99 per month for 9 months when you subscribe to both services!

THE HILLS VIP sweepstakes Go to studentbundle.com and find out how you can live it up L.A. style!

1-866-454-9303

Comcast

NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO ENTER. Sweepstakes is open to legal residents of the U.S. who are at least 18 years of age. VOID OUTSIDE OF MA, NH, VT, CT, TX, PA, MI, GA AND WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. Enter Sweepstakes by visiting www.hillsvipsweeps.com and completing all required fields on the on-line entry form or by mailing your entry to Pop2Life, Attn: The Hills VIP Sweepstakes, 247 Centre Street, 6th Floor, New York, New York 10013. Customers who are eligible for and subscribe to the Comcast Student Bundle via www.studentbundle.com or by calling 1-800-COMCAST during the Sweepstakes Period are automatically entered in the Sweepstakes (service must be for a residential location in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, Connecticut, Vermont, Texas, Pennsylvania). Sweepstakes commences at 12:00:01 PM (ET) on August 10, 2007 and ends at 11:59:59 PM (ET) on September 14, 2007. Sweepstakes is subject to Official Rules at www.HILLSVIPSWEEPS.com. Sweepstakes sponsored by MTV Networks, a division of Viacom International Inc. Odds of winning depend upon the number of entries received in the applicable markets. SERVICE OFFER: Offer ends 9/30/2007. Offer only available in participating Comcast systems (and may not be transferred) and is limited to new residential customers, or existing customers who subscribe to Comcast Basic Cable Service only, who have not subscribed to any of the promotional services for the past 120 days, located in Comcast Cable wired and serviceable areas. Offer not available to customers with unpaid Comcast account balances. Offer limited to Comcast Digital Starter and 6.0 Mbps High-Speed Internet access. Advertised prices only available with subscription to both services. If any service is cancelled or downgraded during the promotional period, Comcast's regular charges apply for any remaining services. AFTER THE PROMOTIONAL PERIOD, COMCAST'S REGULAR CHARGES APPLY UNLESS SERVICE IS CANCELLED BY CALLING 1-800-COMCAST. Pricing, programming and services subject to change. Offer savings range from approximately $8.19 to $24.57 monthly (depending on area) over non-promotional rates. Digital Cable and High-Speed Internet services included in offer are limited to a service to a single outlet. Service is subject to Comcast standard terms and conditions of service. Equipment and installation fees are additional. A converter (Comcast's current monthly fee is $3.99) is required for certain cable services. Use of one converter included with Digital Starter Service. A cable modem, which may be purchased at retail or rented from Comcast (Comcast's current monthly fee is $3 (or $5 for Home Networking)), is required for High Speed service. Unless specifically included in offer or service package, equipment fees are additional. Prices shown do not include taxes and franchise fees. Not all programming and services available in all areas. May not be combined with other offers. Cable Service: Certain services are available separately or as a part of other levels of service. Basic Service subscription is required to receive other levels of service. ON DEMAND selections subject to charge indicated at the time of purchase. Comcast High-Speed Internet: Speed references and comparisons for downloads only and compare Comcast 6.0 Mbps to 56kbps dial up and 768kbps DSL. PowerBoost only available with Comcast 6.0 Mbps/8.0 Mbps plans. PowerBoost provides brief bursts of download speed above customer's provisioned download speed for the first 10 MB of a file. It then reverts to the provisioned speed for the remainder of the download. Many factors affect speed. Actual speeds will vary and are not guaranteed. Please call your local Comcast office for restrictions and complete details about service, prices and equipment. Comcast ©2007. All rights reserved.

2007

Variety of acts unite at this year's Camp Bisco

Camp Bisco a success at new upstate New York location

By Lauren Modisette
Collegian Staff

Bisco fans, Meat Camp Productions and Tom Hamilton guitarist, vocalist and laptop player of Brothers Past are the factors that made Camp Bisco possable this year. At least that's how Marc "Brownie" Brownstein, bassist of the Disco Biscuits, saw it as Hamilton joined Bisco to play Muse's "Take a Bow" on the last night of the music festival. At that moment, the giant butterfly-on-a-stick soared over the crowd, glow sticks swirled and the breath of cold but sweaty fans seemed to turn to smoke (as Umphrey's McGee would put it).

Camp Bisco is an annual music festival, and for the past six years, the Disco Biscuits, made up of Brownie (bass), Aaron Magner (keys), Allen Aucoin (drums), and Jon "The Barber" Gutwillig (guitar midi-keyboard), have hosted it at six different venues. This year, the festival found itself in the hands of the Harley Rendezvous bikers in Mariaville, N.Y. at the Indian Lookout Country Club, known for hosting of Gathering of the Vibes Festival in previous years.

Bisco pulls together an out-of-this-world lineup for fans and festival-attendees annually, and this year wasn't any different. In only three days, they presented campers with bands like Umphrey's McGee, Sound Tribe Sector 9, Caveman, Infected Mushroom, Bustle in Your Hedgerow (the ever-cherished Led Zeppelin tribute jam band), The Breakfast and, of course, the Disco Biscuits.

But that's not all. Bisco also brought together renowned DJs like Bassnectar and Girl Talk. Bassnectar, who compiled an incredible rendition of Glenn Miller's "In The Mood" (and claimed that "no one is too young for [swing]") in addition to an original mix of The Beatles' classic "Strawberry Fields," said he was surprised to have attracted so many people during his set and half expected there to be only a couple hippies "cheffing bowls."

Now, there are various reasons to escape to Schenectady County for a three-day long Disco Biscuits festival – perhaps out of loyalty to the Disco Biscuits, Umphrey's McGee, Sound Tribe Sector 9 or another band. Perhaps the opportunity to try new things and meet new people was enticing, or maybe it became a desperate attempt to escape reality and venture into the alter-universe of the world of Bisco known for the raving crowd, trance-fusion beats, and mind-blowing light shows. Whatever the reason, about 6,000 campers came together so the Disco Biscuits could "rule [their] face."

With a combination of off-the-hook beats and mixes, relatively nice weather, friendly campers and a gang of bikers securing the perimeter of the estate, a festi-junkie couldn't ask for more. Besides the brief rain shower during Umphrey's McGee and the mini-hurricane that swept through the venue as Hallucinogen in Dub wrapped up their performance, Bisco fans got what they paid for. With a lineup to die for, Color War activities, flushable toilets, showers and sinks and minimal mud, nothing was a wet blanket on the festival this season.

Not even the cancellation of the The New Originals' performance could put a damper on the show. When the group, featuring Brownstein, Magner, Zach Velmer of Sound Tribe Sector 9 and Simon Posford of Shpongle, had to call off their part of the show because Posford got stuck in traffic, the Disco Biscuits gladly cut their showers short to give up an additional set.

Caveman kicked off the fest, followed by the self-defined hodge-podge rock 'n roll sound of Umphrey's McGee. They opened with "Nothing Too Fancy" before segueing into "Much Abliged" and "Mulche's Odyssey." Although Umphrey's has a variety of instrumental songs, it seems a bit unusual to experience an Umph set with so few lyrical melodies.

As for the Disco Biscuits, 3 1/2 sets, including songs like "Munchkin Invasion," "Caterpillar," "Cyclone," "Basis for a Day," "Rockafella" and "Boom Shanker," can't be touched. While they finished up with "I Wanna Be Sedated" by the Ramones (which they also played only nights before as an encore at the McCarren Park Pool in Brooklyn, N.Y.), fans were left wondering why The Join was performing on the side stage when Psylab was scheduled and what would happen after the last band played their final chord.

Whether it was the lady in the bathroom or the gossip floating between fans, it's rumored that Camp Bisco will continue to be held at the Indian Lookout Country Club in the years to come. Last year, the festival was held at Hunter Mountain in the Catskills, where it was rumored that bears roamed the campsite, wallets and socks were searched between the campground and venue, and parking was a hike away. Fans can look forward to the time of their lives at future Camp Biscos, especially if they continue to be held in Mariaville.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodisette@student.umass.edu.

Interview with Disco Biscuits keyboardist/guitarist Aaron Magner

Q: Why did you decide to host Camp Bisco VI at the Indian Lookout Country Club?

A: We've been looking for a site for years that has potential to grow. ILCC seemed to have that potential as we were looking for a new site for this year and I think it was realized after last weekend.

Q: What qualities and amenities did they offer that other venues didn't?

A: Private land is always key when holding a festival. The key elements are easy access from the major East Coast cities, on-site camping (car camping is always preferred), amenities like showers and flushable toilets and, of course, lots of beautiful land.

Q: Why has Camp Bisco moved from venue to venue in the passed six years? Were there complications involving the campers? Noise? Trash? Safety? Security?

A: There were various reasons why Camp has been moved from year to year. Either the band/promoters thought that the venue could be more desirable, or the venue merely didn't want to do another festival. A lot of times these venues weren't prepared for the amount of people that come out [to] this type of event.

Q: Do you feel that this year's Camp Bisco was successful? Are you going to continue to host Camp Bisco at the Indian Lookout?

A: I think on both sides, the band and the venue owners were very pleased with general vibe of Camp this year. You never know what the future has in store, but personally and from many fans' feedback, I would love to bring Camp Bisco back to ILCC next year.

Q: What makes Camp Bisco unique?

A: Well, first and foremost, it's our festival. We hand-pick the bands to form a vibe that's distinct from any of the other festival circuits. It seems like the entire year, or at least the summer, culminates with Camp Bisco.

The sixth annual Camp Bisco was held at the Indian Look Out Country Club in Mariaville, N. Y. This is the festival's sixth location in six years.

Despite the fact that over two dozen acts performed over the course of the weekend, festival founders the Disco Biscuits found time to perform three sets of music.

Every Tuesday Night
10¢ Wings
7:00pm to 11:00pm
Charlie's tavern
Since 1978
BUSCH
BUD LIGHT
2 Pool Tables
JIM BEAM
6 TV's
KENO
• $1.99 JIM BEAM & COKE
• $2.50 MARGARITTAVILLE TEQUILA AHOTS
• $4.50 22 OZ LONG ISLAND ICED TEA
• $5.00 PITCHERS OF BUSCH
• $6.00 PITCHERS OF BUD & BUD LIGHT
• $10.00 BUCKETS OF ROLLING ROCK BOTTLES
(2 Persons per bucket)
Join the "Addicted to Charlie's" Facebook Group for more details and up-to-date information!
Saturday, September 15th - Beirut Tournament
Chance to Win $150.00 Gift Certificate
Open Monday–Thursday 4:00pm to 1:00am Friday–Sunday 11:00am to 1:00am
1 Pray Street Amherst, MA 01002 Phone: (413) 549-5403

It's Your Life. It's in Your Hands.
This school year, be prepared and protect your health. Tapestry Health for provides CONFIDENTIAL & AFFORDABLE services including:
Birth Control • Emergency Contraception (EC)
Pregnancy Testing • HPV Vaccinations
GYN & Breast Exams STD Screening & Treatment
HIV Counseling & Rapid Testing
15 Sites Across western Mass including:
Northampton - 16 Center Street. 413-586-2539
Amherst - 27 Pray Street. 413-548-9992
WALK-INS WELCOME
MassHealth and most insurances accepted
If you are not insured fees are based on a sliding scale
TAPESTRYhealth
CARE WITHIN REACH
413-586-2016
800-696-7752
www.tapestryhealth.org

RadioShack Do Stuff
NOBODY DOES STUFF LIKE COLLEGE STUDENTS.
AND RADIOSHACK CAN HELP YOU DO IT
10% DISCOUNT WITH STUDENT ID*
on a qualifying purchase.
Everyone's Approved! Prepaid Wireless Phones.
• No Credit Checks • No Long Term Commitments • No Annual Contracts
SAVE 10% On Any GoPhone when you buy a $25 Airtime Card and Present Your Student ID²
C139 GoPhone from MOTOROLA® $19.99 Before discount 17-088 While supplies last
A117 GoPhone from SAMSUNG® $49.99 Before discount 17-2543
Unlimited Talk to All of AT&T's Wireless Customers–Over 62 Million–on a Select Plan³.
RADIOSHACK HAS THE GEAR THAT LETS YOU DO MORE STUFF:
• Networking
• Printers
• Calculators
• Flash Drives
• Memory Cards
• Computer Accessories
• Wireless Accessories
• Stereos
• MP3/iPod Accessories
• LCD TVs
• Digital Cameras
• Cables, Connectors
• Surge Protectors
• Desk Lamps
WE'RE NEAR YOUR CAMPUS WITH THE GEAR YOU NEED.
Campus Plaza
458 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035

GET INVOLVED IN HEALTH EDUCATION!
SEEKING VOLUNTEERS
Visit www.umass.edu/uhs or call 577-5181 for more information on these programs.

ALANA HEALTH OUTREACH AND EDUCATION
ALANA Health Outreach and Education supports students of color in accessing health care at University Health Services, raises awareness about health issues and concerns impacting ALANA communities, promotes healthy lifestyles, and provides advocacy, education and referral services.

THE WOMEN'S HEALTH PROJECT
Be part of a group that educates students at UMass and in the surrounding communities on issues affecting women! The Women's Health Project conducts workshops on contraception, sponsors the Clothesline Project and UMass Orgasm Week, all while having a great time! Independent study credits are available.

PEER HEALTH EDUCATION
In a six-credit, year-long class (Pub-Hlth 213/214), students train to become campus Peer Health Educators and lead workshops such as Sex Pictionary, Drug Jeopardy, and Getting More than Lucky. The class can be used for culture, health and science certificates. Register on Spire.

HEALTH REACH INTERNATIONAL (HRI)
HRI helps international students, scholars and their families stay well through health-related information, workshops and collaborations with other organizations.
Health Reach International Education • Support • Service

FRESH & SOBER
Fresh & Sober is an anonymous support program for UMass students recovering or seeking recovery from alcohol and/or other drugs. Students questioning their alcohol and/or drug use who would like a non-judgmental person to talk with, those seeking information about recovery and Alcoholics Anonymous, and those already in AA who can offer their experience, strength and hope to others are encouraged to call 577-5188. All calls, conversations and inquiries are confidential.

THE STUDENT HEALTH ADVISORY BOARD (SHAB)
Make a difference in your health care! SHAB participates in the planning, financing, implementation and evaluation of student health programs at University Health Services. Meetings are every other Monday at 4:30 in UHS 302. starting September 10.

NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS
You've seen the summer version of this health education student theater troupe during orientation – don't miss the full show, coming to a hall near you every Wednesday throughout the school year! We'll address sex, masturbation, coming out, relationship violence and so much more! Come to auditions to be part of this lively and entertaining group!
NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS

VOICES AGAINST VIOLENCE
Work with the UMass community to address violence with a particular focus on men's violence against women. Voices Against Violence empowers bystanders to confront abusive/violent peers. Peer educators wanted!

UMassAmherst
University Health Services • Health Education
150 Infirmary Way (third floor) • 577-5181
www.umass.edu/uhs

2007

New teen comedy classic

'Superbad' revisits the days of high school parties

By Anthony David Rueli
Collegian Correspondent

Teen comedies have really been leaving me flat lately. It seems that Steve Carell and Vince Vaughn have a new movie out each week, and Will Ferrell keeps returning each summer with a new movie about the same subjects year after year.

So, it's no surprise that I was unenthused (and, to be honest, rather unamused) when I saw the trailer for "Superbad" – made by the good folks who brought you "The 40-Year-Old Virgin" and "Anchorman: The Legend of Ron Burgundy."

My only hope lay in the reviews I had read before leaving for the theater, basically all of which were positive. Even Roger Ebert gave it 3.5-4 stars, practically unheard of for a teen comedy.

"Superbad" is about two high school seniors, Seth and Evan, who were never able to hang out with the "cool" crowd. On one of the last nights before their graduation, they are determined to finally party with their peers and get the girls they have been longing for, or hating after, for all of high school.

In a movie that's filled with surprises, the humor is simply nonstop. The best part is that the humor is vastly different from its aforementioned movie peers.

The two stars' brilliant acting really carries the film. Jonah Hill and Michael Cera, as Seth and Evan, respectively, are some of the most believable young actors in recent history. Hill is genuine and funny, and Cera is a supremely talented actor, whose unique awkward and charming style is sure to be imitated for years to come.

Another original thing about the film's comedic sense is that it's actually intelligent. It was a breath of fresh air hearing jokes made about things that you wouldn't hear in most teen movies, for (likely justified) fear that they would lose their primary audience. During one of the first scenes of the film, there was a surprisingly clever Orson Welles joke, which left most of the theater unamused.

This is not to say that the movie doesn't have its share of absurd, silly humor – it does. However, it's humor that people can relate to. When talking to people about the film, the most common response I get is people who are simply amazed at how true-to-life the dialogue was for kids of that age. Being rated R, many viewers may have gone through exact conversations that Seth and Evan do in the film, regarding such topics as life-saving waistbands, Web sites, fake IDs, and the ethics of drunken hook-ups.

Perhaps the best aspect of the movie, though, is that it makes the audience feel for the characters. No matter what kinds of ridiculous situations they get themselves into (like Evan being forced to sing "These Eyes" by The Guess Who – another reference that I'm afraid no one else in the theater got), we always feel as if we are in their shoes.

The main conflict between the two characters is their acceptance to different colleges and their fear to let go of one another. This is another thing that is easy to relate to, heading off to college by yourself and leaving your friends behind. This fear is even worse for Seth and Evan, as they only hang out with each other, aside from their geeky friend Fogell, otherwise known as "McLovin'." This plotline results in some genuinely tear-jerking scenes and an ending that will make you smile, but in a slightly sad way.

As I walked out of the theater, I felt a strange mixture of sadness and laughter, and wanted to see the movie again immediately.

It was honestly shocking to me that I enjoyed the movie at all, never mind that I enjoyed it to the degree that I did.

Anthony David Rueli can be reached at arueli@student.umass.edu.

Courtesy Sony Pictures

McLovin' played by Christopher Mintz-Plasse, attains a new level of cool after he obtains a fake ID to purchase alcohol.

New fashion season dictates confidence

By Reece Coppolino
Collegian Columnist

Some of us will be sad to see our tans fade and the sun's heat dissipate, but we can't deny that the fall season offers the most options when it comes to fashion. As the colors change on the trees, so do wardrobe colors and styles. We must embrace these upcoming months as the best time to express ourselves.

The new fashions of fall 2007 embody a sense of power and confidence. Fall's return will be heard loud and clear with its bold and complex colors. Cozy accessories offer us warmth during the upcoming chilly nights and more opportunity to incorporate some detail into our outfits. An updated take on 1940s menswear provides the ultimate expression of sophistication. We will certainly be seeing some fashionistas looking high-spirited and self-assured in this season's new trends.

Shades of purple have taken the throne this fall, pun intended. Dating back to 1600 B.C., the color purple actually signified royalty, due to the fact that the dye was very rare and expensive to access. The color continued for many centuries as the imperial standard. Today, it still provides a royal punch to any outfit.

Purple hues include a range from lilac to eggplant and successfully compliment all hair shades and skin tones. Debra Messing arrived at the CFDA Fashion Awards of 2007 wearing a Michael Kors eggplant halter gown. She looked absolutely stunning and the color of the gown grabbed everyone's attention. Messing's ensemble was a perfect example of purple hues flattering even the difficult-to-compliment red hair shades.

The Pantone Color Institute, the global authority on color trends and standards, also predicts a few other prominent colors of fall 2007, including espresso brown, raspberry, teal, burnt orange and mustard yellow.

"Designers find inspiration in a variety of places, but one thing they all have in common this season is a rich, complex color palette to stimulate creativity," said Leatrice Eiseman, executive director of the Pantone Color Institute.

When assembling an outfit, it is important to incorporate a neutral shade to balance out the colors. This season, gray is the new black. Black will always have timeless style power, but gray has certainly stepped it up on the fall fashion runways, from leather to charcoal. Some highly respected designers who focused

See Fashion on page B9

Courtesy Scripps

Women's outerwear this season will feature large buttons, much like the outerwear of the 1940s.

Theater at UMass: Fall 2007 preview

By Marcy Braidman
Collegian Correspondent

The Importance of Being Earnest

This fall, Aaron Shmookler will be directing a production of Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest." He plans to use his own voice to add a twist to Wilde's well-known high-tome comedy. The play uses witty repertoire between five lovable characters to produce a love entanglement that never fails to entertain all ages. It explores the eternal battles of men versus women, truth versus fiction and romance versus tradition. And it even answers William Shakespeare's timeless question: What's in a name?

The Wild Party

This season the Theater Guild's musical will be "The Wild Party," a '20s style musical that starts with one woman's discontent and continues into the wild party that she throws to fulfill her need for change (and alcohol, as it takes place during prohibition). It is based on an epic poem that was originally banned for its wild content. Composer Andrew Lippa was able to capture the high energy of the music from the '20s and add to the play's intense sexuality.

Blood Wedding

The Guild's other production, Federico Garcia Lorca's "Blood Wedding," will be anything but musical. It is a chilling tale of deceit and infidelity. Yet there is also a touch of fantasy as the moon and death both enter as characters, determined to meddle with the humans for their own personal gain. As the title suggests, a wedding is ruined when the bride leaves the groom for a former love and the result is bloody murder. Although neither Guild production has a director as of yet, we can expect great things at the opening night of these productions.

Angels in America

This October, the Stonewall Center and the Office of Jewish Affairs are coming together to fund a seminar by playwright Tony Kushner. The theater department put up the first act of his well-known play "Angels in America" in the spring of 2005. Kushner has been heavily awarded for his plays and is one of the most influential American playwrights of the last 25 years. The lecture will be in the Rand Theater and will be free and open to all students.

Pillowman

Shawn LaCount will be directing Martin McDonagh's drama "Pillowman." This chilling tale tells the story of a fiction writer named Katurian. It opens with two policemen brutally interviewing him concerning his possible involvement in several horrible murders that closely resemble the content of his stories. After he is thrown into a cell with his brother Michal, the audience learns that his brother has been committing the murders because he read his brother's stories as instructions rather than fiction.

Marcy Braidman can be reached at mbraidma@student.umass.edu.

GO GREEK !
Α Β Γ Δ Ε Ζ Η Θ Ι Κ Λ Μ Ν Ξ Ο Π Ρ Σ Τ Υ Φ Χ Ψ Ω α β γ δ ε ζ η

UMass Greeks' Ben & Jerry's FREE Ice Cream Scoop @ the Campus Carnival!

When: Thursday, September 6th
Time: 12-4pm
Where UMass Library Lawn
FREE Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream scooped by your very own UMass Greeks!

UMass Greek Recruitment Info. Session!!
When: Monday, September 10th
Time: 7:00pm
Where: Student Union Ballroom (next to the Campus Center)
www.umass.edu/greek

UDance is going to be November 9th and 10th in the Curry Hicks Cage at UMass.
Mark your calenders!
http://www.udance.org/

University of Massachusetts Amherst UDance
Dance Marathon Fundraiser to Benefit Children's Miracle Network

Latest Bourne adds new twist

Bourne returns to the U.S. to find answers about his past

By Matthew Broderick
Collegian Correspondent

"The Bourne Ultimatum" is the kind of action adventure that explodes at the beginning with a slew of unanswered questions and an urgent sense of mystery.

The film takes off at a sprint from where "The Bourne Supremacy" ended. As the movie progresses many questions are answered through a labyrinth of mind games and perfectly choreographed cat-and-mouse chase scenes. In the third installment of the Bourne series, the storyline again follows Jason Bourne (Matt Damon) throughout the world, as he searches for answers relating to his shadowed past. Pieces of the puzzle begin to connect when Bourne receives information from Simon Ross (Paddy Considine), an investigative journalist who has taken a liking to Bourne's story and history.

Ross uncovers some important facts pertaining to the organization that is responsible for keeping Bourne in the situation he is in.

Ross and Bourne's search for answers is challenged by a dark CIA subdivision led by Noah Vosen (David Strathairn). Vosen uses any actions and tactics possible to thwart Bourne's mission. His character, new to the series, quickly and fittingly takes on the role of the ultimate bad man. Vosen's actions set up most of the live-or-die sequences, and he extends his power through a handful of assassins, who seem equal in strength to Bourne.

Working with Vosen is returnee Pam Landy (Joan Allen) whose CIA-shelled character emits a secretively compassionate relationship to Bourne throughout the film. Her character returns to perfect form and is vital to much of the suspense. Although she works alongside Vosen, her motives are different and she is constantly trying to stay a step ahead. Also returning to Bourne's life is the cute and innocent Nicky Parsons (Julia Stiles). Parsons brings with her a whole new level of mystery on its own. Although her character answers some very important nagging thoughts, by the end she creates one of the largest gaps in questions to be answered.

The film stays afloat and healthy because the director and actors convey the storyline so powerfully. Director Paul Greengrass, whose other films include "The Bourne Supremacy" and "United 93," excels in making the fight scenes completely realistic and believable. The hand-to-hand combat stands out as the biggest treat, and is perfectly staged and shot. The blow-by-blow punches and kicks are enough to keep the audience so tuned-in to the scene that, momentarily and in a good way, nothing else matters.

Stellar filming and the logic to keep the speed of the action sequences in real time, instead of taking a risk with a stop and go slow motion format, are why the fight scenes are so powerful. All of the filming was done without computer graphics, which makes it as realistic as watching a fight take place in person. Throughout the film, Greengrass's choices of filming angles and scene length are intelligent.

Greengrass makes a great film out of an excellent script put together by Tony Gilroy, Scott Z. Burns and George Nolfi. These three writers have taken a well-established and complex novel, written by Robert Ludlum, and turned it in to an incredibly fitting ending to an action trilogy defined by the 21st century. The challenge of making this film easy to follow and stay connected to was conquered magnificently. Throughout the film there is always something going on to capture attention, whether a start to a new mystery or an end to an old. A great transistor in this film is its spread of locations. The movie begins in Moscow and then proceeds to places such as Paris, London, Tangiers and New York City.

One fascinating element of the film is how vividly unique each location is portrayed. The filming and use of the different locations make the audience feel as if they are actually walking the streets, with the action playing out before their very eyes. All aspects of "The Bourne Ultimatum" are entwined perfectly into a beautifully crafted small knot.

As the story progresses, the knot is unraveled more and more until all of the dark corners are exposed to light. Bourne fans will leave the theater satisfied and able to sleep at night, their minds comforted by answers. The film is everything and anything that could ever be asked of the final part of a trilogy that was so intensely built up in the first two films.

Matthew Broderick can be reached at mbroderi@student.umass.edu

Summer Movie Review
Bourne Ultimatum
Directed by Paul Greengrass
Starring Matt Damon
A-

Jason Bourne (Matt Damon) and Nicky Parsons (Julia Stiles) team up again in "The Bourne Ultimatum." Parsons and Bourne come to a conclusion about their relationship that may or may not have existed.

BUY USED TEXTBOOKS
save a tree
(and a couple bucks)

We have the largest selection of used books anywhere.
And everything you need for Back-to-School.

- correct textbook versions - we checked for you
- reference materials and study guides
- supplies and academically-discounted software
- huge selection of school apparel and gifts
- online or in-store purchase options
- and much more!

home of THE HALF BACK GUARANTEE

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413 545 2619

www.umass.bkstr.com
proudly part of efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

Back 2 Cool
Seven for all Mankind
Citizens of Humanity
Chinese Laundry
Steve Madden
Free People
Mavi
Ugg
Keds
Vans
Frye

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

2007

Africa: primates, prices and patience

COURTESY KATIE HUSTON

Yes, you may have to stop the car for a crossing elephant in South Africa – but only if you're in a national park or a game reserve. This close encounter with an elephant in Kruger National Park, South Africa, took place after the author learned her lessons don't feed the baboons.

AFRICA from page B1

is economically motivated, and in Africa, if you're white, you're rich – it doesn't matter if you're a poor college student.

For the most part, I was smart and lucky, but on a deserted beach in Mozambique, of all places, I got myself into trouble. I'd left my cell phone (which doubled as my flashlight) in my pants pocket when I threw my clothes off for an impromptu skinny dip in the warm Indian Ocean, under the Milky Way. It was great – until I returned to shore to find my cell phone, sweatshirt and long-sleeved shirt missing. At least the thieves were courteous enough to leave my underwear, T-shirt and pants.

Be flexible

It's likely that your travel plans will change. A "three-hour" boat crossing to Zanzibar will last eight hours. You'll get flat tires, and your bus will break down. You'll end up someplace you don't want to leave. It's best to give yourself several days of wiggle room.

And be prepared to wait. When I stayed with Marisa, a Peace Corps volunteer in rural Lesotho, she told me she spends at least a third of her life walking or waiting for taxis.

Sure enough, I woke at 4:30 on the morning of my departure to catch a 5 a.m. mini taxi to the nearest proper town, a three-hour ride away. And waited... and waited... until a mini taxi – an ancient VW van, packed with 19 people – finally sputtered by at 9, four hours later.

However, the experiences gave me a real taste of life for the majority of African people, who accept inconvenience as inevitable. I'm a lot more patient now, and I appreciate our public transportation and the value we place on timeliness. And I'll never be without a journal and a good book.

Beware "muzungu price"

Muzungu means "white person" in Swahili, as well as several other East African languages. And "muzungu price" means you're paying more because you're white. Sometimes, as in the case of the ferry from mainland Tanzania to Zanzibar, these prices are institutionalized, even legislated. But most of the time, you're just getting ripped off. When I ordered a Fanta alone it cost me 500 Tanzanian shillings; when I was sitting with a local in the same bar, I paid 300.

Paying 40 cents for a Fanta instead of 25 doesn't hurt me too much. But paying extra for every bus fare and cab ride can be frustrating – and make a big dent in your budget. (Especially when you find out you've paid twice as much as everyone else for a 10-hour bus ride with no A/C and one bathroom stop, and the driver keeps asking for your phone number.)

The best way to avoid being overcharged is to travel with locals, or ask people how much something should cost before you purchase it. In some countries, be prepared to bargain not only at markets, where the initial asking price is always too high, but with cab drivers, bus fares, and even hotel rates. However, accept the fact that once in a while, you will be ripped off, and choose your battles.

Don't feed the baboons

When you take a tour of the Cape Peninsula in South Africa, you'll notice the sign: "Baboons are dangerous and attracted by food." They've been known to break into houses in wealthy Cape Town suburbs, raiding fridges, upturning garbage cans, ruining furniture and defecating everywhere.

And despite all this, when I was on safari in Kruger Park, my friend Kunno – a Zimbabwean safari guide, who should've known better – announced, "These apples are too mealy. We're never gonna eat 'em," and tossed one out the window as we passed a gang of baboons. Within seconds, the baboons had scrambled onto our car – a Citi Golf without A/C – as we frantically rolled up the windows.

One infuriatingly smart one planted himself right in front of the driver. We tried driving forward. Backward. Throwing more apples to distract him, which he caught without budging. It was 115 degrees, the sweat was pooling in our seats, and we began to panic. If we couldn't open the windows – SOON – we were going to suffocate. We got away by tossing another apple away from the car, but it was a close call.

Wear a long skirt on bus trips

This isn't necessary if you take a South African Greyhound. But if you're taking a bus trip on a cheaper line or in another country, there's a good chance the stops won't look like your typical American rest area. In fact, they might not even involve toilets.

When I took a cheap overnight bus in South Africa, we stopped for the bathroom when someone stood up in the back of the bus and bellowed in seSotho or isiXhosa (common black languages in South Africa). The driver swerved to the side of the road, people piled off, relieved themselves in a treeless field, and climbed back aboard.

This is no problem if you're a guy, of course, and it's not too much of a problem if you're a woman in a long skirt. Capri pants, however, are a bad choice, as I learned when a bus full of Africans got a good glimpse of my white butt.

The final word

No matter what kind of traveler you are, Africa holds something for you. Travel in South Africa will be easier and more familiar than travel in most countries. Taking comfortable guided tours with other Westerners is likely to go more smoothly than traveling on a shoestring budget, local-style (although sometimes that leads to the greatest adventures).

Malaria is no reason not to travel if you take the proper preventative measures, but don't underestimate the importance of taking prophylactics and using bug repellant to prevent infection if you're in a malarial zone.

Get a travel guide – Bradt publishes an excellent Africa line. Talk to other travelers for destinations and tips, and make friends with locals if you truly want to experience Africa. Bring hand sanitizer and T.P., and don't lose your earrings in a squat toilet.

Katie Huston can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

Africa: Top Five Destinations

Bulungula, South Africa
This eco-friendly backpacker's lodge in a coastal village is a model of sustainable tourism. 40 percent owned by the vibrant local community. Take a village tour, visit a traditional healer – or relax and do nothing at all.

Tofo, Mozambique
Think Miami's the life? Try Tofo. You can scuba dive with manta rays and snorkel with whale sharks, join the Mozambican kids playing soccer in the sand, or enjoy seafood and drinks at a seaside bar – even on a student budget.

Lesotho
This tiny country has a distinct culture, marked by patterned Basotho blankets and transport on horseback. The mountains and waterfalls are breathtaking, and the people are the friendliest I met.

Serengeti and Ngorongoro Crater, Tanzania
When my safari truck bumped through the Serengeti, it was hard not to burst out singing "The Circle of Life." This is the Africa of the imagination.

Zanzibar
The "spice island" is like another world. Get lost exploring Old Stone Town, and be sure to get away to the beaches, where the snorkeling and scuba diving is first-class. I lived on the beach for $10 a night – as close to paradise as I've come.

"IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT"
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2007
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Wednesday, September 5, @ 7:00 pm, Tobin 204
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.
The next group exam will be offered in the November 2007.

TRAUMA IN LITERATURE
Polish Literature in Translation
WITH DR. BARBARA BOLIBOK
TUESDAY/THURSDAY 3:35-4:50
IN HERTER 118
COMPARATIVE LITERATURE 297P
SPIRE #34992

ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
Special Back to School Shows!
SEPTEMBER 15TH AND 22ND!
TICKETS ONLY $3.00!
INCLUDES FREE CRAP KIT!
DRESS IN YOUR BEST SCHOOL OUTFIT!
Flower Theaters
A Real Pleasure
19 College St., South Hadley
(413) 533-FILM

Remember when you felt like this?
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE Sunday shuttle to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Belchertown, MA 01007 • 413 256 8000
www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Immanuel Nkrow
We're growing in Christ - come grow with us!

In Ukraine, history lives

UKRAINE from page B1

absurd. Sporting a beer, especially an Obolon, a Ukrainian beer company that prides itself for being "the beer of your mother country," is considered to be cool. Hard liquor can be purchased as easily as a Coke at a grocery store, but it is often too expensive for teenagers to get their hands on. Nevertheless, drinking vodka at Krishatik elevates teenagers to the highest levels of adolescent coolness.

Middle-aged men are more often seen with a bottle of vodka, some shot glasses and a chess set, gathered at the corner blocks of the streets that cut through Krishatik. They often debate about politics and discuss weekly news, until they drink enough to soothe their heated conversations and focus their attention on chess matches and chain smoking.

The hundreds of people who spend their time on this busy and popular street come from different socioeconomic classes. Some are affluent businessmen or just poor students, while others are newcomers from the countryside, driven by the thirst for a better life in the city. On weekend evenings, the barriers that separate these people lose all validity. Together, the crowds brew a fusion of vibrant conversations, loud laughter, games, spontaneous songs and dance; the mixture's success is secured with a little help from alcoholic beverages. For Ukrainians, on Friday nights Krishatik serves as a communal escape from the weekday cycle of laborious regularity.

Located at the southern tip of Ukraine, Kherson is a small city, but it is a fair contender to Kiev in terms of modern Ukrainian culture and a plentiful night life. Built on a decree issued by Catherine the Great in 1778, Kherson is known for its exceptional public parks, sweet watermelons and historic ship production factories. Despite all the possibilities to spend the night out in town proposed by countless bars, restaurants, theatres and clubs, Kherson fails to mask its social inequality as well as Kiev does. Its continuous struggle with poverty is more than evident.

The residents of Kherson reluctantly walk out of shops where the cost of food and clothing are beyond their materialistic reach. Secondhand stores, a recent sensation, have gained noticeable popularity in the past five years as the gap between the working and upper classes continues growing at alarming rates. The face of poverty in Kherson is harsh, as economical problems and impracticality of the government come to light. Elderly people, many of whom are retired teachers, are forced to beg on the streets; their pension is not enough to sustain them.

The Soviet Union's presence still lingers in the city of Kherson and its outskirts. One of the prominent streets is named "Karl Marx," while numerous monuments of Lenin signify essential points of business, culture and education. However, the relationship between communism ideals of the USSR and present-day Ukraine is nowhere in sight. Lenin's statues, as if old habits, remind Ukrainians of the past, but do little to stir any course of action.

"Many people don't realize this, but we are still trying to recover the crumbs of our breadbasket, a legacy of failed communism," said a local produce merchant.

The residents of Kherson and its surroundings gather their crumbs with the help of free enterprise: numerous outdoors bazaars that fine certain streets are a party for all the five senses. Sellers lure in customers with an astonishing selection of fresh meat, dairy and produce products. The competition between farmers and villagers who sell their home-made milk, sour cream and cheese is intense, forcing buyers to scout the bazaar for the best deals. It is wise to go to the market on an empty stomach, because a small tasting of the product is often the deciding factor of the purchase.

Those who choose to buy their food at the bazaar know to come early; at 6 in the morning, the just-picked apples are still covered in dew. The raw milk is still warm, giving off the slightest smell of grass. Nevertheless, what one purchases is just as important as from whom the purchase is made. The goal is to avoid the mistake of amateur bazaar shoppers: keep the wallet away from "перекупщики," people known as "re-sellers." These merchants simply purchase the products from local farmers for lower prices and hike up their cost at the market in order to make profits. "Re-sellers" fail to stand for the integrity and quality of their products, thus making it more difficult to buy from them with confidence.

While major Ukrainian cities are hungrily inhaling the free enterprise system that drives the world economy, the aroma of capitalism does not reach the villages, the small and cozy houses that are stacked along stretches of wheat fields. With no running water or acceptable pavement, these villages hold on to the roots of traditional Ukrainian life. The villagers rely on their own labor for survival, as one lonely store, which mostly sells household goods, sticks out like a sore thumb in the regions where tractors and cows use the roads more than cars.

These villages carry the spark of those small-town, closely-knit communities. The countryside consists mostly of elderly folks whose kids have moved into the cities because of the demands of modern economy. For those who stay behind, a relaxing and satisfying retirement is not a likely possibility. Despite back pains, diabetes or high blood pressure, these aging parents and grandparents are early risers, getting up at the crack of dawn to spend the day working in the fields.

Although farm work is often harsh on the body, it does wonders for the Ukrainian rural spirit. The notion of aging is only evident through physical characteristics, but wrinkles and fine lines do not coincide with the psychological effects of growing old. The villagers' drive to work for their survival and well-being keeps their minds sharp and their spirits high. Aging in the countryside of Ukraine surpasses the physical limits of the deteriorating human body, and as if for compensation, heightens wisdom and mental strength.

If the people residing in the villages, the true breath of Ukrainian traditional living, are not enough to place this country in its own category of exceptionality, the rustic nature that surrounds them will certainly be a convincing factor.

Encompassed in the thick, gloriously green fern trees are massive stretches of animal and plant life kingdoms, thriving without any contact with the human world. Here, the air is so fresh and clean that the act of breathing itself is surreal. Perhaps the silence, piercing and powerfully disturbing, is what allows nature to claim its territory.

It is unlikely that the peace experienced within these Ukrainian forests, overlooking the uneven rows of village houses pinned across the horizon, exists anywhere else. This peculiar contradiction, a fleeting sense of fear accompanied by a simultaneous gushing of tranquility, makes the 12-hour flight across the Atlantic Ocean well worth it.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeshche@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OLGA DESHCHENKO

An idle tractor sits in the countryside in Ukraine. Many Ukrainians make their living by farming.

Olsen twin inspires new coat trend mainly on gray as their neutral shade for this fall include Nanette Lepore, Max Azria, Nina Ricci, Zac Posen and Nicole Farhi.

FASHION from page B6

Gray and purple is a color combination made in heaven. A flashy twist on this neutral shade can be expressed as a metallic. Silver has become a popular metallic shade in the fall 2007 ready-to-wear collections.

The must-have item in your closet this season is the fall coat. A popular style includes the baby-doll trench, a warmer version of last spring's cropped baby-doll. Oversized buttons, double-breasted layers, waist belts, and funnel neck collars add an adorable look to any coat.

Plaid and houndstooth have become prominent patterns for outerwear this season. Ashley Olsen arrived at the Balenciaga party earlier this year wearing one of her very own coat designs from her high-end collection, truly displaying a popular outerwear style this fall. She was dressed in a navy and green large plaid print wool coat with a grouched layered collar and puff sleeves.

During this transitional period, we will gradually be bundling up more and more. Cozy accessories will keep us warm and stylish as we feel the temperature drop. Pashmina scarves, made from Persian cashmere wool, have become an instant hit with their various colors and patterns. Slouchy knit berets are cute and sophisticated accessories that will be seen on many heads this fall. Trade in your leggings for a new pair of tights. Look around for a pair available in this season's neutral color, gray. These would look great with a pair of knee-high flat boots or some ballet flats.

Menswear is a less familiar trend, but has been rising in appearance on the fall runways. The boxy, structured style that was once very popular in the 1940s has now taken a more slim, fitted and feminine spin. Button-up twill vests and deep V-neck sweater vests are great transitional layering pieces for this fall. When looking for a special occasion item with this style in mind, try a dress with a strapless sweetheart-cut top with a fitted pencil skirt. A pair of oxford pumps certainly signifies this season's feminine edge on menswear.

The final touch to this season's fashion trends comes when we pay extra attention to detail. Oversized buttons upholstered in fabric, ruffles and rouching can add personality to your outfit. When it comes to detailing, we must not forget about our shoes. Multi-tonal, patterned and multi-fabricated pumps are a great trend this fall. Spice up a neutral outfit with a colorful kick. Pumps are simultaneously displaying bits of leather, suede and patent leather. Neutral pumps with bold colored cap toes are currently selling out of stores.

So keep your head held up high this fall and don't hesitate to jump right into these bold and powerful styles. You'll be looking fabulous; you always do.

Reece Coppolino can be reached at rcoppoli@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY AP PHOTO

Summer heat is not over yet, but fashion accessories like as hats and scarves will be the season's popular items.

SEAmester
Don't just study it... Live it
Fall & Spring programs
- Sail over 3,000 miles with up to 20 other students.
- Earn 12-15 credits in 9 weeks in the humanities and sciences.
- Study the cultures and natural environments of select ports of call from New England to the Bahamas and the Caribbean.
- Learn seamanship & navigation while living on a 90' schooner.

Are you ready to be challenged?
For more information and to apply:
Web: www.umassd.edu/SEAmester
Email: continuinged@umassd.edu
Phone: 508-999-9202
No sailing experience necessary.
UMass | Dartmouth
Professional & Continuing Education

UMASS AMHERST
A MESSAGE FROM THE BURSARS OFFICE

EXCESS EXPRESS

PAYMENT INFORMATION

OU CAN ALSO CONTACT US AT URSAR@ADMIN.UMASS.EDU

2007

Sizing up the boot

ITALY from page B1

doesn't buy tickets. Bus and train stations are constantly packed with people, lines that snake around cobble-stoned street corners. The buses and trains are just as crowded, and the tickets go just as unchecked.

Why do Italians bother buying tickets when nobody checks them? Why are Italians so lazy? Any why do their toilets have to break? The same reason that an Italian plumber never works.

Italy is too beautiful and the wine is too good to take work seriously.

Italians enter and exit reality through a revolving door (hopefully, that doesn't break either). The work day is cut in half by a three-hour break from 1-4 every afternoon. During this time, all shops close and people gorge themselves for lunch. Paninis are consumed, naps are taken and coffee is swilled. The work day resumes after 4 until around 10 p.m., when city streets are jam-packed with well-dressed shoppers.

Ever stop to look around or take a hike to Puffer's Pond? Puffer's Pond is really gosh darn beautiful on a brisk autumn day. Ever try finding Puffer's Pond? It's like finding the Isla de Muerta from "Pirates of the Caribbean," asking only those who already know where it is.

Well, imagine living in Italy, constantly surrounded by artistic and natural beauty, not to mention its rich presence of historical buildings. The region Lazio is like a walk back in time, with Rome as its main attraction. When in Rome . . .

It is almost expected to see Julius Caesar turning the corner with a bombolone (cream-filled donut) in one hand and a cappuccino in the other. The thing is: being around such things doesn't go hand-in-hand with a steadfast work ethic – at least not as well as it fits with a bombolone and a cappuccino.

Ironically, some Italians have become numb to beauty in the same way Americans have become numb to violence. Italians have made an industry profiteering from its past. Assisi, the hometown of Saint Francis, is now ever-populated by tourists. Street vendors hawk crucifixes like iPods on a chain. The consumerism would make hair sprout from the bald surface of Saint Francis' head like weeds from concrete.

Speaking of violence, Italy is also the birthplace of organized crime. The Mafia's roots branch off from southern Italy, Sicily in particular. Sicily is an island off the coast of Italy's most southern region, Calabria. It's considered to be more connected with Africa than Italy; a trip from Sicily to Africa is closer then a trip from Sicily to Rome.

The Mafia left the island and expanded to the United States in the early 1900s. Organized crime is best illustrated in Franz Ford Copolla's film "The Godfather." This film fused violence with artistic beauty, merging them together like bread and wine. Every scene, even the killing ones, is like a separate painting.

Unless the context is within the Mafia itself, it is neither mentioned nor acknowledged in every Italian region. Doing so is considered offensive and downright stupid. The violence is bad for tourism. In the United States, though, Mafia is sort of a mainstream topic, sometimes adding some humor to a light conversation; in Italy, this is very insulting.

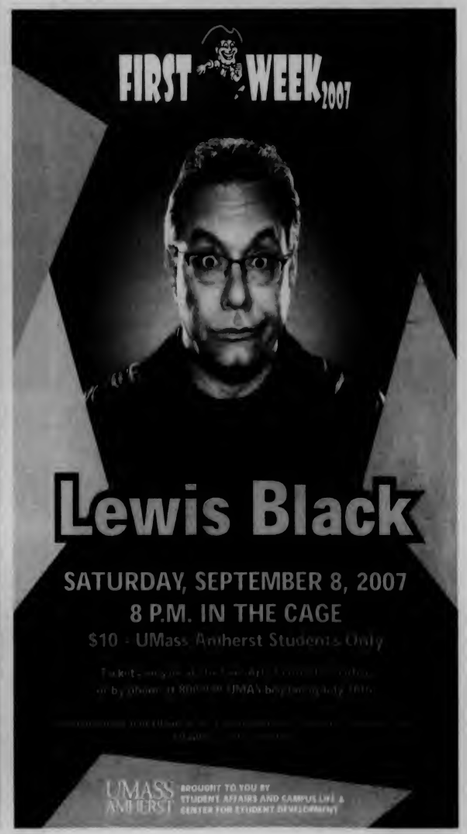
Not to point any fingers, but "The Godfather" may have contributed to the obsession of the Mafia in the States. Italians stream away from making anything about the Mafia mainstream, because the Mafia is not a part of life. Ever see the eating scenes in "The Godfather?" "No discussion of the family business at the table!" Just try and mention "The Sopranos" to someone in Florence and see his reaction, which won't be a beautiful thing.

On the other hand, Florence is a very beautiful thing. Situated in northern Tuscany, it is the home of the most famous Duomo in all of Italy. Built between the 13th and 15th centuries, the Duomo is mainly a Roman and Gothic structure that highly influenced other contemporary buildings. Today, this Florentine architectural gem still towers over curious observers, impressive as ever.

Every now and then, it is possible to find someone from Italy who doesn't care about green rolling hills and old basements with moldy wine barrels, to find someone numb to Italy's aesthetic nature. These types of people can usually be found in Florence. On a cloudless day in late spring, while tourists gaze wide eyed at Florence's sites, some well-dressed leather shoe-wearing Italian man can be seen – brief case in hand – walking passed the Duomo without even a glancing up. This is usually caused by a busy schedule or overly-crowed streets. Sometimes beauty's neglect in Italy is due to the lack of a morning espresso.

Moreover, that same Italian man passing by such beauty without recognition may know nothing about wine. His $2,000 suit may look nice with Armada shoes, but his lack of wine knowledge isn't a good cork to his character. He may even drink cheap wine, the type with a cap instead of a cork, straight from the bottle.

Actually, most Florentines walk by their city's monuments in the same low-headed manner, talking on cell phones, not about the mob. Only the tourists stop traffic to stare at Florence's wonders, while slowly sipping a freshly poured glass of whatever.



Salute! Let's drink to the country of wine, beauty, and the Mafia.

Dave Master can be reached at dmaster@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY DAVE MASTER

Italy may be famous as the home of the Mafia, wine orchards (above) and pasta, but that does not mean every Italian is the same.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

FALL BACK TO SCHOOL 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Surviving the crusade

Running back Matt Lawrence made the departure of Steve Baylark a little easier with his 163-yard, two-touchdown performance on Opening Day, Saturday against Holy Cross. The Minutemen racked up 183 yards on the ground against the Crusaders. Lawrence gained 124 yards in the first half alone.

Holy Cross gives chase, but UMass takes game

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It certainly didn't go the way anyone would have expected – especially the 12,264 in attendance – but the Massachusetts football team came out of Saturday's 2007 season opener the victor, 40-30, over Holy Cross.

The Minutemen (1-0) will head to Colgate for a rematch with the Raiders Saturday at 1 p.m.

UMass	40
HC	30

The Maroon and White dominated the first half, jumping out to a 30-9 lead before halftime, but after grabbing another seven points 1:25 into the third quarter, Holy Cross (0-1) scored three consecutive touchdowns, pulling within seven, 37-30.

Halfway into the fourth quarter, the UMass defense finally tightened up, and a Chris Koepplin 37-yard field goal with 3:37 remaining iced the game for the Minutemen.

The highlights of the game were the excessive lowlights. Fumbled punts, bobbled catches, personal fouls and bad snaps cost the Minutemen crucial yards and points. Yet, behind running back Matt Lawrence's 163 rushing yards on 23 carries, the Minutemen pounded out a victory over a tenacious Crusaders squad.

"Crazy things happen in an opener, and we certainly had our share today," UMass coach Don Brown said. "We had some miscues that we know we have to take care of to perform better. But the reality is our mettle was tested, and we found a way to win."

Koepplin opened the game the same way he closed

See FOOTBALL on page C12

Up-and-down day for special teams units

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

There was nothing "special" about the 40-30 victory for the Massachusetts football team on Saturday over Holy Cross. I scept for the action on special teams, that is.

After all, the No. 1 Minutemen were expected to handle the Crusaders rather easily in their season opener.

But that was far from the case. A single score separated the two teams after a Holy Cross touchdown pass with under nine minutes remaining – bringing the Crusaders to within seven at 37-30.

The Minutemen fittingly put the kibosh on any miracle Crusader comeback on special teams, as place-kicker Chris Koepplin nailed a 37-yard field goal to extend UMass's lead to 10 lead with 3:37 remaining. That would prove to be the final score of the game.

Koepplin also delivered the first score in the game – a 45-yard bomb that easily cleared the crossbar and tied his career best. That kick also tied for the third-longest in team history, and set the tone for a game where seemingly every play on special teams was an adventure.

After teams traded touchdown runs, UMass kick returner Courtney Robinson did a little running of his own – scampering 100 yards down the field for the first kickoff return touchdown in 25 years for the Minutemen.

"It was fun," Robinson said, with a grin. "I just knew if it came to me I was going to have an opportunity to return

See SPECIAL TEAMS on page C12

Defensive driving in A-10

Simmons, Cook lead stingy defense with playoff aspirations

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

A team that relies heavily on its defense with only limited offensive success can expect to play close matches and cannot afford to put itself behind very often.

For the first seven games of the 2006 season, a defense-first mentality worked flawlessly for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. However, several 1-0 losses in non-conference play spiraled into crushing defeats at the feet of the Atlantic 10's best teams for the Minutemen.

But before the season reversed its course, the Maroon and White reached an impressive peak and even garnered some national attention. The team blasted through the early part of its schedule en route to a 6-0-1 record, failing only to break a 1-1 tie with Boston University. Its on-field success even earned the squad a No. 22 ranking in the NSCAA/adidas national poll.

Yet the Minutemen managed to secure a spot for only one week in the rankings. The wheels started to come off on the season with consecutive home losses to Vermont and New Hampshire.

"I think we have to stay healthy," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "We lost a couple of guys halfway through the season and that didn't help us. I think this team has more depth, so we can play more players and give others more rest while also raising the intensity of training. So that will help us in the long run."

With nine starters returning from last year's squad, the Minutemen look to avoid last season's fate. More experience added to a strong defensive core and talented goalkeeping expect the Minutemen to excel with the same defense-first game-plan on the pitch.

Junior Zack Simmons leads the established UMass defense in net. The captain started all 19 games for the Minutemen last season and posted a 0.96 goals-against average. Though that figure ranked sixth in the league last season, Simmons amassed the most saves with 90.

The talented netminder has a strong supporting cast in place to stifle opposing offensives, including a preseason all-Atlantic 10 defender. Senior Kenny Cook earned the nominal title for his strong play and will be one of the vocal leaders on defense while serving as captain.

"Defensively, I think we're sound," Koch said. "I think we've got our defensive mindset complete

Goalkeeper Zack Simmons leads a staunch UMass defense that posted a school-record 10 shutouts in 2006. The Minutemen are looking to balance offense with defense this season with the postseason in mind.

See M. SOCCER on page C4

Senior Kaelyn Caldwell started every game for the Minutewomen last season. The defender helped her team finish with an 11-6 record in 2006.

Rudy wants more aggressiveness in '07

By Steve Gans

Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said he is attacking mentality for the 2007 Minutewomen.

In 2006, UMass finished 11-6 overall and 5-4 in the Atlantic 10 – not impressive on a conference tournament bid. In the final four games, the team struggled to put the ball in the net, only scoring two goals. Rudy wants his players always moving forward toward the goal.

"All winter and spring last year, indoor and outdoor, we put a heavy emphasis on our attack and being creative, challenging our players to go forward," Rudy said. "Let's think attack first and defense second."

As a result, our kids have developed a lot of skill, a lot of flare and an attack mode," he added. "Everyone is going forward."

The Minutewomen, however, will have to move forward without one of their best defensive players. Senior Tina Rodriguez injured her knee last year in the 19th game of the season against La Salle. She is still recovering, but according to Rudy, has suffered a few setbacks over the summer months.

"She's had a little less than a year to rehab," Rudy said of his starting defender. "The center of defense is a key position and right now that's an unsure area for us.

"She's making some progress, but it's coming along slowly," the coach continued. "We don't know if she'll be ready … we don't think by the start of

See W. SOCCER on page C6

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET

Only The Best...

SCORE BIG!

7 DAYS A WEEK

UNIVERSITY DRIVE
AMHERST, MA 253-0416
WE ACCEPT OCMP!

MAD MONDAY Available Monday Only!
Large Cheese Pizza 18 Inch $7

Available Tuesday Only!
2lb TUESDAY 2 lbs of Roasted Potatoes FREE WITH PURCHASE OF A Sweet Bird Rotisserie Chicken

Available Wednesday Only!
Chefs Prime™ Pork Roast
20 oz Cooked Weight, Fully Cooked, Serves 3 to 4
$6

Take Out Thursday
Available Thursday Only!
Ready To Eat or Ready To Heat!
$7 Grandma's Chicken Pot Pie 9 Inch, Family Size

7 Days A Week 8 Piece Fried Chicken
$7
2 Drumsticks, 2 Breasts Pieces, 2 Thighs & 2 Wings
We Only Use 100% Canola Oil No Trans Fats

FEED THE WHOLE TEAM!

kick back friday
Cheese Pizza 40 Pieces
Available Friday Only!
$12

Serves 4 to 5, Ham, Turkey or Roast Beef with Lettuce, Tomato & Cheese, Made Fresh to Order
30 Inch Grinder
SUPER SUB
$8 Serves 5 to 6!
Available Saturday & Sunday Only!

WHAT A DEAL!

Big Y Reserves The Right To Change Items At Any Time Without Notice.

Moving in the right direction

Sophomore poised for breakout year following trying freshman season

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

It's hard not to notice Bryan Hogan.

The sophomore forward of the Massachusetts men's soccer team stands 6-foot-2 and typically occupies a chunk of space directly in front of the opposition's goal. As if his frame wasn't imposing enough, an avalanche of loose brown curls bounces on his head, augmenting his height by at least three inches.

But during the final 12 games of the 2006 season, his first at UMass, Bryan did go largely unnoticed. He played in every game and did what he could to help the Minutemen win.

It just didn't happen.

The rest of the team suffered a similar letdown in that final stretch, wasting a scorching 6-0-1 start to the year. The Minutemen dropped eight of their final 12 games and 6-of-9 in Atlantic 10 play to end their season.

Bryan tries not to relive the 12-game stretch that deemed his first season at UMass forgettable. While there's no definitive reason for the mid- and late-season struggles of the 2006 Minutemen, certain traits of the team lead Bryan to some of his own conclusions.

"I don't really know why it happened exactly," he says. "We had a young team and we started with a new weight coach and everything was kind of new. Everyone had to learn the system and all the traveling kind of took its toll."

"We were so used to winning that when we lost our first game we were in shock. After that we got into a slump and when you do that, sometimes it's kind of hard to get out of it."

In a game like soccer, so dependent on swings of momentum, experience is among the most significant aspects of team. The slightest bounce of the ball one way can trigger an offensive rush and a crucial goal; only when players have been in these situations can they consistently force or defend against them.

In 2006, 18-of-25 UMass players were underclassmen and almost all of them saw time in crucial situations. During the undefeated stretch that began the 2006 season, everything went right for Bryan and his fellow underclassmen. But when presented with a loss and another and another, frustration set in and off-the-field issues only added to Bryan's struggles on the field.

The adjustment to college life is rarely smooth for anyone. Academic concerns are difficult enough without the demands of being a successful Division I athlete. Bryan had no problems with the academic transition to college and his laid-back demeanor assured he'd fit in with his teammates. However, around the same time the Maroon and White began its nosedive, a problem did surface for Bryan.

Prior to college, traveling for road games typically meant a short car or bus ride to a neighboring town. Now, it's not unusual for a team to take multiple weekend flights for crucial games when all the while, a mid-term worth half of your grade looms when you return to campus on Monday.

"I don't think I ever did [adjust to the traveling]," Bryan says. "Practice was always tough during the week. And then we'd get on the plane and I'd feel like I didn't have my legs by the time we'd be warming up for the game. When you watch college basketball on TV and you see them get off the bus and stuff, it seems cool. But [the traveling] isn't that much fun. I hate traveling. I hate the airport."

Despite his feelings about traveling, it's an inevitability that Bryan learned to deal with. The success he and his teammates enjoyed last season is something he's determined to replicate without plummeting as they did in 2006. He left his few off-the-field issues to work themselves out, choosing to focus on improving his ball skills and making himself comfortable in 4-3-3 formation that UMass coach Sam Koch decided to install this season in hopes of increasing offensive production. Hogan's four goals were a team high last season – a paltry amount considering the Minutemen played 19 games.

Within that formation Bryan will see most of his action at center forward. Last season, the Minutemen played with two forwards and Bryan spent a fair amount of time looking to make plays from the wing. During the preseason camp, while working players into their new system, Koch commented to Bryan that he looked more comfortable in the central role. His height should allow him to make some plays in the air for the Minutemen. While grounded, Bryan possesses a great deal of speed and is able to beat players who underestimate his quickness due to his size.

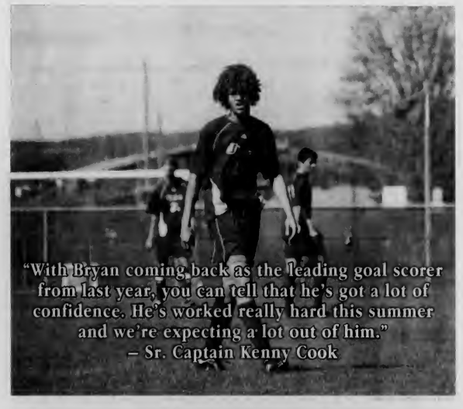
No one can question Bryan's athleticism, but part of growing as a soccer player is becoming more technically sound. Truly great forwards are not only terrific athletes; they also possess remarkable ball skills. At lower levels, players can rely on their athleticism to beat defenders. But at this level, Hogan consistently faces four-talented backs who act as one to dispossess him.

"He's beginning to understand that he can't just stand around and wait for a ball like he may have been able to do in high school," Koch said of Hogan. "Defenders are now four of the best defenders, not just one really good defender and three other guys. So I think he's adjusting as quickly if not faster than a lot of other players. Some of the field things have given him more problems than the on-the-field things. But he's been such a pleasant addition to the program."

When the Minutemen arrived in Amherst on Aug. 14, it didn't take long for Bryan's teammates to notice a change in the previously soft-spoken forward from Lititz, Pa. Without any urging from his teammates, Bryan assumed a role as a leader, spouting encouragement at younger player and demanding the ball whenever open.

Senior center back Kenny Cook and red-shirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons are the official team captains, but Cook notes the enthusiasm that Bryan displayed during training camp and hopes it continues throughout the season.

"With Bryan coming back as the leading goal scorer from last year, you can tell that he's got a lot of confidence. He's worked really hard this summer and we're expecting a lot out of him. He's taken on more of a leadership role and he's been very vocal in practice. We're excited about what he can do for us this year.



"It's fun to talk to him off the field, he's a very laid-back guy. Maybe a little bit last year he was quieter, but I've already noticed a difference from this year. A lot of guys [have] the competition certainly brings out that side of him."

The Minutemen began their 2007 season on Aug. 31 at Maine and have five more road games before their first at home on Sept. 22 against Northeastern.

Bryan hopes to achieve success similar to the first few games of 2006. But, like the rest of his team, he worked all off-season to ensure that it lasts longer than seven games.

If he does that, by season's end it'll be nearly impossible not to notice Bryan Hogan.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

"With Bryan coming back as the leading goal scorer from last year, you can tell that he's got a lot of confidence. He's worked really hard this summer and we're expecting a lot out of him."
– Sr. Captain Kenny Cook

Sophomore Bryan Hogan impressed his teammates with his leadership role early this season.

Although he led the Minutemen with four goals in 2006, sophomore Bryan Hogan enters 2007 looking to play a larger role in a UMass offense desperate for consistent production.

Better It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

A Prestige Entertainment, Inc. Event
Special Appearance By: Eric Bischoff
Full Throttle Energy Drink Presents
Sex Kitten Talia In Action!
PRO WRESTLING LIVE!
FRIDAY NIGHT, OCTOBER 5 AT 8 PM
Voodoo Kin Mafia • Maven • D'Lo Brown • Andrew Test Martin
Brother Runt • Baldo Bomb • Scotty Taylor • And More
Plus...UMass Student Max Bauer will be in action!
COLLEGE STUDENT DISCOUNT
RECIEVE $5 OFF ARENA SEATING AT MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE
OFFER VALID THRU MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10
Mullins Center
University of Massachusetts Amherst www.mullinscenter.com
Box Office: (413) 545-0505
Charge-by-Phone: (413) 733-2500
ticketmaster.com
Sponsored by Lazer 99.3 Everything That Rocks
Quality Dining Service
Advocate
 Card Subject To Change ***

2007

Minutemen need more from scorers

M. SOCCER from page C1

and our setup pretty much understood. The personnel [situation] is steady as we have a good idea of who will be in the game."

Even if the team receives strong play from its defense, the Minutemen need to resolve their flaws on the opposite end of the field. In fact, only five players scored goals in competition last season – but all five are returning to the team this season.

The team's top returning threat at forward is junior Prince Ofosu. He scored three goals with two assists last season, tying for most points on the team with then-freshman Bryan Hogan. The returning forward scored four goals in 2006 and joins Mike DeSantis and Tony Bassett as the other primary cogs on offense.

"We don't have any pure goal scorers," Koch said. "So in all reality, everybody is in that role. Everybody will have to do the little things to make us successful and to help one of them score a goal."

The Maroon and White will have an opportunity to enact revenge on its regional rivals with road contests against Maine and Dartmouth already behind them. UMass travels to Burlington, Vt., to face the Catamounts on the Friday before its home opener on Sunday against the Wildcats.

Even with those two non-conference setbacks last year, the season was far from lost at that point. After playing Charlotte to a scoreless stalemate, the Minutemen lost their next two games by the combined score of eight goals. The team stumbled the rest of the way to a 2-6-1 record in A-10 play.

Before the team can look to solve its A-10 woes, it must first deal with formidable non-conference competition. The Minutemen face several telling tests in its first month as several teams have earned NCAA tournament bids in recent seasons.

However, UMass will have an opportunity to earn wins against opponents that the team had success against in 2006. The Maroon and White finished a combined 3-0-1 against Maine, Siena, BU, and Hartford last year.

The team also welcomes three newcomers to its schedule – Dartmouth, Northeastern and Harvard.

But as always, the primary criterion of the season will be how the Maroon and White fare in conference play.

The competition will not get easier this year as the A-10 boasts several talented teams. Rhode Island and Saint Louis are expected to be the class of the conference, picked to finish one and two, respectively, by the league's coaches.

With UMass in the 10th slot, the team will need to surprise the rest of the conference if it wants to qualify for the six-team conference tournament.

"We don't want to not make the Atlantic 10 Tournament again this year," Koch said. "But the odds are not in our favor. Through the odds out once the season begins since we only care about what happens on the field."

The Minutemen make only two conference road trips this season – a seemingly positive quirk to the schedule. However, the pair of scheduled trips are by no means simple day outings. The team journeys to the Midwest to face Saint Louis in October before heading across the country two days later for a match with Charlotte.

After a three-game home stand, the Maroon and White travel to Philadelphia to round out A-10 play against Saint Joseph's and Temple.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

CRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Senior Greg Cirillo led the Minutemen with four assists last season and looks to improve on his offensive totals in 2007.

Koch adjusts offensive set

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

If winning depended solely upon talent, the 2006 Massachusetts men's soccer team may have qualified for the Atlantic 10 tournament. But the youthful Minutemen soon realized that they sorely lacked the experience needed to handle a full 19-game schedule.

A year after boasting the youngest team in the conference – 18 of 25 players were underclassmen – the Minutemen enter 2007 with a new look and motivation to prove to the rest of the conference that last season's 2-6-1 record in A-10 play was a fluke.

UMass coach Sam Koch decided in the offseason that his team had to produce more goals. The Maroon and White scored 14 goals in its 19 games last year; in fact, only five players managed to register a single tally. Koch spent most of the preseason working his team into a 4-3-3 formation, rather than the 4-4-2 of season's past, in hopes of creating more offense.

The change gives the team more options and offensive talent on the field. The extra attacker also allows UMass to exploit weaker players wide since the strongest defenders typically occupy the right and left center back positions of team's backfield.

Despite Koch's demand for more offense, he expects his team to defend as well as it did in 2006.

Forwards

At no point in 2006 did the Minutemen possess a dynamic offense, but early in the year they did an exceptional job of creating enough quality scoring chances to produce goals. In the seven games before the sky fell, the Minutemen outscored opponents 9-1. They strung together passes to create chances and took advantage of opposition mistakes which led directly to goals. In the 2-8-1 stretch that ended the season, opponents outscored the Maroon and White 18-5.

Senior Greg Cirillo enters his final year at UMass looking to improve on his team-high four assists. Within the new formation Cirillo will see a lot of time at the wing position on either side. His ability to serve balls into the box stands as his greatest attribute along with his speed; he projects as the primary option for corner and free kicks on the roster.

On those set pieces, Cirillo will most likely aim for sophomore Bryan Hogan. The 6-foot-2 Hogan led the team in goals last season with four, but must perform better in conference. He scored one goal, a game winner against Dayton on Oct. 6, in UMass' 10 conference games in 2006. His height and general athleticism make him a primary target on set pieces.

Koch expects a great deal of improvement from Hogan in his second season in Amherst. He worked all summer to improve his skills on the ball, becoming a more confident and dangerous player in possession.

CRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Junior Prince Ofosu was one of the Minutemen's top offensive threats in 2006. He should benefit from UMass's new formation, which moves a third player to the forward position.

The transition from two to three forwards moves Hogan into the center of the UMass front line. At times last season, Hogan vacated his position and floated toward the center of the field. When he did this, the UMass midfielders had one less option up front, which effectively stymied any offensive break.

Hogan's versatility allows him to not only make plays after receiving passes in the box, but to beat defenders in 1-on-1 situations.

Playing in the center won't allow him as many 1-on-1 situations as Koch would like, so he worked all summer with the frontrunners to switch on the fly when the situation dictates.

The third forward also provides the Minutemen with more width up front. The midfielders will look to outlet balls into the flank more often with the added forward, and Prince Ofosu is the perfect option to capitalize in these situations. The junior is easily the fastest of the Minutemen and works best in space. His three goals and two assists in 2006 ranked him second on the team in both categories.

In a preseason scrimmage with Long Island, UMass's central midfielders simply served balls down the right side and allowed Ofosu to run them down. He beat the LIU defender to the ball on three separate occasions, once resulting in an easy goal. The other two times provided the Minutemen with some of their best chances on the day.

His speed is not the only strength of his game. In possession, he holds the ball very well. This is something he and assistant coach Jon Davy spent a lot of time working on this summer.

All of the UMass forwards must improve their overall finishing skills. When easy scoring chances present themselves, they must take advantage because it's unlikely another will come along.

The DeSantis brothers will also see time on the wings, although both will also spend time in the midfield. Mark, a sophomore, had two assists as a freshman and will look to increase that total whether it's on the left or right flank.

Sophomore Michael Jejna also tallied two assists in 2006 and will spend time on the front line. Freshmen Bryan Hutches and Mario Ferrentino will see time and provide depth to the UMass front line.

Mofielders

Koch preaches the importance of team defense to his group. And despite the need for more goals in 2007, his midfielders must not neglect their defensive responsibilities.

Junior Tony Bassett started all 19 games as a central midfielder for the Minutemen in 2006. With the improvement of the forwards, Bassett's playmaking ability should become more apparent this year. His three goals tied him with Ofosu and Mike DeSantis last season and his lone assist put him in a three-way tie for third on the team.

Despite the offense he could produce, his consistently heady play from the midfield stands as his strongest attribute. He understands the game as well as any player on the team and rarely makes a mental mistake. With Ofosu on the wing, Bassett's ability to move the ball may become a primary weapon for the UMass offense.

Supporting Bassett in the middle is DeSantis. Bassett's presence on the defensive side of the ball allows DeSantis to involve himself in the offense. He scored three goals last season and should continue to pepper opposing goalkeepers in his third season at UMass.

Koch considers DeSantis a vital piece of the midfield. His understanding of both the offensive and defensive aspects of the game allows him to do some of the small things necessary to win games. He creates scoring opportunities by winning and quickly moving 50-50 balls into the offensive third and does a wonderful job of covering for teammates when they're pulled out of position.

He hasn't performed particularly well to this point in the preseason, but assistant coach Jon Davy has seen

New defense, same offense

Returning seniors up front joined by newcomers in back

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

With the Massachusetts women's soccer team's 2007 season already underway, it's time to take a look at who's still here, who's gone and who the new faces are at Rudd Field.

At this time last year, goalkeeper Kristin Walker had limited opponents to four goals, as the Minutewomen started the 2006 season 3-1. Despite recovering from offseason ACL surgery, Walker had shown enough success in preseason training for UMass coach Jim Rudy to keep her in net, rather than starting freshman Lauren Luckey.

Now, however, it is not recovery, but competition from Luckey, that has the red-shirt senior fighting to keep her job.

Luckey had exceptional indoor and outdoor spring seasons and was then invited to join the New England Mutiny of the Women's Premier Soccer League.

Luckey even got to play in the championship game, which the Mutiny lost, 2-1, in overtime, when the starting goalie went down with an injury, after a devastating collision with an opposing player.

Though she did not see any playing time during her freshman season, Luckey was a big recruit for Rudy after leading her Tennessee high school team to the No. 1 ranking in the United States in 2005.

But Walker has certainly earned respect for goalkeeping.

She started every game the last three seasons (53) and has racked up 296 saves, with 65 goals against.

"You've got the experience and the consistency at one level [with Walker] and you know what you're getting and, on the other, you've got a young talent that's beginning to blossom [with Luckey]. So, we'll see how that pans out," Rudy said.

He also has senior Melissa Jubinville to help provide extra depth to the goalkeeper position.

Whomever Rudy puts between the posts, however, he is confident she will have a strong layer of protection in front of her.

He said his group of defenders will have a fresher look than last year.

Freshman Alyssa Visconti will likely take the middle, with senior Kaelyn Caldwell and freshman Kelsey Anderson patrolling the left and right sides, respectively.

Rudy said that Visconti is a very quick and skillful player and that Anderson is "a speedy right-side defender who likes to go forward a la [2006 graduate, defender and captain Stephanie] Barrett."

Other Minutewomen who will see some time as defenders are seniors Christina Nunes and Tina Rodriguez (pending recovery from a torn ACL), junior Melissa Toulouse and red-shirt sophomore Amy Ballew.

However, no amount of defense in the world means anything unless there are some folks up front who can put points on the board.

The players that will see time in the midfield are Nunes, Toulouse, Rodriguez, senior Jenny Roehrig, freshmen Therese Smith and Ashley Hamel, as well as sophomores Jacquelyn Desjardins, Katie Ruggles and Meghan Gould.

Like Rodriguez, Gould is recuperating from surgery to repair a torn ACL. She had two offseason operations and Rudy says she is doing very well and will probably see the field.

"We have a plethora of midfielders and we have a whole lot that are capable central midfielders," Rudy said.

Leading the offense on any soccer team, however, are the forwards.

Last year's two leading scorers – senior Britt Canfield (seven goals) and junior Vanessa Patry (four) – will lead the offensive attack for the Maroon and White.

Canfield, described by Rudy as the best angles-shooter in UMass history, added three assists to her seven goals for 17 points, while Patry also added three assists, for 11 points last season.

Sophomores Sydney Stoll and Cristina Adams round out the UMass forward crew.

Stoll contributed a goal and an assist for three points, and Adams pocketed one goal.

No matter what the facet of the game, Rudy is confident his Minutewomen will run, jump, dive, and play as one – continuing to build on the progress the team made last season.

"I'm optimistic, but I've got to be very cautious because we went through four years of bad. But, I'll tell you what, our team camaraderie seems to be the best," he said. "Last year's seniors [Barrett, midfielder Liz Weinstein, and defender midfielder co-captain Nadia Villarroel] left us in really good shape in terms of mentality.

"The kids seem to be on the same page," he continued. "They like each other and they'll play for each other. I feel good about this team and I think they have an inkling that they could be pretty good too."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli at student umass edu.

Senior Britt Canfield utilized her great speed to lead the Minutewomen in goals with seven, including three game-winners, last season.

As a freshman in 2006, forward Sydney Stoll started the season coming off the bench. Injuries forced her into the starting lineup and she made the most of it – helping out with one goal and one assist in seven starts.

UM searches for consistency

W. SOCCER from page C1

the year. If she is ready, at what point is she ready? That's the big question. The center of defense almost has the same importance as a quarterback in football."

The rest of the team has come into camp healthy. Leading the aggressive offensive attack is returning senior forward Britt Canfield. She led the squad with seven goals and three assists last season. Red-shirt senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker also returns for her final year. Walker was selected to the Atlantic 10 Preseason All-Conference team. Last season, she collected 88 saves and posted a .796 goals-against average.

"They are playing as technically sound as any team we've had here so far," said Rudy, who is entering his 19th season as head coach. "Physically they've come in better shape across the board as any team I've had in a long time."

The Minutewomen open with their games against non-conference opponents. Last season they defeated three teams that made it to the NCAA tournament: Connecticut, Boston University and Hartford. Although they beat the best teams on their schedule, they lost to under-.500 teams Vermont and New Hampshire.

"Nobody expected us to beat UConn, Yale and BU, nobody did," Rudy said. "But then after that nobody expected us to lose to UNH and Vermont after we were 6-1 and receiving votes for national rankings. That was a real strange deal there."

Hartford is the only non-conference team on the schedule that made it to the NCAA tournament last season. The team has high hopes that it can make it into the A-10 Tournament. The preseason A-10 rankings have the Minutewomen finishing fifth. Last year they finished just outside the A-10 tournament in seventh. The top six teams make the final tournament and Rudy wants to be in the mix.

"Success takes care of itself," Rudy said about setting goals for his team. "I mean certainly we want to get to the A-10 tournament, we haven't been there in the last few years, although we have had a team that's been good enough to get there."

Saint Louis is the favorite to repeat as A-10 champions. The Minutewomen dropped a 1-0 decision to the Billikens on Oct. 13 of last year. The Minutewomen open against Iona, who struggled last season, finishing 4-11-4.

"I think getting into the [A-10] Tournament and getting as far as we possibly can is a good goal for us," Rudy said. "The long shot of making the NCAA tournament is part of our journey back to respectability."

Although the Minutewomen have not made the NCAA tournament since 1997, they still rank fourth all-time in tournament wins with 17. From 1982 to 1997, they made 15 appearances in the NCAA tournament.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames at student umass edu.

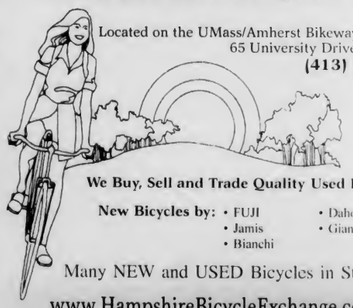
• WE DELIVER
• 30-DAY COMFORT GUARANTEE*
*See store for details.
• STUDENT FRIENDLY
All employees are either UMass Alumni or current students at UMass.
• ON-SITE STORAGE FOR FAST, EASY PICK-UP

LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY

PLATFORM BEDS
100% Hardwood
FROM $188

MATTRESSES
FROM $77
Serta
Sealy

FUTON MATTRESSES
FROM $124



FUTON FRAMES
FROM $118

HOURS Mon.-Sat. 10:30-6 Sun. 12-6
413-253-BEDS 2337
www.directdiscountmattress.com

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
WAREHOUSE, INC.
Rte. 9, Amherst

S E W N
AMHERST COLLEGE
HAMPSHIRE MALL
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
RTE. 9
TO BELCHERTOWN
TO HADLEY & NORTHAMPTON

Hampshire Bicycle Exchange
New and Used Bicycles

Located on the UMass/Amherst Bikeway Connector, 65 University Drive in Amherst
(413) 549-6575

We Buy, Sell and Trade Quality Used Bicycles.
New Bicycles by: • FUJI • Jamis • Bianchi • Dahon • Giant Many NEW and USED Bicycles in Stock Now!
www.HampshireBicycleExchange.com

9 out of 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol.
Are you one of them?
Campus and Community Coalition
www.umass.edu/ccc

Freshmen add new flavor to UMass mix

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Four new faces fill out the final roster for the Massachusetts women's soccer team. The freshman class of Kelsey Anderson, Ashley Hamel, Alyssa Visconti and Therese Smith will assimilate with the upperclassmen and help make a push for the Atlantic 10 championship.

"We are very pleased with the level of the freshmen," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "We feel like we've recruited very well."

For forward Smith, UMass was not the first choice. Smith is a local product, who starred as a three-sport athlete in soccer, basketball and softball at Holyoke (Mass.) High School. Rudy thought she would be looking outside Massachusetts for college, but when things didn't work out, she decided to wear maroon and white.

"She was available really late, and we thought, wow, this is great, because we thought she would be going out of state," Rudy said. "She is a very creative player, very technical, [has a] high skill level and knows how to create and beat you off the dribble. [She can] beat [her] player, draw defenders and slip the ball to someone else and she can finish too."

With the women's game being more conservative because the players take fewer chances, Smith is a good change of pace. Smith scored 16 goals her senior year and also made plays for her teammates with eight assists. She improved her game in the offseason by playing with the Holyoke boys' team in a co-ed indoor soccer league.

"Her style is very creative," Rudy said. "Men are willing to gamble and play more on an individual level and that's some of the stuff we want to get into."

Rounding out the defense are Anderson and Visconti, who both possess great speed. Visconti, from Reading, led her team to the North section semi-finals in her four varsity seasons.

Visconti played with Anderson on a club team. Anderson, who played up front in high school, will be playing defense in college. Rudy likes her speed and thinks she will make a great defender.

Anderson, from Saugus, became the first female in school history to be a four-time league all-star. She posted her best year as a junior, scoring 22 goals and adding 16 assists.

The only recruit from out of state comes from Gansevoort, N.Y. Hamel had an impressive showing as a senior – scoring 20 goals and assisting on 20 others. Rudy feels she'll be able to play right away in his attack-first, defend-second system.

"Hamel is a very dynamic flank player, very smart, very skillful and can take you on one-on-one," Rudy said. "She knows how to set herself up in combination play to beat you. She has done well in her fitness training and we feel she is going to do some playing."

The new freshmen will have to adapt to the style that Rudy likes to use. He does not like the conventional three rows, attack, midfield and defense.

"We basically play in layers instead of rows because if you talk about it all the time and you train it all the time then they play in three rows," Rudy said about his strategy. "I'm looking for much more mobility [and] place-changing. To me, that is the modern game and that's what I'd like it to be. I don't want us to play a girl's soccer game, I want to play the game."

The new freshmen bring speed and intelligence to the team and that is something Rudy will need with this type of approach.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames at student umass edu.

Williams must impress to play

Sophomore keeper looks to follow up breakout year

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

When the final whistle blew on Oct. 28 of last season, the Massachusetts field hockey team's season was over. With its 1-0 home loss against Rhode Island, the Minutewomen finished their campaign with a disappointing 6-14 record.

Coach Patty Shea wasn't offered a new contract to remain in Amherst, and the University hired highly respected Justine Sowry to lead the team to greater heights.

Throughout this forgettable season, there was one particular bright spot for the Minutewomen – the emergence of then-freshman Sarah Williams as an elite goalkeeper.

After watching junior Becky Letourneau mind the cage for the majority of the first eight games, Williams finally received her chance to show the program what she could bring to the table.

Unfortunately for Williams, her first career start came against No. 10 Connecticut. The Minutewomen fell 6-0 to the vaunted Huskies.

Despite the lopsided loss, Williams made 18 saves for the Minutewomen, and impressed the coaching staff along the way. She would start every game for the rest of the season.

"I gave it everything I had every single game and I feel I did the best job I possibly could've done," Williams says.

That is all coaches and teammates can ask for from their goalie, and Williams would finish the season with a 5-7 record. Her .744 save percentage and 2.48 goals against average (GAA) ranked highest on the team, but that has not ensured her the starting position this year.

Coach Sowry has yet to name a starter for this season, as she continues to evaluate Williams and Letourneau.

"I think [Williams] has a lot of strengths in terms of protecting her goal and not making silly decisions," Sowry says. "She's a little bit raw in terms of her skill technically, and we've worked really hard on that throughout the spring and I've seen an improvement here."

If Williams can build upon her technical skill, and win the starting job after an already stellar freshman season, Atlantis, 10 opponents are going to struggle to find the back of the net when squaring off against the Minutewomen.

Change has been one constant for the 19-year-old since she made the long journey from Colorado to Amherst. From high school star to riding the pine early last season at UMass, she eventually won the starting position for the final 12 games of 2006. Now she has to prove herself all over again to Coach Sowry.

"I made a deliberate effort not to watch video of last year," Sowry says when explaining the open competition for goalkeeper entering the 2007 season.

An assistant coach with the U.S. National team for the previous three years, Sowry brings a wealth of goalkeeping knowledge to Amherst.

In addition to directing multiple field hockey camps, she coached Amy Tran, who went on to become Goalkeeper of the Tournament at the 2006 World Cup.

Sowry also excelled as a player for Australia from 1991-2001.

She appeared in the 1996 and 2000 Olympics and earned gold medals in 1994 and 1998 at the World Cup.

Coaching changes often take time to work out, but Williams insists that the shift from Shea to Sowry has been seamless.

"It's been a very smooth transition," Williams says. "There's a lot of energy and excitement to have a new staff. As goalkeepers, both Becky and I have learned a new technique for this year. We are both very excited about that and this season should go very smoothly. We're all hoping for lots of wins."

With very few exceptions, the majority of great teams display a level of consistency throughout their respective seasons. If the Minutewomen want to build and improve upon 2006, consistency will be a huge factor, especially at the goalkeeping position.

"From what I heard and my observations of both goalkeepers, I think it really depends on the opponent that we're playing but also the consistency that our goalkeepers are performing at," Sowry says.

Open competition has the potential to be positive or negative for a team. While it sometimes can push both individuals to higher levels on the playing field, it can also create tensions between the parties.

However, Williams maintains that both goalies have a healthy relationship with one another.

"Becky and I are really good friends. We're really close and really supportive of each other on and off the field," Williams says. "For Becky and I both, whoever is doing the best job at the time, that's who we want in the net."

In this day, egos often overshadow winning in the professional ranks, but winning remains the goal of most college athletes. Williams is no exception.

"Our expectations are that we will make it to the A-10s this year," says Williams with confidence. "All of us obviously want to win it."

Had the Minutewomen defeated Rhode Island on the last game of 2006, they would have finished with a 4-3 conference record and advanced to the Atlantis 10 tournament.

Williams has set herself up to succeed and guide the team to that tournament with the combination of a year's experience and her readiness to learn the position.

Sowry says Williams has the desire to be a "student of the game" who is continually working hard in practice to improve her technique.

If Williams is able to pull everything together with her new knowledge of the position, the 2007 Minutewomen should fare better than last year's version. But it will also be up to the rest of the team to hold their end of the bargain and reach the conference tournament.

Mike Connors can be reached at mconnors at student umass edu.

Sophomore Sarah Williams took over the starting role midway through last season, but hasn't secured the starting role in 2007. She is competing with senior Becky Letourneau.

Live It Up...Go Bowling!
UMASS College Specials...

EVERY THURSDAY
Unlimited Bowling ~ Only $12
9pm-12am

Galactic Bowling
Every Friday & Saturday night
11pm-1:30am
Unlimited Bowling ~ Live DJ
Wild Light Show ~ Prizes & More!

also featuring...Grandstands Bar
Live Bands ~ Good Food ~ Good Fun!

SPARE TIME Family Fun Center

Spare Time ~ Northampton
(formerly Northampton Bowl)
525 Pleasent St 584-4830

Yes, summer is over. But believe it or not, there is an upside.

College Students
Get 15% OFF full-price items.
Must show valid college ID when check-out. Valid one time per day.

Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
351 East Russell St

eastern mountain sports

2007

Sowry takes reigns

Former goalie hopes to turn around program

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

A new coach, a new system, and the expectation of some new results: that's what is in store for the Massachusetts field hockey team in 2007.

The 2006 season was one that fans would like to forget. Lowlights included a 6-14 overall record, a 2-8 record at home, five shutout losses, and an exclusion from the Atlantic 10 tournament. Those results led to the dismissal of coach Patty Shea and the hiring of Justine Sowry.

Prior to her hiring at UMass, Sowry spent 1998-2002 as an assistant coach at Louisville. She moved on to become an assistant coach for Stanford in 2003, and most recently was the director of all goalkeeping programs for the United States Field Hockey Association.

Often after a team gets a new coach, there can be an awkward transitional phase, as the team has to adjust to the different style of the new coach. Sometimes this can lead to a step backward in the coach's first year.

However, Sowry does not believe that will happen this year. She mentioned that the team was extremely professional and welcoming to her and to the new techniques she brought. Sowry mentioned that she deliberately did not watch any tape of last year in order to form her own opinion about what each player's strengths and weaknesses were.

Sowry must like what she sees, because she has set high expectations for the upcoming season. She believes that the team can compete for the A-10 title in her first year, provided it continues to build on the progress it showed shown in the spring.

"I would think that with the execution and the commitment that we have seen so far we can compete for the A-10 championship," said Sowry. "Again, we have to be realistic, we didn't make the tournament last year, but I think where we are at now, we can certainly set making the finals as our goal."

The focus in practice for the upcoming season has been to improve the team's communication on the field. She is pleased by what she has seen in practice thus far, but understands the team isn't at the level they need to be at yet.

"What's going to be important is to stay process focused," Sowry said. "They think by working hard it's automatically going to come, but they have to understand that it's the attention to the detail and the process, rather than focusing on the end result."

The forward line was a major weakness for the team last season. Goals were hard to come by for the Minutewomen, averaging 1.88 goals per game, compared to their opponents scoring 2.77 goals against in 2006. UMass actually outshot the opposition last season, taking 14.6 shots per game compared to the opposition's 14.2 shots per game. The main problem was that the team too often failed to capitalize on the quality scoring chances they had.

Sowry has been stressing the importance of not wasting any chances the team gets and plans to spend a lot of practice time focusing on improving the execution of the team's set plays, especially penalty corners.

UMass's forward line is younger than the other units of the team, so competition for the starting spots will remain open until the first game against Syracuse.

"Whoever can step and put the ball in the back of the net, they're going to get the spot," Sowry said.

Kristian Dumpit/Collegian

Senior Erin O'Brien enters her second season as captain of the Minutewomen.

Sowry mentioned that the strength of the team this year will be the backfield. There is a lot of depth on the team, including several returning seniors who possess a wealth of experience. Seniors Erin O'Brien and Kristina DoRosario are the team's defensive anchors and leaders.

Joining them will be two new recruits, including Makaela Potts, who was recruited from Australia, and Jaime Bourzaeris, whom Sowry expects to compete for a starting position.

The competition for starting goalkeeper is open between senior Becky Letourneau and sophomore Sarah Williams. Both players have a different style of goalkeeping, Williams has a much more stay-at-home style, preventing the easy goals and rarely venturing far from the net.

Letourneau, on the other hand, is much more aggressive and polished skill-wise, but needs to work a little more on her decision making, as she occasionally gets caught out of position. Whoever shows the best form during practice will likely be named the starter.

The schedule this year has a few games that will really test the progress the Minutewomen have made. Richmond has won the last five A-10 titles and enters the season as a favorite to win a sixth. Temple and St. Joseph's were the other two teams in the conference who finished with a positive overall record.

The toughest opponent outside the conference is Connecticut. Last year UConn finished 21-4, including an 11-1 record at home. UMass hopes to avenge a 6-0 shutout loss last year.

There are also a few matchups, such as West Chester and Harvard, that appear winnable on paper, but Sowry wants to make sure that her team takes nothing for granted.

"You've got to respect all and fear none," said Sowry. "Hockey's a strange game and any team on its day can win."

The overall outlook for the team is pretty positive, in spite of last year's struggles. However, the team's first few games will likely set the tone for the entire season. If the Minutewomen can get off to a strong start and play up to their potential, the team can be a serious contender for the conference title. If the team stumbles out of the gate, though, the 2007 season will likely be remembered as just another rebuilding project for a new coach.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Newest additions impressing coaches and upperclassmen

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

With a new head coach and a new gameplan, the Massachusetts field hockey team enters 2007 looking to re-establish itself as a contender in the Atlantic 10.

New coach Justine Sowry hopes to turn around the team after a sub-par season last year.

"We're looking to improve on past seasons and the girls are motivated and working hard and I think we can do that," she said.

Sowry made numerous changes to the UMass roster through recruiting and new training methods.

Goalkeeping

Last season Becky Letourneau lost the starting job to then-freshman Sarah Williams. Letourneau had a 3.28 goals-against average with a save percentage of .579 in eight starts. In 12 starts Williams posted a 2.48 GAA and .744 save percentage. The two are still competing for the starting job and the work they've done during the offseason shows.

Letourneau has improved on her technical ability in net. Sowry hopes this will lead to a tougher and stingier defense.

Midfield

One of the new aspects of Sowry's team is the idea of on-field leadership. In addition to having a team captain, she has an offensive and defensive captain.

The Minutewomen's offensive captain is junior Erin Parker. She only started the first eight games of last season before an injury cost her the remaining 12 contests. In those eight games, she had 10 points, which came on three goals and four assists.

She was named offensive captain because of the high intensity with which she plays. Sowry says that the team is going to rely on her for some punch up front.

Returning to the team this season with Parker are Kara Murphy, Mary Shea and Katelyn Orlando.

Murphy, a senior this year, is looking to have another strong season. She led the team in defensive stops with four, had one goal and five assists for seven points, appeared in every game and started all but one for the Minutewomen last year.

Shea is heading into the season trying to build on her solid sophomore season. She started all 20 games last year and had one goal and one assist for three points.

Orlando is one of the most passionate players on the team, according to Sowry. She started all 20 games last year as a sophomore, leading the team in assists with six and finishing with three goals for a total of 12 points.

The Minutewomen have a newcomer to the midfield in Makaela Potts, a freshman from Australia. Sowry says that she is one of two freshman competing for a starting job this season. She also believes that even if Potts doesn't start, she could still see significant playing time.

Attack

Sowry also brings a new dynamic to the attack. She stressed that the attackers need to play with more urgency around the field and improve ball movement. The most important thing she stressed was how to effectively outlet the ball from the backfield.

"When they can move the ball up the field more effectively, it leads to a high-energy and high-tempo type of game," Sowry said.

The Minutewomen leading the attack are Rachael Mervine, Lauren Gillespie, Christine Rodgers and Cher King.

Mervine is the only senior to lead the charge for the team this season. Last year, she played in 19 games and started 16 of them, finishing with 16 points on five goals and tying Orlando for the team-lead in assists with six.

Gillespie, another player who's had an offseason plagued by injury, totaled 13 goals and two assists 19 games for the Minutewomen last season. Sowry says her strength is her goal-scoring and the team needs her to be healthy to be successful this upcoming season.

Rodgers played in 19 games last season as a freshman, starting one contest. She's another player who's dealt with offseason injuries. Her work ethic impressed Sowry, as she's already worked back into playing shape and is ready to start the season.

King played in all 20 games in a successful freshman year and started 18 of those. She had 18 points on seven goals and four assists. She led the team in shots and shots on goal with 65 and 38, respectively. She also led the team with two game-winning goals. Her knowledge of the game impressed Sowry the most, and she hopes that King will put that to use on the field.

Ariana Cappelli, Katie Kelly and Kylie Jelley are the three newcomers to the team this year.

Defense

Seniors Erin O'Brien and Kristina DoRosario anchor the UMass defense. O'Brien was named overall team captain by Sowry, and DoRosario was chosen as the on-field defensive captain.

O'Brien started all 20 games her junior season and recorded three goals and three assists for nine points. Those three goals came as a hat trick against Siena on Sept. 26 of last year. Sowry hopes that O'Brien will continue to lead the team on and off the field as she's done in past seasons.

DoRosario started all 19 games that she played. Sowry says that DoRosario is one of the team's key defenders this season and her field vision and ability to control the tempo of the game has impressed her.

Another senior, Nicole Phelan, will be a big part of the Minutewoman defense. Last season she played in all 20 games, starting 15 of them. She netted two goals for four points. She is very effective on penalty corners, which is an aspect of the game that Sowry has tried to improve this offseason.

Of the six freshmen Sowry recruited, three of them are defenders. One of them, Jaime Bourzaeris, is competing for a starting job. The other two are Courtney Mayerick and Christine Dzwill.

Sowry says all three freshmen will have an enormous learning curve, but calls it a great opportunity because of the upperclassmen they're learning from.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jsmcgral@student.umass.edu

Typical freshman's phone call to parents.

"Send more money."

Subscriptions available
Call 545-3500
and start recieving the Collegian today!

Okay parents, it's time to find out what's really going on at UMass.

Keep up with UMass news, sports, student life, and more online.
www.dailycollegian.com

Dailycollegian.com
New England's Largest College Daily.

Depth is the word for UM

Men and women sport talented field for 2007 run

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

One could sum up the 2007 Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams with one word: depth. The Minutemen lost just two seniors from the 2006 squad. With 19 returning runners, the ranks of the Maroon and White are by no means slim. The Minutewomen have 13 returning athletes from last season, including five seniors and two juniors.

Captains Ryan Durkin, a senior, and junior Jesse Regnier lead a relatively experienced team that includes eight sophomores.

Second-year man Andrew McCann enters 2007 looking to build on his strong freshman campaign. McCann placed in the top ten on the team in all seven races he entered, placing in the top five in five of those races.

Nicolai Naranjo also turned heads as a freshman last season. While only participating in three races, Naranjo placed no lower than fourth on the team, including finishing sixth overall at the Dartmouth Invitational on Sept. 9, where he led all UMass runners.

Regnier showed flashes of brilliance last season. He finished no worse than second among UMass runners in the six races he competed.

Durkin, the more experienced of the two captains, finished last season placing in the top five on the team in five out of his six races. But he will miss time early in the season while he recovers from mononucleosis.

Senior Nils Fischer is off to this season while he spends the semester studying in England. However Fischer has complete confidence that Durkin and Regnier can lead the team and succeed despite his absence.

"[Durkin] is the type of kid who will put it upon himself to hold the team together even when he isn't competing," Fischer said. "Jesse Regnier will have a lot on his hands, but he has both the leadership and the athletic qualities that are needed. He is a good enough role model to keep the team pure and disciplined and I have no doubt in his ability to inspire and instill confidence in everyone."

UMass coach Ken O'Brien said that his team is in great spirits and has built up momentum from last year's track and field season. O'Brien also expressed the team's excitement about the upcoming season.

The Maroon and White's leader also voiced great faith in the captains that his runners almost unanimously chose for this season.

"They are very mature and they are really committed to having a good team," O'Brien said. "They are very good individual athletes, but they are more committed to having a good team than they are for their own personal accomplishments."

As for the Minutewomen, seniors Christina DeRosa, Amber Sayer and Taryn Trapp captain a youthful yet talented team. A stress fracture in Trapp's leg will keep her from competing this season.

In every race that she participated in last season, DeRosa crossed the finish line before any of her teammates. It was that consistent excellence that earned her All-Atlantic 10 honors last season along with Nils Fischer on the men's team.

DeRosa carries momentum from her junior track and field campaign where she won the 10K race at the A-10 Championship meet.

However, UMass coach Julie LaFreniere believes that there are many other runners on the team who could enjoy similar success.

"I think that the core [of the team] coming back would be

Kyle Bobby / Massmetsavalanche

Christina DeRosa was the top UMass runner every race in 2006.

Christina [DeRosa], [sophomore] Eilis [Kierans] and Amber [Sayer]," LaFreniere said.

The graduation of Cuisle Kierans leaves the door open for other runners to establish themselves on the team.

LaFreniere expects red-shirt freshman Shiyi Zan to make strides in her first cross country season after sitting out her first year at UMass with a leg injury.

Incoming freshman Gina Perno is someone that could step in and make an immediate impact.

"[Perno]'s going to join the team but I'm not going to put a lot of pressure on her," said LaFreniere. "She's very dedicated. She's been running several workouts and we'll see how she ends up but I would not doubt if she would be in that top five [on the team]."

Sayer had a strong season last year and looks to remain one of the team's strongest runners this year as well. In 2006 as a junior, Sayer ran seven races and finished among the top ten runners on the team in every race. She finished in the top five on the team five times.

If Sayer can stay healthy, look for her to continue her success with the Maroon and White.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Injuries challenge runners

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country rosters will be slightly different than expected at the beginning of the 2007 season. Due to injuries and a runner studying abroad, the Maroon and White are missing some key elements to the team.

The men's cross country team will be without senior Nils Fischer. He is studying abroad this fall in England at Leeds University. He chose Leeds University because of its strong road racing program. Fischer will also have the chance to train with British runners while abroad.

"It's hard to leave UMass

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp 9.30.07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0050
60 AMHERST

Fischer said, "But it will eventually benefit the team as well as satisfy my personal reasons and give me some new perspectives."

Fischer will red-shirt this year and return to cross country next fall.

"As Division I athletes, we're only allowed four seasons of each sport," Fischer said. "Since I've only used three for cross country, I'll use my fourth season a year later.

"As long as I don't lose my eligibility with gambling, killing anyone or doing drugs, I should be OK," he joked.

Fischer is expecting the team to succeed while he is gone due to strong returning runners and a solid freshman class.

"Combining this [returning runners and newcomers] will be a recipe for success," he said. "And this should be one of the more exciting years for UMass cross country."

Injuries are hard to recover from in a sport where it's hard to slowly get back into the game, according to UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. That's what the team must deal with at the start of the season with Ryan Durkin, Kevin Quadrozzi and Ryan DiOrio easing their way back into the sport.

"Recovery is unusual in relation to other sports," O'Brien said. "With cross country the gun goes off and you have to race for 30 minutes. You don't have the opportunity to make your way back into it. It's an all or nothing thing."

Senior co-captain Ryan Durkin was diagnosed with mononucleosis at the end of July and will have a slow start to this season.

"It's difficult to entertain a recovery time with mono," O'Brien said. "It's one of those situations where you do the best that you can as you start to recover and then you have the reorganization of a training program so that it's gradual enough to retain your fitness."

O'Brien expects that he will not be very competitive for the first half of the season.

"It's unfortunate because it's always devastating for a senior to miss his last season," O'Brien said.

Quadrozzi and DiOrio both sustained injuries over the summer. This prevented them from training and will slow their respective starts to the season.

The Minutewomen are also suffering from injuries. Senior Taryn Trapp will miss this season due to a stress fracture from the end of last year, but she will return next year.

"It's a significant loss for our program," women's coach Julie LaFreniere said.

Red-shirt freshman Shiyi Zan will run this fall after not competing last year due to an injury.

"Shiyi's capable of possibly being No. 2 in our pack," LaFreniere said.

Both teams compete on Sept. 8 at the Dartmouth Invitational in Hanover, N.H.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen living in present after title push

Loss to Mountaineers a distant memory for Brown, Coen and Co.

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Tight end Brad Listorti had just caught a 17-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Liam Coen to tie the score at 14 heading into the final frame of the NCAA Division I Championship game.

That's when Appalachian State, which ran off a 14-3 run to end the game, ran off with the title, along with the Minutemen's hopes, on the legs of Kevin Richardson, who scored all four Mountaineer touchdowns in the 28-17 defeat.

"It's a bittersweet taste, losing that game," Coen said. "But making it there and having the run that we had, it was a great run. It's something to put in your back pocket, but we didn't finish the way we wanted."

With 2006 now history, UMass stands before another long road back to football glory. Atlantic 10 Football is no more. All 12 teams shifted to the Colonial Athletic Association, where nothing has changed, save for the initials above the team nicknames and the records, which are back at zero.

Last season, UMass used its torqued the heart-breaking, season-ending loss to Hofstra that cut their 2005 season short. This year, the Minutemen are once again trying to forget.

"Nobody really cares about last year anymore," UMass coach Don Brown said. "When you five in the past, and you're reading your press clippings, you die in the present."

With one game in the books, let's take a look at how the rest of the schedule will shake down.

Sept. 8 – at Colgate

This matchup is one of the most anticipated rivalries of UMass Football. The Minutemen and Raiders have met in each of the last four seasons, with Colgate leading the all-time series, 4-2.

Last season, the Minutemen embarrassed the Raiders, 28-7, at home in the season opener at McGuirk Stadium. Colgate limped to a 4-7 overall record, and will be looking for revenge and a fresh start in '07.

Sept. 15 – Towson

UMass put the Tigers to shame last year, beating up on the Towson defense to the tune of a 35-0 victory on the road in the pair's first-ever meeting. This year, the Tigers come to Amherst for both teams' conference opener.

Sept. 22 – at Maine

One of the best games last season came against the Black Bears from Maine. With the first place in the North Division up for grabs, UMass squeezed out a 10-9 win a week after downing New Hampshire in Durham.

Quarterback Liam Coen enters his third year as the leader of the UMass offense.

After pulling ahead, 10-0 in the fourth quarter, UMass let the Black Bears back in the game with a field goal and a touchdown. A botched extra point is all that separated the two tournament hopefuls.

Sept. 29 – at Boston College

Last year's 21-20 loss to Navy was about as close as an FCS squad could come to upsetting a Bowl Championship Subdivision team. The Eagles should prove to be a much tougher challenge, but there are some other themes that come into play with this one.

For Coen, this game has even more meaning. The Newport, R.I., native dreamt of being an Eagle as a boy, and his grandfather is a BC alumnus. In a way, Sept. 29 will be somewhat of a homecoming for the Minuteman hurler.

"When I was in high school, [BC] was where I wanted to go," Coen said. "It didn't work out that way, but I'm in a great position now."

Oct. 13 – Villanova

The Wildcats finished in second place in the South Division in 2006, but lost several starters to graduation. The preseason CAA coaches' poll has them sliding to fifth in the South.

However, the game will come two weeks after the matchup with BC, and follows the team's only bye week, so there are plenty of reasons to call this year prototypical trap game.

Oct. 20 – Northeastern

Last year's contest with the Northeastern Huskies was a memorable one. A rain-soaked low-scoring affair held the Minutemen to a single score in a 7-0 victory. Northeastern wasn't much of a threat to anybody last season, but impressed late with a pair of road wins over Hofstra and Rhode Island.

When Brown left the Red and Black to return to the school where he helped bring a national championship home in 1998, this matchup had a strange feel to it. That feeling never quite dissipated. I spect the same scenario on Oct. 20.

Oct. 27 – at William & Mary

The Tribe came to the Pioneer Valley looking for an upset, and had to have left pretty upset with itself. UMass smashed William & Mary, 48-7, racking up nearly 600 yards of total offense. J Mass grad Steve Baylark had a pair of scores in the game, and sophomore Tony Nelson scored three of his own.

Nov. 3 – at Rhode Island

Another game that holds some significance for the team's on-the-field leader is the yearly matchup with the Rams. Coen grew up near URI's campus and knows a number of players on the team.

"I've got a bunch of friends at Rhode," Coen said at the team's Media Day. "That's my hometown right there, so that's definitely one I would circle [on the schedule]."

The Rams fell, 41-16, to UMass last season during Homecoming Weekend in Amherst. The environment should prove to be very different this year with the game in Kingston, R.I.

Nov. 10 – New Hampshire

The game everyone has circled on their schedule is the Nov. 10 rematch with UNH. The Wildcats had two chances to beat the Minutemen on the final play of the game last year and twice failed to get the ball in the end zone.

The Minutemen's 2006 season hinged on getting past Ricky Santos and the Wildcats, and they did just that. This season may be much of the same. With only a trip to Hofstra left, this contest may very well decide the CAA's inaugural champion.

"It's great having them [in Amherst] this year," Coen said. "We played well in Durham last year, but I think having them here is big for us. They're always going to be good, we always play some great games as we have in the last few years."

Nov. 17 – at Hofstra

UMass closes out its season against the Pride for the third straight year. In 2005, Hofstra upended the Minutemen's season, knocking them out of the playoff season in the final week.

Last year, the Maroon and White had already clinched the title, but the game was closer than it should have been, with UMass taking a 22-19 decision. Don't be surprised if a similar situation emerges this year, with UNH coming to town a week prior to the matchup.

The Minutemen were picked by the CAA coaches to finish first in the North Division and take the overall crown.

However, unlike last year's version of the Minutemen, there is no surprise factor. Gillarly to the form of offensive powerhouse UNH to overcome. UMass has taken on the role of conference powerhouse. That means no more "upsets" at Durham or elsewhere. The Minutemen will be favorites in all their league's head-to.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jpmrice@student.umass.edu.

PARKING SERVICES
WELCOME BACK STUDENTS!!
PLEASE PARK SMART
The University community appreciates your parking cooperation.

Valid UMass parking permits are required in all parking lots Monday through Friday between the hours of 7am and 5pm (unless otherwise designated as a reserved space or 24-hour enforced lot) Parking meters are enforced for payment Monday through Friday between the hours of 9 am and 5 pm.

Please visit Parking Services' website at http://parking.umass.edu for further parking information.

Giant Furniture Sale
A huge collection of gently used couches, tables, chairs, desks & bureaus

Comfy, Experienced, Affordable
Friday, September 7 & Saturday, September 8
9am-1pm 2pm-5pm
Amherst Town Common
Home delivery available for a small fee. Donations accepted on-site on day of event.
Call (413) 549-3988 for more information
All proceeds benefit The Amherst Survival Center
Providing food, clothing, and community to Pioneer Valley families in need since 1975

2007 amherst cinema

STUDENT SPECIAL
Present this ad at the Box Office with your Student ID and receive a movie ticket for ONLY $5.00
Valid for all showings. Not applicable with any other discount. Expires: September 30, 2007. Limit one coupon per person.
UPCOMING FILMS & EVENTS
Pedro Costa Retrospective SEPTEMBER 24 - OCTOBER 4
• Where Does Your Hidden Smile Lie?
• The Blood • Bones • Down to Earth
• In Vanda's Room • Colossal Youth
Charles Burnett
• Killer of Sheep
• My Brother's Wedding
Rocket Science
Once
Paprika
The Bubble
Offside
Lady Chatterly
JANUS FILMS WILL CONTINUE THIS FALL
28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

7		6	2		4
	5			3
	1	4	8
8	3			7	9
		7
1	6			5	2
		3	9	8
	6			2
3		2	5		1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

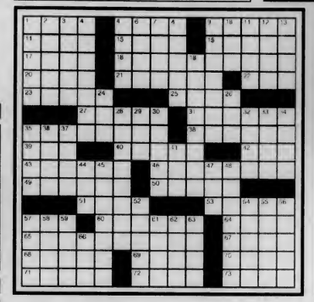
Quote of the Day

"If I was an elephant I would run into cars for a living!"
—Jeremy Rice

Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean By Rainy Stanford

The Zoo By Gabe Strine

The Family Monster By Josh Shalek



A College Girl Named Joe By Aaron Warner

ACROSS
1 Flabby
5 Little demons
9 Stitched
14 Louisville's river
15 Writer Barlow
16 Create last
17 Rather and Quayle
18 Loyalty
20 Trajectories
21 Barking dog
22 Surprised exclamations
23 Respectful Hindu title
25 Stalactites
27 Mother-of-pearl
31 Start again and again
35 Bellow
36 More nervous
39 Dander
40 ___ time's a charm
42 Slot-filler
43 Easter event
46 Poetic pairs
49 Noisy napper
50 Hide house
51 Follow closely
53 Re-mark prices
57 Make things happen
60 Find secondary connections
64 Radio enthusiast
65 Spicy topping
67 Bar mitzvah dance
68 Spooky
69 Tie tie
70 Author Reynold
71 Process parts
72 Desires
73 Espies

DOWN
1 Fountain buys
2 "Lovey Childs" author
3 Grosbeak, e.g.
4 Step in salad preparation
5 Bird's indignant comment
6 Manly
7 Influence
8 Enjoyed a siesta
9 Formed eddies
10 Time worth noting
11 Booster
12 Impress clearly
13 Poor grades
19 Turn to go
24 Donut sounder
26 Purse a lour
28 Cliques
29 Collegiate cheer
30 Decree
32 Quote as an example
33 Miami team
34 Crystal balls
41 Canape spread
44 Expertise
45 So-and-sos, affectionately
47 Part of rsvp
48 Woodcutters' tool
52 Like an unsound boat
54 Rib-eye alternative
55 Condor's digs
56 Students with degs
57 Poker bullets
58 Guitarist Atkins
59 Make weary
61 Sand ridge
62 PC image
63 Hanks' holidays
66 Kind of service

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
MEAT PUPPETS plus The Sterns
WED. SEPT. 5 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • CLUBROOM
AGAINST ME! PLUS MATT & KIM, DAVID CONDERO
THU. SEPT. 6 • 7:00 PM DOORS OPEN 6:00 PM • BALLROOM
BLONDE REDHEAD plus School of Seven Bells (ex-Secret Machines, Gel Air! library!)
FRI. SEPT. 7 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • BALLROOM
GRACE POTTER AND THE NOCTURNALS plus The Amity Front
SAT. SEPT. 8 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM • BALLROOM
Bank Street 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON WIN TICKETS!
E-mail your name & favorite band to streetteam@ihog.com
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

Submit your comics!
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will be moved by a poem you read in a public rest room today.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't worry, only one person is going to notice.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
This year you should probably stop pro-testing textbook costs and just buy some.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If you thought it was tough getting into campus, try getting out!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If something goes wrong, blame the guy next to you.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Stretching every day will solve most of your problems.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If you had less stuff, you wouldn't have to move it all in.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Next time you think you need one more, think again.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Slow ride...
...take it easy.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Unless you aspire to discover a new species of mold, clean out your fridge.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There is a good chance you will get arrested this weekend.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
In a fight to the death, tickling will ensure your victory.

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
STEPHEN LYNCH
CALVIN Theatre and Performing Arts Center NORTHAMPTON, MA
Friday, September 14th 8:00 PM
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS | APARTMENTS FOR RENT | EMPLOYMENT | LOST & FOUND | ROOMMATE WANTED | SERVICES

Place your classified ad here!

A Collegian classified is a great way to advertise to the Five College community. Reach over 20,000 readers daily!

- Call (413) 545-3500 to speak to an experienced advertising representative
- Visit us at www.dailycollegian.com to submit your classified online
- Or visit us in the Campus Center basement!

Monday - Friday 8:30 - 3:30

2007

Minutemen retooled for return run at title

With seniors gone, plenty of holes to fill for UMass coaches

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The 2006 Massachusetts football team was a lot like last year's version of the Chicago Bears. Both teams utilized a strong running game, defense and special teams all the way to their respective championship games.

However, both teams succumbed in the end to high-octane offenses. The Bears lost to Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts, while game-breaking running back Steve Baylark and the Minutemen fell short in the Division I-AA Championship against Appalachian State.

But under the stewardship of UMass coach Don Brown, the Maroon and White have one thing going for them that the Bears don't – a star quarterback.

Offense

Quarterback

No matter which way you analyze him, the man under center for the Minutemen just may be the best they've ever had. Liam Coen has both the numbers (more on that in a minute) and a national title appearance to his credit – all after just two years at the helm.

The red-shirt junior was named an all-conference third-team quarterback in 2006, but that honor failed to do Coen justice, as his season was far from third-rate.

Coen had the third 3,000-yard season in school history (3,016), completed 65 percent of his passes (a school record) and threw 26 touchdowns (third most) during last year's run to the national championship. Coen kept good care of the football, throwing just 10 interceptions in 15 games and he went through a stretch of five games without throwing a single pick.

He's still learning and should be even better in '07. With Baylark in the fold last year, the Minutemen ran 212 more times than they passed (555 to 343). But with Baylark gone, coupled with the maturation and emergence of Coen, expect that to change.

Just like his all-conference ranking.

Backing up Coen for the second consecutive year is Scott Woodward, who also returns as the holder on special teams. The lefty threw just six passes last year, but has experience with the system.

Scott Wallace and highly-touted freshman Detavious Hawkins are unlikely to see time under center.

Running Back

Brown will go to more of a dual-running back attack this year without Baylark. Powerful sophomore back Tony Nelson will likely see the majority of the time carrying the ball, but speedy senior Matt Lawrence will get his share of carries as well. Both averaged just over five yards per rush in minimal carries last season.

Nelson showed his playmaking skills against William & Mary in last year's 48-7 drubbing at McGuirk Stadium, rushing for three scores and 69 yards. Lawrence gives the offense more flexibility, as he can line up at fullback and catch passes out of the backfield.

A trio of young backs will compete for playing time behind their more experienced teammates, including red-shirt freshman Alphonsus Aguh and true freshmen Jonathan Hernandez and Emil Igwenagu – both of whom were considered among the most prolific high school backs in Massachusetts last season.

The Minutemen also have a group of fullbacks on the roster that contribute mostly on special teams – most notably E.J. Barthel, who started three games at fullback.

Pass Catchers

Coen loses the luxury of throwing to all-conference first-team wide receiver Brandon London this season, but has a trio of talented playmakers in tight end Brad Listorti and receivers J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher.

All three pass catchers are red-shirt seniors and have developed a good rapport with the man responsible for getting them the football. Moore is one of the team's four captains. Listorti is considered one of the best tight ends in the Football Championship Subdivision and Rancher has two of the three longest touchdown catches in school history.

Aside from being the team's primary punt returner, Moore finished last season second on the team in receptions (46), third in receiving yards (594) and tied for second in touchdown catches with four. He's a consistent target for Coen, becoming the eighth Minuteman with over 100 receptions in his career. He needs just 44 more in his senior season to pass London for second on the school's all-time list. His 1,320 career receiving yards rank ninth in school history.

Rancher is a big target on offense, measuring at 6-foot-5 and 200 pounds. He led the team in average yards per catch last year at 16.5, although he didn't record a 100-yard game in 2006. His 362 yards ranked fifth on the team, while his 22 receptions placed him fourth.

While big things are expected of both Rancher and Moore with London gone, Listorti may be Coen's best and most consistent target. The 6-foot-4 tight end has hauled in a pass in 14 straight games entering the season and ranked second on the team in yards last year (604) and third in receptions (38). He had perhaps his best career performance when it mattered most, catching five passes for 78 yards and a touchdown in the title game against the Mountaineers.

The main targets through the air after those three are not yet determined, but senior Michael Omar (7 rec., 140 yards, 1 TD) and sophomore Ke'Mon Bailey will likely battle for the third receiver spot.

The Minutemen have a plethora of other receivers on the roster, as up to nine players will try to work their way onto the field. At tight end, there are three backups – most notably primary reserve Ian Jorgensen, who had two touchdown catches in the playoffs last year.

Offensive Line

The offensive line was terrific a season ago, helping pave the way for remarkable campaigns from both Baylark and Coen. The expected starting front-five is both experienced (three seniors) and imposing with an average size of 6-foot-4 and 303 pounds.

But it's the two smallest linemen who anchor the unit. Red-shirt senior left guard and captain Matt Austin (the lightest at 285 lbs) is a Lindy's preseason All-American, while senior center Nick Diana (the shortest at 6-foot-3) is a preseason all-conference selection.

Last season's group led the conference in fewest sacks allowed, as Coen was taken down 16 times in 15 contests. Vladimir Ducasse (left tackle), Chris Hopkins (right guard) and Sean Callechio (right tackle) will be in charge of helping the two all-conference picks maintain that high level of play as a unit.

According to Brown, Ducasse was their top recruit in 2006 while Callechio and especially Hopkins have experience as starters. Ducasse isn't locked in as the starter yet on the left side, with junior transfer from Boston University Ben Coblyn posing a threat in more ways than one – standing at 6-foot-8 and 296 pounds. Coblyn actually played basketball at BU, not football.

Ten additional players are hoping to see some time on the line, while guard Biff Gottehrer and freshmen Josh Samuda and Tim Nolan are likely to be the ones to get most of it.

Defense

Defensive Line

The front four will look much different this season, but will likely out-produce last year's group. Half of the 38 sacks UMass recorded in 2006 came from members on the line, and only one player who contributed to that total is no longer with the team (John Hatchell – 5 sacks).

It will be a young group with three red-shirt sophomores expected to start, but defensive tackle Brandon Collier started 10 games last season and had 52 tackles and three sacks. Nose tackle Kyle Harrington is powerful (435 lb. bench-press) and left end Michael Hanson is a great athlete who converted from linebacker.

If they need any guidance on the line of scrimmage, they should just turn their heads and imitate whatever left defensive end David Burris is doing.

A red-shirt senior and a preseason all-conference selection, Burris led the team in sacks (8.5) and tackles for a loss (16) – while also recording 77 tackles and two forced fumbles. The former walk-on will be a menace to opposing signal callers in the Colonial Athletic Association this season.

The expected backups have experience and performed well when called upon last year. Ends Darrlyn Fenner and Darnel Delaire combined for 30 tackles, while tackle Wilner Alexis recorded 1.5 sacks. Shamu Allen, Matt Stolte and Bob McLaughlin may also see some time.

Linebacker

This year's group of linebackers will certainly miss Brad Anderson and his 112 tackles from 2006, but the Minutemen actually return two starters who had more takedowns than Anderson.

Defensive captains Jason Hatchell and Charles Walker paced the Minutemen with 134 and 131 tackles, respectively, last season – ranking them second and third in the conference. Walker had 2.5 sacks and will man the middle, while Hatchell had 6.5 tackles for a loss and will play on the strong side. Both are preseason all-conference selections. Hatchell has led or tied for the team-lead in tackles in 16 of his last 26 games.

Starting on the weak side will be George Byrd, who had 32 tackles and a sack last season. According to rivals.com, a few years ago, he was the fourth-best linebacker in the country to go to an FCS school. Byrd should develop nicely alongside two of the best linebackers in the FCS.

With strong starters at linebacker it will be difficult to see playing time, but Josh Jennings and Cesar Rosario should get their fair share. Rosario – the starting long snapper – had 15 tackles last season and Jennings is considered by Brown to be the "starting fourth linebacker." Andy Resende-Gomes and Anthony Rouzier excel on special teams and may also get time at LB.

Defensive Back

Without question, the defensive backfield is going through the biggest transition this season. Three exceptional starters were lost to graduation, including safety James Ihedigbo – who was bestowed with virtually every honor possible in 2006.

Along with safety Brandon Smith and cornerback Tracy Belton, the three departed starters combined for 211 tackles, 12 sacks and seven interceptions.

With three big-time playmakers no longer in the fold, it will be up to cornerbacks Sean Smalls, Courtney Robinson and Brandon Freeman and safeties Jeromy Miles and Michael Meggett to step up.

The defense got a big boost when Miles transferred here from Navy before the spring. The free safety was named I-AA Freshman of the Year and was an honorable mention Freshman All-American by The Sporting News. He's a great athlete and is a difference-maker on defense, evidenced by his 61 tackles, two interceptions and two forced fumbles in 2006.

Meggett had 12 of his 19 stops in the postseason last year, and led the team in interceptions during spring football. Eric Dickson (14 tackles), Brian Ellis (13 tackles and one interception), Chris Pollard and James Carven will backup at safety.

The turnover at cornerback isn't as extreme, with Freeman, Robinson and shut-down corner Smalls all returning. The trio possesses tremendous athletic abilities as a group, and all have good size. Robinson has a knack for the ball, and Smalls essentially shuts down one side of the field – as opposing quarterbacks avoid throwing in his direction.

Recent transfer Reshaude Goodwin (Boston College) has exceptional speed, and will compete for time along with Corey Davis, Spencer Ridenhour and Keiron Brown at cornerback.

Special Teams

The kicking game last season was phenomenal, as both place-kicker Chris Koepplin and punter Christian Koegel had two of the best seasons in school history.

Koepplin returns as the starting kicker after having a record-breaking 2006 performance. The senior's 99 points set a single-season school record for a kicker and his 16 field goals tied the school's single-season mark. He connected on 69.6 percent of his attempts and was 51-for-52 on PATs.

Brett Arnold is the favorite to be Koegel's replacement at punter, but Ryan Logan is also in the mix. The winner will have some big – and powerful – shoes to fill (Armando Cuko will likely handle the kickoffs).

The aforementioned Moore will handle punt returning duties (30 returns, 8.1 average in 2006), while Robinson will take the majority of the kickoffs (25 returns, 23.3 average). Goodwin may see time at both return spots.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswaike@student.umass.edu

UMass Football 2007 Depth Chart

UMass

Offense
Quarterback	12 Liam Coen		7 Scott Woodward
Runningback	32 Matt Lawrence		17 Tony Nelson
Fullback	24 Breyone Evans		44 E.J. Barthel
Wide Reciever	1 J.J. Moore		8 Jeramy Horne
	3 Rasheed Rancher		15 Michael Omar
Tight End	82 Brad Listorti		83 Ian Jorgensen
Left Tackle	72 Vladimir Ducasse		77 Ben Coblyn
Left Guard	68 Matt Austin		62 Tim Nolan
Center	60 Nick Diana		61 John Ihne
Right Guard	71 Chris Hopkins		79 Matt Stolte
Right Tackle	63 Sean Callechio		75 Chauncey McMahon
Defense
Defensive End	48 Michael Hanson		48 David Burris
Defensive Tackle	56 Brandon Collier		93 Bob McLaughlin
Nose Tackle	98 Kyle Harrington		99 Wilner Alexis
Weak-side Linebacker	45 George Byrd		2 Josh Jennings
Middle Linebacker	11 Charles Walker		53 Cesar Rosario
Strong-side Linebacker	43 Jason Hatchell		55 Andy Resende-Gomes
Cornerback	16 Sean Smalls		8 Corey Davis
	34 Brandon Freeman		4 Courtney Robinson
Free Safety	5 Jeromy Miles		9 Brian Ellis
Strong Safety	21 Michael Meggett		19 Spencer Ridenhour
Special Teams
Kicker	42 Chris Koepplin		31 Armando Cuko
Punter	29 Brett Arnold		18 Ryan Logan
Holder	7 Scott Woodward		12 Liam Coen
Long Snapper	53 Cesar Rosario		93 Bob McLaughlin
Kick Returner	4 Courtney Robinson		32 Matt Lawrence
Punt Returner	1 J.J. Moore		16 Sean Smalls

UMass

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
HOURS
Sun - Wed: 3pm - 2am
Thurs - Sat: 3pm - 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
Now Hiring
Apply within
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ s spinning the best in Top 40, Dance House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
EVERY WEEK!
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Thursday 18 Plus College Night Coupon
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

UMass fights off HC, holds on for victory

FOOTBALL from page C1

it, with an impressive field goal. The senior tied his career long with a 48-yard kick at 10:17 of the first quarter, capping a seven-play, 36-yard drive that began with a shanked punt by HC punter Mike Holloway.

Tony Nelson saw limited action, but ran well, gaining 55 yards on nine carries. It was Lawrence, however, who carried the load for the Minutemen. His first quarter total on the ground equaled that of Nelson's yardage for the entire game.

Following another Holloway punt, Brown put the ball back in Lawrence's hands, and the red-shirt senior continued to find his way up field, turning three- and four-yard gains into eight-yard gains, moving the chains and keeping the drive alive.

Lawrence finished the Minutemen's second possession – a nine-play, 61-yard march – with a one-yard push across the goal line.

The Crusaders responded with the longest drive of the day, an 82-yard marathon that chewed through over five minutes of the game, which carried into the second quarter.

Holy Cross received a 15-yard head start by its host when UMass's Spencer Ridenhour was flagged for unsportsmanlike conduct on the kickoff, giving the Crusaders the ball at their own 33.

HC quarterback Dominic Randolph went 6-for-7 for 54 yards on the drive. Running back Terrance Gass ran three times for five yards, but that included a two-yard touchdown run that brought the Crusaders within three.

The Minutemen appeared poised to take control of the game on the ensuing kickoff. Defensive back Courtney Robinson cradled the ball at his own goal line, and charged toward the right side of the field. He went 100 yards, nearly untouched, giving UMass its second 10-point lead.

After Holy Cross went four-and-out, coach Tom Gilmore opted to go for the first down on fourth-and-two), quarterback Liam Coen led UMass on another long drive, polishing off the 67 yards with a six-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Joe Sanford. A bad snap negated the extra point, leaving the score at 23-7.

The only other setback for the Minutemen came on another bad snap at the end of the team's next possession. Long snapper Cesar Rosario sent the ball well over punter Brett Arnold's head, and it rolled two yards into the UMass end zone, where Arnold batted the ball out of the end zone for a safety, 23-9, preventing a touchdown.

Holy Cross returned the favor on the next special teams play. Brett Arnold eventually got to punt the ball – this time as a free kick following the safety – but the Crusaders's Ryan McGuire fumbled on the other end of the kick. Jeromy Miles recovered for UMass at the Holy Cross 41-yard line.

Two Matt Lawrence running plays later, the score was 30-9 in favor of UMass. A 13-yard run straight up the middle was followed by a sweep to the right side that went 28 yards into the end zone.

Brown put both wide receivers on the line of scrimmage often during the game, which allowed tight end Ian Jorgensen (starter Brad Listorti was out with a back injury) to go into motion more easily. He did just that on the touchdown, shifting from the left to right, giving Lawrence enough room to break into the Holy Cross secondary.

As he ran down the right sideline, both safeties over-pursued, and Lawrence cut back into the open field and trotted in for six.

"I think I played well," Lawrence said after the game. "It started back in training camp. The coaches prepared me well for situations and just overall playing hard. If you can make a guy miss or two, those are just bonuses along the way."

UMass struck early following the break, but not often. A three-play, 83-yard drive, capped by a 28-yard strike from Coen to receiver J.J. Moore proved to be the last Minuteman points until Koepplin's field goal to close out the win.

The Maroon and White offense looked sharp on the first possession, but looked frustrated after that point.

Starting at their own 30-yard line, the Crusader offense began its come-back, grinding out a 16-play, 70-yard drive that took over six minutes. Randolph finished it himself with a one-yard sneak.

The Minutemen tried to keep their distance and maintain the multi-score lead, but fell victim to their own mistakes again. After pushing toward midfield, Coen hit wide receiver Rasheed Rancher on a crossing route running right to left. Rancher ran around his own blockers before heading up the sideline, but coughed up the football on the Holy Cross 23.

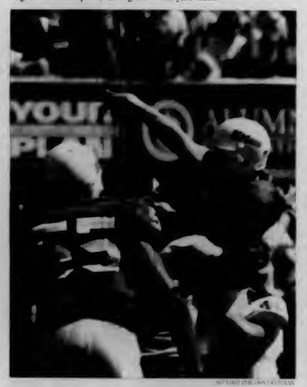
The defense forced a three-and-out, but Moore dropped the following punt, giving the Crusaders the ball at the UMass 23. Randolph hit Justin Maher in the end zone on the first play of the drive to bring Holy Cross within 14.

The Crusaders turned almost exclusively to the pass in the fourth quarter, and mustered one final score on a 12-play, 80-yard drive, capped by Randolph's second touchdown pass of the game, a 4-yard pass to Thomas Harrison. Randolph finished the day 32-of-62 passing for 296 yards and the pair of scores.

Despite 21-straight points in the second half by the Crusaders, Coen said his team never lost its composure.

"I thought we were comfortable, and I thought we were playing well," Coen said of the Crusaders' late charge. "We came right out and scored at the start of the second half. It felt good to be up like that, but a few things happen and you can start to feel [the pressure]. But I thought our guys did a good job of maintaining a grasp of the game."

UMass held on for the victory, something that eased the frustration of the miscues for Brown.



"On two of those [late, scoring] drives, they did what they had to do," Brown said. "You've got to give them credit. They did a good job with it, but when the game was on the line, we rose to the occasion."

Jeromy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

MICHAEL HOLLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

Defensive back Courtney Robinson's (4) 100-yard kickoff return for a touchdown was the first by a UMass player in 25 years. The last one occurred in 1982, a 97-yard return by Richard Jenkins, in a loss to Maine.

MICHAEL HOLLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

Chris Koepplin (42) attempts to pass after a bad snap foiled the Minutemen's extra point attempt. Another bad snap, on a punt, resulted in a safety.

Special teams triumphs and trip-ups

SPECIAL TEAMS from page C1

it. The outside was open and I took it, and I scored."

The last kickoff return touchdown for UMass came all the way back in 1982, when Richard Jenkins took one back against Maine for 97 yards.

Robinson's return tied for the third-longest in school history, and gave the Minutemen a 10-point cushion. It was a lead that they extended just minutes later – on a Liam Coen touchdown pass – a lead that they would never relinquish.

The recipient of that touchdown pass was red-shirt sophomore wide-out Joe Sanford, increasing the lead to 23-7. Interestingly enough, a pass followed on the very next play – as the snap on the extra point went awry. Koepplin was forced to throw the ball in a desperate attempt to convert. The pass fell to the ground and the score remained at 23-7.

After starting the game off so well on special teams (Robinson's return and Koepplin's kick) the failed PAT was a symbol of things to come for the UMass special teams unit.

Trailing by 16, Holy Cross could now technically tie the game with two scores – a pair of touchdowns with two point conversions – but it made things much easier on itself after recording a safety to cut the lead to the "traditional" two-touchdown deficit of 14.

It wasn't your garden-variety safety, either. It wasn't a quarterback sack or a stuffed run deep in UMass territory, but rather a snap that sailed over the head of punter Brett Arnold, forcing the junior to send the ball through the back of the end zone for the safety.

Although not exactly what Arnold had in mind for his first career punt at UMass, the junior college transfer had a nice debut – finishing with six punts for a 44.3 yard average, including a 65-yard punt in the fourth quarter.

"I thought Arnold did a good job," UMass coach Don Brown said. "He's got to quicken it up a little bit, but other than that I thought he did a very nice job in his first game."

Following the safety, Arnold was called upon to punt the ball again – this time on the free kick. On another sign of things to come, Holy Cross's Ryan McGuire muffed the kick, fumbling the ball into the hands of UMass safety Jeromy Miles.

It may have been the first fumble of the game, but it certainly wasn't the last.

UMass would muff a kick of their own just three minutes later, as receiver punt returner J.J. Moore coughed up the football after he signaled for a fair catch in Minuteman territory.

It was a rare fumble for Moore, who finished the 2006 season as an Atlantic-10 All-Conference Third Team punt returner.

Already in the Top-10 in school history in both receiving yards and receptions, Moore had a career-day on offense – exploding for 163 yards and a touchdown on nine receptions. But his day on special teams was a career-worst, as the senior captain fumbled another punt in the third quarter and finished with –3 yards on three returns.

Holy Cross stalled on offense after Moore's first fumble, but the Crusaders needed just one play to capitalize on his second miscue – scoring immediately on a 23-yard strike from quarterback Dominic Randolph to receiver Justin Maher. The drive took all of eight seconds and cut the UMass lead to 37-23.

Holy Cross would add a touchdown midway through the fourth quarter to make things interesting, but Koepplin's second field goal put the game away for good.

"I thought Koepplin did a really solid job," Brown said. "The one off the right hash, late in the game, with a lot of pressure on that kick certainly took the pressure off us a little bit. That was a huge, huge play in this particular game and I couldn't be any more happy with him."

Although plays on special teams gave UMass its initial lead and ultimately put the game away, it's also special teams that will need work if the Minutemen hope to end up where they did last year.

"There are a lot of things to correct," UMass coach Don Brown said, discussing his team's mistakes. "I have to do a better job of coaching and the players have to do a better job of playing – but the reality of it is that we can do that at 1-0."

Although bothered by his team's many mistakes, Brown knows that much of it can be attributed to early-season rust.

"Obviously crazy things happen in an opener, and we certainly had our share today," he said.

That opening quote from Brown at the postgame press conference was referring to the game itself, but it's certainly applicable to Saturday's action on special teams, too.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

Raw Sports
FROM THE PRESS BOX
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIANSPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM

SEP 5 2007

BLACK TO RETURN THIS WEEKEND
EPIC SERIES COMES TO AN END
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890
SUNNY : HI: 78 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2007

Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole converses with Provost Charlene Seymour at the Monday afternoon welcome barbecue on the library lawn.

UMPD trains, reconsiders crisis strategy

Emergency procedures may change

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

In the painful tradition of a tragedy's tendency to expose weaknesses, the University of Massachusetts Police trained this summer to prevent an event similar to the Virginia Tech shootings from happening on the UMass campus.

Throughout the month of June, UMPD officers have been participating in "active shooter training." The training simulates a situation similar to the horror of the Virginia Tech shootings on April 16, 2007.

Director of News and Information Ed Blaguszewski denied that the simulations were solely in response to the 2007 campus shooting.

These training sessions are certainly topical given the nationwide concern following the Virginia Tech tragedy," he said. "But they were not the direct result of that case."

The training was held in Bartlett Hall to make use of its long hallways, classrooms, and multiple floors, characteristics common to many UMass buildings.

Sixteen hours of classroom work grounded the realistic scenarios that feature simulated rounds. These sound similar to real bullets being fired but use crayon-like material to show where the rounds land, said UMPD Chief Barbara O'Connor. The resulting marks can later be washed away.

O'Connor has been concerned about active shooter training and hopes these drills will help the department better prepare. She explained that members of the UMass police training staff have already completed similar exercises run by the National Tactical Officers Association; however, this summer's training was extended to all members of the force.

In addition to these preventative measures undertaken by the UMPD, Blaguszewski said the University plans to prepare in other areas as well. He said the administration plans to implement a new campus-wide text-messaging system through which

See UMPD on page 4

Students turn to energy drinks, drug use

By Sanam Ghai and Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts are increasingly turning to the use of illegal prescription drugs and energy drinks to boost their academic performance, recent statistics indicate.

According to David Lichstadt, food and retail services manager at the Blue Wall Eatery on campus, energy drink sales have increased rapidly across campus in the past year, particularly in the library.

"In April of 2006 we sold 277 cans of energy drinks and in 2007 we sold 1,726 cans. That is over a 500 percent increase," he said.

Dr. Sally A. Linowski (PhD), of University Health Services, agrees that students tend to consume a lot of energy drinks like Red Bull, Rock Star, Full Throttle and Mountain Dew.

"Finals are drama time," she said. "Those who are not regular caffeine drinkers are more sensitive to [the caffeine]."

However, the newly popular energy drinks are not much different from traditional caffeinated soft drinks, according to Linowski. There's not much of a difference between Red Bull and Coke, she said; both drinks are highly caffeinated.

The difference, she said, lies in image. "Red Bull is just priced higher because it is considered the hip beverage. Students even like to mix it with vodka. These marketing gimmicks are directed toward college students."

While many students rely upon energy drinks and other caffeinated beverages to get through the semester, an increasing number are also turning to illegal prescription drugs, such as Adderall, according to Linowski.

See DRINKS on page 4

Party or prison? Freshmen weigh in

First-year-only dorms earn mixed reviews

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Correspondent

Unlike freshmen in the past, who have often had upperclassmen as hallmates, a majority of the class of 2011 moved into residence halls reserved exclusively for first years this fall.

Over the past few years, several dormitories in Southwest, Central and Orchard Hill Residential Areas have been converted to themed "first-year halls." This year, incoming freshman could choose from 11 all-freshman dorms, geared towards students interested in topics including global perspectives, health and wellness, writing and literature, society and leadership, and science and discovery.

Freshmen and resident assistants (RAs) have had varied reactions to living in a community of freshmen.

Courtney Doherty, a new resident of "pop culture"-themed Kennedy Hall, the first tower in the University of Massachusetts to house only first-year students, was excited to be in her new all-freshman environment.

"All the freshmen are friendly and want to meet new friends," she said.

Resident Assistant Casimir Maziarz said that being an RA in a first-year building means that he has to become a role model for all of the residents on his hall.

"I'm excited about this year, because they are all first-year students, which means I can hopefully impact their transition to college," he said, though he admits it will initially be hard to help first-year students feel comfortable and connected to the school.

While Maziarz and Doherty were enthusiastic about shifting smoothly into the academic year in a freshmen-only environment, some worry that having all fresh-

See DORMS on page 4

RSO rides to success

By Eden Unger
Collegian Staff

Whoosh! It is a sound that freshmen will have to get used to and sophomores, juniors, seniors, and grad students alike know all too well at the University of Massachusetts: the sound of a bicycle riding to the dining commons, to class or to a dorm.

Luckily for bike owners, there is a place right on campus that services bikes. The Bike Co-Op is a student-run business located in the Student Union that takes on the job.

"The co-op is student-managed," said Ethan Jackson, a recent UMass graduate and longtime Bike Co-Op employee. "All employees are co-managers, with equal say in all affairs."

However, students working at the co-op are not completely alone in their business venture. The Center for Student Businesses helps out in various ways.

"The Bike Co-Op works with an undergraduate Isenberg School of Management student whom we call a consultant," said Rosemary Schmidt, the director of the CSB (Center for Student Businesses) at UMass. "In turn, the CSB provides resources to the consultant as well as computers, financial advice and oversight to the co-managers of the Bike Co-Op."

By no means does this imply that the students of the Bike Co-Op are not the main sources of management in this business. "They do their own hiring, bookkeeping, purchasing, advertising and run their business all at the same time," said Schmidt.

In addition to running the business, the students of the Bike Co-Op are getting down-and-dirty to fix the bikes of the UMass campus themselves. The co-op Web site advertises a $35 tune up and a $10 flat tire repair.

According to Jackson, not only can co-op co-managers fix bikes, they can build new bikes, rebuild bikes, and do single-speed and fixed gear conversions. The Bike Co-Op also strives to have the ability to work with an array

See BIKES on page 4

Liz LeBlanc, an undeclared sophomore, sits outside the Student Union. The building is slated to be replaced as part of the "New Dirt" project.

SEAA gives out lightbulbs

By Cara Grandmaison
Collegian Staff

Although the Students for Environmental Awareness and Action (SEAA) was only founded a year ago, the organization is already far beyond its infancy.

Last spring's successes have set the stage for the group's activity this fall, said publicity manager Amy Calandrella.

These successes included an efficient light bulb drive last spring. "We presented a cost-benefit analysis to the vice chancellor of finance, Joyce M. Hatch, and she agreed to work with us to purchase 3,800 energy efficient light bulbs," Calandrella said. The bulbs were distributed to incoming freshmen.

See SEAA on page 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 2
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Deshchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cora Grandmaison
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

3,000 year-old hive uncovered

By Matti Friedman
Associated Press

An archaeologist examines ancient hives, which suggest that advanced honeymaking has been around longer than Christianity.
(AP)

JERUSALEM — Archaeologists digging in northern Israel have discovered evidence of a 3,000-year-old beekeeping industry, including remnants of ancient honeycombs, beeswax and what they believe are the oldest intact beehives ever found.

The findings in the ruins of the city of Rehov this summer include 30 intact hives dating to around 900 B.C., archaeologist Amihai Mazar of Jerusalem's Hebrew University told The Associated Press. He said it offers unique evidence that an advanced honey industry existed in the Holy Land during the time of the Bible.

Beekeeping was widely practiced in the ancient world, where honey used for medicinal and religious purposes as well as for food, and beeswax was used to make molds for metal and to create surfaces to write on. While bees and beekeeping are depicted in ancient artwork, nothing similar to the Rehov hives has ever been found before, Mazar said.

The beehives, made of straw and unbaked clay, have a hole at one end to allow the bees in and out and a lid on the other end to allow beekeepers access to the honeycombs inside. They were found in orderly rows, three high, in a room that could have accommodated around 100 hives, Mazar said.

The Bible repeatedly refers to Israel as a "land of milk and honey," but that's believed to refer to honey made from dates and figs – there is no mention of honeybee cultivation. But the new find shows that the Holy Land was home to a highly developed beekeeping industry nearly 3,000 years ago.

"You can tell that this was an organized industry, part of an organized economy, in an ultra-organized city," Mazar said.

At the time the beehives were in use, Mazar believes Rehov had around 2,000 residents, a mix of Israelites, Canaanites and others.

Genome's decoding may help medicine

By Marlowe Hood
Associated Press

PARIS — The first individual genome ever sequenced – a complete DNA blueprint of celebrity scientist Craig Venter – has revealed genetic variation among humans far richer than previously imagined.

Published Tuesday in the online open-access journal PLoS Biology, the 2.8 billion contiguous bits of genetic code will also hasten advances in preventative medicine, said Venter, who is both an author and the object of the study.

Within five years, faster and cheaper sequencing techniques could produce complete genomes for 10,000 people, laying the foundation for "an era of individualized genomics," he predicted.

"Once we have those, we will basically be able to sort out every fundamental question about nature versus nurture, what's genetic and what's environment," he said by phone.

The findings overturn what had in a few short years become genetic gospel: that all human beings are, genetically speaking, 99.9 identical.

Venter himself trumpeted this idea in 2000 when his biotech firm Celera, which he left in 2003, and a team of US-government scientists simultaneously unveiled – after a bruising race to the finish line – the first complete human genome.

Both of these earlier efforts were flawed and greatly underestimated genetic diversity, he and his colleagues now say, because the whole had been assembled from a hodgepodge of DNA taken from several individuals.

The variations revealed in the new genome, dubbed, "HuRef", go far beyond previously identified single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs), once thought to be the key to differences in human traits and disease susceptibility.

SNPs are DNA sequence variations that occur when a single nucleotide – the basic building blocks, composed in pairs, of DNA – in the genome sequence is altered.

Also important, however, are previously overlooked variations in stretches of genetic code that were once dismissed as useless "junk DNA".

"This dispels the notion we had in 2000 and 2001 that we all have exactly the same genes in the human population," said Venter. "It would have been very disturbing if the range of characteristics that we see all came down to a few simple SNP variations."

The new data shows that in an individual genome upwards of 44 percent of genes are variable in sequence.

"This is a number that geneticists and biologists have been wondering about for 50 to 100 years," commented co-author Stephen Scherer, a geneticist at The Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto.

"HuRef" was built on the foundation of Venter's earlier project, which was already 60 percent composed of his own DNA. But it still took an additional 10 million dollars and three years to complete.

To spur more efficient technologies, Venter has contributed 500,000 dollars (367,000 euros) to the 10 million dollar (7.34 million euro) Archon X Prize for scientists who come up with genome sequencing techniques that are rapid, accurate and inexpensive.

Some ethicists have expressed concerns about the possible abuse of personal health information that may be easily accessible once coding individual genomes becomes routine.

The study itself raises the issue, if only indirectly: a table listing some of the traits commonly associated with certain genes expressions found in Venter's genome reveals more than some people might care to.

A genetic propensity toward Alzheimer's and cardiovascular disease, for example, prompted Venter to take statins, a compound thought to help forestall both conditions. But that same information – or the fact that one tends toward tobacco addiction or alcoholism, other traits identified in the study – could be seen in another light by potential insurers or employers, critics point out.

For Venter, the possible advantages far outweigh such concerns.

"We have all been taught that we should fear this information. We hope to teach people they should welcome it as a breath of fresh air that gives them opportunities in their lives."

He did, however, allow for the possibility that anybody's genome information "is relatively easy to get."

Other researchers who worked on the three-year project at Venter's eponymous institute came from the University of Barcelona and the University of California at San Diego.

Students drop scene, add screen

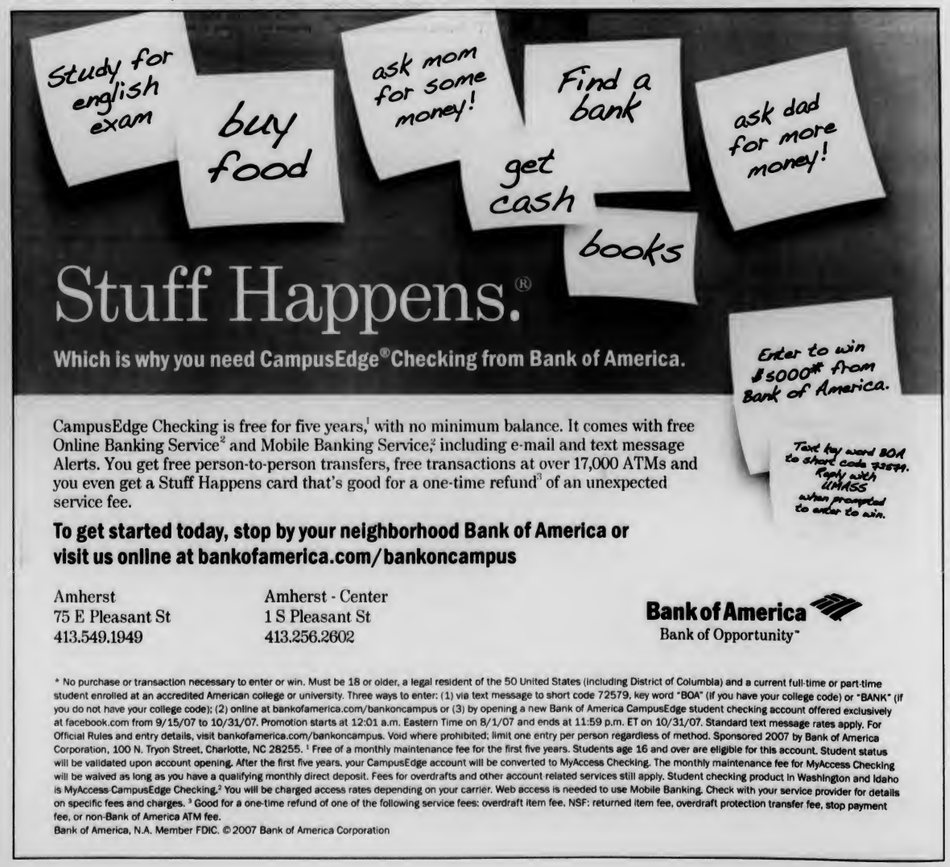
Cyber-dating on the rise

By Danielle Nuvy
The Daily Toreador (Texas Tech)

LUBBOCK, Texas — Forget the bar scene – increasing numbers of college students now are searching for love in the same place they do their shopping, check their e-mail and chat with friends: the World Wide Web.

To meet young adults' demands, more and more online-dating Web sites are catering specifically to college students and offering free-of-charge services. "College students comprise a group that has a natural affinity toward being online," said Gail Laguna, a spokeswoman for Spark Network, a company that created a variety of dating Web sites targeting different demographics. One such site under Spark Network's umbrella is www.collegeluv.com, a romance venue bearing the tag line "Sign Up, Look Up, Hook Up."

Laguna said www.collegeluv.com was launched in 2002 to accommodate what was viewed as a "growing market." While those in the 25-to-35-year-old age bracket still comprise the core demographic of online daiters, collegians are becoming more open to the idea of looking for romance online, Laguna said.



Furthermore, unlike their older counterparts, college students tend to seek companionship rather than life partners. "At this point, the social aspect plays more of a role than the marriage aspect," she said of young adults.

Joe Tracy, publisher of Online Dating Magazine, said he also has observed a trend of more and more collegians turning to both dating Web sites and social networking sites, such as www.myspace.com and www.facebook.com.

"[The popularity of] online dating continues to go up," he said. "It hasn't yet reached its peak."

Tracy said he believes college students gravitate toward the Internet for romance because of the Web's combined simplicity and convenience. "[Dating Web sites] are easy to fit into students' schedules," he said. "Plus, most college students are tech-savvy."

She said online dating is a safe alternative to yesteryear's dating methods as long as participants follow basic safety tips.

Mattel recalls Chinese-made products

Toymaker in hot water for third offense

By Anne D'Innocenzio
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mattel Inc., whose reputation has been battered by two high-profile toy recalls this summer, will announce on Wednesday the recall of a third batch of Chinese-made toys because they may contain excessive amounts of lead paint.

The latest recall by the world's largest toy maker will be for three Fisher-Price toys and several accessories to a Barbie playset and involves several hundred thousand units, according to three people briefed by Mattel executives who asked for anonymity because the company has not yet formally announced the action. According to one source, two of the three Fisher-Price products being recalled are from the GeoTrax rail and road system.

It could not be learned whether the toys were made in different Chinese factories.

Mattel officials did not immediately return phone calls on Tuesday.

Mattel's last recall, announced on Aug. 14, covered about 19 million toys worldwide. They included Chinese-made toys that either had excessive amounts of lead paint or had small magnets that could easily be swallowed by children.

On Aug. 1, Mattel's Fisher-Price division said it was recalling 1.5 million preschool toys featuring characters such as Dora the Explorer, Big Bird and Elmo because of lead paint. That action included 967,000 toys sold in the United States between May and August.

Lead can cause brain damage when ingested by young children. Under current regulations, children's products found to have more than .06 percent lead accessible to users are subject to a recall.

Robert Eckert, chairman and CEO of El Segundo, Calif.-based Mattel, warned at a press conference last month that there may be more recalls of tainted toys as the company steps up its investigations into its Chinese factories and retests products.

Still, the latest action would be yet another blow to Mattel, which had cultivated an image of tightly controlling production in China.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission also said Tuesday it was considering a possible investigation of whether Mattel notified authorities as quickly as it should have in connection with the Aug. 14 recall.

With more than 80 percent of toys sold worldwide made in China, toy sellers are nervous that shoppers will shy away from their products in this year's critical holiday season.

In June, toy maker RC2 Corp. voluntarily recalled 1.5 million wooden railroad toys and set parts from its Thomas & Friends Wooden Railway product line.

The company said that the surface paint on certain toys and parts made in China between January 2005 and April 2006 contain lead, affecting 26 components and 23 retailers.

In July, Hasbro Inc. recalled faulty Chinese-made Easy Bake ovens, marking the second time the iconic toy had been recalled this year.

Last month, Mattel vowed that it would tighten its controls at its factories in China. About 65 percent of Mattel's toys are made in China, where about 50 percent of Mattel's production is produced in company-owned plants. But apparently, the controls were not strict enough, particularly when it came to overseeing Mattel's subcontractors.

Until recently, Mattel had focused testing on materials that went into the toys and had factories do sample testing of its products.

Now, the company is increasing its vigilance at the beginning of production and during production. Factories are being forced to test every batch of products before they are released to stores.

Mattel has also stepping up unannounced random testing of its Chinese suppliers and is tightening enforcement of rules that suppliers use certified paint.

The Aug. 14 worldwide recall covered more than 400,000 die-cast cars modeled after the cartoon movie character "Sarge" that contained excessive amounts of lead paint.

Eckert told reporters the correct paint was sent to a subcontractor, who apparently chose not to use it.

Popular snack food could result in lung disease, leading researchers caution

By Marcus Kabel
Associated Press

Consumers, not just factory workers, may be in danger from fumes from buttery flavoring in microwave popcorn, according to a warning letter to federal regulators from a doctor at a leading lung research hospital.

A pulmonary specialist at Denver's National Jewish Medical and Research Center has written to federal agencies to say doctors there believe they have the first case of a consumer who developed lung disease from the fumes of microwaving popcorn several times a day for years.

"We cannot be sure that this patient's exposure to butter flavored microwave popcorn from daily heavy preparation has caused his lung disease," cautioned Dr. Cecile Rose. "However, we have no other plausible explanation."

The July letter, made public Tuesday by a public health policy blog, refers to a potentially fatal disease commonly called popcorn lung that has been the subject of lawsuits by hundreds of workers at food factories exposed to chemicals used for flavoring.

In response to Rose's finding, the Flavor and Extract Manufacturers Association issued a statement Tuesday recommending that its members reduce "to the extent possible" the amount of diacetyl in butter flavorings they make.

It noted that diacetyl is approved for use in flavors by the federal Food and Drug Administration.

One national popcorn manufacturer, Weaver Popcorn Co. of Indianapolis, said last week it would replace the butter flavoring ingredient because of consumer concern. Congress has also been debating new safety measures for workers in food processing plants exposed to diacetyl.

The FDA said in an e-mail it is evaluating Rose's letter and "carefully considering the safety and regulatory issues it raises."

Fred Blosser, spokesman for the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, said it is the first case the institute has seen of lung disease apparently linked to popcorn fumes outside the workplace.

The occupational safety arm of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said it is working on a response to the letter.

William Allstetter, spokesman for National Jewish Medical, confirmed the letter was sent by Rose, a specialist in occupational and environmental lung diseases and director of the hospital's Occupational and Environmental Medicine Clinic.

"There have been no other cases that we know of other than the industrial occupational ones," Allstetter said.

Rose acknowledged in the letter that it is difficult to confirm through one case that popping buttered microwave popcorn at home can cause lung disease.

However, she said she wanted to alert regulators of the potential public health implications.

Rose said the ailing patient, a man whom she wouldn't identify, consumed "several bags of extra butter flavored microwave popcorn" every day for several years.

He described progressively worsening respiratory symptoms of coughing and shortness of breath.

U-Minn adds class on fallen bridge

By Liz Riggs
Minnesota Daily

The collapse of the Interstate 35W bridge has drastically impacted campus life in the past month at the University of Minnesota. However, starting this fall, the effects from the Aug. 1 disaster will be felt in a new place: the classroom.

"The River, The Bridge, The Community: Beyond the headlines of the I-35W bridge collapse" is a course offered this semester by the urban studies department. Patrick Nunnally, a research associate, is teaching the class.

"We've set a land speed record in terms [of getting] this up," he said. "From getting a course imagined to listed, [there's been a] huge amount of cooperation."

Nunnally, who has taught past courses on the subject of the Mississippi River, said the idea for a class relating to the bridge collapse was a collective decision. A group of faculty members from several different departments conceived the idea at a previously scheduled meeting, just a week and a half after the tragedy.

"Really, there wasn't any single person that said 'we've got to do this,'" he said.

Instead, the group decided jointly to formulate the course.

Nunnally said the class will feature a variety of guest speakers, from the University's own colleges but also from non-University professionals like the Minnesota Department of Transportation.

The class will have an extensive discussion component and students will be required to write reflection pieces and complete a course-related research project.

Judith Martin, the director of the urban studies program and a University geography professor, is a member of the initial class-forming group.

Although the class is offered in the urban studies department, it has a broad appeal, Martin said.

"It's really pitched to students who are interested in how something like [the bridge collapse] could happen," she said. "It's important to pay attention to this because it's literally in our backyard."

As a whole, the urban studies program has a history of adjusting its courses from semester to semester based on current events, she said.

Craig Swan, vice provost for undergraduate education, said he hopes the course will "stimulate a broader thinking and a broader discussion with regard to the bridge collapse."

Swan said this is not the first time a last minute class addition has happened.

"I think every year there are a couple ... but I would say the collapse of the I-35W bridge is a pretty unprecedented event," he said.

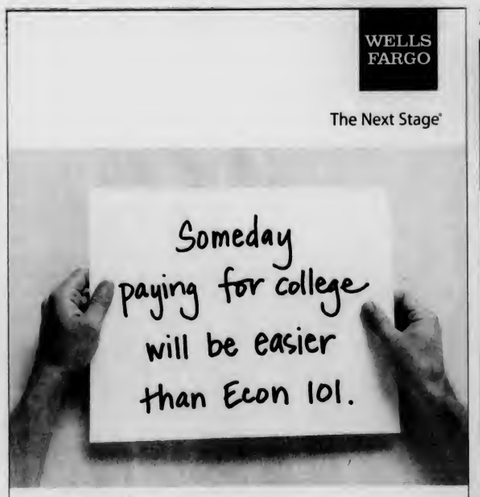
Swan said his office was providing "modest funding" for a quarter-time TA for the course. "That is a relatively unique event," as the vice provost's office doesn't often get involved in that capacity, Swan said.

Would you take a class on the 35W bridge collapse?

Heidi Hamberger, a theatre performance senior, said the topic "definitely sounds like something that's interesting" but she wouldn't be likely to take it because she already signed up for her last week of classes at the University.

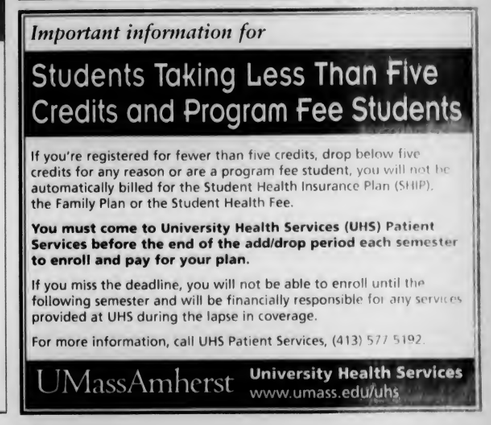
"The difficulty of putting a class together right before school [starts] is that nobody knows about it," Nunnally said. At press time Sunday, two of the class' 30 seats were filled, according to the On-Stop Web site.

Nunnally said the course faces a minimum enrollment of 15 to keep the class to be held at all.



"If lectures like this were typical to the public, I'd definitely be interested to go," Hamberger said.

According to Nunnally, the future series component of the course, tentatively scheduled for Tuesdays at 5 p.m. will be open to members of the University and the public at large. Only the class meetings Mondays from 2:30 until 4:45 will be limited to registered students.



Karen Reddan, a graduate student studying business systems, said he wasn't so sure that the class would have the interdisciplinary appeal faculty member Leis touted.

Reddan said it would be difficult for students without background in related areas to grasp bridge construction, to have academic discussions about them.

He said the class might fit some majors but it's "not for all students."

SEP 5 2007

Adderall overstimulates, can be fatal for students

DRINKS from page 1

"Students use Adderall to help them study and focus," said Diane Fedorchak, also of UHS.

"Some even crush it and snort it to feel the effects faster. At the new students orientation, we told parents to give their wards only a limited supply of prescription drugs and to tell them to keep it out of plain sight."

Fifteen percent of students who come to Linowski with panic attacks admit having taken amphetamines at least once in their lifetime, 6 percent in the past school year and 5 percent in the past 30 days.

"Talking Adderall has become a social phenomenon on campus," she said. "Apart from the health hazards associated with these drugs, students should know that it is illegal for them to take them. A drug conviction is a felony; it can affect a student's job prospects. They ought to know that."

Normally prescribed for the treatment of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), when a child exhibits a short attention span and becomes easily distracted, overly emotional, excessively active and highly impulsive, Adderall has a high potential for abuse.

The brain chemistry of an individual with ADHD is completely different from that of a person without the disorder, said Linowski. While ADHD patients respond to Adderall, it only serves to overstimulate the brain of an individual who does not have the disorder, causing hyperactivity.

If used in large doses over long periods of time, Adderall can cause dependence and addiction. Side effects of Adderall use may include dry mouth, high blood pressure, hives, impotence, overstimulation, rapid or pounding heartbeat, stomach and intestinal disturbances and weight loss. A large overdose can even be fatal, according to a report published on healthsquare.com

"If you're stressed out, the worst thing is a stimulant, which stimulates the central nervous system, further adding to the stress level," Linowski said. "The best thing to do is to take a power nap or a walk. That can help you blow off the stress."

Sanam Ghai can be reached at sghai a student.umass.edu.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins a student.umass.edu.

TOM TESSIER/COLLEGIAN

Although energy drinks are similar to caffeinated sodas, student intake at UMass has risen exponentially.

Group's aim down to earth

SEAA from page 1

on move-in day this fall.

Another great leap for the group was the signature of UMass President Jack M. Wilson on the American College and University Presidents Climate Commitment (ACUPCC).

The ACUPCC website says the signature represents, "...a high-visibility effort to address global warming by garnering institutional commitments to neutralize greenhouse gas emissions, and to accelerate the research and educational efforts of higher education to equip society to re-stabilize the earth's climate."

According to Calandrella, the commitment will create a campus planning board to initiate plans for environmentally sound buildings and systems on the UMass campus.

The reach of the SEAA also extends beyond the UMass campus, with a focus on surrounding communities.

"The Youth Education Outreach Committee [part of the SEAA] had several major successes last spring," Calandrella said. Accomplishments included a newly formed relationship with the Jr. Green Team, an environmental club at Wildwood Elementary School, and a series of reduce, reuse, recycle teach-ins with every kindergarten class in Amherst.

Calandrella said that the SEAA plans to continue to work with the Jr. Green Team and expand their efforts further into local school systems and throughout the Pioneer Valley. This expansion includes a suggested Five College environmental and energy summit, to be held next spring at UMass.

Since the SEAA is a student-run organization, all of the ideas and goals of the group have been set by UMass student members.

"We try to present ourselves as more of a resource to students with interest in the environment than a group with certain goals that must be met," said Calandrella. "If a student approaches us with an idea, we try to provide her with the community and manpower to get it off the ground."

According to the group website, the SEAA is affiliated with the UMass Environmental Science Department. However, students of any major can join.

"We also welcome students of all disciplines, believing that environmentalism is a social science and everyone has something to offer, whether their primary interest is marketing, art, engineering, or environmental science," said Calandrella.

The SEAA with be recruiting members this fall and can be contacted through their Facebook group or their Web site, www.umasssea.org.

Co-op hopes to grow

BIKES from page 1

of bike styles, whether old, new, or custom.

"We can't work on every bike because certain ultra high-end bikes need special tools, as well as super old bikes made before our fittings, nuts, bolts, etc., were standardized, but we can sometimes finagle a solution," said Jackson.

A bike can really come in handy on a large campus such as UMass, which covers 2.29 square miles, with buildings spread out in every direction.

The large number of bikes on campus is not just a means of business for the co-managers. They are something to be appreciated.

"We believe in bikes for transportation and joy, not money," explains Jackson.

The love of bicycles surrounding the Bike Co-Op makes it not just a great place to get your bike fixed, but also a great place to learn something new.

"I think people should know that while we are a business we are a collective first, and education is our biggest kick," said Jackson. "We love to teach people how to fix their bike and their friends' [bikes], even though it ultimately loses business."

Bike Co-Op employees are also willing to share their space and supplies to help out fellow bike riders. "In addition to education, we offer our tools to people so long as they work in the shop and treat the tools and everyone around with respect," Jackson said.

The quality of their workmanship, derived from the time and effort of their employees, has created a massive demand for the student-run business.

"They are so busy that they constantly overflow into the hallway because they don't have sufficient room for the repaired bikes," said Schmidt.

The success of the Bike Co-Op has not gone unnoticed. One thing that Schmidt describes as "critical" about the co-op is that "despite being a small business, they have grown financially and organizationally in the last three years."

The Bike Co-Op will be accepting applications and holding interviews during the beginning of the semester. "Those best qualified are hired depending on how much help we need to take on and [we] train them as required," Jackson said.

The business will also help to sponsor a bike race in the fall to help raise money for the Food Bank of Western Mass and to support the student business dinner that takes place in the spring.

The bicyclists of UMass are part of a community all its own, and the Bike Co-Op is there to help through every bump in the road.

Drills to sharpen crisis skills

UMPD from page 1

students can be notified of an emergency via cell phone.

Blaguszewski said the campus has received partial state funding for this project, based on a formula, which provides the campus $39,007. Work on the initiative will begin this year as cell phone numbers will be collected, possibly by e-mail appeal or as part of the registration process.

"Over the course of the coming year, we will evaluate the effectiveness of the system, and whether we want to build additional capability into the service," he said.

According to Blaguszewski, UMass, like Virginia Tech, currently has a Housing Services Notification System which can provide emergency information to all residence directors and residence assistants. E-mail mailing lists can also be used to reach all faculty, staff and students. A special emergency protocol for www.umass.edu, the University's Web site, is also in place.

"UMass Amherst does have an emergency communications plan in place, but the Virginia Tech case has undoubtedly prompted nearly every college and university to scrutinize its preparations and seek ways to improve them," Blaguszewski said.

The Virginia Tech shootings started at 7 a.m., an hour during which many are still asleep. To ensure no one sleeps through a notification, the University is also exploring the possibility of installing a public address alarm system. Tone alerts and voice announcements could be transmitted from stationary banks of speakers mounted on poles or buildings.

Without recognizing warning signs displayed by a potentially violent individual, even the most advanced alarm system can only contain an campus incident, not prevent it.

In an earlier Daily Collegian article, Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archbald said, "If a person intends to do harm to themselves or someone else and it's not brought to the attention of authorities before the harm is carried out, this is impossible for us to intervene to prevent the harm.

"Only if the person presents clues to others and that information is brought to the attention of a University official or to law enforcement can we successfully intervene before a person acts," he added.

Diagnosed with selective mutism, a mental health condition that causes paralyzing anxiety of counseling in high school, Virginia Tech was never informed of his condition due to doctor-patient confidentiality laws. Cho would have had to tell a doctor himself, an impossibility given his condition.

"Preventing a tragedy such as the one that occurred at Virginia Tech is a difficult challenge, but UMass Amherst does have procedures in place to identify troubled students," Blaguszewski said.

Harry Rockland-Miller, director of mental health, says incidents involving troubled students surface through a variety of channels, including the police, the dean of students office, residence life, his department, or from faculty members.

A subcommittee of the workplace violence task force deals directly with such reports. There are also weekly discussions on Mondays with the student affairs crisis group, which includes town officials such as the Amherst police.

He added that because there are multiple points of entry for information about an individual who may need some kind of help, and a high level of interaction and collaboration between the various agencies and parties, the system works.

Will McGuinness is a Collegian staff writer and can be reached at wmcguinn a gmail.com.

Dorms debated

DORMS from page 1

man dorms would be opening the door wide for mischief.

Freshman Carolyn Marchewka, another resident of Kennedy Hall, said she had thought the tower would be a definite party scene.

"I expected it to be wild," she said.

Carolyn's assumptions about Kennedy may still fuel the belief that freshmen dormitories will always be unruly.

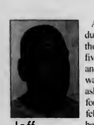
Despite this, Doherty is enthusiastic to begin building a more inclusive community with her peers.

Applications for admissions rose 20 percent from last year, the fourth successive year of growth. Around 60 percent are Massachusetts residents, while the number of out-of-state applicants grew by 35 percent. Only 65 percent of applicants were admitted this year, a decline from 71 percent in 2006 and 80 percent in 2005.

"More and more students and their families are making us their first choice, and the quality of our entering class is a reflection of our reputation as an excellent school," said Michael Gargano, vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life.

The incoming class of freshman is slightly larger than the class of 2010, with 376 more students at around 4,250 according to University officials.

Does Your Group Need Money?
The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.
Deadline for the first grant review is Friday, September 14!
Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.
Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year



Students connecting students
past, present and future.
Enhance networking skills while interacting with alumni, faculty, and staff.
Be a Chancellor's Personal Host!
Create traditions and be a part of UMass Amherst history by planning and attending campus programs like the Commencement Ball.
Strengthen leadership skills through professional and personal development.
Interested? Join us Monday, September 10 @ 5:15 p.m.
(Yes, there will be food.)
Memorial Hall • 413.577.1390
saa@stuaf.umass.edu • www.umass.edu/sao
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Write for news.
news@dailycollegian.com

THE MANY PERILS OF OVER-STUDYING
by half.com
Julie wanted to be in all college girls are 6-3 English
April fears Julie was doing English every weekend. It was the last of times. Julie was swept away from reality.
English on half.com was cheaper, so Julie did twice as much. She went crazy—nesting with cuckoos and developing a fear of wrathful grapes.
Friday Julie is seen every so often on the subway where she rambles on in incoherent soliloquies asking for spare change in frantic exclamation.
LEARN FROM JULIE.
Just because half.com is cheaper doesn't mean you need to buy twice as much English. Use your savings for food on half.com and try a video game instead!
SAVE $5
Type in "overstudy" on half.com and get started on your subject of choice today.*

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Do we need a chancellor?

Jeff Napolitano

And so another chancellor bites the dust. John Lombardi, who served as the head of UMass Amherst for nearly five years, has been kicked out of yet another university, although this time it wasn't completely his fault. After being asked to leave Florida State University for making a racial comment about a fellow administrator, Lombardi has been pushed out of UMass by the president of the University system for not agreeing to follow his new "plan."

Lombardi will be moving along to serve as the president of Louisiana State University as Interim Chancellor Dr. Thomas Cole takes the reigns for the next year. Given the turnover of yet another chancellor at UMass, it is instructive to review the tenure of Lombardi and whether his position is a necessity at the school.

Lombardi did not quit his job – he was asked, pushed, or prodded (depending on whom you ask) by President Jack Wilson and Chairman Stephen Tocco of the Board of Trustees. The latter two men were, as of May, intent on putting in place a fairly idiotic "One University" plan for the UMass system, in a move that would take a bit more space than I've got here to describe. The crux of the matter is that Lombardi was not a big fan of the new plan, and so he was given a cushy golden parachute and kicked out of the plane.

So what has been Lombardi's legacy here at the University? Some faculty members, but certainly not all, will praise Lombardi for new construction on campus and his dedication to making UMass a "world-class research institution." Supporters would say that he got the University through a fairly tough fiscal period – indeed, during a time when the state was dramatically reducing its investment in public higher education.

There is some truth to this praise. We do have a few new buildings on campus. And while Lombardi did get us through the state's lack of funding for UMass (although I don't think folks really expected buildings to simply collapse), we never have actually recovered from that.

The chancellor concentrated on private fundraising that brought in a few million dollars, but was completely disinterested in trying to convince the legislature to spend real money on the school. However, state funding was and is the only realistic revenue source that can enable UMass to be a truly affordable and prestigious university.

Then there is the greatest stain on Lombardi's legacy: his hiring and longstanding support of Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano. Gargano's short stint at UMass is filled with embarrassment after embarrassment. From his early attempts to unilaterally dismantle the anti-racist ALANA Caucus student organization, his exposed collusion with members of the infamous "KKK-9" scandal, his failed review by the Commission on Campus Diversity, his running roughshod over student leadership and government, to his illegal imposition of police patrols inside dorm halls, Gargano has repeatedly shown how not to run student affairs.

But there's a larger question here: Do we really need a chancellor? In a meeting at the Campus Center with student, faculty, and administration last December, Gov. Deval Patrick addressed the call by students, staff and faculty to have more influence on the decisions made at UMass. We want governance that is composed of all the constituents on campus, not just the priorities of one man. Patrick said the administration's decisions should not be impacted by student demands because, unlike students, [The administration is] here for the long run."

We want governance that is composed of all the constituents on campus, not just the priorities of one man.

Well, Deval was wrong. The average term for a chancellor at UMass Amherst in the last three decades is about four years. That means that chancellors last for about as long as a typical undergraduate. When the students are likely to be on and invested in campus as long (or longer, in the case of most graduate students) as the chancellor, what makes their perspective any less valid?

What we need to understand is the role of the chancellor and how it has failed us in the recent past. The chancellor is supposed to be the leader of the University, someone who brings together all constituencies while ensuring the long-term viability and improvement of the school. He or she cannot be someone who just tries to squeeze money out of donors, but must be someone who unites the students, staff, faculty and alumni to push for a more fair, sustainable and academically excellent institution. When Lombardi refused to allow UMass Amherst to participate in a statehouse lobby day that even President Wilson announced system-wide, he demonstrated the failure of his single-minded philosophy for the chancellorship.

I wish and hope for the best from Interim Chancellor Cole. He spoke of his plans to actually listen and do something positive for the whole University community in a reception on the day he was confirmed. Given that he's only going to be here for 12 months, let's hope that he has the wisdom to listen to those who study and work here, because they will be sticking around quite a bit longer.

Jeff Napolitano is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at jmapolit a bre.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com
Fax: 413-545-3699
Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Amherst, MA 01003

Apathy toward our liberties

Dan Nicastro

Immediately before the August congressional recess, the Democratically-controlled Congress signed legislation granting the National Security Agency the authority to wiretap international conversations without a warrant. As long as the NSA believes a possible terrorist connection exists, regardless of whether or not either party is an American citizen, the law applies. The Bush administration, instead of actually dealing with a recent court ruling that warrants are in fact necessary in this respect, decided to gut the Fourth Amendment of any real meaning by passing new legislation making such measures legal. This is a shot across the bow for civil liberties, and it may be one of the last warnings for the end of personal freedom.

As much as I would love to blame the Bush administration for the destruction of our civil liberties, I can't.

We've reached a crisis point in this country. Since the end of the Revolution, American citizens have, from time to time, ceded liberties and freedoms guaranteed to us by the Constitution in the name of security. We've all heard that "freedom isn't free," and that sacrifices need to be made in order for us to be truly safe. But we're very quickly reaching a point where we won't have any real Constitutional protections to surrender.

Over the last 200 years, American citizens have been asked time and time again to relinquish more and more of their personal freedoms in order for the government to fully protect them from threats abroad, and evils lurking within our borders. Unfortunately, almost every time it has been asked of us, American citizens have relented and surrendered more of our civil liberties guaranteed by the Constitution.

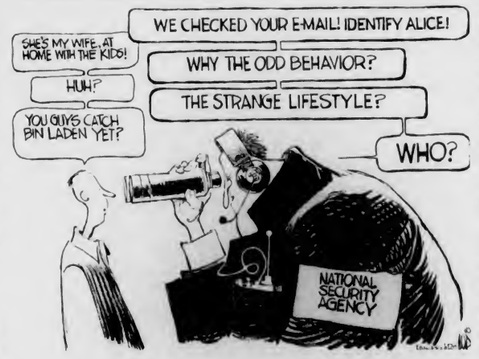
Because we've been willing to give up these liberties in the past, it becomes clear that there is no bottom line in terms of what we are willing to give up. The line in the sand keeps getting pushed farther and farther back and soon, it will disappear forever.

As much as I would love to blame the Bush administration for the destruction of our civil liberties, I can't. They've certainly been complicit in our loss of freedom, but in reality, we as American citizens are the culprits. The reason we keep losing these vital civil liberties is because we have repeatedly shown that we either don't care enough about them or know enough about them to fight back.

History is cyclical. The disdoms in exchange for governmental protection, there has in fact been a "domino effect." Every administration demands a little more from its citizens, and every time citizens refuse to act and challenge these demands, the Constitution becomes a meaningless document. This domino effect is even taking place as I write this, as the Department of Homeland Security is funneling more and more money to municipalities that is specifically earmarked for comprehensive surveillance systems.

People claim they feel safer with these new "improvements" by the federal government, but I don't think the feeling can really be classified as "safe." When these same people say, "If you're not doing anything wrong, you shouldn't be afraid," they're actually telling you to watch out and don't step out of line. Big Brother is watching you.

Dan Nicastro is a collegian columnist and he can be reached at dnicastr a student.umass.edu.



courses and major events that have shaped this country over the last 200 years can't be written off as mere names and dates. Unfortunately, far too many people in this country regard history as a linear progression. Events in the past hold very little meaning for the present or the future, and this lack of hindsight has led us to the precarious position we are now faced with. We don't look back and see what it took to fight the Alien and Sedition Acts. We don't see the real dangers to our freedom involved in the McCarthy witch hunts of the 1950s.

Likewise, our moral outrage is misdirected. The personal lives of Lindsey Lohan, Britney Spears and Paris Hilton may be morally bankrupt, but their "lack of morals" affects only those who they come in contact with.

The new wiretapping law, though, affects everyone in this country. While the NSA may not be listening to your phone calls in particular, the fact that the Bush administration was able to pass a law like this one through a Democratically-controlled Congress suggests the possibility of a "domino effect."

We're at the point right now where the erosion of 200 years of civil rights and liberties has taken a toll on the "American way of life." Hallmarks of the American legal system, such as "innocent until proven guilty," have been tossed aside in favor of phrases like "if you're not doing anything wrong, you shouldn't be afraid."

It's premature to say this could be the end of the representative democracy we have known since our founding, but it's not out of the question. Since American citizens first gave up their free-

Email etiquette: what to know

This article was previously printed in the Collegian and has been reprinted with permission from the author for the benefit of first-year students and others new to campus.

As someone who has daily contact with undergraduates, I often hear from frustrated students that they were not aware of certain academic regulations, or that they were never informed about an upcoming event or a change of policy. In almost every case, this frustration could have been avoided if all students regularly checked their University e-mail account. Here are some key reasons why you should use and read your UMass e-mail.

Dr. Kregg Strehorn

OFFICIAL COMMUNICATION

In this day of paperless communication, the University no longer sends grades or other important notices to a student's home or campus address. In fact, according to the University's Fall 2005 Email Communications Policy, the University's "primary means of communicating official information is e-mail.

Further, the University will send official communications only to e-mail addresses distributed by OIT (also known as UMail addresses), and expects that such communications will be received and read in a timely fashion.

Students are, therefore, responsible for checking their University e-mail on a frequent and consistent basis to ensure that they are staying current with all official communications. In other words, even if you ignore it, you will be held accountable for the information that has been sent.

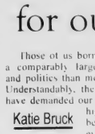
UMAIL "PROBLEMS"

You might be surprised to read that students regularly report problems with their UMail account, which sometimes comes down to the fact that it is not as fun or as easy to use as an e-mail vendor like Hotmail or Yahoo. I am not sure if it is because using the familiar e-mail account is more interesting and enjoyable or because UMail messages about serious issues are not as interesting or enjoyable, but some students choose to ignore their UMail or have it redirected ("forwarded") to their more familiar, personal e-mail address. As a result, they miss crucial University information because their familiar account treats the forwarded messages as Spam or, even worse, does not forward them at all.

To avoid missing deadlines or even opportunities, we recommend that you stop having your UMass e-mail forwarded. Instead, either use your UMail as your only account, or use two accounts and check your UMail daily for university-related business.

A PERMANENT RECORD OF YOUR CIVILITY . . . OR NOT

Although it is "informal," as long as e-mail is the University's "official" mode of communication, students need to remember that when writing to members of the campus community, a certain e-mail etiquette is expected. Always indicate your full name, not just Doug or Maria, include your SPIRE number as a courtesy, and start with a salutation such as "Dear Professor Quinn." Believe it or not, I receive several messages per week that begin "hey," and are not signed at all. This is not the best way to make a positive impression.



One last suggestion: when writing e-mails regarding University business, try to avoid abbreviations that might be more appropriate when text messaging (TMOT – trust me on this). These are habits that will serve you well when you leave campus and enter the professional world. Believe me, a little civility goes a long way.

Take your future into your own hands. Reading your University e-mail is a great way to avoid missing withdrawal deadlines, for example, which may result in a lower grade point average recorded permanently on your transcript.

Using University e-mail to address issues in an informal way could also come back to haunt you. What if these e-mails end up in the hands of a potential employer looking for an employee with a more professional demeanor? E-mail is a permanent record and what you don't know about it, either way, could hurt you.

Dr. Kregg Strehorn is an academic dean and can be reached at strehorn@acad.umass.edu.

Two worlds for our youth

Katie Bruck

Those of us born in the '84 to '89 range have a comparably larger awareness of world news and politics than most generations did at our age. Understandably, the events of the past few years have demanded our attention. I was a freshman in high school on Sept. 11. I remember television being dragged into every classroom, and those news stations that had previously been confined to that background noise area of my consciousness were slammed to the forefront.

But I also remember tripping down an entire flight of stairs the next day, in front of what seemed to be the entire varsity football team. The memory of falling face first with the contents of my book bag drifting through the air around me had nearly as much impact as the recaps of the planes colliding into the towers. I don't think I'm unusual or somehow less empathic because of that. Every person in this generation has had to somehow learn to integrate grown-up, newsworthy reality into our coming of age.

This fact became clear to me this summer in a few short but memorable conversations I had with a high school acquaintance. He graduated two years ahead of me, and he ran with a crowd of guys who weren't exactly parent-approved. He's been stationed north of Baghdad for almost two years and makes routine missions into the heart of the city.

I remember this guy. We'll call him Rick. I remember his Camaro, covered in gray primer, spinning its tires out of the parking lot. He and his group of friends stood out in a high school full of overachieving, Ivy League-material students. When their classmates were off to U Penn and Yale, many of these guys either stayed behind or went to community or local colleges. Rick was one who stayed. Normally, there is nothing atypical about this. But when you grow up in a town like ours, it's easy to feel like you're just not up to par. Maybe to compensate, and definitely partially as a result of his beliefs, Rick decided to join the Marines after high school.

We can't deny that the news of our generation is touching us every day.

It was around this time that I fell out of touch with Rick. That changed in March, when I ran into him at the local auto repair shop where he works when he's on leave. The Rick I ran into was a very different guy. He shook my hand and he made polite small talk. A few days later, he sent me a message with his e-mail address, inviting me to write him whenever I had the time. Not really expecting a response, I sent him a short e-mail. That exchange resulted in a sporadic communication that has changed my perspective on a lot of things.

Rick seemed to have mellowed out in an unexpected way. While he was all Camaro and white cotton beater in high school, he seemed less attached to that sort of posturing. It became clear to me that Rick's perception of himself had changed as he was forced to combine that generational memory of those planes crashing into the towers with memories of his own making. Though the communal memory of Sept. 11 was motivating him, the idea of the War on Terror perhaps began to represent an opportunity for him to prove his usefulness or purpose.

Unfortunately for him, and so many of our servicemen and women, the U.S. military campaign in Iraq has not served the purpose of fulfilling any sense of duty or accomplishment. Perhaps in a personal sense, fulfilling missions and surviving boot camp has been rewarding. But for Rick at least, the prospect of surviving his own memories and reconciling his ideals and impetuous with what his missions ended up being is the real fulfilling challenge.

Here at UMass, the small but vocal veteran population seems to be of a definitive pro-Bush leaning. It's easy to see how that is the case. Rick once told me that if he were to openly discuss his apprehensions and feelings of futility, his superiors would pull rank. If you choose to be vocal, even as a discharged serviceman, your options are few. With limited psychological services and the bleeding heart taboo that follows those who dare speak against the commander in chief, it's not surprising that the majority of those who speak out are one sided.

We can't deny that the news of our generation is touching us every day. We have no choice but to move on – we're expected to. Even when we do take a moment and flip on NPR or MSNBC, it's hard to really remember that the roadside bombings, the extended tours of duty – they are our contemporaries.

While we're writing papers and playing with our dogs, they're sleeping on banks of 100-plus degree heat and counting down the days until they're home (and safe) for a week or ten days. Whatever collective, cultural trauma we have all experienced, our youthful population has been split up into little bits of light, to get a real sense of the world we're living in it's good to keep one foot in both.

Katie Bruck is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at kbruck a student.umass.edu.

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?
WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!
THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS
EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS
FOR NEXT SEMESTER!
GET YOUR ARTWORK
PUBLISHED!
Send an e-mail to:
collegianeditorial@yahoo.com.

SEP 5 2007

Look out, Wall Street — here comes Murdoch

That collective gasp coming from the liberal establishment last month was the response to the news that media tycoon Rupert Murdoch's purchase of the Dow Jones Empire was indeed official. The Dow Jones Company, it turns out, owns the Wall Street Journal, whose prized editorial page is a prominent platform from which opinionated political salvos are often launched.

Brad DeFlumeri

Murdoch is the super-rich, right-wing media mogul who also happens to own Fox News by way of his media conglomerate News Corp. Much to the nervous chagrin of so many in the left-wing-heavy elite media, Murdoch, and all his notions about limited government, free markets, and individual responsibility, will be the master puppeteer pulling the editorial strings of the Journal's editorial page.

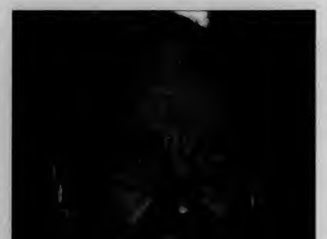
So many traditionally heavily influential newspapers – the New York Times, LA Times, Boston Globe, to name just a few – have an undeniable liberal slant in the same way that much of the talk media ecosphere is generally slanted to the right. While there are indeed a plethora of factors which are responsible for this ideological difference between the print and electronic media, it is neither shocking, nor worrisome, nor deserving of governmental action via legislation.

This is where so many liberal commentators and lawmakers, via their newfound appreciation for the dead-for-twenty-years Fairness Doctrine, so haphazardly miss the point. What matters in the media world – where newspaper-reading and NPR-supporting cultural elites will almost invariably be represented by the editors of the New York Times, and pickup truck-driving, Marlboro-smoking, working Joes will undeviatingly support the Rush Limbaughs and Michael Savages of the world – is ultimately not which side of the political spectrum one falls on, but more importantly, whether one can compellingly hold a radio audience or consistently achieve a readership worthy of advertising sponsorship dollars.

In this sense, Murdoch is just the man – or businessman – to plunge into the highly competitive arena of national newspaper ownership. According to the BBC, News Corp. yielded approximately $24 billion in the fiscal year that ended June 30, 2005. Furthermore, Fox News, according to Stateofthenewsmedia.org, a nonpartisan media watchdog, "boasts the highest number of regular viewers on cable news."

Say what you want about Murdoch's personal beliefs or proclivity for editorializing newscasts. The man can inarguably produce a product that is compelling to both advertisers and the paying customer. Precisely for this reason, liberals, libertarians, monarchists, anarchists, and surely conservatives – anyone from across the political spectrum – should indeed welcome Murdoch's arrival onto a different and perhaps more influential stage. His voice will now be in competition with new and equally imposing competitors – the New York Times and Time Magazine, as opposed to MSNBC and CNN – and will have to maintain its journalistic integrity and intellectual edge if the Wall Street Journal is to maintain its seat at the media power table while moving a little more to the right.

That is, if Mr. Murdoch's views are to infiltrate the current monopoly on ideology that the left yields among current elites and newspaper editors from coast to coast, he will surely have to retrofit the Journal in such a way that satisfies its existing well-to-do business-oriented base readership and simultaneously draws in the same core conservatives who so faithfully comprise the Fox News base.



If his venture into this new market is to succeed, Murdoch's entrepreneurial ingenuity will unquestionably be an advantage to intellectual consumers across the political spectrum and will yield further proof in support of a free-market, consumer-choice-driven, highly-competitive economy in which the marketplace of ideas is populated not by mirror images of academia or big tobacco, but by leaders who are willing to air their views to a critical, discerning public.

Murdoch is just the man — or business man — to plunge into the highly competitive arena of newspaper ownership.

On the contrary, if Mr. Murdoch is simply unable to work the magic with the Wall Street Journal that he has so marvelously worked with so many of his other business interests – a plausible scenario, given the increasingly burdensome financial context within which the newspaper industry operates – then liberals will still have their ivory-tower-dwelling, Chomsky-reading editors to which they can turn. And conservatives, thankfully, will always still have our pill-popping, immigrant-hating, affirmative-action-despising savior to crawl home to. Indeed, Rush Limbaugh has found his niche and won't be editing a newspaper any time soon.

In the ever-important final analysis, though, perhaps my entire argument for inclusion of Murdoch's viewpoint is self-refuting, in the sense that just as we don't want the chancellor or president of our illustrious University managing from the seat of his political pants, so too is it undesirable for newspaper ownership to employ editors who are undeniably in their ideological corner. Or perhaps I am just so starved for a credible conservative national Op/Ed page that I am willing to tolerate editors who are little more than Mr. Murdoch's puppets. After all, with Karl Rove's recent resignation, haven't my conservatives and I waved goodbye to the greatest puppeteer of them all?

Brad Deflumeri is a Collegian columnist and he can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Despite liberal naysaying, Rupert Murdoch's influence might help the Wall Street Journal.

Terrorism? Try free speech

Debbie Almontaser lost her job as principal of a new Arabic language school in New York because she did not condemn the word "intifada." The word means "shaking off," according to the Arabic-speaking Almontaser, and is used to refer to the Palestinian resistance movements that occurred in the late 1980s and early 2000.

Bruce Lerner

If we are to live in a free country – and presumably the United States is free – people should be allowed to utter single words without worrying about losing their jobs, or should at least be given the opportunity to explain themselves.

What is interesting about this recent event is that it doesn't seem to be too unfamiliar to those of us who know our U.S. history. There was a period of time called the "red scare" during which innocent people were canned from their jobs simply for being suspected of having communist ties. Luckily, that period ended because people realized the foolishness of irrational fear. Now there is a new era of fear: the fear of Islam.

Almontaser defended an Arabic word which appeared on T-shirts in NYC, and suffered as a result of this anti-Islamic – and completely pointless – paranoia. Randi Weingarten, president of the United Federation of Teachers, criticized Almontaser for failing to condemn the word intifada, saying intifida is something "that ought to be denounced, not be explained away."

Suppose that intifada did mean the incitement to violence that certain persons assume it does. Would that make it justifiable for external pressure to make an innocent woman lose her job for simply exploring an alternate meaning of the term? If one looks at the facts in regards to the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, one sees some interesting facets that are often ignored by so-called "anti-terrorists" on the Israeli and American sides. For starters, according to Amnesty International, 570 Palestinians were killed by Israeli security forces, while 150 Israelis were killed during the first year of the second intifada alone. Since 2000, 260 Palestinian children and 52 Israeli children have been killed. When ratios are brought up, it becomes very hard to label the side with more people killed as being the greater terrorists.

With the statistics on the side of the so-called terrorists, where is the indictment of all those people who say to support Israel during its murderous expeditions into the territories? People like Alan Dershowitz seem to hold on to their jobs no matter how thoroughly they defend the terrorist actions of a state, whereas those who defend people's movements against oppression are labeled terrorists. This is not even to mention that the Israeli Army itself described how it fired on demonstrators who posed no imminent threat to the soldiers. Still, when terrorism is brought into discussion, it is the people who were fired upon while peacefully demonstrating who are given the label of terrorist. Either something is missing from the picture, or something fishy is going on.

Meanwhile, in the United States, people are forgetting the price of freedom of speech. Freedom means that some people will say things that are not pleasant to everyone's ears. The only alternative to freedom of speech is restriction of speech. And once that process begins there is no telling where it will end. Regardless of how one feels about the meaning and background of the word "intifada," even the harshest critics of Palestinian rights should concede a person's right to use the word in order to preserve their own speaking privileges. It may seem a little extreme to support people's rights to say things that one disagrees with, but without this discomfort a true democracy cannot exist.

The only alternative to freedom of speech is restriction of speech, and once that process begins there is no telling where it will end.

To bring up the McCarthy years again, it is striking to see so many voices agreeing that Almontaser should not have said what she said. If there was at least some disagreement in the ranks as to Almontaser's speech rights, the United States would seem a little safer from ideological control. Instead, Randi Weingarten, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, Department of Education spokesman David Cantor, and Councilman Peter Vallone, Jr., are like a perfect choir singing Almontaser's downfall.

Perhaps they refuse to listen to her explanation that the T-shirts are "pretty much an opportunity for girls to express that they are part of New York City society... and shaking off oppression." New York Post columnist Andrea Peyser questions Almontaser's definition of oppression by asking "how are our girls oppressed? Does she mean they are put down by Western ideals of free speech, thought and religion?" Perhaps she meant to say the Western ideal of women getting paid three-fourths of what men make all while still being subject to lewd representation in all forms of media.

This whole pointless debate about a single word would be entirely laughable if it did not demonstrate the climate of fear in which the people of the United States live. This is but one example of the consequences that individuals face for challenging the status quo. Granted, it is better to lose a job than to lose a head, as would have happened in a place like the Soviet Union. Therefore, it is the job of everyone to fight to preserve freedom of speech, even if it challenges certain immediate assumptions.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist and he can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu.

Debbie Almontaser was asked to leave her position as principal of an Arabic language high school for defending a word.

Hey, you're in college—you probably know everything!

The Daily Collegian is now hiring Ed/Op columnists and editorial cartoonists for the fall semester.

Email editorial@dailycollegian.com or come down to the campus center to apply.

Everyone's calling dibs

Michael Shulman

Although the age of old wooden ships charting new territories has passed, the age of exploration is still upon us. Not only do we look toward the heavens and travel to other planets, but we continue exploring our own. Specifically, the continuous warming of the planet has melted much of the ice over the once frozen lands of the North Pole.

Many nations – including Russia, Canada, Denmark and the United States – are now claiming that these newly discovered land masses are under their control, due to connections far below the earth's surfaces where plates connect these areas. The North Pole is rich with natural resources – namely untapped reservoirs of natural gas. And with the ever-growing demand for oil, these new lands are being viewed as an alternative to importing high-priced petroleum from unstable regions like the Middle East.

The region's reshaping is creating many benefits to whoever controls this region. However, this 21st century race to the Pole is a complex situation that has already seen nations posturing and forcing their own intentions on the newest of the earth's resource-rich land.

Global warming has given renewed impetus to the race for control of the Arctic. Melting ice sheets would open up countless new waterways that once were dangerous trade routes. These routes, which could dramatically cut the length of a journey from Europe to Asia, could become navigable to commercial traffic within eight years.

And according to some estimates, the Arctic is home to a quarter of the world's untapped energy reserves – now more accessible than they ever have been. The money to be gained from faster trade and oil has created a dangerous situation with the amount of nations claiming stake over the area.

Russia has already sent an underwater submarine to the region to drop a capsule with a Russian flag enclosed and prematurely claim the land, citing Russian geologists' research that the polar region is connected to Russia. More frightening is Russian President Vladimir Putin's imperial ambitions of territorial expansion. Late last month, Moscow signaled its intentions to annex the entire North Pole, an area twice the size of France with Belgium and Switzerland thrown in. However, the vast majority of it is currently underwater.

Not to be outdone, the Danish government has also sent missions up to the region to claim ownership of the resource-rich lands by their assertion of its connection with Greenland. The United States also threw its hat into the arctic ring, using Alaska as a gateway to the North Pole – now I know why we wanted it as part of our country.

Unfortunately, all of this flag dropping and boating expedition to this frigid expanse is only for show, as the final decision regarding the land claim is left up to the United Nations. The U.N. convention on the Law of the Sea gives countries that are signatories to the treaty the possibility of challenging claims of seabed sovereignty if they want to assert their claims beyond the 200-mile zone.

This haphazard land grab is dangerous and controversial, and it proves two things: that global cooperation and togetherness do not apply when the prize is oil, and that the United Nations has once again proven its ineptitude in handling international conflict.

These newly discovered areas of the North Pole have the potential to do great things for many people – if the situation is handled correctly.

Before this posturing continues, one of two solutions must occur to prevent heightened conflict between two nuclear-equipped nations. The ideal solution would be a mutual forum to debate and settle upon and fair division of the lands to those who make legitimate, science-backed claims.

The second solution is for the United Nations to grow a pair and name the land international territory, which would be free from a single nation's control – as is the case with the seas. With these new internationally-owned resources, the United Nations can use oil and other resources to aid and assist poorer nations. Additionally, the new shipping lanes will be available for all to use and thus promote free and fair trade.

These newly discovered areas of the North Pole have the potential to do great things for many people – if the situation is handled correctly, but if a free-for-all land grab occurs without supervision or monitoring, the rich will only get richer, and conflicts that arise will be difficult to settle and will ultimately lead to a war over oil.

Lastly, we should think of all the elves and the Claus family who have been living in the North Pole for years. This takeover of the Pole would disturb the natural habitat for the reindeer. If we can't solve this issue between nations, we should probably consider how an oil drill would look next to Santa's workshop, or how well a mineshaft would fit in the middle of the Land of Misfit Toys.

Michael Shulman is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at mshulman@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black to rattle the Cage

Comedian returns to UMass to perform for the third time

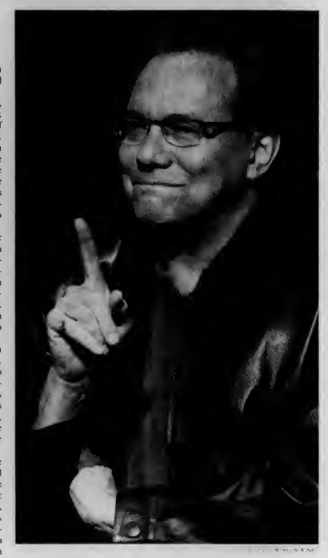
By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

First Week at the University of Massachusetts is a time for getting into the college swing. For some it means getting reacquainted with campus, old friends and various weekend activities, while others deal with the issues of being away from home for the first time. As the stress of a new college year mounts, the widely accepted behavior of students is to rant and rave about our problems and the world around us. Luckily for UMass students, comedian, author and actor Lewis Black is coming to do that for us.

Black will be performing his unique brand of standup comedy at the Curry Hicks Cage on Saturday, Sept. 8, at 8 p.m. as part of the UMass First Week festivities.

Black, known best for his "Back in Black" segment on "The Daily Show With Jon Stewart," is a master of pointing out all that is stupid, illogical and unjust in society, which has made him popular in the world of comedy.

Over the last 10 years, the comic has had four Comedy Central specials, one HBO special, published his autobiography "Nothing's Sacred" in 2005, won a best comedy album Grammy award in 2007 for his 2006 release "The Carnegie Hall Performance," appeared on numerous television shows including "Law & Order: SVU" and "Harvey Birdman: Attorney at Law," and played major roles in the movies "Man of the Year," "Accepted" and "Unaccompanied Minors."



Despite his recent accolades, standup comedy is where Black truly shines. The brilliance of Black's routine is his style. Those who know Black from only "The Daily Show" have had just a taste of what he brings to a larger stage. The outrageous, ranting style of his four-minute segments is everything Black fans have come to expect, and what he delivers.

His over-the-top, sarcastic and often angry delivery, when discussing even the smallest silliness, leaves the audience questioning his sanity. Armed with profanity, shouting and vigorous angry finger waging, Black takes the absurdity of American culture and politics and tries to open the eyes of his audience.

Nobody is safe when Black picks up a microphone. Everyone from conservatives to liberals, Britney Spears to himself take a beating during his set. While he may hit on topics that every other comedian does, his confrontational technique and unique worldview make for a distinctive experience.

Black is not a man to be messed with when on stage and does not back down. During the sixth annual Bonnaroo music festival earlier this summer, Black made YouTube headlines when he joined fellow performers Gov't Mule on stage for a quick joke and was struck with

See BLACK on page 9

Recent Grammy award winning comedian Lewis Black is the featured performer during the annual First Week festivities at UMass.

Day one recap of Lollapalooza 2007

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: this is part one of a three-part series about the 2007 Lollapalooza Festival held in Chicago.

Plenty of people were excited to see Pearl Jam at Lollapalooza 2007. I'd estimate that on the third and final day of the festival, roughly one in 10 attendees was sporting a Pearl Jam shirt. At an event that drew a crowd of 200,000, that's a pretty significant number. So I think it's only fair to advise you to take note, dear reader, that this reporter didn't stick around for Eddie Vedder and company on Sunday night.

After spending the early evening at a dance party served up by Chicago natives Flosstradamus and Kid Sister, standing with thousands upon thousands of people to watch a band I don't particularly like from hundreds of feet away just didn't seem that inviting. But the festival, for all its big names and commercialism, remains a legitimate venue for those bands still off popular culture's radar.

Midday Friday found Chicago heating up without a cloud in the sky. As I made my way from a subway stop, I found myself quickly disoriented. Walking towards what I thought was Grant Park, I soon came across busy Lakeshore Drive and Lake Michigan just beyond it. By the time I asked for directions and made my way north and into the festival, I had already gained a layer of sweat that was only to thicken as the day continued.

In light of the already uncomfortable weather, the potential for huge crowds was daunting, but it seemed as if many potential attendees were still at school or work. As I made my way past the elegant Clarence Buckingham Fountain at the entrance to Grant Park, the nearly mile-long stretch of booths and tents seemed relatively empty. I downed a bottle of water in preparation for the dehydration to come and began the trek toward the south end of the festival.

A few hundred people were gathered at the MySpace stage, where The Fratellis were mid-set. Despite an especially energetic drummer I quickly lost interest – the band seemed like a Supergrass-lite birthed years past relevancy. After a few songs I scurried over to the Citi Stage to catch the beginning of the aptly-named Illinois. With the Sears Tower visible through the back of the stage, it seemed only fitting that this was the first act I'd properly catch in Chicago.

When the Pennsylvania band emerged lyres, the group is called Illinois, but they're from Pennsylvania), they were met with a round of brief applause from fans already resting under the shade of trees to the stage's sides. Illinois soon launched into a set of cacophonous pop held together by singer Chris Archibald's banjo noodlings. The uniquely fractured Americana came as a welcome relief after The Fratellis' tired Britpop.

Soon enough, however, the first of many sound problems to plague the festival arrived. During Illinois' second song, neither Archibald's microphone nor keyboard functioned and he was left shrugging at the sound tent for several minutes. He held his composure but seemed understandably frustrated at the apparent lack of help. Vocals finally returned at the end of the song and the band triumphantly carried on with no apparent loss of enthusiasm.

Kicking off the day's festivities over at the south end's main stage was Ghostland Observatory of Austin, Texas. Singer Aaron Behrens, donning a pair of aviators and two long braids, seemed straight out of a Tony Hillerman novel, while Thomas Russ Turner, manning synthesizer and drums and donning a long blue cape, held a curious resemblance to Boo Berry.

The countless comparisons between Behrens and Freddie Mercury are apt – androgynous, animated, and with an ability to put the crowd's attention in a stranglehold, the singer jumped and thrust across the stage, tossing and twirling his microphone over his head and between his legs. Tearing through the tracks off their first (and only) two albums, the band's dance-inspiring performance was a fitting opening act on the stage where Daft Punk would later close the night.

At 1:30 p.m., Ted Leo and the Pharmacists took the stage a few hundred feet away. Leo was wearing a black button-down shirt and black jeans, and I was impressed with him before he starting playing. He and his band, joined by sometimes-Pharmacist Jamie Coats on guitar, launched into a set unsurprisingly heavy on tunes from their newest album, "Living with the Living."

The normally hyper-energetic Leo seemed somewhat lacking in

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page 10

Singer and songwriter M.I.A. was a big hit at this year's Lollapalooza Festival. She energized the crowd when she climbed on top of the stage's scaffolding to perform "Paper Planes," a new track off her most recent album.

Pirates trilogy unforgettable

Depp and company reunite for the final showdown

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

Pirates have never had this much style. In far-off Singapore, Davy Jones' locker, and an assemblage of pirates from all over the world, the final installment of the "Pirates of the Caribbean" trilogy has outdone its predecessors.

The film picks up from where it left off in "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest." With a surprising return from the dead, Captain Barbossa (Geoffrey Rush) heads the crew in search of witty Captain Jack Sparrow (Johnny Depp). Braving through unchartered seas, they encounter many pirate-worthy obstacles. However, Barbossa has his own reasons for bringing Jack back from Davy Jones' locker.

Tensions also arise between the betrothed Elizabeth Swann (Keira Knightley) and William Turner (Orlando Bloom). Elizabeth continues to suffer from guilt of sending Jack to his death. At the same time, Will sees her distress, as well as her kiss good-bye, as a sign of her love for Jack. The truth unravels itself when they finally find Jack, more peculiar than usual.

The core of the movie really centers on the battle between the British East India Company and the remainder of a dying breed of pirates. Lord Cutler Beckett (Tom Hollander of "Pride and Prejudice") now controls the Flying Dutchman, its crew, and its captain Davy Jones with the possession of the Dead Man's Chest. With the Dutchman at the helm of their fleet, pirates from around the world must convene and prepare themselves for their final stand.

The colorful band of pirate lords that come together to discuss the problem at hand are actual historical characters. They each paint a picture of the rest of the world. Whether or not historical accuracy was strongly considered in depicting each of them, they sure look the part of Hollywood-worthy pirates.

Chow Yun-Fat ("Curse of the Golden Flower") as Captain Sao Feng makes an appearance as the pirate lord from Singapore. His exotic appearance and not-so-warm welcome to Barbossa and Elizabeth in the beginning set the tone for the rest of the film. The most amusing cameo made was Keith Richards as Jack Sparrow's father, Captain Teague. The resemblance was uncanny. His performance was brief but the look on Jack's face when he comes across his father was altogether delicious.

In addition, the visuals are phenomenal. During the search for Jack Sparrow, the crew finds themselves sailing in a beautiful optical illusion of starry night seas and skies.

The sets and costumes for the third film were terrifically done. The movie shows off its special effects skills in a turbulent maelstrom that erupts, trapping the Black Pearl and the Flying Dutchman in a battle to the death. Everyone is thrown around while swords are flying about. Davy Jones and Jack Sparrow find themselves engaged in a depth-defying sword fight in the midst of a raging storm and monstrous whirlpool. The thrill ride

See PIRATES on page 9

The third installment of the "Pirates" series focused on the tensions between Keira Knightley and her onscreen love interest Orlando Bloom.

Final Potter book is epic, satisfying

By Sydney Towne
Collegian Staff

The modern-day epic that is Harry Potter could not have ended any differently. Despite the legions of adults who've read the books and perhaps even obsessed a bit over them, author J.K. Rowling didn't set out to write adult fiction. The series has always been intended for an audience of children – even though the stories and the characters have matured throughout the seven books, that basic fact must be remembered.

Given its indisputable foundation in children's literature, the entire "50-plus page adventure of "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows" was both pleasantly predictable in its ultimate conclusion and yet gloriously surprising in the path that the three main characters, Harry Potter, Hermione Granger and Ron Weasley, took to get there.

"The Deathly Hallows" is in many ways darker and more frightening than the preceding novels. It is set largely outside the comforts of Hogwarts, the boarding school that has so dominated the previous six books. There is an inherent danger in removing the safe haven of Hogwarts for both the reader and the central trio of characters. Hogwarts is a strange world where life makes sense.

Rowling has so thoroughly described each hallway, dormitory, professor and painting that unusual happenings are easily accepted. In the bustling streets of London and the isolated wilderness of Britain, however, even the predictable occurrence is suspect. It is out there, in the great unknown, that Harry, Hermione and Ron find themselves when they decide that the mission headmaster Albus Dumbledore gave them before his death is more important than finishing school.

Horcruxes, and the search for them, dominate most of the novel in an effort to protect his life, Voldemort divided his soul into several pieces, each of which he then hid in an ordinary object and distributed throughout the world. Dumbledore assigned Harry the task of destroying each horcrux before ultimately facing Voldemort.

This results in an almost overwhelming frustration for the trio, as exactly what and where the horcruxes are is unknown. Their feelings of helplessness increase as Voldemort and his followers infiltrate the Ministry of Magic and begin a program of racial discrimination, targeting Muggles throughout the wizarding world.

The similarities between the Dark Lord and his reign of terror and various historical regimes are

See POTTER on page 8

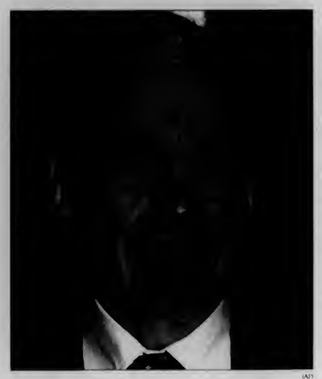
Look out, Wall Street — here comes Murdoch

That collective gasp coming from the liberal establishment last month was the response to the news that media tycoon Rupert Murdoch's purchase of the Dow Jones Empire was indeed official. The Dow Jones Company, it turns out, owns the Wall Street Journal, whose prized editorial page is a prominent platform from which opinionated political salvos are often launched.

Brad DeFlumeri

Murdoch is the super-rich, right-wing media mogul who also happens to own Fox News by way of his media conglomerate News Corp. Much to the nervous chagrin of so many in the left-wing-heavy elite media, Murdoch, and all his notions about limited government, free markets, and individual responsibility, will be the master puppeteer pulling the editorial strings of the Journal's editorial page.

So many traditionally heavily influential newspapers – the New York Times, LA Times, Boston Globe, to name just a few – have an undeniable liberal slant in the same way that much of the talk media ecosphere is generally slanted to the right. While there are indeed a plethora of factors which are responsible for this ideological difference between the print and electronic media, it is neither shocking, nor worrisome, nor deserving of governmental action via legislation.



This is where so many liberal commentators and lawmakers, via their newfound appreciation for the dead-for-twenty-years Fairness Doctrine, so haphazardly miss the point. What matters in the media world – where newspaper-reading and NPR-supporting cultural elites will almost invariably be represented by the editors of the New York Times, and pickup truck-driving, Marlboro-smoking, working Joes will undeviatingly support the Rush Limbaughs and Michael Savages of the world – is ultimately not which side of the political spectrum one falls on, but more importantly, whether one can compellingly hold a radio audience or consistently achieve a readership worthy of advertising sponsorship dollars.

In this sense, Murdoch is just the man – or businessman – to plunge into the highly competitive arena of national newspaper ownership. According to the BBC, News Corp. yielded Murdoch approximately $24 billion in the fiscal year that ended June 30, 2005. Furthermore, Fox News, according to Stateofthenewsmedia.org, a nonpartisan media watchdog, "boasts the highest number of regular viewers on cable news."

Say what you want about Murdoch's personal beliefs or proclivity for editorializing newscasts. The man can inarguably produce a product that is compelling to both advertisers and the paying customer. Precisely for this reason, liberals, libertarians, monarchists, anarchists, and surely conservatives – anyone from across the political spectrum – should indeed welcome Murdoch's arrival onto a different and perhaps more influential stage. His voice will now be in competition with new and equally imposing competitors – the New York Times and Time Magazine, as opposed to MSNBC and CNN – and will have to maintain its journalistic integrity and intellectual edge if the Wall Street Journal is to maintain its seat at the media power table while moving a little more to the right.

That is, if Mr. Murdoch's views are to infiltrate the current monopoly on ideology that the left yields among current elites and newspaper editors from coast to coast, he will surely have to retrofit the Journal in such a way that satisfies its existing well-to-do business-oriented base readership and simultaneously draws in the same core conservatives who so faithfully comprise the Fox News base.

If his venture into this new market is to succeed, Murdoch's entrepreneurial ingenuity will unquestionably be an advantage to intellectual consumers across the political spectrum and will yield further proof in support of a free-market, consumer-choice-driven, highly-competitive economy in which the marketplace of ideas is populated not by mirror images of academia or big tobacco, but by leaders who are willing to air their views to a critical, discerning public.

Despite liberal naysaying, Rupert Murdoch's influence might help the Wall Street Journal.

Murdoch is just the man — or business man — to plunge into the highly competitive arena of newspaper ownership.

On the contrary, if Mr. Murdoch is simply unable to work the magic with the Wall Street Journal that he has so marvelously worked with so many of his other business interests – a plausible scenario, given the increasingly burdensome financial context within which the newspaper industry operates – then liberals will still have their ivory-tower-dwelling, Chomsky-reading editors to which they can turn. And conservatives, thankfully, will always still have our pill-popping, immigrant-hating, affirmative-action-despising savior to crawl home to. Indeed, Rush Limbaugh has found his niche and won't be editing a newspaper any time soon.

In the ever-important final analysis, though, perhaps my entire argument for inclusion of Murdoch's viewpoint is self-refuting, in the sense that just as we don't want the chancellor or president of our illustrious University managing from the seat of his political pants, so too is it undesirable for newspaper ownership to employ editors who are undeniably in their ideological corner. Or perhaps I am just so starved for a credible conservative national Op/Ed page that I am willing to tolerate editors who are little more than Mr. Murdoch's puppets. After all, with Karl Rove's recent resignation, haven't my conservatives and I waved goodbye to the greatest puppeteer of them all?

Brad Deflumeri is a Collegian columnist and he can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Terrorism? Try free speech

Debbie Almontaser lost her job as principal of a new Arabic language school in New York because she did not condemn the word "intifada." The word means "shaking off," according to the Arabic-speaking Almontaser, and is used to refer to the Palestinian resistance movements that occurred in the late 1980s and early 2000.

Bruce Lerner

If we are to live in a free country – and presumably the United States is free – people should be allowed to utter single words without worrying about losing their jobs, or should at least be given the opportunity to explain themselves.

What is interesting about this recent event is that it doesn't seem to be too unfamiliar to those of us who know our U.S. history. There was a period of time called the "red scare" during which innocent people were canned from their jobs simply for being suspected of having communist ties. Luckily, that period ended because people realized the foolishness of irrational fear. Now there is a new era of fear: the fear of Islam.

Almontaser defended an Arabic word which appeared on T-shirts in NYC, and suffered as a result of this anti-Islamic – and completely pointless – paranoia. Randi Weingarten, president of the United Federation of Teachers, criticized Almontaser for failing to condemn the word intifada, saying intifida is something "that ought to be denounced, not be explained away."

Suppose that intifada did mean the incitement to violence that certain persons assume it does. Would that make it justifiable for external pressure to make an innocent woman lose her job for simply exploring an alternate meaning of the term? If one looks at the facts in regards to the Israeli occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, one sees some interesting facets that are often ignored by so-called "anti-terrorists" on the Israeli and American sides. For starters, according to Amnesty International, 570 Palestinians were killed by Israeli security forces, while 150 Israelis were killed during the first year of the second intifada alone. Since 2000, 260 Palestinian children and 52 Israeli children have been killed. When ratios are brought up, it becomes very hard to label the side with more people killed as being the greater terrorists.

With the statistics on the side of the so-called terrorists, where is the indictment of all those people who say to support Israel during its murderous expeditions into the territories? People like Alan Dershowitz seem to hold on to their jobs no matter how thoroughly they defend the terrorist actions of a state, whereas those who defend people's movements against oppression are labeled terrorists. This is not even to mention that the Israeli Army itself described how it fired on demonstrators who posed no imminent threat to the soldiers. Still, when terrorism is brought into discussion, it is the people who were fired upon while peacefully demonstrating who are given the label of terrorist. Either something is missing from the picture, or something fishy is going on.

Meanwhile, in the United States, people are forgetting the price of freedom of speech. Freedom means that some people will say things that are not pleasant to everyone's ears. The only alternative to freedom of speech is restriction of speech. And once that process begins there is no telling where it will end. Regardless of how one feels about the meaning and background of the word "intifada," even the harshest critics of Palestinian rights should concede a person's right to use the word in order to preserve their own speaking privileges. It may seem a little extreme to support people's rights to say things that one disagrees with, but without this discomfort a true democracy cannot exist.

The only alternative to freedom of speech is restriction of speech, and once that process begins there is no telling where it will end.

To bring up the McCarthy years again, it is striking to see so many voices agreeing that Almontaser should not have said what she said. If there was at least some disagreement in the ranks as to Almontaser's free speech rights, the United States would seem a little safer from ideological control. Instead, Randi Weingarten, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg, Department of Education spokesman David Cantor, and Councilman Peter Vallone, Jr., are like a perfect choir singing Almontaser's downfall.

Perhaps they refuse to listen to her explanation that the T-shirts are "pretty much an opportunity for girls to express that they are part of New York City society... and shaking off oppression." New York Post columnist Andrea Peyser questions Almontaser's definition of oppression by asking "how are our girls oppressed? Does she mean they are put down by Western ideals of free speech, thought and religion?" Perhaps she meant to say the Western ideal of women getting paid three-fourths of what men make all while still being subject to lewd representation in all forms of media.

This whole pointless debate about a single word would be entirely laughable if it did not demonstrate the climate of fear in which the people of the United States live. This is but one example of the consequences that individuals face for challenging the status quo. Granted, it is better to lose a job than to lose a head, as would have happened in a place like the Soviet Union. Therefore, it is the job of everyone to fight to preserve freedom of speech, even if it challenges certain immediate assumptions.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist and he can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu.

Debbie Almontaser was asked to leave her position as principal of an Arabic language high school for defending a word

Hey, you're in college—you probably know everything!

The Daily Collegian is now hiring Ed/Op columnists and editorial cartoonists for the fall semester.

Email editorial@dailycollegian.com or come down to the campus center to apply.

Everyone's calling dibs

Michael Shulman

Although the age of old wooden ships charting new territories has passed, the age of exploration is still upon us. Not only do we look toward the heavens and travel to other planets, but we continue exploring our own. Specifically, the continuous warming of the planet has melted much of the ice over the once frozen lands of the North Pole.

Many nations – including Russia, Canada, Denmark and the United States – are now claiming that these newly discovered land masses are under their control, due to connections far below the earth's surfaces where plates connect these areas. The North Pole is rich with natural resources – namely untapped reservoirs of natural gas. And with the ever-growing demand for oil, these new lands are being viewed as an alternative to importing high-priced petroleum from unstable regions like the Middle East.

The region's reshaping is creating many benefits to whoever controls this region. However, this 21st century race to the Pole is a complex situation that has already seen nations posturing and forcing their own intentions on the newest of the earth's resource-rich land.

These newly discovered areas of the North Pole have the potential to do great things for many people — if the situation is handled correctly.

Global warming has given renewed impetus to the race for control of the Arctic. Melting ice sheets would open up countless new waterways that once were dangerous trade routes. These routes, which could dramatically cut the length of a journey from Europe to Asia, could become navigable to commercial traffic within eight years.

And according to some estimates, the Arctic is home to a quarter of the world's untapped energy reserves – now more accessible than they ever have been. The money to be gained from faster trade and oil has created a dangerous situation with the amount of nations claiming stake over the area.

Russia has already sent an underwater submarine to the region to drop a capsule with a Russian flag enclosed and prematurely claim the land, citing Russian geologists' research that the polar region is connected to Russia. More frightening is Russian President Vladimir Putin's imperial ambitions of territorial expansion. Late last month, Moscow signaled its intentions to annex the entire North Pole, an area twice the size of France with Belgium and Switzerland thrown in. However, the vast majority of it is currently underwater.

Not to be outdone, the Danish government has also sent missions up to the region to claim ownership of the resource-rich lands by their assertion of its connection with Greenland. The United States also threw its hat into the arctic ring, using Alaska as a gateway to the North Pole – now I know why we wanted it as part of our country.

Unfortunately, all of this flag dropping and boating expedition to this frigid expanse is only for show, as the final decision regarding the land claim is left up to the United Nations. The U.N. convention on the Law of the Sea gives countries that are signatories to the treaty the possibility of challenging claims of seabed sovereignty if they want to assert their claims beyond the 200-mile zone.

This haphazard land grab is dangerous and controversial, and it proves two things: that global cooperation and togetherness do not apply when the prize is oil, and that the United Nations has once again proven its ineptitude in handling international conflict.

Before this posturing continues, one of two solutions must occur to prevent heightened conflict between two nuclear-equipped nations. The ideal forum to debate and settle upon and fair division of the lands to those who make legitimate, science-backed claims.

The second solution is for the United Nations to grow a pair and name the land international territory, which would be free from a single nation's control – as is the case with the seas. With these new internationally-owned resources, the United Nations can use oil and other resources to aid and assist poorer nations. Additionally, the new shipping lanes will be available for all to use and thus promote free and fair trade.

These newly discovered areas of the North Pole have the potential to do great things for many people – if the situation is handled correctly, but if a free-for-all land grab occurs without supervision or monitoring, the rich will only get richer, and conflicts that arise will be difficult to settle and will ultimately lead to a war over oil.

Lastly, we should think of all the elves and the Claus family who have been living in the North Pole for years. This takeover of the Pole would disturb the natural habitat for the reindeer. If we can't solve this issue between nations, we should probably consider how an oil drill would look next to Santa's workshop, or how well a mine-shaft would fit in the middle of the Land of Misfit Toys.

Michael Shulman is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at mshulman@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black to rattle the Cage

Comedian returns to UMass to perform for the third time

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Recent Grammy award winning comedian Lewis Black is the featured performer during the annual First Week festivities at UMass.

First Week at the University of Massachusetts is a time for getting into the college swing. For some it means getting reacquainted with campus, old friends and various weekend activities, while others deal with the issues of being away from home for the first time. As the stress of a new college year mounts, the widely accepted behavior of students is to rant and rave about our problems and the world around us. Luckily for UMass students, comedian, author and actor Lewis Black is coming to do that for us.

Black will be performing his unique brand of standup comedy at the Curry Hicks Cage on Saturday, Sept. 8, at 8 p.m. as part of the UMass First Week festivities.

Black, known best for his "Back in Black" segment on "The Daily Show With Jon Stewart," is a master of pointing out all that is stupid, illogical and unjust in society, which has made him popular in the world of comedy.

Over the last 10 years, the comic has had four Comedy Central specials, one HBO special, published his autobiography "Nothing's Sacred" in 2005, won a best comedy album Grammy award in 2007 for his 2006 release "The Carnegie Hall Performance," appeared on numerous television shows including "Law & Order: SVU" and "Harvey Birdman: Attorney at Law," and played major roles in the movies "Man of the Year," "Accepted" and "Unaccompanied Minors."

Despite his recent accolades, standup comedy is where Black truly shines. The brilliance of Black's routine is his style. Those who know Black from only "The Daily Show" have had just a taste of what he brings to a larger stage. The outrageous, ranting style of his four-minute segments is everything Black fans have come to expect, and what he delivers.

His over-the-top, sarcastic and often angry delivery, when discussing even the smallest silliness, leaves the audience questioning his sanity. Armed with profanity, shouting and vigorous angry finger waging, Black takes the absurdity of American culture and politics and tries to open the eyes of his audience.

Nobody is safe when Black picks up a microphone. Everyone from conservatives to liberals, Britney Spears to himself take a beating during his set. While he may hit on topics that every other comedian does, his confrontational technique and unique worldview make for a distinctive experience.

Black is not a man to be messed with when on stage and does not back down. During the sixth annual Bonnaroo music festival earlier this summer, Black made YouTube headlines when he joined fellow performers Gov't Mule on stage for a quick joke and was struck with

See BLACK on page 9

Pirates trilogy unforgettable

Depp and company reunite for the final showdown

BY CHRISTINA FONG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Pirates have never had this much style. In far-off Singapore, Davy Jones' locker, and an assemblage of pirates from all over the world, the final installment of the "Pirates of the Caribbean" trilogy has outdone its predecessors.

The film picks up from where it left off in "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest." With a surprising return from the dead, Captain Barbossa (Geoffrey Rush) heads the crew in search of witty Captain Jack Sparrow (Johnny Depp). Braving through uncharted seas, they encounter many pirate-worthy obstacles. However, Barbossa has his own reasons for bringing Jack back from Davy Jones' locker.

Tensions also arise between the betrothed Elizabeth Swann (Keira Knightley) and William Turner (Orlando Bloom). Elizabeth continues to suffer from guilt of sending Jack to his death. At the same time, Will sees her distress, as well as her kiss good-bye, as a sign of her love for Jack. The truth unravels itself when they finally find Jack, more peculiar than usual.

The core of the movie really centers on the battle between the British East India Company and the remainder of a dying breed of pirates. Lord Cutler Beckett (Tom Hollander of "Pride and Prejudice") now controls the Flying Dutchman, its crew, and its captain Davy Jones with the possession of the Dead Man's Chest. With the Dutchman at the helm of their fleet, pirates from around the world must convene and prepare themselves for their final stand.

The colorful band of pirate lords that come together to discuss the problem at hand are actual historical characters. They each paint a picture of the rest of the world. Whether or not historical accuracy was strongly considered in depicting each of them, they sure look the part of Hollywood-worthy pirates.

Chow Yun-Fat ("Curse of the Golden Flower") as Captain Sao Feng makes an appearance as the pirate lord from Singapore. His exotic appearance and not-so-warm welcome to Barbossa and Elizabeth in the beginning set the tone for the rest of the film. The most amusing cameo made was Keith Richards as Jack Sparrow's father, Captain Teague. The resemblance was uncanny. His performance was brief but the look on Jack's face when he comes across his father was altogether delicious.

In addition, the visuals are phenomenal. During the search for Jack Sparrow, the crew finds themselves sailing in a beautiful optical illusion of starry night seas and skies.

The sets and costumes for the third film were terrifically done. The movie shows off its special effects skills in a turbulent maelstrom that erupts, trapping the Black Pearl and the Flying Dutchman in a battle to the death. Everyone is thrown around while swords are flying about. Davy Jones and Jack Sparrow find themselves engaged in a depth-defying sword fight in the midst of a raging storm and monstrous whirlpool. The thrill ride

See PIRATES on page 9

COURTESY WALT DISNEY

The third installment of the "Pirates" series focused on the tensions between Keira Knightley and her onscreen love interest Orlando Bloom.

Day one recap of Lollapalooza 2007

BY ALEX HORNBECK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note: this is part one of a three-part series about the 2007 Lollapalooza Festival held in Chicago

Plenty of people were excited to see Pearl Jam at Lollapalooza 2007. I'd estimate that on the third and final day of the festival, roughly one in 10 attendees was sporting a Pearl Jam shirt. At an event that drew a crowd of 200,000, that's a pretty significant number. So I think it's only fair to advise you to take note, dear reader, that this reporter didn't stick around for Eddie Vedder and company on Sunday night.

After spending the early evening at a dance party served up by Chicago natives Hoostradamus and Kid Sister, standing with thousands upon thousands of people to watch a band I don't particularly like from hundreds of feet away just didn't seem that inviting. But the festival, for all its big names and commercialism, remains a legitimate venue for those bands still off popular culture's radar.

Midday Friday found Chicago heating up without a cloud in the sky. As I made my way from a subway stop, I found myself quickly disoriented. Walking towards what I thought was Grant Park, I soon came across busy Lakeshore Drive and Lake Michigan just beyond it. By the time I asked for directions and made my way north and into the festival, I had already gained a layer of sweat that was only to thicken as the day continued.

In light of the already uncomfortable weather, the potential for huge crowds was daunting, but it seemed as if many potential attendees were still at school or work. As I made my way past the elegant Clarence Buckingham Fountain at the entrance to Grant Park, the nearly mile-long stretch of booths and tents seemed relatively empty. I downed a bottle of water in preparation for the dehydration to come and began the trek toward the south end of the festival.

A few hundred people were gathered at the MySpace stage, where The Fratellis were mid-set. Despite an especially energetic drummer I quickly lost interest – the band seemed like a Supergrass-lite birthed years past relevancy. After a few songs I scurried over to the Citi Stage to catch the beginning of the aptly-named Illinois. With the Sears Tower visible through the back of the stage, it seemed only fitting that this was the first act I'd properly catch in Chicago.

When the Pennsylvania band emerged (yes, the group is called Illinois, but they're from Pennsylvania), they were met with a round of brief applause from fans already resting under the shade of trees to the stage's sides. Illinois soon launched into a set of cacophonous pop held together by singer Chris Archibald's banjo noodlings. The uniquely fractured Americana came as a welcome relief after The Fratellis' tired Britpop.

Soon enough, however, the first of many sound problems to plague the festival arrived. During Illinois' second song, neither Archibald's microphone nor keyboard functioned and he was left shrugging at the sound tent for several minutes. He held his composure but seemed understandably frustrated at the apparent lack of help. As it finally returned at the end of the song and the band triumphantly carried on with no apparent loss of enthusiasm.

Kicking off the day's festivities over at the south end's main stage was Ghostland Observatory of Austin, Texas. Singer Aaron Behrens, donning a pair of aviators and two long braids, seemed straight out of a Tony Hillerman novel, while Thomas Ross Turner, manning synthesizer and drums and donning a long blue cape, held a curious resemblance to Boo Berry.

The countless comparisons between Behrens and Freddie Mercury are apt – androgynous, animated, and with an ability to put the crowd's attention in a stranglehold, the singer jumped and thrust across the stage, tossing and twirling his microphone over his head and between his legs. Tearing through the tracks off their first (and only) two albums, the band's dance-inspiring performance was a fitting opening act on the stage where Daft Punk would later close the night.

At 1:30 p.m., Ted Leo and the Pharmacists took the stage a few hundred feet away. Leo was wearing a black button-down shirt and black jeans, and I was impressed with him before he starting playing. He and his band, joined by sometimes-Pharmacist James Canty on guitar, launched into a set unsurprisingly heavy on tunes from their newest album, "Living with the Living."

The normally hyper-energetic Leo seemed somewhat lacking in

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page 10

Singer and songwriter M.I.A. was a big hit at this year's Lollapalooza Festival. She energized the crowd when she climbed on top of the stage's scaffolding to perform "Paper Planes," a new track off her most recent album.

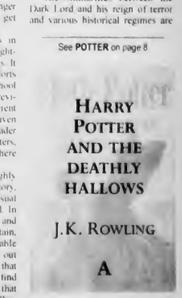
Final Potter book is epic, satisfying

BY SYDNEY TOWNS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The modern-day epic that is Harry Potter could not have ended any differently. Despite the legions of adults who've read the books and perhaps even obsessed a bit over them, author J.K. Rowling didn't set out to write adult fiction. The series has always been intended for an audience of children – even though the stories and the characters have matured throughout the seven books, that basic fact must be remembered.

Given its indisputable foundation in children's literature, the entire 750-plus page adventure of "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows" was both pleasantly predictable in its ultimate conclusion and yet gloriously surprising in the path that the three main characters, Harry Potter, Hermione Granger and Ron Weasley, took to get there.

"The Deathly Hallows" is in many ways darker and more frightening than the preceding novels. It is set largely outside the comforts of Hogwarts, the boarding school that has so dominated the previous six books. There is an inherent danger in removing the safe haven of Hogwarts. For both the reader and the central trio of characters, Hogwarts is a strange world where life makes sense.



Rowling has so thoroughly described each hallway, dormitory, professor and painting that unusual happenings are easily accepted. In the bustling streets of London and the isolated wilderness of Britain, however, even the predictable occurrence is suspect. It is out there, in the great unknown, that Harry, Hermione, and Ron find themselves when they decide that the mission headmaster Albus Dumbledore gave them before his death is more important than finishing school.

Horcruxes, and the search for them, dominate most of the novel. In an effort to protect his life, Voldemort divided his soul into several pieces, each of which he then hid in an ordinary object and distributed throughout the world. Dumbledore assigned Harry the task of destroying each horcrux before ultimately facing Voldemort.

This results in an almost overwhelming frustration for the trio, as exactly what and where the horcruxes are is unknown. Their feelings of helplessness increase as Voldemort and his followers infiltrate the Ministry of Magic and begin a program of racial discrimination, targeting Muggles throughout the wizarding world.

The similarities between the Dark Lord and his reign of terror and various historical regimes are

See POTTER on page 8

Potter gets closer to dark side

Young wizard faces biggest onscreen challenge to date

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

As if Harry Potter (Daniel Radcliffe) didn't have enough problems to deal with, he faces a grimmer school term at Hogwarts as his fifth year begins. Adolescence only proves to be a dismal time for the young, emotionally down wizard.

Staff and students are still reeling from the death of Cedric Diggory. After hearing Harry's claim that Voldemort (Ralph Fiennes) has returned in all his maleficent glory, Hogwarts and the rest of the wizarding community has turned their back on the once-heralded boy wonder. Even headmaster Albus Dumbledore appears to have less favor for Harry as he faces blows from the community for defending him.

Upon their arrival at Hogwarts, Harry must not only face cold peers but also new, by-the-book, pink-loving Defense Against the Dark Arts professor Dolores Umbridge (Imelda Staunton). Along with the Ministry of Magic, she refuses to believe the Dark Lord has returned. Staunton ("Freedom Writers") is wickedly good in playing a character the audience can't help but hate. At times, she appears bipolar: polite and soft-spoken one minute, then fierce and strident the next.

Once Umbridge manages to replace Dumbledore as headmaster, she becomes hungry for power and frantically turns Hogwarts upside down with all her rules and regulations. In response to her restrictions, the students rally together to privately practice their defense against the dark arts, which has been banned like everything else. Harry regains most of his peers' trust and becomes the teacher of what the group affectionately calls "Dumbledore's Army."

Harry suffers more troubles, however, than the average teenage wizard. With Voldemort at large and on his tail, he must rely on old friends and allies. They include Ron Weasley (Rupert Grint), Hermione Granger (Emma Watson), and godfather Sirius Black (Gary Oldman), who's part of the Order of the Phoenix, a band of wizards dedicated to bringing down Voldemort and his followers, the Death Eaters.

Despite the fact they're growing more mature with each film, Radcliffe, Grint and Watson still have the same charisma throughout. Oldman ("Batman Begins") does a great job returning as the loving guardian Harry never had. It's a shame there isn't a bit more screen time for Alastor "Mad-Eye" Moody (Brendan Gleeson) and Remus Lupin (David Thewlis). The addition of Helena Bonham Carter ("Corpse Bride") to the cast was a wonderfully delicious surprise. Her performance as Bellatrix Lestrange was crazed, fiendish, and perfect for the role as a Death Eater.

Of all the "Harry Potter" films, this one is by the far the darkest and most complex. Harry is constantly facing tragedies, putting him under an unrelenting rain cloud. At times, the film itself feels like one big rain cloud. Certain scenes of a contemplative or brooding Harry lag rather than add to the plot. Because a majority of it deals with Harry and his internal problems, the film seems to have lost the charm and, not to sound cliché, magic of its predecessors. The presence of the wildly popular game of Quidditch has also dwindled in each film. It wasn't even mentioned in "Order of the Phoenix."

This is David Yates' first time directing a Harry Potter film and his first big blockbuster. His direction led the film away from the other "Harry Potter" films a bit. It wasn't horrible, but it took away from the consistency that keeps fans hooked. Sadly, that familiar and whimsical musical tune usually associated with Harry Potter wasn't heard all through the film.

The audience can still count on the return of Alan Rickman as Severus Snape, the professor who seems to be out to get Harry and at the same time, watching out for him.

One of the few things that put a twinkle in that wizard's eye is his budding romance with Cho Chang (Katie Leung). The two finally share a much anticipated first kiss. Watching Harry fumbling around Cho and finally working up the nerve to make a move was golden. Everyone in Hogwarts is growing up.

Most of the film's action and special effects are packed towards the last half hour. Although the audience will have to wait for it, the fight scenes are well worth it. The young wizards are put in real danger and finally put their magic to good use. The showdown between the Order of the Phoenix and the Death Eaters is awesomely fun to watch. The audience will even get to see Dumbledore epitomize power and style.

The most recent of the "Harry Potter" series may not be the best of all the films, but it is interesting in depicting a troubled Harry being drawn closer and closer to the dark truth about Voldemort and himself. Magic becomes more interesting and complicated than ever.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

HARRY POTTER AND THE ORDER OF THE PHOENIX

STARRING
DANIEL RADCLIFFE

B

(c)(tm) Kinet Warner Brothers

Potter is all grown up in "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix" and shares his first kiss with romantic interest Cho Chang.

(c)(tm) Kinet Warner Brothers

The struggle between good and evil that brewed over the course of the seven book series ended with Potter's confrontation of Voldemort.

Loyalty tested in final Hogwarts battle not lost on the adult reader. Indeed, when contemplating the battle of purebloods versus Muggles and half-bloods that Rowling creates in the first novel and explores throughout the series, it is nearly impossible not to think of the Nazis in Europe or the civil rights struggle in the United States.

POTTER from page 7

These references and Rowling's completely absorbing writing join forces to cast a shadow over much of the book. It leaves the reader with a fear for the safety of the main characters and also an overarching dread about a world where evil like that embodied by Voldemort and his followers not only exists, but reigns.

While searching for the horcruxes and battling Voldemort, the main characters are all forced to explore who they are and what they stand for. Rowling's ability to create full, flawed characters who connect with the reader is no doubt what has given the series such worldwide acclaim. What simultaneously sets apart "The Deathly Hallows" and completes the saga is the conclusion of the trio's evolution from innocent children exploring a magical world to road-weary young adults who have found something they believe is worth fighting and perhaps even dying for.

We learn that the mental connection Rowling established early that exists between Voldemort and Harry is because of the horcruxes. In creating them Voldemort left his soul in a damaged state. When the attempt to kill Harry as a toddler failed, a piece of his soul splintered and embedded itself in Harry. This fact and Dumbledore's mission raise an interesting dilemma: If a bit of Voldemort's soul exists in Harry, can he ever truly be vanquished if Harry lives?

That question and the ongoing battle between good and evil culminate at Hogwarts with actual bloodshed. It is an explosion of walls, emotions, histories and loyalties that in the end leaves the reader completely exhilarated, drained and ultimately satisfied.

Sydney Towne can be reached at stowne@student.umass.edu.

GO GREEK !
ΑΒΓΔΕΖΗΘΙΚΛΜΝΞΟΠΡΣΤΥΦΧΨΩαβγδεζη

UMass Greeks' Ben & Jerry's FREE Ice Cream Scoop @ the Campus Carnival!

When: Thursday, September 6th
Time: 12-4pm
Where UMass Library Lawn
FREE Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream scooped by your very own UMass Greeks!

UMass Greek Recruitment Info. Session!!
When: Monday, September 10th
Time: 7:00pm
Where: Student Union Ballroom (next to the Campus Center)
www.umass.edu/greek

UDance is going to be November 9th and 10th in the Curry Hicks Cage at UMass.
Mark your calenders!
http://www.udance.org/

University of Massachusetts Amherst
UDance
DANCE MARATHON FUNDRAISER TO BENEFIT CHILDREN'S MIRACLE NETWORK

Exceptional cast impresses fans

PIRATES from page 7

never ends.

"Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End" is much improved from the confusing and somewhat off "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest." This does not mean it won't have the audience scratching their heads, trying to comprehend some rough corners of the plot. Although the technicalities of the Davy Jones story and curse aren't entirely clear, the rollercoaster ride of watching the movie makes up for it.

Star power, though, was what truly made the film. Depp's performance as the eccentric yet wonderfully clever captain of the crew is unforgettable. He infused so much wit and humor into the role that Captain Jack Sparrow will be beloved for many years to come. Rush ("Munich") did a great job in complimenting Depp's performance, as well as playing the returning rival just trying to regain control of the Black Pearl once more. Depp and Rush make for a good comical duo. Knightly ("Pride and Prejudice") and Bloom ("Kingdom of Heaven"), if nothing else, are there to smile and look devilishly good. However, they were given some acting room to let their characters grow since the "The Curse of the Black Pearl." Bill Nighy ("Tot Fuzz") gave a great villainous performance as Davy Jones, considering he was predominately a computer-animated character.

"At World's End" has a fitting conclusion to such a grand pirate tale. Don't expect the perfect Hollywood, off-into-the-sunset kind of ending, although it's still just as good. This 168-minute film is more thematic and entertaining than any Disney theme park ride and almost any of this summer's blockbusters.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

PIRATES OF THE CARIBBEAN: AT WORLD'S END

STARRING
JOHNNY DEPP

B+

(c)(tm) Walt Disney

The elaborate art design in the movie has previously won an academy award. One of the standout features is the pirates' wardrobe.

'Daily Show' star to welcome class of 2011

One of Lewis Black's many accomplishments is his role as a fake dean of students in the film "Accepted," alongside actor Justin Long. Black played an angry university administrator reflective of his standup comedy persona.

LEWIS BLACK

SEPTEMBER 8

CURRY HICKS CAGE

8:00 P.M.

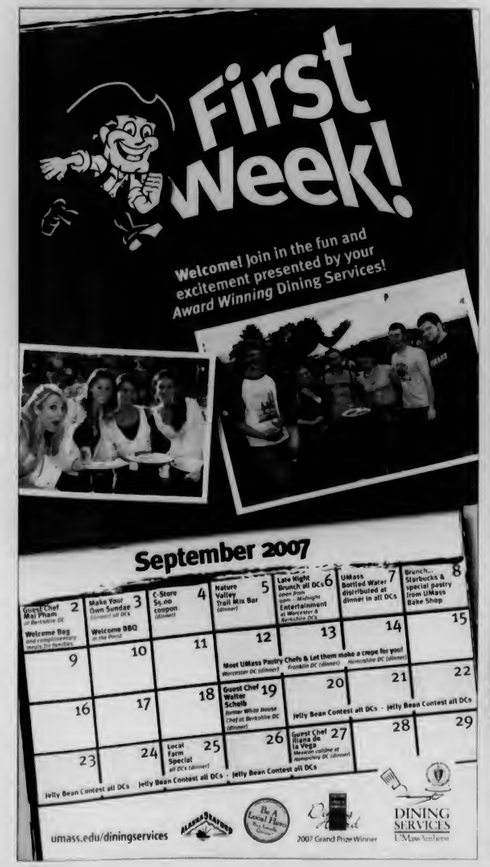
$10

BLACK from page 7

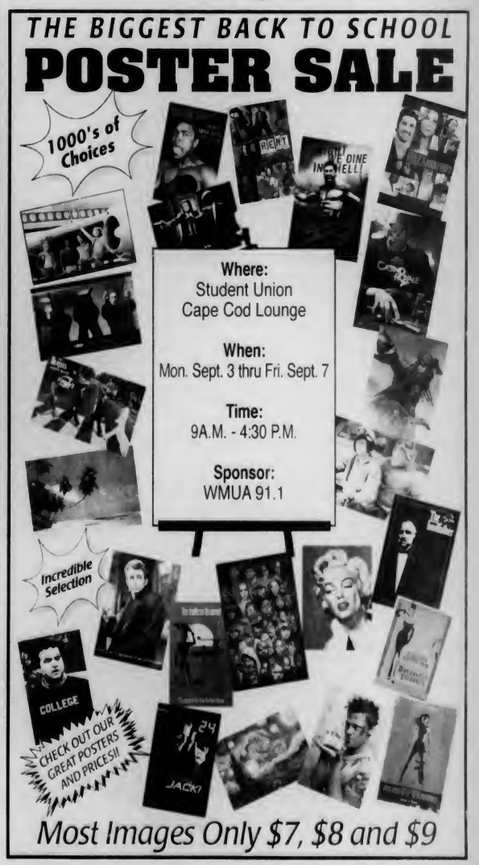
a bottle thrown by an attendee. He then proceeded to verbally attack the thrower and encouraged the crowd to boo him before leaving the stage. A video of the incident was posted on the popular website.

This is not the first time that Black has performed at UMass or during First Week. Each of his last two visits have included some altercation between the comic and the crowd that got the campus talking. Back in April of 2002, problems arose when a joke about Britney Spears and the Super Bowl Halftime show led to some pro-Spears cheers. The reaction struck a negative chord with Black, who almost seemed genuinely angry with the cheering crowd.

He responded to the cheers by saying, "[N]o. You didn't mean that. You could not have possibly meant that. Don't make me re-evaluate my position on this school."



The last time Black was on campus was an infamous performance during First Week 2004, which some seasoned students may remember. On several occasions Black had to ask members of the Mullins Center crowd to refrain from yelling things out. Most were able to oblige, but Black was forced to deal with one attendee who continued to interrupt and yelled out: "You suck! Stop."



Black then put an end to the disturbance. "You know, sir, I am the only one on tonight. There's no one after me," he snapped. "No tap dancing or singing, and I'm not going to do any of that mime shit you're into. So if you don't like it there is a very simple solution – leave! There's the door," at which point the crowd cheered.

As with any comedy show, there is no way of telling what is in store for the Curry Hicks crowd and whether or not there will be a repeat of Black's last appearances. But when a comedian with Black's style and political target performs for a college crowd, anything is possible.

Tickets for Lewis Black's comedy show are $10 and are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office with a UCard ID.

Ryan McEskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

SEP 5 2007

Musicians rocked under hot Chicago sun

LOLLAPALOOZA from page 7

his usual intensity, though, and it noticeably affected the force of some songs. "Colleen," already one of the weaker offerings off the new album, dragged markedly, and even "Me and Mia" didn't seem as enthused as usual. But the one-two punch of "Annunciation Day Born on Christmas Day" and "Bomb. Repeat.Bomb." served as a shot in the arm to the set and I decided to leave on this high note.

Skip forward a few hours and an overpriced bratwurst later and I found myself a few rows back at the Bud Light Stage, where M.I.A. was about to start. Backed by Low Budget, the DJ most well-known for teaming up with Diplo to form mash-up team extraordinaire Hollertronix, Maya Arulpragasam was dressed in silver sequined shorts and a Technicolor shirt, a look perfectly matching the left field aesthetic of her album art. Her voice was hoarse and she regularly stopped to spray her throat with a mist Jack White had overnighted her, but it didn't detract from her enthusiasm.

Baltimore club-influenced track "XR2" off new album "Kala" got the crowds dancing, but it was older songs like "Bucky Done Gone" which got the most response. Low Budget added a little flavor to the set by transitioning "10 Dollar" into "I RAQT" with the Eurhythmics' "Sweet Dreams." Pulling a Tim Commerford, M.I.A. climbed the stage's left scaffolding during new track "Paper Planes," coming to stand atop the 10-foot stack of amplifiers, before ending the set with her first and biggest hit, "Galang."

Though headliners Daft Punk weren't set to take the stage for another three hours, I decided to make my way back to the AT&T Stage to stake out a place for the show later that night. Lollapalooza founder Perry Farrell and his new band, Satellite Party, were just taking the stage as I arrived. Farrell and his band, backed by wife Etty Farrell, put on a flamboyant show full of tunes from his days in Jane's Addiction and Porno for Pyros. Spitting champagne and sipping from a mug of Jägermeister, Farrell seemed to have the time of his life as he belted out old favorites and new jams, always the entertainer.

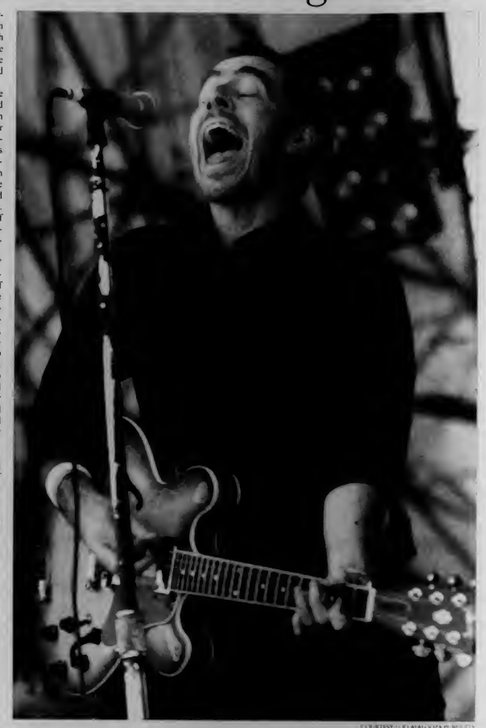
Many in the crowd ate it up; some, however, were merely biding their time until the evening's headliner.

Minutes after Satellite Party ended their set, James Murphy's LCD Soundsystem started things up again at the nearby Myspace Stage. The fact that the band played directly before Daft Punk was perhaps the most egregious billing error made at Lollapalooza this year. The two bands share many fans and it was difficult to choose between seeing LCD Soundsystem or securing a decent spot for Daft Punk, whose last tour was 10 years ago. I remained at the AT&T Stage, where a black curtain was pulled into place to hide the elaborate set being constructed.

An hour later, as Murphy instructed the crowd to "go over there" as he pointed towards the AT&T Stage, fog began to pour out from behind the curtain. Soon enough, as thousands of fans cheered and yelled, the extra-terrestrial melody from "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" began and the curtain was pulled back to reveal a 30-foot tall pyramid, still lit by the last rays of the setting sun. Thomas Bangalter and Guy-Manuel de Homem-Christo appeared at its top, dressed up as their robot counterparts, complete with elaborate masks, gloves, and leather jackets. Before the music even started, the French duo had received the loudest response to any act of the festival so far.

A booming, digitized voice announcing "robot" blasted into the crowd, followed shortly by a response of "human." The two words played back and forth, gaining speed for a good minute before leading into "Robot Rock," one of the stronger offerings from Daft Punk's last album, "Human After All." The appropriately massive sound had perfect clarity, and the sound problems that had plagued acts (and continued to for the next two days) were completely absent for the entirety of the set.

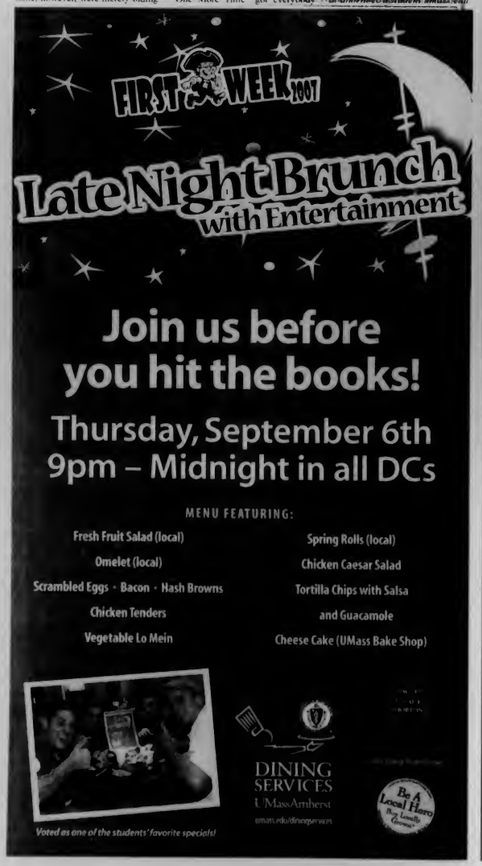
The duo played hit after hit with machinelike precision, mashing up great song after great song. The vocals from "Face to Face" over an arpeggiated "Harder, Better, Faster, Stronger" gradually accelerated from painstaking slowness into exhilarating speed; "Steam Machine" transitioned flawlessly into "Around the World" and the crowd of thousands sang along to the latter's chorus; "One More Time" got everybody jumping and a seven-minute version of "Aerodynamic" kept them jumping. The night was full of such musical moments that would've been extraordinary even without the flawless visual show also presented by the group.



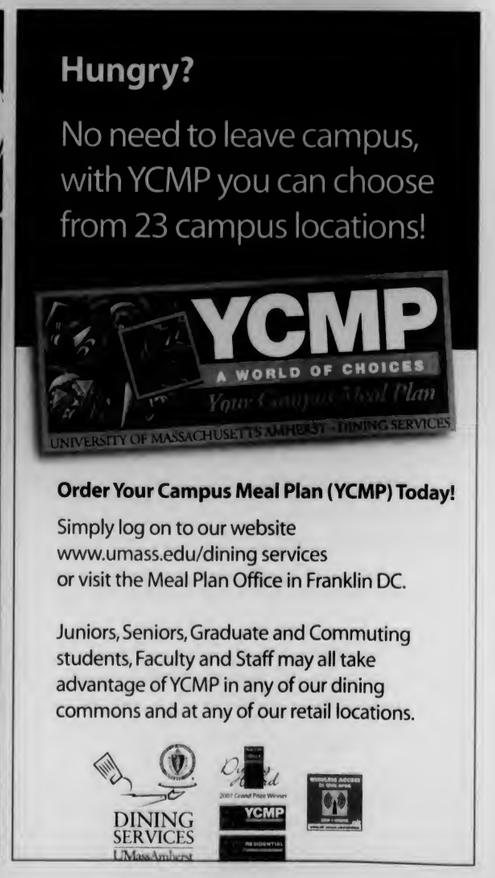
Halfway through the night the pyramid's sides began to flash and it became evident that they were in fact huge LCD screens, allowing for television-quality images to be displayed at the duo's command. This was in addition to the lights bordering the pyramid, a hanging screen of triangular light fixtures, and the entire back of the stage, also covered in lights, all controlled separately. The audio and visual components of the show combined perfectly to create a completely unique and unforgettable presentation.

With a mash-up of "Superheroes" and "Human After All," accompanied by rapidly flashing shots of human faces on the sides of the pyramid, Daft Punk threw their diamonds in the sky (perhaps as a reference to Chicago's own Kanye West, the shape of their performance vessel, or both) and left the stage to absolutely thunderous applause. Ten minutes later they returned to perform an encore that combined "One More Time," "Human After All," the Thomas Bangalter and DJ Falcon single "Together," and Stardust's "Music Sounds Better with You."

In the most astounding visual moment of the evening, two red lines appeared to cross the screen of lights, traverse the pyramid's sides, and finally crawl up into the performers themselves, whose jackets and helmets suddenly lit up in a series of red outlines. As the encore ended, the duo turned around and the words "Daft Punk" appeared in lights on their backs. It was a fitting end to a spectacular night.



Despite the many great shows that were to come over the next two days, I had just witnessed the performance of the festival. Walking back to the subway stop, sweaty and exhausted, I felt overwhelmingly satisfied, even considering my exceedingly high expectations for the night. I would return the next day to cooler weather and solid performances from Clap Your Hands Say Yeah, The Hold Steady, and more.



Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu

FOURTEEN-O-CLAD/COLLEGIAN PHOTO

Ted Leo and the Pharmacists played an exceptional set of material off their latest album "Living with the Living" at this year's music festival in Chicago.

New system for UM

Change in formation forces Maroon and White to adapt

By MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though preseason competition can be a good way for a coach to determine his team's strengths, it's still not a suitable replacement for the real thing. This season, the Massachusetts men's soccer team changed its formation from 4-3-3 from a 4-4-2 lineup in an effort to increase goal production.

UMass Soccer

In theory, bringing an extra player to the forward position should allow for more goals. But as UMass coach Sam Koch admits from coaching his team to a victory and a loss thus far, it's just not that simple.

"The formation is always blending and shifting," Koch said. "The formation itself is just a number – it gives us more width in our attack and helped to clarify what people's roles are."

Though working from a small sample set, the team's two goals in two games is an improvement over last year's average of .74 goals per game. It certainly remains to be seen whether the Minutemen can survive a difficult conference schedule without increased goal production.

In addition to becoming comfortable with the new formation, Koch acknowledges that his team needs to take better care of the ball if it wants to increase scoring opportunities.

"The midfield support to the frontrunners is something that needs to be a little sharper," Koch said. "I thought there were times when we forced balls in situations when could have played it to the midfielder or to the back that was behind us. We forced balls forward when it would have been easier to keep possession by playing that simple ball back."

But even taking care of the ball and manufacturing quality scoring chances are not always enough to win a soccer game. For example, the Minutemen took eight shots in their 2-1 win over Dartmouth on Monday – one less than their season average from 2006. Two days earlier, the team launched 15 balls toward the goal in a 1-0 loss to Maine.

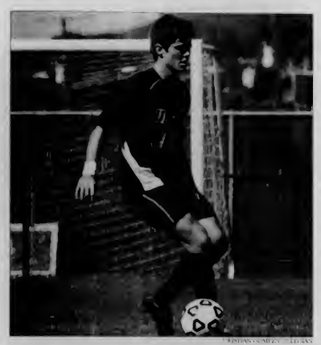
With a lot of opportunities, being unable to score a goal can wear on a team's confidence and force it to over-press on the pitch. But Koch believes that his team was able to keep its composure against Maine on Saturday.

"As the game went on, the more we were kept off the board, the more you could see that it was frustrating for some," Koch said. "But I think the team did a really good job of staying focused, as they stuck to the game plan and we were doing everything that we needed to do to create chances to score and win, but we just couldn't get that last one."

KICKED INTO A CORNER

Though most of the sport is played at a fast pace, some of soccer's best scoring opportunities come from set positions. Free and corner kicks provide the unique opportunity for an offense to take control of the game.

However, the Minutemen have yet to take advantage of a corner kick this season, though the team's chances varied between the two games. The Maroon and White had 10 opportunities against Maine, including two in the overtime period. Two days later, the team had only one chance.



Corner kicks are typically a good indicator of how well an offense plays. The higher number of corners usually means more a team dominated the time of possession and put a significant number of shots on net. Interestingly, those figures do not correspond with the team's win-loss record.

ARIKIAN EFFORT

Coming into a team loaded with upperclassmen and experience, it can be difficult for freshman to find playing time, much less a starting role. However, first-year midfielder Ben Arikian started the first two games of the 2007 season. He's the only freshman on the roster to see significant playing time.

The West Islip, N.Y., native plays an attacking midfield position on the right side. His complex responsibility on the pitch is to create opportunities for the forwards, as well as controlling the game around the middle of the field. In addition to these responsibilities, the Minutemen need Arikian to score goals … Against Dartmouth, the Minutemen committed five offsides infractions, while managing only one at Maine … UMass sported a 2-1-3 record in overtime games last season and is 1-1 with the extra period in two games this year.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Junior Tony Bassett and the Minutemen had 10 corner kicks in their 1-0 loss to Maine, but failed to convert any into goals.

UMass offense struggles at Maine

M. SOCCER from page 16

toward Dartmouth goalkeeper Sean Milligan. The ball didn't slow as it approached the net and it easily sailed past a diving Milligan into the top right corner.

"It was an unbelievable strike, one of the best I've ever seen," senior Kenny Cook said. "There was a free kick from about 40 yards out and one of the Dartmouth players cleared it. Doug got it after it was cleared and he just took it and blasted it. It went right into the upper corner."

Koch knew Rappaport possessed the ability to take these shots, but said the power of the shot still surprised him.

After the goal, the Big Green turned on the offensive pressure with three shots in the final 15 minutes of the first half. Zack Simmons maintained the one-goal lead by pushing all shots aside. He also halted any potential rushes by fisting balls played into the box away from the goal.

Dartmouth did manage to tie the game in the 62nd minute when Craig Henderson knocked in his own rebound after Simmons made the initial save.

Simmons played well in the game and made up for some shoddy defensive play from the UMass backfield. On Henderson's goal, there were no defenders around to clear the ball after it deflected off Simmons. The Big Green challenged Simmons four more times after tying the game, but the red-shirt junior was up to each one.

"I thought [Simmons' play] was solid," Koch said. "He had his angles down well and picked a lot of balls off that were in the air against a pretty big [Dartmouth] team. The one goal he allowed, he made a great initial save, but the ball went right back to the guy who shot it and he put it away. And we probably could've had someone there to clear it away, but we didn't."

Dartmouth started the extra session off with a corner kick, which provided its only chance of the period. Nick Christman lobbed the ball in from the left corner right on the head of Bryan Giudicelli, who effortlessly deflected it toward net. But Simmons was there again to preserve the tie.

The Maroon and White got its lone chance in the 93rd minute of play following an interception in its defensive zone.

"The play started with Build up in the midfield and the ball was played up onto the left to Mark DeSantis," Cook said. "He took the ball on and Prince was running through the box unmarked. And Mark put it right on his foot and Prince just spotted it, back post."

Ofosu impressed Koch with the patience he displayed by converting in such a crucial situation. In the past, he missed opportunities in similar circumstances by rushing his attempt.

The Minutemen dropped two forwards back into the midfield after the goal to clog the lanes into Dartmouth's offensive zone. The Big Green failed to force another quality chance in the remaining time and the Minutemen left Hanover, N.H., with their first win of the 2007 season.

In their game at Maine, the statistics painted a portrait game that greatly differed from the actual result. The Minutemen constantly applied pressure to the Maine defense and fell victim to a counterattack in the 88th minute on a breakaway goal.

Of their 15 shots on goal, the Minutemen had several chances that should have resulted in goals.

In the 19th minute of the game, sophomore Bryan Hogan broke in alone on Maine goalkeeper Nemanja Kosic. Kosic charged Hogan to cut down the angle, and Hogan, not the greatest finisher in the box, hit the ball too hard and Kosic made an easy save.

In the second overtime period, the Minutemen had two corner kicks, but failed to convert either into a shot. Freshmen Ben Arikian took the first corner kick of the period, but his cross was headed out of bounds by a Maine defender before it could reach any of the Minutemen players.

Sophomore Mark DeSantis assisted on Prince Ofosu's game-winning goal against Dartmouth on Monday in overtime.

- WE DELIVER
- 30-DAY COMFORT GUARANTEE*
*See store for details
- STUDENT FRIENDLY
All employees are either UMass Alumni or current students at UMass
- ON-SITE STORAGE FOR FAST, EASY PICK-UP

LOWEST PRICES IN THE VALLEY

PLATFORM BEDS
100% Hardwood
FROM $188

MATTRESSES
FROM $77
Serta
Sealy

FUTON MATTRESSES
FROM $124

FUTON FRAMES
FROM $118

HOURS Mon.-Sat. 10:30-6 Sun. 12-4
413-253-2537

FACTORY DIRECT
DISCOUNT MATTRESS WAREHOUSE INC.
Rte 9, Amherst
DISCOUNT MATTRESS
RTE. 9

THE BOLTWOOD
PROJECT™
139 years of service—and counting!
A STUDENT / COMMUNITY SERVICE LEARNING PROGRAM
(an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored prog.)

REACH OUT—AND BECOME A SPECIAL FRIEND TO PEOPLE WITH SPECIAL NEEDS
Your life will NEVER be the same!
••EARN 1-2 CREDITS •GAIN VALUABLE EXPERIENCE •REWARDING, CHALLENGING, and FUN
Fall Semester 2007 — Recruitment Nights
You must attend ONE of these meetings. No exceptions, even if you have participated before!
6:00-8:00 PM (Note: Prompt starting time!!!)
Campus Center Room 101 • Sept. 10 (Mon) • Sept. 11 (Tues) • Sept. 12 (Wed)
*Assignment notification ONLY Thurs. Sept. 13th. Boltwood table CC Concourse
*No telephone enquiries. YOU (or a friend) must pickup the notification letter!
Volunteer, while earning credit!

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to An. Science	Engin 110	Intro to Comp. Engr	MIE 210
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro to C & A	MIE 1 901
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to CET	MIE 1 902
Anthro 102-A	Arch. & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Matls. &	Mu Hist 160
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	Engl WP 111/112		Music 100
Anthro 104-A	Culture,Soc. & People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env. Biology	Music 101
Art Hist 100	Survey:Ancient & Med	EnvSci 112	Envrl Issues in Food	Music 105
Art Hist 115	Intro. To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro. to Environ	Nursing 100
Astron 100 1-4	Intro. To Astronomy	EnvDes 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 170
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	FoMgt 250	Quant. Tools/Mgt	Nursing 301
Bio/BioChem 285	Cell & Molec. Biology	FoMgt 300	Envrl Hist/Issues	Nursing 341
BioChem 420	Elem Biochemistry	FoMgt 301	Corp. Finance	Nursing 427
BioChem 471	Elem. Physical Chem	FoMgt 304	Intro. Envrl Economics	Nutr. 490
BioChem 523	General BioChemistry	FoMgt 320	Investments	Ehrl 110
Bio 100 A1-A4 B D	Intro to Biology 1	Forest 528	Forest & Wildlife Mgt	Philosophy
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem French I	Physics 100
Bio 105	Biology of Soc. Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Climate	Physics 131
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 132
Bio 108	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Environment	Physics 151
Bio 290	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro. to Oceanography	Physics 152
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic Earth	Physics 211
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem. German I	Physics 241
Chem 111/112	Gen.Chem.-Sci. Majors	Hist 111	World Hist. to 1500	Physics 253
Chem 261/262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 101 A	Western Heritage	Physics 272
Chem 269	Org. Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist. of Islam I	Psych 100
Chem 471	Elem. Phys. Chem	Hist 150	Hist. US: Colonial	Psych 105
CmpSci 105	Intro. To Comp. Sci.	Hist 151 A	Hist. US: Civil War	Psych 270
CmpSci 120	Problem Solving w/Inte	HT Mgt 100	Intro to Hosp. & Tour	Psych 275
Cmpsci 187-A	Program. W/ Data Struc	HT Mgt 150	Food Prod.	Psych 280
CmpSci 287	Prog. Lang. Paradigms	HT Mgt 250	Food Service	Psych 320
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	HT Mgt 260	Hosp. Personnel Mgt	Psych 341
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 350
Comm 240	Modes of Film Comm.	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 370
ComDis 210	Intro. To Comm. Disor	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutr.	Psych 375
ComDis 211	Anat & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Personal & Comm. Hlth	Psych 380
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang. Disor	Kin 297 A, C	Anatomy & Physiol. I	Psych 390
Econ 103 A-F	Intro. To Microeconomic	Kin 300	Derm. Supp. & Athl.	Soc 100, A, D
Econ 104	Intro. To MacroEcon	Kin 440	Nutrition in Health	Spanish 110
Econ 203 A-B	Intro. Microecon Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills	Spanish 126
Econ 204-B	Intro. Macroecon. The	Math 101-104	Prob. & Algebra	Spanish 211
Econ 305	Marxian Economics	Math 113	Math for Elem. Teach
ECE 572	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Alg. & Appl.

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept 1 - Sept 16

Penalties haunt Minutemen in opener

FOOTBALL from page 16

Probably the second-largest hole that needed to be filled after running back was punter, where another standout, Christian Koegel, left for graduation. Junior Brett Arnold and red-shirt junior Ryan Logan competed throughout camp for the job, with Arnold being the last-minute winner. Arnold punted six times for an average of 44.3 yards per punt.

In other position battles, junior George Byrd beat out red-shirt sophomore Josh Jennings at the weakside linebacker. Byrd finished tied for the third on the team in total tackles with six. He also recorded one of the team's five sacks.

At cornerback, Sean Smalls had decisively earned the starting job on one side of the field, and senior Brandon Freeman won the other spot over junior Courtney Robinson.

Freeman had three solo tackles in the game, but Robinson had a good day as well, running back a kickoff 100 yards for a score.

At free safety, sophomore Jeremy Miles beat out red-shirt junior Brian Ellis. Miles led the team with five solo tackles and six total. Ellis also recorded four tackles.

A SEA OF YELLOW

Matt Lawrence's 100-yard effort could have been even better on Saturday if his 70-yard touchdown run in the second quarter hadn't been called back due to one of 13 UMass penalties.

Receivers J.J. Moore (holding) and Rasheed Rancher (illegal block in the back) were both flagged for penalties on the play, which nullified the run.

The officials were busy all afternoon, calling 19 accepted penalties – including the 13 that were whistled against the Minutemen. UMass was penalized for 133 yards, while the Crusaders were penalized for 46 yards on six penalties. The officiating crew also picked up two flags and had to replay a down after inadvertently blowing the whistle.

UMass was called for some rather uncommon penalties, including a substitution infraction and a personal foul on place-kicker Chris Koepplin when he made a helmet-to-helmet hit on a kick return.

MICHAEL PHELLIN/COLLEGIAN

Liam Coen and J.J. Moore connected nine times for 163 yards and a touchdown on Saturday. The 163-yard performance was a career-high for the red-shirt senior captain.

Safety Michael Meggett was also flagged for a personal foul and both Sean Calicchio (guard) and Spencer Ridenhour (safety) were called for unsportsmanlike conduct.

MOVING UP THE CHARTS

With his 272 yards passing in the season opener, red-shirt junior quarterback Liam Coen moved into second place on the school's all-time passing yards list. Coen passed Dave Palazzi (1985-88) when he connected on a 52-yard pass to Moore in the second half.

Coen now has 5,463 passing yards in his short career as a starter for UM, and needs just 1,555 more to break Todd Bankhead's career-record of 7,018 yards. Coen still has two full seasons left in his career, giving him enough time to possibly reach the 10,000-yard mark.

Barring injury, the third-year starter will see his name atop seemingly every major passing category in UMass history. Coen needs 14 more touchdown passes to overtake Bankhead for first all-time, and he'll also move into first for career attempts and completions by the end of this season.

He already holds the career record for passing efficiency (150.1), completion percentage (64.5%) and yards per attempt (8.5). His 2006 and 2005 campaigns rank No.1 and No. 2 on the single-season completion percentage list, respectively.

MOORE OR LESS

Starting wide receiver J.J. Moore had a career day for the Minutemen on Saturday – in more ways than one.

The red-shirt senior set a new personal best with 163 yards receiving on nine catches and a touchdown. Moore sliced up the Holy Cross defense on one drive, catching a 52-yarder that was beautifully placed by quarterback Liam Coen. Two plays later, Coen threw a strike to Moore in the seam, splitting the safeties for a 28-yard score.

That was the good news for Moore. The bad news came in the form of a pair of fumbled punts that helped let the Crusaders back in the game.

Moore had great hands when he was sprinting through zone defenses, but looked uncertain while setting up under a hanging punt. Moore is an experienced punt returner, however, and it is likely he was still shaking off some offseason rust.

AIRING IT OUT

The Minuteman secondary got a workout against Holy Cross. The Crusaders passed 64 times in the game, the most by any opponent against a UMass team. The previous record was 63 by New Hampshire in 2003.

Starter Dominic Randolph threw 62 of those passes before injuring his leg late in the fourth quarter. Backup Brian McSharry replaced him and went 2-for-2. Randolph's 62 attempts also set an opponent record, beating the 58 attempts by Chris Hixson of Rhode Island in 1994. Randolph finished the afternoon with 296 yards and two touchdowns on 32-of-62 passing.

Holy Cross trailed the entire game and fell behind by double digits rather quickly, forcing them to keep passing in an effort to climb back. Randolph caught fire in the second half, leading the Crusaders to three straight touchdowns to draw within seven points at 37-30.

As a result, the Crusader offense was far from balanced, with 64 pass attempts and 29 rushes (for 43 yards) on the afternoon. The Minutemen finished with five sacks and seven pass-deflections … Courtney Robinson's 100-yard kick return touchdown earned him the CAA Special Teams Player of the Wee … The 70 points scored in the game was the most in a UMass game since Nov. 20, 2004 when the Minutemen beat Hofstra by the same score … David Burris recorded three of the five UMass sacks … Jason Hatchell's 10 tackles led the Minutemen – he's led (or tied) the team-lead in tackles in 17 of his last 27 games … Holy Cross ran 93 plays to UMass's 69 … The Crusaders led in time of possession holding the ball for nearly 33 minutes, compared to the Minutemen's 27.

Eli Rosenswaike and Jeremy Rice can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

MICHAEL PHELLIN/COLLEGIAN

Courtney Robinson's 100-yard kickoff return for a touchdown was good enough to win the CAA Special Teams Player of the Week.

BUY USED TEXTBOOKS

save a tree
(and a couple bucks)

We have the largest selection of used books anywhere.
And everything you need for Back-to-School.

- correct textbook versions - we checked for you
- reference materials and study guides
- supplies and academically-discounted software
- huge selection of school apparel and gifts
- online or in-store purchase options
- and much more!

home of THE HALF BACK GUARANTEE

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

www.umass.bkstr.com
proudly part of
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

FROM THE PRESS BOX

Daily Collegian Sports • Blogspot • com

Rudy looks for more

Concerns over form mar UM's strong start

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy is willing to take the good with the bad.

After his team produced mixed results over the weekend, scoring two goals in two games, Rudy said he saw some things that pleased him, but that his players have areas to improve.

In the 1-1 tie against Providence on Sunday, the Friars' defense suffocated the Minutewomen's offensive attack.

"We were definitely under pressure the entire second half, but we've learned how to survive," he said. "Fitness-wise, we were really up against the wall. We came into Sunday's match a little bit worn out and Providence came in a little healthier, a little fitter at that point.

"We weren't real crisp and sharp with our passes," he continued. "We weren't finding the open player. Our through balls were not connecting. But it wasn't without great effort. Our kids knew they were getting dominated that last 60 minutes, but they hung in there."

Staying on the fitness note, Rudy said his team did well in overtime, but got fatigued. After two scoreless overtimes, the game ended in a tie. He added that his players are trying to get back into the swing of things and get the early-season soreness out of their bodies.

"You don't play for ties, but if you can't win the darn thing, then at least get a tie. And that's something we didn't do last year in the (Atlantic 10)," he said.

Against Maine, the Minutewomen faced defense that was just as intense. However, they managed to triumph, 1-0.

Something Rudy found very promising in both games was the performances by the newcomers.

"We saw some good things from the young kids that came in. Our substitutes came in and did a fairly nice job," Rudy said. "All four freshmen played and they all contributed."

Freshman Ashley Hamel recorded an assist in the second game, knocking a very clever pass over to senior forward Britt Canfield, who sent the ball into the back of the net.

Midfielder Therese Smith and defenders Alyssa Visconti and Kelsey Anderson also did well off the bench.

Rudy said the Maroon and White has two big kinks to work out – one of which is more quickly moving the ball around the backfield. He said the UMass defenders were taking too much time with the ball and giving it too many touches, especially later in the games.

"We have a very skillful group of defenders back there, but we were too tentative with the ball. And part of that was fatigue. When you get tired you touch the ball more, instead of less. It's an interesting dynamic," he said. "Too many touches on the ball allowed the other teams to close us down and organize their defense and make are initial part of the attack predictable."

The other thing his players need to work out is the final pass in their offensive strikes. Rudy said his team missed a lot of chances to add points to the board by failing to connect on passes at the end of an attack.

He said they had some really good runs and some good opportunities to split the other teams' defenses and that they just overplayed the ball.

Rudy also mentioned that his squad has to get back to what it does well, which is knocking the ball around early, sharing the ball, playing with skill and flair and getting people forward. The Minutewomen did not get enough connections or enough people forward to score goals, and that is something Rudy says has to change.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Britt Canfield leads the Minutewomen with three points, scoring one goal and assisting on another during their two games in 2007. The senior forward has nine of the 12 UMass shots this season.

SAM AZZARA/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll has one of the two UMass goals this season. Her goal against Maine was the game-winner.

UMass strong in non-conference play off of our left side," Rudy said. "It's what we needed to do, but we were definitely worn out by the end of that game.

W. SOCCER from page 16

"I learned that a long time ago. You don't make substitutions with your heart, you make them with your brain," he added.

The wear and tear from the previous game left the Maroon and White fatigued going into the match against Providence. The teams played to a 1-1 tie, as UMass was outshot 21-3.

Canfield scored the game's first goal at the 44th minute late in the first half. Hamel recorded the assist, earning her first collegiate point.

"Twenty-one after looking at the tape, I don't think so," Rudy said about the shot disparity. "A lot of those things were long range. They were things that Walker didn't have to move on. If she stepped aside they would have rolled in so you have to catch them or pick them up. I think the key thing there is the pressure we were under in that game was more indicated by the amount of corner kicks we gave up."

Providence had 12 corner kicks, while UMass had three. In the 60th minute, the Friars tied the game with a goal from junior Megan Mancarella.

"We were tired from Friday," Rudy said. "They played 18 or 19 players that game and as a result they were not battling for a win, they were on the field. About mid first half we started to drop a little bit. Then the second half they came at us, they played a very aggressive game, they pressure, they hustle, they fight, they battle all over the field. We just got fatigued for two games and we had three defenders that never got off the field in two games."

The three defenders that were on the field for the entirety of both games were junior Melissa Toulouse, freshman Alyssa Visconti and senior Kaelyn Caldwell. The Minutewomen used three substitutes while the Friars used five players off their bench.

Kristin Walker recorded 12 saves for the Minutewomen including one in the second overtime. At the start of the period, Canfield had a shot on goal; however, she just missed the game-winning point by hitting the goal post.

"We looked pretty good for about 25 minutes in that game, but the fatigue began to catch up," Rudy said. "It was hard to sit and watch it, but there were not too many solutions even though we brought players off the bench. They battled and they tried, but we sort of hit a wall there."

Although the Minutewomen were outshot, Rudy was impressed that the team came back and gave themselves opportunities to win the game in overtime. Now with two games under its belt, the team has a better idea of where it is from a fitness standpoint. Rudy feels the team got a lot of fitness last weekend and is ready for its home opener against Iona on Friday.

Steve Gomes can be reached at sgomes@student.umass.edu.

SGA Senate Elections
September 19th-20th

10:00 AM – 2:00 PM
4:00 PM – 7:00 PM

Polling Places:
Franklin DC
Worcester DC
Hampshire DC
Berkshire DC

SEP 5 2007

Is DOODLING your thing?

Why not put it to use?

Submit your comics to THE DAILY COLLEGIAN Comix Page and you could be published up to 5 times every week

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

								4
	9				3	5	1
		2	8			3
7	1						2	5
		6			7	9
	4	1	3				9
		9	2	5	1
8

ACROSS
1 Conceits
5 Came down to earth
9 Crouch down
14 ... and void
15 Directional pointer
16 Piece of a pound
17 Verdi opera
18 Idyllic garden
19 Supple
20 Willy
22 Irish tubers
24 Doctrines
25 Stretch of land
26 Go yachting
28 Winter windshield treatment
32 2nd-smallest state
35 Belt holders
38 Serpent
39 Cassowary kin
41 Standards
43 Hidden valley
44 Road host
46 Comb projection
48 K.C. summer hrs.
49 Earlier Central Americans
51 H.S. math class
53 Twinklers
56 Surrounded by
60 UFO crew member
63 Terrorize
64 Opposite of nature
65 Boat lift, in a way
67 ... Ude, Russia
68 Yawning
69 Fulda feeder
70 Pipe bends
71 Nuzzled
72 Puts in stitches
73 Use a keyboard

DOWN
1 Dramatize
2 Crafty deception
3 Of long ago
4 Works very hard
5 Strong dislike
6 Boy
7 Awkward
8 Choir part
9 Comforts
10 Giving up
11 Commandment word
12 Tooth problem
13 PGA props
21 Last ender
23 Small boy
27 Joe Orton play
29 Meth subj.
30 Supplemented the hard way
31 Occupancy payment
32 Consider
33 Madame Bovary
34 Deb's love
36 Paid performer
37 Air pollution
40 Beach view
42 Soft-shell clams
45 Went in
47 Residence
50 Actor Waterston
52 Slow, stately dance
54 Evaluates
55 Derogatory
57 Loser
58 Source of dandruff
59 High strung
60 Breadth
61 Cartoon possum
62 Wistful word
66 Morning moisture

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

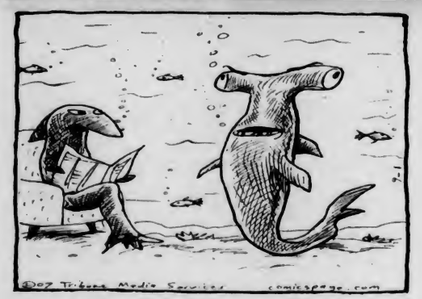
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is the best source for UMass Amherst NEWS, OPINIONS, ARTS, SPORTS, and, of course, our COMICS PAGE!

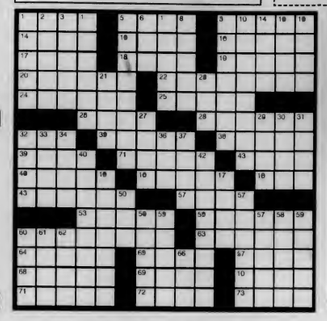
Quote of the Day

"Look for the bare necessities, the simple bare necessities."

-Baloo from "The Jungle Book"



Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shaler



Paul By Billy O'Keefe

The Quigmans By Brian Hoverson

"Do I always have to be the handy-man around here?"

Submit your comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your feet are invincible and thus you do not have to wear flip-floppahs in the showah.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Chart the path to your destiny by organizing a large packet of M&M's by color.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
No matter how good you look, if you sleep on a smelly mattress you'll never find love.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Spend all the money you saved this summer on strip poker and pork rinds.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The people in the room above you will often get very rowdy...very rowdy indeed.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Find Prince and suck his blood, for it is the fountain of eternal youth.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
In a world of Slim Jims and various beef jerkies, you are a savory T-bone steak.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
All your professors know that you are a slacker. Abort your entire schedule.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Never you mind that silly little man with the scraggly beard peering into your window.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If your chinchilla is feeling shy, coax it out with sweet nothings and fine caviar.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If your gf/bf does not contact you in the next 36 hours...hit on their mother.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You look a wee bit greasy. I would recommend increasing your intake of whitefish.

Not only is submitting comics exceptionally fun, it is also non-carcinogenic.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Hove food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Apartments for Rent

2, 3, 4 bedroom apts for rent in Amherst.
Clean, newly constructed building, centrally located.
Call: (413)687-1402

Auto for Sale

1973 Plymouth Barracuda
Excellent cond, 51000mi, clear title, Ext:Rend, Int: Black, 2dr, automatic.
dockyauto@hotmail.com or (320)310-0729

2001 Hyundai Accent
107K miles, $2,000.00
Ren's Mobil, 161 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-9059 / 253-7616

Auto for Sale

2001 Volvo S60, 77K miles, $8,800, Loaded, Recent Battery, Brakes & Tires. www.nikolino.com/volvo call 413/323-9341

Childcare

AFTER SCHOOL BABYSITTER
Looking for child care for beautiful ten year old girl with a mild case of cerebral palsy. Daily from 3:30 until 7pm, except Weds. 1:30 to 7pm. Will happily split the job between 2 – 3 sitters. Pays $11.00 per hour. We are 4 miles east of UMASS in No. Amherst. Contact at highpoint@comcast.net

Employment

B2B Appointment Setting
Person with excellent phone skills wanted to set B2B appointments for a New England based payroll service company.

Employment

Reply to: payrolldone@yahoo.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext 162

Cheerleading Coach Needed
Seeking coach for Mount Holyoke College Cheerleading club. Cheerleading experience required, coaching/gymnastics experience a plus. Email sbmcrae@mtholyoke.edu for more information.

Delivery Drivers Wanted
Must have own car. Flexible schedule, earn up to $14hr. call Delivery Express. 413-549-0077

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply Dp Dough Downtown Amherst

Employment

Sperm Donor Wanted
We are looking for a healthy, bright, athletic male college student to donate sperm. I will pay for pre-tests and compensate you $300 per donation. Serious responses only. Contact us at leightonej@yahoo.com

For Sale

2005 Verucci SCOOTER 49cc, New Battery and Tune-up. $900.00 or B.O. 413-423-3050 leave message

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different images. FINE ART, MUSIC, MOVIES, MODELS HUMOR, ANIMALS, PERSONALITIES, LANDSCAPES, MOTIVATIONALS, PHOTOGRAPHY.

For Sale

MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8 AND $9SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge – Student Union ON Monday Sept. 3rd thru Friday Sept 7th, 2007 THE HOURS ARE 9 A.M. – 5 P.M. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM

House for Rent

Shutesbury - Lake Wyola
4 bedroom, partially furnished. Lease 9/4-5/23/08. $1,100/mo. Plus utilities. (860)675-7557

Room for Rent

Large quiet comfortable furnished for male Professor/Grad Student.
15min. walk to UMass/on Bus Route
413-549-1578

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008
Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/www.ststravel.com.

It doesn't take much effort and it helps everyone out.

Goalkeepers battle for time

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The competition to be the starting goaltender for the Massachusetts field hockey team has taken an interesting turn.

Both Becky Letourneau and Sarah Williams have started two of the team's four games this season. The Minutewomen are 3-1 behind the outstanding play of both goaltenders. All three of those wins are shutouts. UMass coach Justine Sowry has yet to pick the starter.

"I made my mind up that I was going to alternate and see who came through being able to handle the pressure and just showing leadership," Sowry said. "To a great surprise, both are performing above expectations and it's been a huge reason why we've been so successful to date and we'll continue to alternate because in the long run it makes us stronger."

Both goaltenders have made a strong case in their two starts. Letourneau started the season opener at Syracuse and at home against Rutgers. Against the Scarlet Knights she posted the team's second shutout of the year by saving two-of-four shots on goal.

At Syracuse she had four saves on nine shots, and the only blemish was the overtime goal that gave the Orange the win. Through four games she has a razor-thin goals-against-average of 0.49 percent.

Her counterpart, Williams, has also done well in her two starts. In UMass's win against Harvard, she had eight saves on 12 shots and added the third shutout of the season for the Minutewomen.

In the home opener against Sacred Heart, she was not tested too much because there was only one shot and she didn't have to make the save. Williams hasn't allowed a goal in 140 minutes of playing time.

Coincidentally, in the two games that each has started, they have seen 13 shots each.

Sowry speaks highly of both goaltenders and feels that having the pair split time will benefit the team throughout the course of the season. She feels that Letourneau has a bit more leadership because she's a senior and has been with the team longer.

One thing that stands out to Sowry is her technical skills. She thinks that Letourneau is very sound and savvy in the net.

Sowry describes Williams' style as more conservative, which allows her to consistently be in the right place at the right time. Sowry feels that Williams, a sophomore, is still learning the game but can always improve by working on her skills.

Sowry said that not only would she continue to alternate starters – she would also alternate in game as well. One of Letourneau's strengths is her ability to defend the penalty stroke; even if Williams gets the start, Letourneau will get subbed in solely to defend.

This is the team's best start since 2000, and the dual threat of Letourneau and Williams in the net is a major factor.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jsmcgrai@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Sarah Williams made eight saves in UM's 5-0 shutout of Harvard on Monday, earning her second win of the season. She has yet to allow a goal in 2007.

Strong week for UM under Sowry

FIELD HOCKEY from page 16

did not reflect the Minutewomen's dominance.

The Maroon and White's defense was suffocating, as they did not allow Sacred Heart to record a shot on goal. Williams started in goal and recorded an easy shutout victory.

O'Brien and DoRosario shadowed Sacred Heart's forward line all game long, and although the Pioneers have Carisa Eye, who finished last season second in the nation in scoring, her team could not get any clean shots off.

With 6:55 left in the game, Eye received a pass 10 yards from the net, but O'Brien batted the ball away, ending the scoring chance.

The Minutewomen's offense made the defense's job easier by keeping the ball on Sacred Heart's side of the field recording 12 shots on goal. The Pioneer's goalkeeper Kristin McIntyre kept the game close with 11 saves, but UMass would not be denied a victory.

Sophomore Cher King scored the game-winning goal 5:45 into the game. Junior midfielder Erin Parker sent a pass onto King's stick when she was eight yards in front of the goal, King buried the shot to provide the difference in the game.

UMass's second home game against Rutgers (3-1) mirrored its first home game in many ways. For the second straight game, the Minutewomen won the game on a Parker pass leading to a King goal. The backfield shut down another top scorer in Amy Lewis, who had seven goals coming into the game. And once again a 1-0 UMass win was the result.

Not everything about the game was similar.

Unlike the shooting spree the Minutewomen put on against Sacred Heart, the offense was more measured. Shots were a 6-2 in favor of UMass. The game went into overtime because neither team could put the ball in the net during regulation.

King's goal came 2:17 into overtime when Parker ran down the left sideline as King maneuvered in front of the net. The defense got sucked in, the pass was right on the stick, and the game ended like that.

There was a chance for the game to end in regulation as Katelyn Orlando was dragged down from behind on breakaway with 10 seconds left in the game. DoRosario attempted the ensuing penalty shot, but the try sailed wide.

Letourneau got the start in net this time, making two saves to bring her record to 1-1.

The Maroon and White traveled to Jordan field and blew out the Crimson 5-0 on Sept. 2. King led the team with two goals and an assist; goals by Orlando, Katie Kelly, and DoRosario rounded out the scoring.

UMass started the scoring with 14:27 left in the half when Jamie Bourazeris passed into the circle onto King's stick. King then found a wide open Kelly, who banged the ball into the lower right corner of the net. It was Kelly's first career goal.

Later in the second half, after junior Lauren Gillespie and King extended the lead 3-0, DoRosario recorded her first career goal by punching in a rebound of a Bourazeris shot. King added another goal late in the game.

King has been on a hot streak, scoring five points in the last three games.

Williams started in net and recorded eight saves for her second straight shutout victory. She has not allowed a goal in 140 minutes of playing time, although against Sacred Heart she did not face a shot on net.

Next week the Minutewomen travel to Burlington, Vt., where they will face Vermont and New Hampshire.

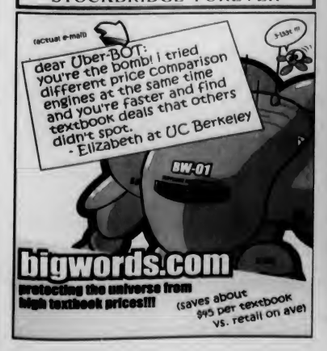
Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

""IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT""
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2007
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Wednesday, September 5, @ 7:00 pm, Tobin 204
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.
The next group exam will be offered in the November 2007.

TO ALL STUDENTS OF THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

Alpha Tau Gamma social fraternity begins the rush for male Pledges this week, September 4 to 8.

Sign up at the Stockbridge office show your Stockbridge student ID and receive your free ATG t-shirt



Look for ATG alumni with sign up sheets on Tuesday after your Soils class, and on Wednesday after your Botany class.

The rush ends on Saturday at a free barbecue on the NE side of Stockbridge Hall beginning at 1:00 p.m. Sign up sheets will be available. Bring your Stockbridge student ID.

The first meeting is on Monday evening, September 10.

The Pledge period ends on Saturday, October 27.

STOCKBRIDGE FOREVER

Sprint ahead

Faster than you can change your major.

Wear out your thumbs with unlimited texting. And start right calling at 7 p.m. with a Sprint Power Pack Plan. Go ahead, live in the nanomoment.

FREE

$29.99 two-year price plus $29.99 mail-in rebate with new line activation and two-year agreement.

After 6 months, pay the regular monthly charge. Offer good only in store.

1-800-SPRINT-1 sprint.com/college

SEP 5 2007

SEP 6 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

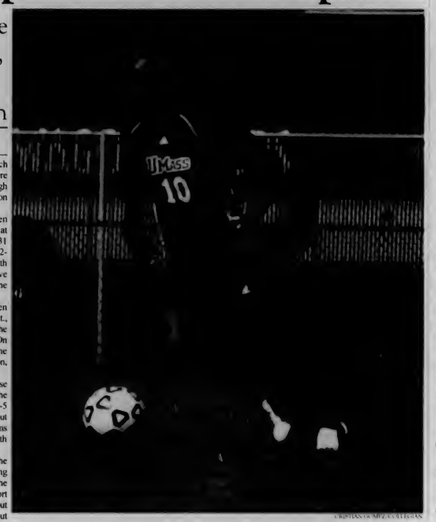
UMass splits weekend pair

Maroon and White fall to Black Bears, bounce back with win over Big Green

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts men's soccer coach Sam Koch knew the first two games of the 2007 season were winnable. And the Minutemen played well enough to take both games, but enter this weekend's action with a tally in both the win and loss column.

UMass	0
Maine	1
UMass	2
Dartmouth	1



The Minutemen dropped their opener at Maine, 1-0, on Aug. 31 and recovered with a 2-1 win over Dartmouth on Sept. 3. The decisive goal of both games came in overtime.

The Minutemen head to Burlington, VT., this weekend for the Vermont Invitational. On Friday, UMass takes on Vermont before a game with New Hampshire on Sunday. Last season, UMass lost to both teams by the score of 1-0.

The offseason adjustments to UMass's offense strategy appear to have positively impacted the Minutemen. They outshot the Black Bears 15-5 and forced several quality scoring chances, but struggled to finish. Unlike 2006, the problems corrected themselves in time for the game with Dartmouth.

Red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport made the breakthrough in the 29th minute. After gaining control of the ball at his left back position, he dribbled into the UMass offensive zone. Rappaport slowed as if to move the ball to another player, but unleashed a high driven ball from 35 yards out

See M. SOCCER on page 11

Junior forward Prince Ofosu scored his first goal of the 2007 season against Dartmouth on Monday. The goal proved to be the game-winner for the Minutemen.

Minutewomen top Maine in opener, tie PC

Stoll, Canfield lead offensive attack, Walker shines in net

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

It was a hard-fought week for the Massachusetts women's soccer team as it went 1-0-1 to start the season.

On the road, the Minutewomen defeated Maine, 1-0, and tied Providence, 1-1.

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll scored the game-winning goal in the 18th minute against the Black Bears. Senior forward Britt Canfield led the attack with six shots and an assist to Stoll.

UMass	1
Maine	0
UMass	1
PC	1

"We got a very nice goal early on from Sydney Stoll," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "Britt Canfield got a pass out of the backfield, and at midfield she moved forward about 10 yards and slipped a really nice through pass in between [the Maine] defenders to a really a great run by Syd Stoll. The pass put Syd in a 1-on-1 against the goalkeeper. The keeper came out and went down at her feet trying to make a 1-on-1 save, Syd just popped it over her into an open net."

The Minutewomen lost their season opener last year to New Hampshire, 2-0.

"It's important, but they're all important," Rudy said about winning the first game. "Every win and every point is a positive and we were happy to get that."

The Minutewomen managed five shots on goal and had four corner kicks. The defense held Maine to four shots on goal and one corner kick. Senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker earned her first shutout of the season with four saves.

"[It was] very hard fought, a whole lot of clutch and grab, high pressure from behind and high pressure from in front," Rudy said. "It was a very intense game."

Rudy only used two subsitutes throughout the entire game. Freshman forward Ashley Harnel and freshman midfielder Therese Smith played their roles coming off the bench in their first collegiate game.

"We didn't play a lot of players, we used two subsitutes and it was all on the same part of the field. It was all

See W. SOCCER on page 13

Lawrence, Nelson compete for carries

By Eli Rubenwaike and Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

If Saturday's 40-30 win over Holy Cross was any indication, it appears that running back Matt Lawrence is the Massachusetts football team's featured back for 2007.

The Minutemen have had the luxury of a 1,000-yard rusher the last four seasons in Steve Baylark. The hole he left at the running back position was easily the biggest question mark entering the season following a run to the NCAA championship game.

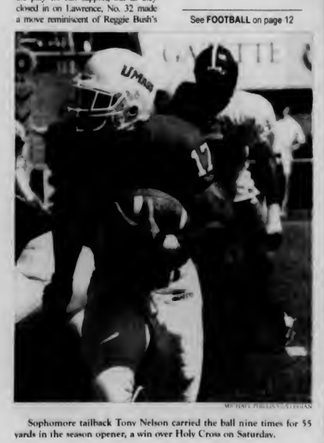
A pair of touchdowns and 153 yards later, Lawrence has eased a lot of worries. Lawrence was dominant in his time on the field, running over defenders, making others miss and generally causing problems for the Crusader defense.

His straight-line speed was to be expected, but his agility in the open field was also impressive, particularly on his 28-yard touchdown run in the second quarter. The play was a toss to the right. Lawrence followed his pulling blockers and then cut upfield along the right sideline.

The Crusaders' two safeties followed the play for run support, but as they closed in on Lawrence, No. 32 made a move reminiscent of Reggie Bush's playing days at Southern California, instantly cutting back into the open field and running uncontested the final 10 yards into the end zone.

UMass Football

Lawrence's competitor for the top spot in the backfield, sophomore Tony Nelson, rushed nine times for 55 yards. One might expect Nelson to get the short-yardage carries with those totals, but instead he was used exclusively on particular drives, in place of Lawrence.



If the Holy Cross game was being used as a final tryout for the pair of backs, Lawrence may have run away with it, although his average-per-carry was not significantly higher (6.7 to Nelson's 6.1).

It is interesting to note, however, that of the Minutemen's six scoring drives (not counting Courtney Robinson's kickoff return for a touchdown), Nelson was on the field for just one of those scores.

Position battles

Running back was not the only position with spots still undecided heading into Saturday's action. Some races were so tight, in fact, that game day depth charts did not even list one player or the other as the starter.

See FOOTBALL on page 12

Sophomore tailback Tony Nelson carried the ball nine times for 55 yards in the season opener, a win over Holy Cross on Saturday.

UM's new era off to fast start in '07

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team got off to a strong start in its first four games, going 3-1. This is the best start for UMass since 2000, when it opened 5-1 and won the Atlantic 10 title.

The team improved with every game played, and the defense has been stellar. After losing 1-0 in overtime to Syracuse, the Maroon and White recorded three consecutive shutout victories against Sacred Heart, Rutgers and Harvard.

The replacement of former coach Patty Shea with Justine Sowry appears to have quickly paid dividends. Last year the team staggered out of the gate to a 1-3 record, before limping to a 6-14 finish. After four games, the Minutewomen are already halfway to last year's win total.

Defense and goaltending was the catalyst for the team's success through the first four games. After allowing an overtime goal in the opener against Syracuse, the defense has not allowed a goal in 3 hours, 46 minutes and 46 seconds of play. Seniors Erin O'Brien and Kristina DoRosario anchor the team's defense.

Sowry alternated senior Becky Letourneau and sophomore Sarah Williams as starting goaltender. Both performed well, and it is unclear who will earn the permanent starting spot or whether Sowry will continue to rotate goalies.

In a matchup between first year coaches, with Syracuse's Ange Bradley also starting her career on a new team, the Orange (2-0) prevailed in a back-and-forth defensive struggle that ended in a disappointing 1-0 loss for the Minutewomen.

Starting goalkeeper Becky Letourneau recorded four saves, but allowed a goal after 55:31 when Gloria Nantuly redirected a Brittany Angellella shot. The Minutewomen allowed five shots on goal, but the Syracuse defense stymied the Minutewoman offense, allowing two shots on goal.

Sowry earned her first win as a head coach in a 1-0 shutout in the home opener against Sacred Heart (1-2) in a game where the final score

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 15

As a part of the team's five-goal offensive output on Sunday, senior Kristina DoRosario scored a goal on one shot against Harvard at Garber Field.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Senior running back Matt Lawrence set a career-high with 153 rushing yards in the season opener against Holy Cross on Saturday. He helped set the tone for the UMass offense, notching two touchdowns in the first half to give the Minutemen a big lead.

His previous personal-best for yards rushing in a game was 88, which he recorded in 2003 when he was with Connecticut. His output on the ground Saturday almost topped his UMass career total of 183 yards, which he compiled in 14 games. He needs just 22 yards to surpass his total from 2006. Lawrence's 61 yards against Towson was the most he had at UMass prior to the game against the Crusaders.

Lawrence scored his first touchdown from one yard out to give the Minutemen a 10-0 lead with just over five minutes to play in the first quarter. His second score was a 28-yard scamper that gave UMass a 30-9 advantage heading into halftime. A third touchdown run from 70 yards out was called back due to a holding penalty on receiver J.J. Moore.

Listed as a tailback/fullback, Lawrence was expected to split time with sophomore tailback Tony Nelson. Although Nelson carried the ball nine times for 55 yards, Lawrence received the majority of the handoffs, finishing with 23 carries (for a 6.7 average) on the afternoon, including six for first downs.

UMass coach Don Brown entered the season listing Lawrence and Nelson as starting tailbacks 1A and 1B, but the former's effort certainly didn't hurt his case to be the primary back. It will be interesting to see how UMass coach Don Brown divides the playing time between the two as the season progresses.

The 6-foot-1, 210-pound running back transferred to UMass from UConn following the 2004 season. He took a red-shirt season in 2005 after suffering an injury on his first carry during the season opener against Richmond. He played in 13 games last season, starting seven of them at fullback.

Runner-up

Sophomore Cher King is this week's Collegian Sports Athlete of the Week Runner-up.

King helped the UMass field hockey team win three of its first four contests, scoring four goals and assisting on another. Two of her four goals were game-winners.

King helped the Minutewomen win their first game of the season, scoring the game's lone goal against Sacred Heart in Amherst on Aug. 29. She repeated that feat just three days later when she scored the only goal of the game against Rutgers, also at Garber Field.

In the most recent game against Harvard, King scored twice and also assisted on the team's first goal of the day by Katie Kelly. That particular goal proved to be the difference, as sophomore goalkeeper Sarah Williams registered the shutout against the Crimson.

King leads the team in both goals scored and points (9), and is tied for second in assists with one. She is the only player on the roster with multiple goals. She had seven goals and four assists as a freshman in 2006, finishing with 18 points.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 83 LO: 60 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 2007

NEW CHAPTER IN THE iREVOLUTION PAGE 6

Library elevator goes for wild ride

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Waiting for an elevator in the W.E.B. Du Bois library may take a bit longer for the next few weeks. Elevator car number four has been closed since it traveled out of control for several floors before coming to a stop at the 27th floor last Friday.

Just before 10 a.m. a loud crash was heard throughout the library. According to the press release, the sound was the result of the car's counterweight and ropes dropping down the elevator shaft and hitting a shock absorber in the basement. No one was aboard and no one was injured.

"I was in my office. The entire building heard [the noise]," said Terry Warner, assistant director of administrative services. "It just sounded like a loud crash. I didn't know what happened until my phone started ringing."

Although an investigation is still underway, an initial assessment by physical plant indicated that a bracket that guides the elevator's control cable broke, releasing the electric brake and allowing the counterweight to pull the car up.

"We got excellent response from the UMass police … staff downstairs placed a 911 call … the first officer who arrived tried to get the car door opened," said Warner.

Warner said elevators across the state must undergo an annual inspection – which the library's elevators passed in August.

"They were just inspected," she said. "That's part of the question in everyone's mind."

However, Warner and Jay Schafer, director of libraries, assure students they are safe while riding up to or down from the top floors.

"The elevators would not be operational if they were not safe to ride," said Warner.

Schafer agreed.

"The cars now get extra attention," he said. "And they are as safe as any other elevator."

As a precaution, elevator cars four and five were shut down because of concerns that the cables from the two cars could become tangled. Between cars three and four there is a cement wall, leaving car three operational. Until the investigation yields results, only car four is off limits.

Despite the incident, students are still using the elevators. And it doesn't look as though they have a desire to climb 20 flights of stairs any time soon.

"A fault of the elevator, that's a pretty big deal to me," said sophomore Max Martinez, who was working on a computer in the library yesterday. "But it's not going to deter me from using the elevator, but it makes me think a little more – I guess."

The library was built in 1972, and the elevators were installed around that time.

Some UMass students felt the library should be in tip-top shape, especially with the New Dirt construction so prevalent on campus.

"I think especially with all the revamp and construction that appeared to be going on around the library, it should be expected that the elevators should work," said junior Courtney Ellwen.

The library is expecting the units to be replaced in the near future. With Governor Patrick's recent capital plan, about $3 million have been set aside specifically for campus elevators.

Although that replacement will be a long process, including an in-depth design phase for full modernization of the units, Warner and Schafer hope that plans for the replacements will begin next summer – so as not to burden students with library construction during the school year.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@umass.edu

Originally installed around 1972, with the construction of the W.E.B. Du Bois library, the elevators are slated for replacement.

Students differ on observing Jewish holiday

By Andy Smith
Collegian Staff

While Jewish students at the University of Massachusetts will be excused from class without any official repercussions for three days this September to observe religious holidays, those who do so will lose out on valuable class time early in the semester.

According to the UMass student handbook, state law "requires that [UMass] excuse any student who is unable to attend classes or participate in any examination, study, or work requirement because of religious observance."

"There are about 2,500 Jewish students at UMass and they will be doing different things this Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur," said Ruthie Oland, program director of the Hillel House. "Some will decide to go home, some will attend Orthodox or Egalitarian services at Hillel, some will go to classes and observe the holidays in a personal way, and some will not observe in any way."

However, some Jewish students will not be observing Rosh Hashanah because of the consequences it may have for them in the classroom.

"I'm Jewish, and I consider myself a pretty religious person, but I'm still unsure if I'll be missing class next week," said one student who asked not to be named out of fear of the social repercussions that may evolve from his opinions. "Part of me wants to because I feel it's the right thing to do, but at the same time, school is just starting and the last thing I want to do is fall behind on my work. I'm torn both ways on this."

According to the UMass Office of Jewish Affairs Web site, "Jewish law does not recognize gradations of importance among 'holy days' – those holidays, or portions of holidays, when Jewish law prohibits work or travel. However, Jews who do not observe all holy days are most likely to be at synagogue or Bnai celebrations and abstain from work on Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur, Passover and the weekly Sabbath."

Religious observation is a very touchy subject for faculty as well. Many who were asked to comment for this article declined.

"I am not the best person to ask about this," said Nevia Ben Ur, a professor in the Judaic Studies department.

Excessive Jewish students at UMass from three days of classes to officially celebrate Rosh Hashanah also raises a question: If one major

See HOLIDAY on page 4

Students handed out ice cream yesterday as part of a recruitment effort for the Birthright Israel program with only a little more than a week before the start of the Jewish New Year.

Mixed opinions on national rankings

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts can't decide whether the Princeton Review's recent report will affect the school's "party hardy reputation."

Once a top-10 staple on the Review's national party school ranking, UMass has fallen from No. 7 last year to completely off the list in the 2008 edition.

Although being omitted from the list might decrease national recognition as a party school, freshman Erika Bergemeier said it doesn't bother her.

"A college is not only supposed to be about alcohol and drugs that about academics," she said. "It's a good thing, a more positive way to be looked at."

Matt DiIando said getting a degree at a school with a partying reputation causes possible employers to focus on the negative rather than the positive.

"Having a reputation as a party school cheapens my degree," he said.

DiIando, who is a sophomore, said he has never seen UMass as an amazing party school and has noticed parties getting progressively calmer during his time here.

Senior Peter Lukasik called the party culture at UMass a self-perpetuating myth.

"I never thought we were anything special as a party school," he said.

While some students may not think UMass is a true party school, others believe the campus is taking measures to crack down on partying and drinking.

"It's a lot harder to party after the school took down Frat Row and the police … and RAs became stricter," said Jason Wang, a senior in Lambda Phi Epsilon.

Wang's fraternity brother, Clift Kwang agreed, saying he has definitely noticed a decrease in parties after the demolition of some fraternity houses, including Lambda Phi Epsilon.

"A lot of kids come to parties at school," Kwang said. "UMass is affordable and still known as a party school – depending on where you are living. Southwest is still crazy [ball] cops are cracking down."

Despite increased police presence, sophomore Joe Durell called partying at UMass "off the hook."

"My personal experience is not all top-10 for sure," he said. "We party pretty hard at UMass."

To help dispel the myth that UMass students part all the time, the Campus and Community Coalition to Reduce High Risk Drinking has started a social norms campaign.

"This campaign is dedicated to educating the student body of the gap between the perceived amount of drinkers and the actual amount of drinkers," the slogan reads. "Two out three UMass students have four or fewer drinks when they party."

Editor's Note: A previous version of this article incorrectly stated that UMass was not listed in the Princeton Review's 2008 edition. The school was listed in the 2007 edition.

Al-Qaida targets U.S. assets in Germany

Ramstein Air Base center of terrorist plot

By David McHugh
Associated Press

Three suspected Islamic terrorists from an al-Qaida-influenced group nursing "profound hatred of U.S. citizens" were arrested on suspicion of plotting imminent, massive bomb attacks on U.S. facilities in Germany, prosecutors said Wednesday.

A senior State Department official said German investigators had determined the Frankfurt International Airport and the nearby U.S. Ramstein Air Base were the primary targets of the plot but that those arrested may have also been considering strikes on other sites, particularly facilities associated with the United States.

It was the second time in as many days that European officials said they had thwarted a major attack, following the arrest by Danish authorities on Tuesday of eight alleged Islamic militants with links to senior al-Qaida terrorists. It also comes less than a week before the sixth anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks on the United States.

German Federal Prosecutor Monika Harms said the three suspects, two of whom were German converts to Islam, had trained at camps in Pakistan run by the Islamic Jihad Union, a group based in Central Asia. They had obtained some 1,500 pounds of hydrogen peroxide for making explosives.

"We were able to succeed in

See TERRORISM on page 4

Student groups ranging from Greek life to community service set up shop in front of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library yesterday to participate in the Activities Expo.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 2

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McGill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stajgis
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stysnczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Deshchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAWL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Remains of mythical creature found in Texas

AP

Phylis Canion holds up a photo of the animal corpse she found outside of her ranch, which she believes to be the legendary South American Chupacabra.

By Elizabeth White
Associated Press

Phylis Canion lived in Africa for four years. She's been a hunter all her life and has the mounted heads of a zebra and other exotic animals in her house to prove it.

But the roadkill she found last month outside her ranch was a new one even for her, worth putting in a freezer hidden from curious onlookers: Canion believes she may have the head of the mythical, bloodsucking chupacabra.

"It is one ugly creature," Canion said, holding the head of the mammal, which has big ears, large fanged teeth and grayish-blue, mostly hairless skin.

Canion and some of her neighbors discovered the 40-pound bodies of three of the animals over four days in July outside her ranch in Cuero, 80 miles southeast of San Antonio. Canion said she saved the head of the one she found so she can get to get to the bottom of its ancestry through DNA testing and then mount it for posterity.

She suspects, as have many rural denizens over the years, that a chupacabra may have killed as many as 26 of her chickens in the past couple of years.

"I've seen a lot of nasty stuff. I've never seen anything like this," she said.

What tipped Canion to the possibility that this was no ugly coyote, but perhaps the vampire-like beast, is that the chickens weren't eaten or carried off – all the blood was drained from them, she said.

Chupacabra means "goat sucker" in Spanish, and it is said to have originated in Latin America, specifically Puerto Rico and Mexico.

Canion thinks recent heavy rains ran them right out of their dens.

"I think it could have wolf in it," Canion said. "It has to be a cross between two or three different things."

She said the finding has captured the imagination of locals, just like purported sightings of Bigfoot or the Loch Ness Monster have elsewhere.

But what folks are calling a chupacabra is probably just a strange breed of dog, said veterinarian Travis Schaar of the Main Street Animal Hospital in nearby Victoria.

"I'm not going to tell you that's not a chupacabra. I just think in my opinion a chupacabra is a dog," said Schaar, who has seen Canion's find.

The "chupacabras" could have all been part of a mutated litter of dogs, or they may be a new kind of mutt, he said.

Russian mayor bans negative language

By Bagila Bukharbayeva
Associated Press

The mayor of a Siberian oil town has ordered his bureaucrats to stop using expressions such as "I don't know" and "I can't." Or look for another job.

Alexander Kuzmin, the 33-year-old mayor of Megion, has banned these and 25 other phrases as a way to make his administration more efficient, his spokeswoman said Tuesday.

"It's a suggestion to the staff that they should think before saying something," Oksana Shestakova said by telephone. "To say 'I don't know' is the same as admitting your helplessness."

To reinforce the ban, a framed list of the banned expressions has been hanging on the wall next to Kuzmin's office for the past two weeks, Shestakova said.

Some of the other prohibited phrases are "What can we do?" "It's not my job," "It's impossible," "I'm having lunch," "There is no money," and "I was away/sick/on vacation."

Kuzmin, a businessman who was elected mayor 1 1/2 years ago, wants to "shake things up" in Megion, a town of 54,000 in the Khanty-Mansisk region, the spokeswoman said.

The region, located some 1,500 miles northeast of Moscow, produces more oil than the rest of Russia combined. As world oil prices have risen sharply in recent years, the region has flourished, and in stark contrast to the rest of the country its population has grown at the rapid rate of more than 7 percent annually.

But construction has not kept pace, and the lack of adequate housing is one of the town's most serious problems, Shestakova said.

"Town authorities are there to make town residents' life comfortable and prosperous," Kuzmin, a trained oil engineer who studied business administration in Canada, said in a statement posted on the town Web site. "Town officials must work out mechanisms to solve and remove problems, not to avoid them."

Lost Crockett letter recovered

By Liz Austin Peterson
Associated Press

Just two months before he perished defending the Alamo, Davy Crockett described to his daughter and son-in-law the land he treasured enough to die for its independence.

"I must say, as to what I have seen of Texas it is the garden spot of the world," the famed frontiersman and former congressman from Tennessee wrote. "The best land and the best prospect for health ..."

The Texas Historical Commission announced Tuesday it bought the letter, which is believed to be the last that Crockett penned before he and about 200 other Alamo defenders were killed by Mexican forces led by Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna.

Gov. Rick Perry accepted the letter on behalf of the state during a brief ceremony Tuesday at the Bob Bullock Texas State History Museum.

"He stood tall against overwhelming odds and he refused to run away," Perry said of Crockett.

"It's clear that he cherished his principles above his life and died nobly in their defense," he said.

The state bought the letter for $490,000 from Simpson Galleries, a Houston fine arts auctioneer.

AP

The Texas legend's correspondence to his children before his death at the Alamo is thought to be his last piece of writing.

Ray Simpson said his grandfather bought the letter from a descendent of Crockett's in 1986 and misplaced it years ago. Simpson said he and his father found it about two weeks ago in their office.

The document likely could have sold for a much higher price in an open auction, Simpson said, but the family wanted to offer it to Texas first.

"Our family is very, very proud to have made this document available for the state commission to own," Simpson said.

Come visit our new and exciting destination dorm shop

Create a Dorm Wishlist before heading off to campus
It's an easy way to equip the perfect dorm room
• 20% completion program thru 9/30/07! Receive 20% off everything remaining on your Wishlist
(May not be combined with any other offer.)

Your Dorm Checklist

Hit the Sack
__Sheet sets. Twin or Twin XL (2)
__Comforter or quilt (1)
__Down comforter (1)
__Duvet cover (1)
__Blanket (1)
__Bed pillows (2)
__Pillow protectors (2)
__Mattress pad (1)
__Fiberbed/featherbed (1)
__Inflatable Aerobed (1)
__Window/door panels
__Area rug (1)
__Decorative pillows
__Floor cushions
__Throw (1)

Dorm Pre-Req's
__Clock radio (1)
__Night light
__Fan (1)
__Storage boxes (2)
__Extension cords (2)
__Squid/ multi outlets (2)
__Surge protector
__Batteries
__Door mirror (1)
__Wall hooks
__Frames
__Storage ottoman
__Trash can

Pull an All Nighter
__Desk lamp (1)
__Floor lamp (1)
__Bed rest (1)
__Lap desk (1)

Chaos Control
__Storage trunk or tote (1)
__Under the bed containers (3)
__CD or DVD storage (1)
__Set of 4 bed risers (1)
__Over the door storage (1)
__Shoe rack (1)
__24 hangers (1 Pkg.)
__Mesh cubes
__Bubble crates
__Modular storage shelves
__Drawer organizers (4)
__Storage set (1)
__Duffel bag (1)
__Space bags

Munchie Makers
__Bowls, plates, mugs (4)
__Forks, knives, spoons (4)
__Glassware set (1)
__Cookware set (1)
__Set kitchen utensils (1)
__Bottle/can opener (1)
__Water filtration pitcher (1)
__Replacement filters
__Chip clips/magnetic clips (5)
__Dorm-size microwave (1)
__Dorm-size refrigerator (1)
__Blender (1)
__Toaster oven (1)
__Coffeemaker (1)
__George Foreman grill (1)
__Snack table (1)
__Dish rack
__Travel mugs

Neat n Tidy
__Hand or stick vacuum (1)
__Dish cloths & towels (6)
__Cylinder hamper (1)
__Compact iron (1)
__Drying rack (1)
__Laundry bags (2)
__Lint roller

Student Body Needs
__Towel sets (6)
__Towel bar (1)
__bath towel tower (1)
__Tub mat (1)
__Bath rug (1)
__Shower curtain (1)
__Shower liner (1)
__Shower ring set (1)
__Shower caddy (1)
__Soap holder (1)
__Bath brush and pouf
__Electric toothbrush (1)
__Replacement heads
__Over the door hook (1)
__Magnifying mirror (1)
__Blow dryer (1)
__Body wash & lotion
__Cosmetic organizer (1)
__Tweezers
__Curling iron (1)
__Hair straightener (1)
__Electric razor (1)
__Robe & slippers (1)
__Hair towel & shower wrap
__Shower radio (1)
__Scale
__Electric fragrance diffuser

20% off
Valid thru Sept. 30, 2007
LINENS 'N THINGS
*One coupon per customer. Valid in store only. No reproductions. Coupon must be surrendered at time of purchase. Sorry, coupon not valid towards the purchase of Cuisinart, The Sharper Image, Uny, Wusthof, Nautica, All Clad, J.A. Henckels, Little Giant Ladders, Tempur-Pedic, Godiva Chocolates, AeroGrow, custom windows, Reebok or Linens 'n Things Gift Cards. Cannot be combined with any other coupon or offer. Coupon not valid towards previous purchases and cannot be used with Linens 'n Things credit card for purchase. Other restrictions may apply. Please see store or LNT.COM for details.

FREE Intro Classes
Wed and Thur * Sept 5 and 6 *
UMass YOGA
In Boyden 10
Fall 2007
(Monday, September 10 - Dec 14)
Mon/Wed
2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga
3:30-4:45 pm Yoga Basics
Tues/Thurs
1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics
2:30-3:45 pm Intermediate
4:00-5:15 pm Yoga Basics
Early Bird Special!
1 class per week $85 Only $70!
2 classes per week $150 $120!
For more info or to register
Campus Recreation • Boyden 215
413-545-0022 • umassyoga.com

Every Tuesday Night
10¢ Wings
7:00pm to 11:00pm
Charlie's tavern Since 1978
BUSCH
BUD LIGHT
2 Pool Tables
JIM BEAM
6 TV's
KENO
• $1.99 JIM BEAM & COKE
• $2.50 MARGARITTAVILLE TEQUILA AHOTS
• $4.50 22 OZ LONG ISLAND ICED TEA
• $5.00 PITCHERS OF BUSCH
• $6.00 PITCHERS OF BUD & BUD LIGHT
• $10.00 BUCKETS OF ROLLING ROCK BOTTLES
(2 Persons per bucket)
Join the "Addicted to Charlie's" Facebook Group for more details and up-to-date information!
Saturday, September 15th - Beirut Tournament
Chance to Win $150.00 Gift Certificate
Open Monday—Thursday 4:00pm to 1:00am Friday—Sunday 11:00am to 1:00am
1 Pray Street Amherst, MA 01002 Phone: (413) 549-3403

Craig to withdraw guilty plea and remain in office

By David Espo
Associated Press

To the dismay of fellow Republicans, Sen. Larry Craig launched a determined drive to save his seat on Wednesday, vowing to stay in office if allowed to withdraw his guilty plea in a men's room sex sting.

Craig's campaign suffered an instant setback, however, when the ethics committee refused to set aside a complaint lodged against him. "Pending Sen. Craig's resignation, the committee will continue to review this matter," the committee's senior senators wrote.

The decision to deploy his legal team marked a reversal of his pledge to resign on Sept. 30, and raised the possibility of a protracted legal and political struggle, much of it playing out in public, with gay sex at its core.

"I thought he made the correct decision, the difficult but correct decision to resign" over the weekend, said Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky after he and Craig spoke by telephone. "That would still be my view today."

Craig made no public statements during the day, although he met privately in Boise with Idaho Gov. C.L. Otter, who has the authority to fill any vacancy in the state's Senate delegation.

"We are proceeding based on the assumption that there is going to be a transition at the end of the month," said Jon Hanian, Otter's spokesman. "The senator's staff is going to work with ours to that end."

But McConnell heard something different when he talked with his longtime Senate colleague. He said Craig had told him he now intended to remain in Congress if he is permitted to withdraw his guilty plea by Sept 30.

"If he is unable to have that disposed of prior to Sept 30, it is his intention to resign from the Senate as he expressed last Saturday," he said.

The GOP leader spoke hours after Craig's attorney, Stanley Brand, asked the ethics committee not to investigate a complaint because events were "wholly unrelated" to official duties.

Committee action eventually would lead the Senate down a path of dealing with "a host of minor misdemeanors and transgressions," Brand added in a letter that was hand-delivered.

In a written reply several hours later, the panel's chairman and senior Republican wrote that Senate rules give the committee authority to investigate lawmakers who engage in "improper conduct, which may reflect upon the Senate."

"The committee has reached no conclusions regarding the matter," wrote Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., and John Cornyn, R-Texas. "Pending Sen. Craig's resignation, the committee will continue to review this matter."

A second attorney for Craig, Tom Kelly, was in Minnesota, evidently preparing to file papers seeking to have the senator's guilty plea withdrawn.

Lawyers not involved in the case have said Craig faces a difficult challenge, pointing to Minnesota Rules of Criminal Procedure requiring that a defendant show a "manifest injustice" to withdraw a guilty plea.

In Craig's case, he voluntarily signed a plea agreement that included a provision stating that the court would not accept such a confession of guilt from anyone who believed himself innocent.

The legal fine points aside, Craig's turnabout was the subject of a closed-door discussion among Senate Republicans during the day, and there was fresh evidence of the discomfort his case has caused fellow conservatives.

A dozen conservative activists attending a press conference on one of President Bush's judicial nominees declined to answer questions about Craig, including whether they wished to see him resign or remain in office.

They included Tony Perkins, president of the Family Research Council; David Keene, president of The American Conservative Union; Grover Norquist, president of Americans for Tax Reform; and Wendy Wright, president of Concerned Women for America.

For his part, McConnell turned away questions about Craig's situation. Asked whether fellow Republicans could embrace Craig if he disposed of the case and returned to Washington, the GOP leader said he would not answer hypothetical questions.

Asked if Craig had been disingenuous when he told him on Friday he intended to resign, McConnell declined to say.

And when asked whether Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., had been helpful in resolving the controversy, McConnell said, "You'll have to talk to Sen. Specter about his views."

Specter said Sunday he would like to see Craig "seek to withdraw the guilty plea, and fight the case."

Specter, a former prosecutor, said he believes the Idaho lawmaker could be vindicated.

He declined to elaborate further when asked during the day. Craig drew one expression of support, from fellow Idaho Republican Sen. Mike Crapo.

"I support whatever Larry does," said Crapo. "Everybody has a right to try to vindicate themselves."

Several officials have said Crapo played a key role in last week's events, serving as an intermediary of sorts between his home state colleague and Republicans in Washington eager to see Craig resign.

The Republican leadership moved aggressively when word of Craig's guilty plea first surfaced, asking the ethics committee to investigate, then prevailing on him to step down from his committee and subcommittee leadership positions.

While Craig is only the latest in a series of Republican senators to become drawn into controversy, he is the only one to have drawn widespread calls for his resignation.

McConnell and other critics have denied that their decision to prod him to leave stemmed from the allegation that he had solicited gay sex. They said Craig's case was the only one in which a guilty plea had been entered.

Thompson enters election race

Announces bid during late-night TV

By Liz Sidoti
Associated Press

AP

The former senator faces a tough battle in the 2008 election as his campaign has already been beset by poor fundraising and staff changes.

Fred Thompson – veteran actor, former Republican senator – launched his bid for the presidency Hollywood style. "I'm running for president of the United States," Thompson told Jay Leno in a taped appearance on NBC's "Tonight Show" airing Wednesday.

Thompson also is calling attention to his candidacy with a 30-second ad being broadcast during a Republican debate in New Hampshire that he is not participating in, and he will explain the rationale for his candidacy during a 15-minute Webcast on his Web site just after midnight.

"On the next president's watch, our country will make decisions that will affect our lives and our families far into the future. We can't allow ourselves to become a weaker, less prosperous and more divided nation," Thompson says in the ad that will air on Fox News Channel.

Thompson, 65, enters a crowded GOP field and an extraordinarily fluid race four months before the first votes are cast.

While Rudy Giuliani leads in national polls, Mitt Romney maintains an edge in the early voting states of Iowa and New Hampshire.

Overall, Republican voters have expressed less satisfaction with their choices than Democrats, which Thompson sees as an opening for his candidacy.

It won't be easy for the former Tennessee senator. His campaign has been beset by lackluster fundraising and multiple staff changes, the most recent coming on Tuesday with the departure of his spokesman of just two weeks, Jim Mills.

His made-for-television entry – and absence from the GOP debate didn't go over well with some in New Hampshire.

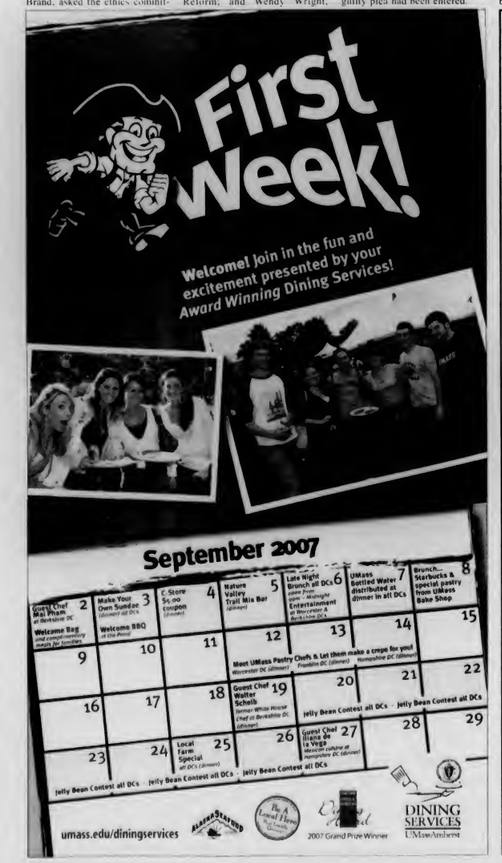
"There is a genuine interest in Senator Thompson here, a real curiosity about him," New Hampshire Republican Chairman Fergus Cullen said Tuesday. "But that curiosity is giving way to skepticism and maybe even cynicism about him in part because of how he's handling his grand entrance. For him to then go on Jay Leno the same night and be trading jokes while other candidates are having a substantive discussion on issues is not going to be missed by New Hampshire voters."

Thompson starts some eight months after his eight rivals began their own campaigns, and he lags behind Giuliani and Romney in both money and organization.

In June, Thompson fell short of his $5 million fundraising goal by $1.5 million.

Still, Thompson consistently ranks among the top Republicans in national polls and state surveys.

A Southerner with a mostly right-leaning Senate record and a plainspoken style, he is looking to capitalize on discontent with the current choices among conservatives who make up a significant segment of GOP primary voters.



They have not yet settled on a candidate and are searching for someone with like-minded credentials who can win in a general election.

Thompson is perhaps best known to millions of Americans as the gruff district attorney Arthur Branch on NBC's crime drama "Law & Order," as well as for his roles in more than a dozen movies.

During his 1994-2002 Senate tenure, he was considered a reliably conservative vote. However, he did stray from the party line on a few issues, including advocating for campaign finance reform. He also was John McCain's campaign co-chairman in 2000 instead of backing establishment candidate George W. Bush.

Thompson spent many years in Washington as a lawyer and a lobbyist.

He has faced repeated questions about his lobbying work for a family planning group seeking to relax an abortion rule and former leftist Haitian leader Jean Bertrand-Aristide.

The Office of Jewish Affairs
would like to wish all Jewish students
Happy New Year!
Shanah tovah!
We also extend a warm greeting to our Muslim brothers and sisters as you begin the month-long celebration of Ramadan...
Ramadan mubarak!
If you will be missing classes because of the holidays...
Whatever your religion or level of observance, the University's policy concerning days of religious observance guarantees that "any student [whether Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, Bahai, Christian, Buddhist, or any other religion] who is unable to attend classes or to participate in any examination, study or work requirement because of religious observance is to be provided with an opportunity to make up the examination, study or work requirement." However, it is the student's responsibility to notify your professor at least a week in advance.
Most professors are respectful of this policy, but if you do encounter a problem, you can call the department head, the Ombuds Office (545-0867), or the Office of Jewish Affairs (545-9642). We're happy to help.
May this be a sweet and peaceful year for us all!!
UMASS AMHERST
For more information, visit www.umass.edu/jewish or call the Office of Jewish Affairs at 413.545.9642

SEP 6 2007

Merkel hails arrests of terrorists as 'very, very great success'

TERRORISM from page 1

recognizing and preventing the most serious and massive bombings," Harms told reporters. She declined to name specific targets, but said the suspects had an eye on institutions and establishments frequented by Americans in Germany, including discos, pubs and airports.

The senior State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity to describe discussions between American and German intelligence agencies, said the threat had been a major reason the U.S. Embassy in Berlin had boosted security and issued two warnings in April and May about possible impending terrorist attacks.

Chancellor Angela Merkel called the arrests a "very, very great success."

"This shows that terrorist dangers, in our country as well, are not abstract but are real," she said. "It also shows for me that international cooperation is of decisive significance in the fight against terrorism."

Deputy State Department spokesman Tom Casey welcomed the arrests.

"We're very pleased that the government of Germany has taken this action," he said. "It represents their strong cooperation with us and their strong commitment to fighting the war on terror."

Casey declined to discuss the potential targets but said "our general understanding was that these individuals were looking at the possibility of attacking a number of locations, including some prominent public sites as well of some of those specifically associated with American interests or the American government."

The suspects, delivered by helicopter, made a first appearance at a closed hearing at the Federal Court of Justice in Karlsruhe, which ordered them held pending trial.

Officials said the solution of hydrogen peroxide, stored in a hideout, could have been mixed easily with other additives to produce a bomb with the explosive power of 1,200 pounds of TNT.

"This would have enabled them to make bombs with more explosive power than the ones used in the London and Madrid bombings," Joerg Ziercke, the head of the Federal Crime Office – Germany's equivalent of the FBI – said at a joint news conference with Harms.

The three suspects – two Germans aged 22 and 28, and a 29-year-old Turk – first came to the attention of authorities because they had been caught observing a U.S. military facility in Hanau, near Frankfurt, at the end of 2006, officials said.

All three had undergone training at camps in Pakistan run by the Islamic Jihad Union, and had formed a German cell of the group, which officials said was influenced by al-Qaida.

The Islamic Jihad Union was described as a Sunni Muslim group based in Central Asia that was an offshoot of the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan, an extremist group with origins in that country.

"The group, which is influenced by al-Qaida, set up a German cell in winter of 2006 with the goal of finding recruits here to carry out attacks," Harms said.

The three had no steady work and were drawing unemployment benefits while their main occupation was the plot, officials said. "This group distinguishes itself through its profound hatred of U.S. citizens," Ziercke said.

Members of Germany's elite GSG-9 anti-terrorist unit arrested two suspects at a vacation home in central Germany on Tuesday, Ziercke said. A third managed to escape through a bathroom window, but was apprehended about 300 yards away by federal police who had roped off the area.

Gordon Johndroe, spokesman for the National Security Council, said President Bush had been briefed on the arrests and that he was "pleased a potential attack was thwarted and appreciates the work of the German authorities and the cooperation by international law enforcement."

Germany, which did not send troops to Iraq, has been spared terrorist attacks such as the mass transit bombings in Madrid and London – although its involvement in the attempt to stabilize Afghanistan has led to fears it might be targeted.

German and U.S. officials have warned of the possibility of a terrorist attack, and security measures have been increased.

In July 2006, two gas bombs were placed on commuter trains but did not explode. Officials said that attack was motivated by anger over cartoons portraying the Prophet Muhammad in a Danish newspaper. Several suspects are on trial in Lebanon, and a Lebanese man has been charged in Germany.

Wolfgang Bosbach, a top legislator for Merkel's Christian Democrats, pointed out next week's anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, as well as upcoming deliberations by the German parliament over whether to extend its troop mandates in Afghanistan.

"We are in a highly sensitive period," he said.

Merkel said in an interview released Wednesday that German troops would remain in Afghanistan for several more years, despite recent setbacks in the region.

Ramstein is one of the best-known U.S. Air Force bases worldwide because it serves as a major conduit for U.S. troops moving in and out of Europe, Asia and the Middle East. It is a key transit point for injured troops from Iraq and Afghanistan who are flown there en route to a U.S. medical hospital at nearby Landstuhl.

Members of elite German antiterrorist team GSG-9 arrested the terror suspects in a vacation home in central Germany on Tuesday.

Jewish New Year stirs campus debate religion, like Judaism, has their holidays observed, should every religion get the same recognition?

HOLIDAY from page 1

In many public high schools and grade schools, the students and faculty are granted days off for Christian holidays, such as Good Friday, but not for other holidays such as Rash Hashanah.

"[Observing religious holidays in school] should be decided by town or city. It would make sense in areas where Jewish people make up a certain percentage of the population," said Oleg K., a sophomore UMass student.

While Oleg will be observing Rosh Hashanah next week, other Jewish students will choose to observe the holiday in other ways, based on their level of belief.

Rosh Hashanah is often referred to as the Jewish New Year and begins this year on Wednesday, Sept. 12. When translated in Hebrew, it literally means "head of the year." It is the beginning of 10 days of penitence, called the "Days of Awe." They end on Yom Kippur, which is also referred to as the Day of Atonement.

Jewish tradition says that on Rosh Hashanah represents the day God created "Adam" – which in Hebrew means "human." It is the Christian equivalent of celebrating the seven days in which God created the earth, humans and other forms of civilization.

Regardless of their level of religious belief, members of the UMass Jewish community will still honor their New Year celebration, whether they are in class or not.

Arch Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu

Beards compete for top prize

BY RAPHAEL SATTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

One contestant had a mustache twisted into the shape of London's Tower Bridge; others sported bushy beards that would make Grizzly Adams envious. In the end, Beard Team USA nabbed four of the top honors – by a whisker – at the World Beard and Mustache Championships.

About 250 shaggy men from around the world competed Saturday in 17 different classes of facial hair at the competition in Brighton, England.

The event had long been dominated by German beard clubs, but the Americans made a strong showing at humans and other forms of civilization.

Regardless of their level of religious belief, members of the UMass Jewish community will still honor their New Year celebration, whether they are in class or not.

Jack Passion, a 23-year-old from San Francisco, won the highly competitive "Full Natural Beard" competition with his flowing orange fuzz.

"I feel fantastic," he told The Associated Press in a telephone interview. "I'm 23 and I have the best beard in the world."

He attributed part of his success to his outfit, a blue tuxedo and bowler hat, which helped bring out the red in his beard.

"I looked like a groom," he said. "Too bad you never get married when you have a huge beard."

U.S. competitors won four awards in the World Beard and Mustache Championships, traditionally dominated by German beard clubs.

The mustache categories include the "Dali" – slender with long tips, straight or arching up – and the big and bushy "Hungarian," while the beard categories ranged from the shorter "Verdi" to the rounder, more expansive "Garibaldi."

Those with particularly fanciful fuzz – like the man with the Tower Bridge growing from his face – competed in freestyle categories.

The first World Beard and Mustache Championship was held by beard enthusiasts in Germany in 1990.

Church to stand for trial

BY CONSTANT BRAND
ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Belgian prosecutor on Tuesday recommended that the U.S.-based Church of Scientology stand trial for fraud and extortion, following a 10-year investigation that concluded the group should be labeled a criminal organization.

Scientology said it would fight the criminal charges recommended by investigating prosecutor Jean-Claude Van Espen, who said that up to 12 unidentified people should face charges.

Van Espen's probe also concluded that Scientology's Brussels-based Europe office and its Belgian missions conducted unlawful practices in medicine, violated privacy laws and used illegal business contracts, said Lieve Pellens, a spokeswoman at the Federal Prosecutors Office.

"They also face charges of being ... a criminal organization," Pellens said in a telephone interview.

An administrative court will decide whether to press charges against the Scientologists.

In a statement, Scientology's Europe office accused the prosecutor of hounding the organization and said it would contest the charges.

"For the last 10 years, the prosecutor has been using the media, trying to damage the reputation of the Church of Scientology and not being able to put a case in court," Scientology said. "As a consequence, this created a climate of intolerance and discrimination" in Belgium.

It added that the prosecutor's recommendations – suggested Scientology was guilty even before a court could hear the charges, making it "difficult for the Church of Scientology to recover and properly defend [itself] before the court."

Scientology has been active in Belgium for nearly three decades. In 2003, it opened an international office near the headquarters of the European Union to lobby for its right to be recognized as an official religious group, a status it does not enjoy in Belgium.

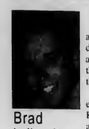
A Belgian parliamentary committee report in 1997 labeled Scientology a sect and investigations were launched into the group's finances and practices, such as the personality tests conducted on new members.

Investigators have spent the past decade trying to determine how far Scientology went in recruiting converts after numerous complaints were filed with police by ex-members alleging they'd been the victims of intimidation and extortion.

RELAX?
FORGET IT
PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
Full Fitness Facilities · Cybex Free Weights · 43 Cardio Machines · Studio w/ 30 Classes · Cybex · Nautilus · court · Basketball court · Walk/Jog track · Indoor Tennis courts · Indoor Cycling · Yoga · Pilates · Full-sized Indoor Rock wall · Squash
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL
AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
INFO-RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

MOVING ON?
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation. Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only.
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
One Way Rentals
Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Want to write for news? Email us at News@Daily Collegian.com



Are you Jewish, 18-26 and never been to Israel on a peer organized tour?
IF YES, THEN YOU'RE ELIGIBLE FOR A
FREE 10-DAY TRIP TO ISRAEL.
REGISTER NOW!
Registration opens September 5 at 9 a.m.
Travel with UMASS Amherst! www.umasshillel.org instructions on registering for the UMass Oranim trip
Confused? Contact Mara to walk you through the registration process
413-549-1710 or mara@external.umass.edu
COMBINED JEWISH PHILANTHROPIES www.birthrightisrael.com

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Bartenders · Barback · Cashier · Security Staff · Waitress · Promotional Staff
Thursday 18 Plus College Night
WITH THIS COUPON
21+ Free Admission before 11:00 pm
18+ $5.00 off Admission before 11:00 pm
COLLEGE ID REQUIRED
BATTLE THE BEST PARTY SOMEPLACE!
Cannot be combined with any other discount
Expires 9/30/07
10 Stearns Sq. Springfield MA (413) 827-9000 www.SkyPlex.us
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 RT. 9, AMHERST

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A shocking call to conscience

Brad Leibowitz

Take a second, before you read any further, to think about your dream. The dreams you had as a kid and the dreams you have now. Have they changed? Do they differ or are they the same?

I think for the majority of us, we essentially share the same dream. Regardless of how you go about achieving it, I believe every one ultimately shares the same dream. At the end of the day we all want to have the freedom to do as we wish. To be happy. To know our families are safe and enjoying their lives.

For some of us, we dream of being an astronaut, for others, it's a doctor, for others, a movie god or rock star. Again, regardless of the path, our dreams all remain the same. To be safe, to be free, to be happy.

In this spirit, I come to a hero of mine: Robert F. Kennedy.

The little brother of John, he – much like Martin Luther King – shared our collective dream and found a way to channel it into the hearts and minds of all of us.

I often wonder why we kill the ones who try to help us.

I live in New York City, and on Aug. 4, three college kids in Newark, N.J. were brutally murdered. They were made to kneel down in front of a playground wall and were shot in the back of the head, execution style. A fourth college student was shot, but luckily survived.

They were shot while being robbed – killed for a measly few dollars.

A 31-year-old man and a 15-year-old kid were arrested for the crime. Fifteen – let that sink in – 15.

We all have a dream. Those three kids who were unmercifully killed, they had one. The 31-year old had one. The 15-year old had one.

Where along the way does someone lose track of his or her dream? How does it happen? Somewhere along the way, violence like this reminds us, as a society, that something is terribly wrong. Where along the way does one lose track of wanting to be happy, wanting to be loved, wanting to be free and safe?

I know nothing about the personal lives of the two men who shot those four college kids, yet I do know they lost track of their dream. If you want to be safe and happy yourself, you object and fight against violence that puts you or your fellow man in danger of losing that safety and happiness.

Machiavelli said we are greedy by nature. He was right. As a race, we don't want to be helped. Hitler and Stalin were feared and followed. R.F.K., Martin Luther King, Ghandi, John Lennon, and Lincoln we loved – and assassinated.

And why?

They were killed because one man, or a group of men, disagreed with their message of peace. A message which simply said your fellow man is your brother, your fellow man is you.

We keep Charlie Manson alive in a cell to study his insane and evil nature, yet we don't study those like Robert F. Kennedy for their peaceful demeanors.

Kennedy was a man of action who spoke out in a time of violence. He rallied against the war in Vietnam, he rallied against the violence and riots taking place domestically and he rallied for the rights of everyone, regardless of their race, their color or their creed.

Sadly, we have no leaders like him anymore. He was a voice of calm and reason in a time of turmoil and passion. Before he was assassinated he said the following:

"What has violence ever accomplished, what has it ever created? For when you teach a man to hate and to fear his brother. When you teach that he is a lesser man because of his color, or his beliefs or the policies that he pursues. When you teach that those who are different from you threaten your freedom or your job or your home or your family, then you also learn to confront others not as fellow citizens, but as enemies."

So think of your dream and do the best you can to inspire them in others. Our dreams are our collective hopes as a race.

Every war that's ever been fought, every leader which has ever killed, every man who has ever committed an act of violence or of peace, they have all shared this place. Everyone you know, or ever will know, shares the same small rock floating amidst, what seems to be, the empty cavern of space.

By that fact alone, by our insignificance or by our sole existence within a universe of nothing, our squabbles must stop. Next time you see violence, or are a victim of it, think of your dream and reinforce it. Think of R.F.K. and these words:

"Our lives on this planet are too short, the work to be done is too great. But we can perhaps remember, that those who live with us are our brothers, that they share with us the same short moment of life, that they seek as do we, nothing but the chance to live out their lives in purpose and in happiness. Surely this bond of common fate, this bond of common roles can begin to teach us something, that we can begin to work a little harder, to become in our hearts, brothers and countrymen once again."

H.G. Wells once wrote, "For neither do men live nor die in vain." Strive to make this true.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!
RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!
(550 WORD LIMIT)
Send letters to Editorial@dailycollegian.com.

Playing nice with Pakistan

It may come as no surprise, but once again many people are beginning to fear a new development in west Asia. The newest perceived threat, after Afghanistan, Iraq and Iran have become old news, is our ally-at-odds, Pakistan.

Michael Shulman

Like the rest of the countries in the region, the government of Pakistan has a tenuous relationship with the United States. What makes this relationship even more complex is that U.S policy advises helping a government that did not take over in a legitimate political fashion. However, unlike most dictators that take over countries in a military coup, Pakistan's President, General Pervez Musharraf, has steadily given his people a wider taste of freedom and democracy.

Unfortunately for the West, and the United States in particular, democracy In Pakistan could spell a more dangerous shift in daily safety. As the July revolts in the capital of Pakistan have shown, a large population of Pakistanis have embraced the kind of jingoistic Islamic fervor that worries the United States so. High percentages of the Pakistani people strongly dislike the United States and its policies, and a government for and by the people of Pakistan could cause massive headaches for U.S. intentions for the area.

In such a difficult dilemma, what is a responsible democracy to do – continue support of a less-than-legitimate government that provides limited aid in the fight against terror, or support a legitimate democracy that may try to further impede chances towards peace and progress in the area?

I personally think that the key to peace in the Pakistan puzzle is a respectful and detached view towards the stirrings of Pakistani democracy while making sure that power is transferred from tyrant to the Pakistani people with as little violence as possible. History has shown on multiple occasions that a country with legitimate elections is far less likely to use violence on other democracies, and in any case, a treasured – if not entirely properly used – tradition in America is supporting democracies around the globe.

The more conservative half of political thought would view support of a democracy sharing some of the same ideals of America's enemies as a foolish mistake. The left would see it as an act of moral bankruptcy to continue supporting a non-legitimate Government. The middle ground, however, espouses patience – elections in Pakistan come this October, and Musharraf himself stated that he will cede power even if elected by 2012. This means a change will come in time and U.S. foreign policy towards Pakistan must be tailored to the fact that the new government will be uncooperative, but not unworkable.

The scenario in Pakistan's future that seems most likely as of now is a power sharing deal between Musharraf and at least one of two prime ministers who were exiled at the beginning of his regime. One is Benazir Bhutto, a female prime minister ousted from Pakistan's government two times for charges of corruption, who is also known for a liberal, pro-western stance that has made many U.S. headlines for being a safe bet for security.

The other is Nawaz Sharif, a former prime minister most remembered for ordering an atomic weapon test after India had completed its own bomb, and for being the man ousted by Musharraf in 1999. Known for being lax on terrorism and for two terms steeped in corruption, Sharif is the less popular contender. The most intelligent idea for the United States to take in difficult power struggle: treat all sides of the skirmish with equal amounts of respect and careful detachment.

As long as diplomatic channels are kept open to all sides of the conflict, the United States can limit the amount of wrath it incurs from the various groups jockeying for power. If major diplomatic blunders can be limited, any group that comes to power will have a minimum of fuel to flame anti-U.S. fervor.

In today's changing landscape, it is obvious that the ways of violence shaping government policy have been transformed dramatically. Countries no longer need to fear other governments as much as the groups that operate from outside their jurisdiction. Therefore, a cordial if strained relationship with a government is always preferable to ignoring a system that may be harboring enemies. If the United States is to get out of this period of middle-eastern turmoil with a minimum of damage, a policy of cooperation must be put before one of immoral comfort, lest we repeat more of the same mistakes.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

Entrap a predator

Michael Dennis

You know the drill. Pudgy old dude enters a house. Childlike, female voice calls out, "I want you in, I'll be out in a minute!" The guy looks around suspiciously, taking off his sunglasses, but proceeds anyway and closes the door behind him. He walks into the kitchen and sits down, just as a smooth, tall drink of man – better known as Dateline NBC's Chris Hansen – emerges stealthily from the shadows.

Awkward conversation ensues; the guy claims he's never done it before, didn't intend to have sex, yada yada yada, until he exits the house and police tackle him violently (whether he resists or not).

It's called "To Catch a Predator," and it's purported to be a no-frills, straight-shooting express train of journalistic integrity that takes out the perverts and leaves safe children in its wake.

But let's not kid ourselves. Television is tailored for short attention spans. The great majority of programming, from news to music videos, is built on presentation. Content is secondary. And, as "To Catch a Predator" proves, no matter how serious the topic, this theory usually holds true.

Of course, Dateline and Mr. Hansen could not pull off such a complex operation without some assistance. Right by their side is Perverted Justice, a vigilante organization whose stated goal is to "poison the well of those [chat] rooms and places by covering enough of them that even if you're looking for underage females, an extra bit of paranoia will cross your mind."

Through the use of underage "decoys," Perverted Justice has been accused of entrapment, defined as "the action of luring an individual into committing a crime in order to prosecute the person for it." Another one of Dateline's star reporters, the stoic Stone Phillips, has admitted as such, conceding, "in many cases, the decoy is the first to bring up the subject of sex."

As hinted at in their mission statement, Perverted Justice prides itself in embarrassing the accused. One look at their Web site and it's not hard to see – it's riddled with explicit chat room transcripts and a feature known as "slimyness" rating, where by one can rate a pedophile's reprehensibility on a one-to-five scale. They even sell a classy t-shirt that sports their name, an American flag, and the quip "Squeeze no child's behind."

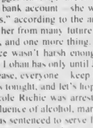
As one could guess, "Peed," as they've affectionately dubbed their organization, isn't without its critics. In fact, there exists a site known as Corrupted Justice, which states its goal is "to help to educate the [community to the dangers of the vigilante actions being perpetrated by the Web site Perverted-Justice.com and its members." They estimate that Perverted Justice has "harassed" approximately 2,545 individuals since 2003 without any sort of police involvement.

It's not the easiest thing in the world to rail against an organization claiming to have the safety of kids in mind. At first glance, it seems on par with protesting against the construction of a children's hospital. But Corrupted Justice puts it best when they say, "We are not 'pedophile enablers' or 'pro-pedophile'. We strongly believe in the concept of the rule of law, and do not believe ANY group, regardless of the evil they purport to combat, is justified in trampling the rule of law by the use of intimidation, public humiliation and harassment."

So in reality, it's more like fighting against the construction of a children's hospital being built with lead paint and asbestos. If you're going to do good, you still need to do it right.

As with all crimes, due-process should be afforded to all suspects.

No matter how reprehensible their actions are purported to be, no one deserves to be outed and embarrassed on national TV before anything has been proven in court. As it is, our legal system gets enough things wrong – imagine the margin of error for a group of random people off the street.



A lawsuit was recently filed by the sister of a former Texas district attorney who committed suicide after being targeted by "To Catch a Predator." While the lawsuit seeks damages for emotional distress and embarrassment leading directly to his death, it doesn't end there. According to legal documents related to the case, she is seeking "$35 million for bribery of government officials [police] in violation of the RICO act."

That's right – Dateline has been accused of paying off local police organizations to convince them to comply with their operations. That's some heavy stuff, and further brings into question whether the series really has anything to do with preventing any crimes, or making the world a better place.

The fact is, Dateline has little vested interest in bringing anyone to justice. At least, no more than I or cares about turning American Idol contestants into successful musicians, or Wheel of Fortune cares about breaking new grammatical ground. And Perverted Justice? Maybe, deep down somewhere, they really care about the kids. But I'd guess they're more concerned with quenching a selfish thirst for crime-busting than anything else. Either way, they're causing more harm than good, and the hope here is that Dateline and Peed are, fittingly, brought to justice for their actions.

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at michael.e.dennis@gmail.com

Justice, Hollywood style

Anthony David Rueli

Browsing around the Internet Movie Database (on my daily visit), I became quite distressed upon reading the top two "Movie and TV News" articles in the "Celebrity News" section.

Back to back, I read the two articles: "Lohan to Serve One Day in Jail" and "Richie Free After 80 Minutes Behind Bars."

Lindsay Lohan has been arrested twice in the past four months for driving under the influence of alcohol and for possession (and being under the influence) of cocaine.

Her first arrest in May resulted from her crashing her car in Beverly Hills while drunk – and high on coke. She nobly (eye-roll) decided to check herself into a rehabilitation clinic. Just two days after she checked out, she was arrested yet again, this time for a car chase with police in Santa Monica – while drunk and high on coke.

She managed to rack up seven charges for which she was tried in late August, receiving a four-day prison sentence which was then reduced to a two-day prison sentence which was then reduced to a one-day sentence for time already served.

Not only will Lohan have to suffer the hardships of her lengthy one-day prison sentence, but she will also have to deal with an even bigger travesty, sure to emotionally cripple her as well as dry up her bank account – she will have to pay "hundreds of dollars in fines," according to the article. Hundreds! I hope that doesn't hinder her from many future visits to her coke dealer.

Oh, and one more thing. In case any of you thought that this sentence wasn't harsh enough (ridiculous, I know), bear this in mind – Lohan has only until Jan. 18, 2008 to serve her day in prison. Please, everyone – keep Lindsay Lohan in your thoughts and prayers tonight, and let's hope she survives this horrible ordeal.

Nicole Richie was arrested last December for driving under the influence of alcohol, marijuana and illegal prescription drugs. She was sentenced to serve four days in prison.

However, when she arrived to serve her time in late August, she arrived at 7:15 p.m. and was released the same day at 4:37 p.m. Richie served 82 minutes of a four day sentence before leaving prison free as a bird due to "jail overcrowding."

It's an absolute disgrace to our justice system (and to our country, at that) that these girls can get away with whatever they want, when, if other non-celebrities were to commit similar crimes, they wouldn't be shown half the leniency.

Both Lohan and Richie's attorneys repeatedly point out that the two ladies have certainly not received special privileges on account of their celebrity status. I believe that the fact that the lawyers need to bother making this clear is indication enough that the truth is quite the opposite.

Similar events have occurred earlier this year, when Paris Hilton was also released early from her sentence for similar crimes. What kind of a message does it send to the youth of America, who look up to these girls as idols, if they can persist in their dangerous and blatant disregard for human safety and get away scot-free while laughing in the face of our legal system?

It should be noted that the judges also must be aware of the leniency that these girls are being shown. They have repeatedly stated that, if caught again, their punishments would be much more severe. Lohan would be facing a mandatory 120-day jail sentence if she is arrested for driving under the influence again. I'll believe it when I see it.

Anthony David Rueli is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at arueli@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

DUFFY LAUGHABLE, MISLEAD

Dear Editor,

Re: "Murder: not a slippery slope." Back to School, 2007

Right wing ideologues like Mr. Duffy may find it necessary to search for "facts" somewhere beyond the selective fantasy narrative of history in which they are operating if they ever again want permission from the citizens of this country to lay their hands upon so much as an ounce of political power. Having us believe that the answers to historically and philosophically profound questions such as women's rights can be boiled down to vastly over-generalized phraseology is nothing more than jingoistic propaganda, something which makes any substantive or effective discursive exchange within the public arena effectively worthless and impossible. Maintaining the vitality of such an exchange is critical for any society that wants to lay claim to even a shred of civility or respect for its citizens.

Unfortunately, Mr. Duffy's laughably simplistic characterizations of history and vitriolic demonization of hard fought social movements are not merely an example of an obscure and misled individual, but in fact are symptomatic of a severely corrupted public discourse in which comparing every contemporary political and historical scenario to Nazi Germany is accepted as a passable rationale for making hugely important political decisions that can literally determine life and death for millions of working people around the world. Not only is it an insult to the study of history and those who have suffered in the past – it foreshadows what could be an unfortunate future for this country if it is how we are to continue our discussions of critical issues.

Jed Rouhana
UMass Student

SEP 6 2007

iRevolution: the next generation

Apple releases iPhone with touchscreen and Wi-Fi

By Michael Cartwright
Collegian Staff

"Every once in a while, a revolutionary product comes along that changes everything," said Steve Jobs at the MacWorld Expo in San Francisco this past January.

Five months later, on June 29, 2007, Steve Jobs and Apple Inc. released the one and only iPhone. The groundbreaking gadget was assigned a $499 price tag for the four-gigabyte model, while the eight-gigabyte model was marked at $599.

Apple sold 270,000 iPhones in first 30 hours they were available.

Taking the iPod to an unimagined level, the revolutionary product is a chic, sleek widescreen mp3 player, two-megapixel camera, cell phone, and Internet browser all-in-one.

The iPhone's Web browser Safari application makes The New York Times just a few touches away.

Got lost on your way to the job interview? Not to worry, Google Map can be accessed in a matter of seconds.

Need to e-mail that term paper before it's too late? Yup, you can do that too.

The "visual voicemail" feature even lets users check messages without actually calling their voicemail. Phone service is contracted with AT&T for the next two years.

And of course, the iPhone does everything its has-been older brother, the iPod, can do. Its multimedia player library can be sorted according to songs, artists, albums, playlists, genres, compilations and composers.

Expectedly, the innovative technology has been making headlines nearly everyday since its unveiling.

On Aug. 13, Justine Ezarik leaked to the Web a popular video of her un-wrapping a Priority Mail package to find a 300-page phone bill sent to her by AT&T. After the video's release, AT&T decided to use a short-summary billing method instead of including in-depth details of incoming and outgoing phone calls and text messages.

On Aug. 24, 17-year-old New Jersey hacker George Holtz did what most thought was not possible. Using complex software and hardware, he unlocked the iPhone from the AT&T network, making it possible to use it with T-Mobile and Sprint and other non-AT&T carriers. Two days later, Terry Daidone, founder of phone reseller CertiCell, traded Holtz three 8GB iPhones and a Nissan350Z in exchange for the unlocked phone.

In the week that followed, iphoneSIMfree.com developed a software solution which unlocked the iPhone, making it fully functional for users outside the United States. The company has not yet planned on selling the software to the general public, but instead to

See IPHONE on page 9

The new look for the iPod Classic will feature a larger screen, sleeker body and up to 160GB of memory.

New iPod details released in time for holiday rush

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

It's hard to imagine the college life without iPods and iTunes. Whether walking to class, studying or supplying the music for a party, we use them all the time. It is impossible to make it from one side of campus to the other without passing at least a dozen iPod users. Every few months Apple introduces something new and we all need to have it. Apple CEO Steve Jobs has gone completely idea crazy and we all get to benefit from it.

Multiple iPods, iPhones and the now rumored collaboration between Apple and German car manufacture Volkswagen AG known as the iCar are all over the blogosphere and are in the dreams of many a techno geek.

Yesterday, Sept. 5, Jobs held an invitation-only press conference in San Francisco, where he unveiled the latest product line.

Apple orchestrated the first major overhaul of the iPod in nearly two years. Among the changes were things that consumers have come to expect, larger screens and more storage, but then Jobs dropped a bombshell. No, the Beatles are still not available to download on iTunes yet, but a new version of the iPod is coming. Joining the Nano, Shuffle and original on the shelves is the iPod Touch.

The latest model is fashioned after the iPhone. Though slimmer then the mobile phone, the iPod Touch features a similar multi-touch interface, built-in Wi-Fi and the Safari Internet browser. Like the iPhone, YouTube videos and Facebook are only a touch away.

The Touch is expected to retail at $299 for 8GB or $399 for 16GB, and should be in stores later this month.

Basically, the iPod Touch is the iPhone without the phone or camera.

But Jobs wasn't done with Touch just yet.

Touch users also benefit from a new joint venture between Apple and Starbucks. Upon entering any Starbucks store that supports Wi-Fi, Touch users will be able download the song currently playing and will be able to retrieve a list of the last 10 songs played for instant download.

To go along with the latest version of the iPod, there is also a new version of iTunes, which allows users to download songs wirelessly, directly onto their iPods.

To date, the company has sold more than 100 million iPods. Jobs also announced upgrades to the rest of the iPod line.

Now sporting the ability to play videos on a larger screen,

See IPOD on page 9

POWs struggle for freedom in war film

By Michael Cartwright
Collegian Staff

The average movie-goer has no idea who Werner Herzog is, but within film circles, he is often regarded to be amongst the greatest directors of all-time.

With the unfortunate and practically simultaneous passing of legendary auteurs Michelangelo Antonioni and Ingmar Bergman, Herzog has worked his way up the list of "Greatest Living Directors," creeping into Godard, Allen and Almodovar territory.

After creating the classic works Aguirre "Wrath of God" in 1972 and Fitzcarraldo in 1982, Herzog followed things up with an inordinate amount of made-for-TV films in late 80s and early 90s. But thankfully, he returned to form in 1997, with a documentary, "Little Dieter Needs To Fly." It told the story of Dieter Dengler, a German-born man who immigrated to the United States and became a Navy pilot assigned to a top-secret bombing mission Dengler illegally flew his plane over Laos on the way to Vietnam. His plane was shot down and after crashing it, he was captured, tortured, and eventually rescued, all during the height of the Vietnam War.

Ten years later, Herzog has turned that affecting documentary into an effective feature film. Upon watching "Rescue Dawn," even those unfamiliar with Dengler may have assumed the film was based on a true story because, honestly, what sane screenwriter would craft a script featuring an American hero named Dieter Dengler?

Dieter Dengler is played by Christian Bale ("Batman Begins," "American Psycho") who, after dropping 40 pounds for "The Machinist" in 2004, has once again emaciated himself for a role. Throughout the film, Bale convincingly carries on crazed conversations (with himself) as he balances on the brink of insanity.

Amongst the tiny brigade of other prisoner of war, Dengler bonds with Duane, played by Steve Zahn ("Shattered Glass," "Forces of Nature") and another inmate, Gene, (Jeremy Davies) who gives Christian Bale a run for his money in the weight-loss department.

The film explores all the methodical details that go into escaping from what appears to be the inescapable. Dengler's tenacity and relative mental stability (the

See RESCUE on page 7

COURTESY MGM

Christian Bale stars as downed Navy pilot Dieter Dengler in the Vietnam War epic "Rescue Dawn."

Back to school, back to rock

Against Me! brings protest anthems to music fans

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

This fall season is not only bringing a class schedule transformation to students, but a fresh lineup of performers set on providing entertainment at Northampton's several venues. Nu wave duo Matt and Kim, songwriter David Dondero and the notably outspoken rock/punk band Against Me! will kick off September tomorrow night at the Pearl Street Ballroom.

Matt and Kim, hailing from Brooklyn, N.Y., describe themselves as an "onstage pizza party" Loaded with unlikely beats and bright energy, their music is relentlessly catchy. It is dangerously tempting to compare Matt and Kim to the White Stripes: the female members of both duos play the drums. In addition, both groups have a hint of that mysteriously inexplicable relationship charm to them, but the similarities end there.

Matt and Kim's music video for their single "Yea Yeah" reassures fans that they are not trying to compete with the White Stripes or any other musical act. The song is as simple, happy and straightforward as it could be. Kim's smile, which does not leave her face for a second, helps to overlook the fact that the whole video is shot in a bland single room with white walls. And when Kim sings the chorus, "Yea Yeah, Yea Yeah, Yea Yeah" while beating on her drums, she means every word.

The duo's self-titled debut, a musical remedy for a bad mood, defines their sound as a constant display of excitement that is impossible to silence.

Matt and Kim's performance is expected to be unthreatening and giddy, which makes them an atypical predecessor to the next act to hit the stage tomorrow night: singer and songwriter David Dondero. He has yet to appear on the mainstream radar, but the buzz about his talent is slowly brewing.

Conor Oberst, front man of popular emo band Bright Eyes, has raved about Dondero's musical talents. Oberst even went as far as crediting his sound to Dondero; his appreciation has brought Dondero to Oberst's label Team Love on which he released "South of the South" and "Simple Love."

Dondero's latest album "Simple Love" became available in the United States in August, and the record brings forth more somber tones than "South of the South." Recorded in Austin, Texas, Dondero enlisted much of the local musical talent to be a part of this album.

"Simple Love" addresses the more grave subjects of undeniable affection, loss and death. Dondero not only expanded his lyrical horizons on this record but also employed a wide variety of instruments to help shape his sound. Fans who thirst for those indie and yet undiscovered artists on the verge of a breakthrough should expect to be pleased.

After an unlikely set of opening performances, an even more unlikely headliner will hit the stage. The four members of the rock band Against Me! are known for their ability to easily stir up the crowd at their shows. Sporting an array of tattoos on their arms, Against Me! play their instruments with vigor and meaning, as sweat rolls down their "all and always black" stage dress code.

Against Me! began their conquest of the protest songs hungry music scene in Gainesville, FL when they released "Reinventing Axl Rose" in 2002 and "As the Eternal Cowboy" in 2003. Followed by extensive touring and many live album releases, Against Me! played at Warped Tour and filmed "We're Never Going Home," a documentary about touring.

Against Me! is currently on a tour across the nation to support their most recent release "New Wave." This record, the band's major label debut on Sire Records, was a risky gamble for the band to take. It seemed illogical for Against Me!, a band that is clearly not in favor of anything incorporated, to make a move to a major label.

However, the themes of resentment of authority and dissatisfaction with the government continue their persistent march throughout "New Wave." Although the new record received mixed reactions from the likewise anti-authoritarian fan base, it did gain notable respect among major music

See AGAINST ME! on page 7

COURTESY WARNER/EMI

Against Me! wears black clothing as their trademark during all concerts and publicity photo shoots, giving them an angst-filled image rivaling the less rocking bands of today's music scene.

War film not all about politics

Acclaimed director Werner Herzog's latest film, "Rescue Dawn," is based on a true story and was filmed partially in the jungle to give the film a flair of authenticity. Herzog is famous for previously directing movie such as "Grizzly Man."

RESCUE from page 6

rest of the POWs completely lose it! It is as remarkable and inspiring as the wealth of wonderfully filmed shots the film's filled with. Nearly 100 percent of the movie was shot in an actual jungle, and so, most of the time, the viewer feels trapped alongside the POWs in a dark cake of green, somewhat slimy.

Despite the endless parallels between Vietnam and Iraq, "Rescue Dawn" doesn't contain much, if any political commentary. Instead, it focuses more on a "man versus nature" tale of survival. This isn't the least bit surprising though, considering this sort of theme has dominated (almost to the point of obsession) most of Herzog's films over the course of his career. In fact, "Rescue Dawn" seems like it could've been made during the peak of that obsessive career. It's the kind of non-flashy action film that was so prevalent in the 1970s, yet is, for the most part, sadly absent today. Its gritty, low-budget look also works perfectly in heightening the true tale's realism.

Herzog decided to give us a massive second act, as he really doesn't give us much with the first and third whatsoever. Dengler is quickly lost in the Laotian jungle at the beginning of the film, and the rescue scene towards the end is brief to say the least. "Rescue Dawn" focuses primarily on one thing: the struggle to survive. The performances of Bale, Zahn, and Davies certainly don't detract from things either. The trio will likely take home a few obscure acting awards, if only for their mind-blowing preparation.

Most people believe Werner Herzog to be insane, and not too many people disagree with that sentiment. Maybe he is bonkers, but maybe Herzog's continuous exploration of madness and survival is what he himself needs to survive; to keep from going completely over the edge. The iconic nutcase has gone from "Woyzeck" to "Grizzly Man," and now, to "Rescue Dawn."

It seems safe to say the living legend will not stop making these kinds of films. And well, as long as this German genius keeps on churning out epics this powerful, who really cares how crazy he is?

Michael Cartwright can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu

RESCUE DAWN

STARRING: CHRISTIAN BALE

A-

Against Me! calls for fist pumping

AGAINST ME! from page 6

magazines and critics – Rolling Stone magazine gave it four out of five stars.

Perhaps "New Wave" is such a great success because of the work done by the renowned producer Butch Vig, whose credits include Nirvana's "Nevermind" and Smashing Pumpkin's "Siamese Dream." Or perhaps it is lyrics such as: "Are you restless like me?" that provide Against Me! with a guarantee that a sea of fists will charge into the air. Whatever forces are behind the reasons that the band's latest record, loaded with defiant ballads and commanding guitar riffs, are at work, the crowd should be aware: a revolution may take its first breath of life as Against Me! progress through the set tomorrow night.

Openers Matt and Kim, David Dondero and headliners Against Me! will take the stage tomorrow night at [illegible] at the Pearl Street Ballroom. Doors open [illegible]. Tickets are $[illegible] in advance and $17 at the door.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at [illegible] umass.edu

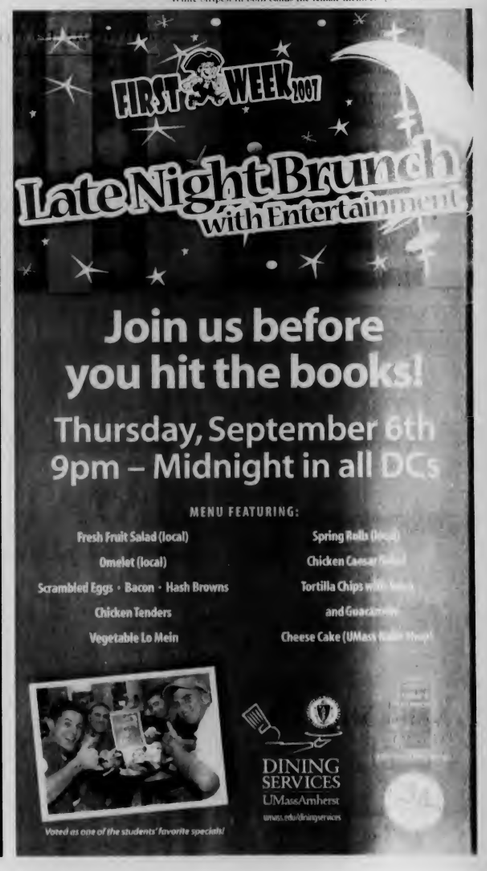
AGAINST ME!

MATT AND KIM

PEARL STREET

$14.50 ADV
$17 DOOR

Rock 'n' roll duo Matt and Kim can be compared [illegible] White Stripes. In both bands the female member [illegible]



SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.

BUY THEM HERE.

LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to Ani Science	Engin 110	Intro To Chem Engin	MIE 210	Statics
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro To Cis & Lrn	MGT 260	Intro To Law
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to ELE	MGT 301	Principles of Mgt
Anthro 102-A	Arch & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Mech. & Indus	MicBio 160	Bio, Of Cancer &
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	Engl WP 111, 112		Music 100	Appreciation Intro
Anthro 104-A	Culture Soc. & People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env. Biology	Music 101	Hist of Music
Art Hist 100	Survey Ancient & Med	EnvSci 112	Fund Of the Environ	Music 103	History of Jazz
Art Hist 115	Intro To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro To Environ Policy	Nursing 100	Pers. Hl Nursing
Astron 100 1-4	Intro To Astronomy	EnvDes 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 210	Hum Growth & Dev
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	EnMgt 250	Quant. Tools Mgt	Nursing 301	Pathophysiology
BioBot hem 285	Cell & Molec. Biology	EnMgt 300	Fund. Of Finance	Nursing 315	Prof. & Adv. Assessment
Biol hem 420	Hem Biochemistry	EnMgt 301	Corp. Finance	Nursing 327	Mental Health Nurs.
Biol hem 471	Hem Physical Chem	EnMgt 304	Intro Tech Finance	Nutr 150	Under Nutrition
Biol hem 523	General Biol Chemistry	EnMgt 320	Investments	Phil 110	Intro To Philosophy
Bio 100 A1-A4 B D	Intro to Biology I	Forest 528	Forest & Wetlands Hyd	Phil 164	Medical Ethics
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem. French I	Physics 100	Concept. Physics
Bio 105	Biology of Sex, Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Environ. Change	Physics 125	Seeing the Light
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 131	Intro to Physics I
Bio 108	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Landscape	Physics 132	Intro to Physics II
Bio 280	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro To Oceanogrp	Physics 139	Intro to Physics
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic earth	Physics 152	General Physics II
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem. German	Physics 181	Physics I - Mech
Chem 111 112	Fdn Chem. Sci. Majors	Hist 111	World Hist 1500-Pres.	Physics 281	Comput. Physic
Chem 261 262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 101 A	Western Thought	Physics 421	Mechanics I
Chem 269	Org. Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist of China I	PolSci 101-B	American Politics
Chem 471	Elem. Phys. Chem	Hist 150	Dev. Of Amer Civ.-1806	PolSci 121 B	World Politics
CmpSci 105	Intro To Comp Sci	Hist 151 A	Dev of Amer. Civ II	PolSci 162	Constitutional Law
CmpSci 120	Problem Solving w Intr	HI Mgt 100	Intro to Hosp. & Tour	PolSci 255	Am. Foreign Policy
CmpSci 187-A	Program. W/ Data Struc	HI Mgt 150	Food Priv Mgt	Psych 100 1-9	Intro To Psychology
CmpSci 287	Prog. Lang. Paradigms	HI Mgt 250	Food Service Mgt.	Psych 240 A-C	Stats. For Psych
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	HI Mgt 260	Hosp Personnel Mgt	Psych 241	Methods of Inquiry
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 320	Learn & Think
Comm 240	Modes of Film Comm	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 330	Phys. Psychology
ComHlth 210	Intro To Comm Disor	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutrit	Psych 335	Behav. Endocrin
ComDis 211	Artic & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Prevent. & Care of At	Psych 350	Child Development
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang. Disor.	Kin 297 A, C	Anatomy & Phys. II	Psych 380	Abnorm. Psychology
Econ 101 V-J	Intro. To Microeconomic	Kin 380	Diets, Supple & Ath.	Soc 100 A, D	Race, Gender Class
Econ 104	Intro. To MacroEcon	Kin 440	wellness in The Wor	Span 110-126	Elem. Spanish I
Econ 203 A, B	Inter. Microecon Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills	Span 126	Elem. Spanish II
Econ 204 B	Inter. Macroecon The	Math 101-104	PreCalc Algebra	Span. 311	Ad. Grammar
Econ 305	Mathem Economics	Math 113	Math For Elem Teach
ECE 572	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Meth. & Prob

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

SEP 6 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

iRevolution: the next generation

Apple releases iPhone with touchscreen and Wi-Fi

By Michael Cartwright
Collegian Staff

"Every once in a while, a revolutionary product comes along that changes everything," said Steve Jobs at the MacWorld Expo in San Francisco this past January.

Five months later, on June 29, 2007, Steve Jobs and Apple Inc. released the one and only iPhone. The groundbreaking gadget was assigned a $499 price tag for the four-gigabyte model, while the eight-gigabyte model was marked at $599.

Apple sold 270,000 iPhones in first 30 hours they were available.

Taking the iPod to an unimagined level, the revolutionary product is a chic, sleek widescreen mp3 player, two-megapixel camera, cell phone, and Internet browser all-in-one.

The iPhone's Web browser Safari application makes The New York Times just a few touches away.

Got lost on your way to the job interview? Not to worry, Google Map can be accessed in a matter of seconds.

Need to e-mail that term paper before it's too late? Yup, you can do that too.

The "visual voicemail" feature even lets users check messages without actually calling their voicemail. Phone service is contracted with AT&T for the next two years.

And of course, the iPhone does everything its has-been older brother, the iPod, can do. Its multimedia player library can be sorted according to songs, artists, albums, playlists, genres, compilations and composers.

Expectedly, the innovative technology has been making headlines nearly everyday since its unveiling.

On Aug. 13, Justine Ezarik leaked to the Web a popular video of her un-wrapping a Priority Mail package to find a 300-page phone bill sent to her by AT&T. After the video's release, AT&T decided to use a short-summary billing method instead of including in-depth details of incoming and outgoing phone calls and text messages.

On Aug. 24, 17-year-old New Jersey hacker George Holtz did what most thought was not possible. Using complex software and hardware, he unlocked the iPhone from the AT&T network, making it possible to use it with T-Mobile and Sprint and other non-AT&T carriers. Two days later, Terry Daidone, founder of phone reseller CertiCell, traded Holtz three 8GB iPhones and a Nissan 350Z in exchange for the unlocked phone.

In the week that followed, iphoneSIMfree.com developed a software solution which unlocked the iPhone, making it fully functional for users outside the United States. The company has not yet planned on selling the software to the general public, but instead to

See IPHONE on page 9

The new look for the iPod Classic will feature a larger screen, sleeker body and up to 160GB of memory.

New iPod details released in time for holiday rush

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

It's hard to imagine the college life without iPods and iTunes. Whether walking to class, studying or supplying the music for a party, we use them all the time. It is impossible to make it from one side of campus to the other without passing at least a dozen iPod users. Every few months Apple introduces something new and we all need to have it. Apple CEO Steve Jobs has gone completely idea crazy and we all get to benefit from it.

Multiple iPods, iPhones and the now rumored collaboration between Apple and German car manufacture Volkswagen AG known as the iCar are all over the blogosphere and are in the dreams of many a techno geek.

Yesterday, Sept. 5, Jobs held an invitation-only press conference in San Francisco, where he unveiled the latest product line.

Apple orchestrated the first major overhaul of the iPod in nearly two years. Among the changes were things that consumers have come to expect, larger screens and more storage, but then Jobs dropped a bombshell. No, the Beatles are still not available to download on iTunes yet, but a new version of the iPod is coming. Joining the Nano, Shuffle and original on the shelves is the iPod Touch.

The latest model is fashioned after the iPhone. Though slimmer then the mobile phone, the iPod Touch features a similar multi-touch interface, built-in Wi-Fi and the Safari Internet browser. Like the iPhone, YouTube videos and Facebook are only a touch away.

The Touch is expected to retail at $299 for 8GB or $399 for 16GB, and should be in stores later this month.

Basically, the iPod Touch is the iPhone without the phone or camera.

But Jobs wasn't done with Touch just yet.

Touch users also benefit from a new joint venture between Apple and Starbucks. Upon entering any Starbucks store that supports Wi-Fi, Touch users will be able download the song currently playing and will be able to retrieve a list of the last 10 songs played for instant download.

To go along with the latest version of the iPod, there is also a new version of iTunes, which allows users to download songs wirelessly, directly onto their iPods.

To date, the company has sold more than 100 million iPods. Jobs also announced upgrades to the rest of the iPod line.

Now sporting the ability to play videos on a larger screen,

See IPOD on page 9

POWs struggle for freedom in war film

By Michael Cartwright
Collegian Staff

The average movie-goer has no idea who Werner Herzog is, but within film circles, he is often regarded to be amongst the greatest directors of all-time.

With the unfortunate (and practically simultaneous) passing of legendary auteurs Michelangelo Antonioni and Ingmar Bergman, Herzog has worked his way up the list of "Greatest Living Directors," creeping into Godard, Allen and Almodovar territory.

After creating the classic works Aguirre "Wrath of God" in 1972 and Fitzcarraldo in 1982, Herzog hollowed things up with an inordinate amount of made-for-TV films in late 80s and early '90s. But thankfully, he returned to form in 1997, with a documentary, "Little Dieter Needs To Fly." It told the story of Dieter Dengler, a German-born man who immigrated to the United States and became a Navy pilot assigned to a top-secret bombing mission. Dengler illegally flew his plane over Laos on the way to Vietnam. His plane was shot down and after crashing it, he was captured, tortured, and eventually rescued, all during the height of the Vietnam War.

Ten years later, Herzog has turned that affecting documentary into an effective feature film. Upon watching "Rescue Dawn," even those unfamiliar with Dengler may have assumed the film was based on a true story because, honestly, what sane screenwriter would craft a script featuring an American hero named Dieter Dengler?

Dieter Dengler is played by Christian Bale ("Batman Begins," "American Psycho") who, after dropping 40 pounds for "The Machinist" in 2004, has once again emaciated himself for a role. Throughout the film, Bale convincingly carries on crazed conversations (with himself) as he balances on the brink of insanity.

Amongst the tiny brigade of other prisoner of war, Dengler bonds with Duane, played by Steve Zahn ("Shattered Glass," "Forces of Nature") and another inmate, Gene, (Jeremy Davies) who gives Christian Bale a run for his money in the weight-loss department.

The film explores all the methodical details that go into escaping from what appears to be the inescapable. Dengler's tenacity and relative mental stability (the

See RESCUE on page 7

COURTESY MGM

Christian Bale stars as downed Navy pilot Dieter Dengler in the Vietnam War epic "Rescue Dawn."

Back to school, back to rock

Against Me! brings protest anthems to music fans

By Olga Deshchenko
Collegian Staff

This fall season is not only bringing a class schedule transformation to students, but a fresh lineup of performers set on providing entertainment at Northampton's several venues. Nu wave duo Matt and Kim, songwriter David Dondero and the notably outspoken rock/punk band Against Me! will kick off September tomorrow night at the Pearl Street Ballroom.

Matt and Kim, hailing from Brooklyn, N.Y., describe themselves as an "onstage pizza party" Loaded with unlikely beats and bright energy, their music is relentlessly catchy. It is dangerously tempting to compare Matt and Kim to the White Stripes: the female members of both duos play the drums. In addition, both groups have a hint of that mysteriously inexplicable relationship charm to them, but the similarities end there.

Matt and Kim's music video for their single "Yea Yeah" reassures fans that they are not trying to compete with the White Stripes or any other musical act. The song is as simple, happy and straightforward as it could be. Kim's smile, which does not leave her face for a second, helps to overlook the fact that the whole video is shot in a bland single room with white walls. And when Kim sings the chorus, "Yea Yeah, Yea Yeah, Yea Yeah" while beating on her drums, she means every word.

The duo's self-titled debut, a musical remedy for a bad mood, defines their sound as a constant display of excitement that is impossible to silence.

Matt and Kim's performance is expected to be unthreatening and giddy, which makes them an atypical predecessor to the next act to hit the stage tomorrow night: singer and songwriter David Dondero. He has yet to appear on the mainstream radar, but the buzz about his talent is slowly brewing.

Conor Oberst, front man of popular emo band Bright Eyes, has raved about Dondero's musical talents. Oberst even went as far as crediting his sound to Dondero; his appreciation has brought Dondero to Oberst's label Team Love on which he released "South of the South" and "Simple Love."

Dondero's latest album "Simple Love" became available in the United States in August, and the record brings forth more somber tones than "South of the South." Recorded in Austin, Texas, Dondero enlisted much of the local musical talent to be a part of this album.

"Simple Love" addresses the more grave subjects of undeniable affection, loss and death. Dondero not only expanded his lyrical horizons on this record but also employed a wide variety of instruments to help shape his sound. Fans who thirst for those indie and yet undiscovered artists on the verge of a breakthrough should expect to be pleased.

After an unlikely set of opening performances, an even more unlikely headliner will hit the stage. The four members of the rock band Against Me! are known for their ability to easily stir up the crowd at their shows. Sporting an array of tattoos on their arms, Against Me! play their instruments with vigor and meaning, as sweat rolls down their "all and always black" stage dress code.

Against Me! began their conquest of the protest songs-hungry music scene in Gainesville, FL when they released "Reinventing Axl Rose" in 2002 and "As the Eternal Cowboy" in 2003. Followed by extensive touring and many live album releases, Against Me! played at Warped Tour and filmed "We're Never Going Home," a documentary about touring.

Against Me! is currently on a tour across the nation to support their most recent release "New Wave." This record, the band's major label debut on Sire Records, was a risky gamble for the band to take. It seemed illogical for Against Me!, a band that is clearly not in favor of anything incorporated, to make a move to a major label.

However, the themes of resentment of authority and dissatisfaction with the government continue their persistent march throughout "New Wave." Although the new record received mixed reactions from the likewise anti-authoritarian fan base, it did gain notable respect among major music

See AGAINST ME! on page 7

COURTESY ATOMICPOP.COM

Against Me! wears black clothing as their trademark during all concerts and publicity photo shoots, giving them an angst-filled image rivaling the less rocking bands of today's music scene.

War film not all about politics

Acclaimed director Werner Herzog's latest film, "Rescue Dawn," is based on a true story and was filmed partially in the jungle to give the film a flair of authenticity. Herzog is famous for previously directing movie such as "Grizzly Man."

RESCUE from page 6

rest of the POWs completely lose it) is as remarkable and inspiring as the wealth of wonderfully filmed shots the film's filled with. Nearly 100 percent of the movie was shot in an actual jungle, and so, most of the time, the viewer feels trapped alongside the POWs in a dark cell of green, somewhat similar.

Despite the endless parallels between Vietnam and Iraq, "Rescue Dawn" doesn't contain much, if any, political commentary. Instead, it focuses more on a "man versus nature" tale of survival. This isn't the least bit surprising though, considering this sort of theme has dominated (almost to the point of obsession) most of Herzog's films over the course of his career. In fact, "Rescue Dawn" seems like it could've been made during the peak of that obsessive career. It's the kind of non-flashy action film that was so prevalent in the 1970s, yet is, for the most part, sadly absent today. Its gritty, low-budget look also works perfectly in heightening the true tale's realism.

Herzog decided to give us a massive second act, as he really doesn't give us much with the first and third whatsoever. Dengler is quickly lost in the Laotian jungle at the beginning of the film, and the rescue scene towards the end is brief to say the least. "Rescue Dawn" focuses primarily on one thing: the struggle to survive. The performances of Bale, Zahn, and Davies certainly don't detract from things either. The trio will likely take home a few obscure acting awards, if only for their mind-blowing preparation.

Most people believe Werner Herzog to be insane, and not too many people disagree with that sentiment. Maybe he is bonkers, but maybe Herzog's continuous exploration of madness and survival is what he himself needs to survive; to keep from going completely over the edge. The iconic suitcase has gone from "Woyzeck" to "Grizzly Man," and now, to "Rescue Dawn."

It seems safe to say the living legend will not stop making these kinds of films. And well, as long as this German genius keeps on churning out epics this powerful, who really cares how crazy he is?

Michael Cartwright can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu.

RESCUE DAWN

STARRING: CHRISTIAN BALE

A-

Against Me! calls for fist pumping

AGAINST ME! from page 6

magazines and critics Rolling Stone magazine gave it four out of five stars.

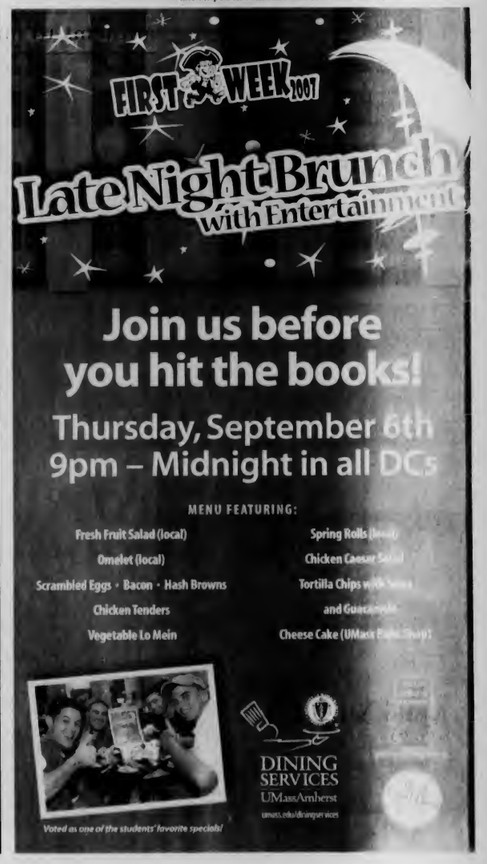
Perhaps "New Wave" is such a great success because of the work done by the renowned producer Butch Vig, whose credits include Nirvana's "Nevermind" and Smashing Pumpkin's "Siamese Dream." Or perhaps it is lyrics such as: "Are you restless like me?" that provide Against Me! with a guarantee that a sea of fists will charge into the air. Whatever forces are behind the reasons that the band's latest record, loaded with defiant ballads and commanding guitar riffs, are at work, the crowd should be aware: a revolution may take its first breath of life as Against Me! progress through the set tomorrow night.

Openers Matt and Kim, David Dondero and headliners Against Me! will take the stage tomorrow night at [illegible] Pearl Street Ballroom [illegible]. Tickets are [illegible] and $17 at the door.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at [illegible] umass.edu.

AGAINST ME!
MATT AND KIM
PEARL STREET
$14.50 ADV
$17 DOOR

Rock 'n' roll duo Matt and Kim can be compared [illegible] White Stripes. In both bands the female members [illegible]



SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.

BUY THEM HERE.

LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to An Science	Engin 110	Intro To Chem. Engin	MIE 210	Statics
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro. To Cs. & Ens.	MGT 260	Intro To Law
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to UCI	MGT 301	Principles of Mgt
Anthro 102-A	Arch. & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Mech. & Indus	MicBio 160	Bio Of Cancer &
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	EnglWP 111/112		Music 100	Appreciation Intro
Anthro 104-A	Culture/Soc. & People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env. Biology	Music 101	Lit. of Music
Art Hist 100	Survey Ancient & Med	EnvSci 112	Fund. Of the Environ	Music 103	History of Jazz
Art Hist 115	Intro To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro. To Environ Policy	Nursing 100	Pers. Of Nursing
Astron 100/ 1-4	Intro. To Astronomy	EnvDes 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 210	Hum Growth & Dev.
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	EnMgt 250	Quant. Tools Mgt	Nursing 301	Pathophysiology
Bio/BioChem 285	Cell & Molec. Biology	EnMgt 300	Fund. Of Finance	Nursing 315	Physical Assessment
Biochem 420	Elem Biochemistry	EnMgt 301	Corp. Finance	Nursing 327	Mental Health Nurs
Biochem 471	Elem Physical Chem	EnMgt 304	Indv. Tech. Finance	Nutr 130	Under Nutrition
Biochem 523	General Biochemistry	EnMgt 320	Investments	Phil 110	Intro. To Philosophy
Bio 100 A1-A4 B H	Intro to Biology I	Forest 528	Forest & Wetlands Hyd	Phil 164	Medical Ethics
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem. French I	Physics 100	Concept Physics
Bio 105	Biology of Soc. Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Environ. Change	Physics 125	Seeing the Light
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 131	Intro to Physics I
Bio 168	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Landscape	Physics 132	Intro to Physics II
Bio 280	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro To Oceanogra	Physics 139	Intro to Physics
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic earth	Physics 152	General Physics II
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem. German	Physics 181	Physics I -Mech
Chem 111 112	Fun Chem-Soc Majors	Hist 111	World Hist 1500-Pres	Physics 281	Comput. Physic
Chem 261 262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 101 A	Western Thought	Physics 421	Mechanics I
Chem 269	Org. Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist Of China I	PolSci 101-B	American Politics
Chem 471	Elem. Phys. Chem	Hist 150	Dev. Of Amer Civ. 1806	PolSci 121 B	World Politics
Compsci 105	Intro. to Comp Sci	Hist 151 A	Dev of Amer. Civ II	PolSci 162	Constitutional Law
Compsci 120	Problem Solving w Inte	HT Mgt 100	Intro to Hosp. & Tour	PolSci 255	Am. Foreign Policy
Compsci 187-A	Program W Data Struc	HT Mgt 150	Food Pro. Mgt	Psych 100 1-9	Intro. To Psychology
Compsci 287	Prog. Lang. Paradigms	HT Mgt 250	Food Service Mgt.	Psych 240 A-C	Stats. For Psych
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	HT Mgt 260	Hosp. Personnel Mgt	Psych 241	Methods of Inquiry
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 320	Learn & Think
Comm 240	Modes of Hum Comm	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 330	Phys. Psychology
ComDis 210	Intro. to Comm Disor	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutri	Psych 335	Behav. Endocrin
ComDis 211	Anat & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Prevent. & Care of At	Psych 350	Child Development
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang. Disor	Kin 297 A, C	Anatomy & Phys. II	Psych 380	Abnorm. Psychology
Econ 103 A-I	Intro. to Macroeconomic	Kin 380	Diets, Supple & Ath	Soc 106 A, D	Race, Gender Class
Econ 104	Intro. to Micro Econ	Kin 440	wellness in the Wor	Span 110/126	Elem. Spanish I
Econ 203 A-B	Intro. Microecon. Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills	Span 126	Elem. Spanish II
Econ 204 B	Intro. Macrecon. The	Math 101-104	PreCalc. Algebra	Span. 311	Ad. Grammar
Econ 305	Marxian Economics	Math 113	Math For Elem Teach
FYE 572	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Meth. & Prob

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

Lots of horns in Noho

Australian Rocker Xavier Rudd brings unique set to town

By Matt Solomon
Collegian Staff

On a typically mellow summer evening in late July, Xavier Rudd, a young and upcoming musician out of Australia, took sleepy Northampton by storm with his lively and exotic form of rhythmic vibrations. Rudd began the night playing to a fairly small crowd, but the number of fans rapidly increased, almost instantaneously, as soon as the first notes were blown from his powerful set of Yidakis (didgeridoos).

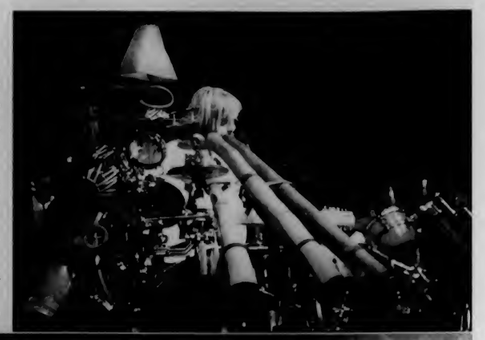
The crowd was calm and collected to start this average Tuesday evening but was soon whipped into a frenzy, leading the ones who dared on a deep spiritual journey through the depths of their souls. Rudd, the one man band, created beautiful sounds for what seemed like hours, suggesting images of a heavenly island filled with surf, sun and sand. This land he took them to was a place of peaceful tranquility, a place where everyone got along happily and there was no need for resistance, only acceptance, because in essence there was nothing in this place to resist.

Rudd's multitasking, all-encompassing style was altered only slightly midway through the set when a friend of his accompanied him on drums. While this extra drum section only enhanced the power of the music on this particular evening, in reality, a man like Rudd needs no accompaniment while creating his music.

Whether it is on the stage or in the studio, anytime another musician accompanies this genius, it is simply syrup poured on top of an already very sweet chocolate chip pancake. He has learned to play enough instruments to fill the void of an entire band and, amazingly, has even learned to play them all at once in a live setting. Aside from being an extremely talented individual, the reason Rudd seems to be able to make such amazing music without the help of a backing band is because he is able to feed off the energy of his fans and use it to make what he calls "good energy."

Once this "good energy" is created between him and his adoring fans he then proceeds to let it flow through his entire body, as if it is electricity running through a wire, and lets the spirit take control. The rest is musical history, and everyone in attendance is usually pleased to just be a part of it.

Rudd's talents are uncanny. He seems like the type of musician who could play a wooden stick with a rock and make it sound good. All he really needs, however, is his body and his voice; with that alone, he could make more interesting music than 95 percent of what is played on MTV these days. On this particular evening, he opted to play a wide array of instruments, including Yidakis, Weissenborn slide guitars, stomp boxes, djembes, a harmonica and a variety of different percussion and drum combinations.

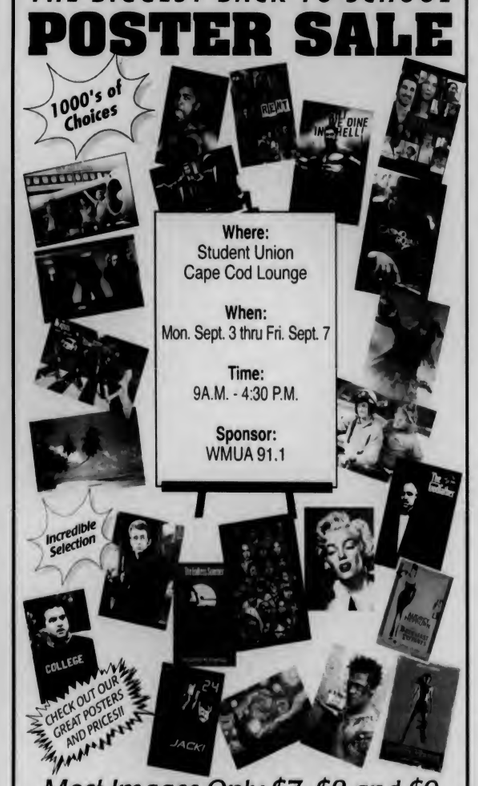


It is quite impressive that this seemingly simple man can play all of these instruments so well and often at the same time. Yet what is truly amazing is how he has managed to blend them all together into his own original and eclectic sound, while at the same time picking the fans up and taking them away to a simmering faraway land of beaches, deserts, kangaroos and koala bears.

When Xavier is on stage his instruments surround him like a cocoon, which seem to give him the power to morph like a simple caterpillar into a sultry and intriguing butterfly. This metamorphosis is made when he releases his inner spirit into a crowd through the means of musical expression. His instruments sing with emotion as if they were being produced by a human voice box. But he doesn't just do humans. He also can make his music wail like a dolphin, screech like a monkey or even dance like a Grateful Dead bear; it all depends on his mood at that exact moment.

Xavier is still fairly unknown within the United States but hopefully, through opening for acts such as the Dave Matthews Band this summer, he can get the exposure necessary to take him to the level he has already reached in his own country. In Australia he plays to crowds three times as big as the ones he sees on an average night in the United States.

One thing for certain is that Xavier deserves to be heard. His sound is eclectically crafted with smooth drum beats, the vibrant rhythms of the Yidakis, a soulful voice and sweet guitar. This is an up-and-coming musical act certainly worth checking out, for it is only a matter of time before this charging young ball of energy reaches his threshold and takes the music world by storm.



Matt Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu

Xavier Rudd is a one-man band. During the course of his set, Rudd plays the Yidakis (didgeridoo), guitar, harmonica, stomp boxes and a variety of percussion.

THE BIGGEST BACK TO SCHOOL
POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $7, $8 and $9

THEY CAME FOR THE APPLES AND HONEY...

Wednesday-Friday, September 12-14
ROSH HASHANA

Friday-Saturday September 21-22
YOM KIPPUR

www.umasshillel.org

SERVICES
Egalitarian and Orthodox services are free.
No sign up required.
Times & Locations at www.umasshillel.org

MEALS FREE TO UMASS STUDENTS
September 12 - Dinner
September 13 & 14 - Lunches
SIGN UP IS REQUIRED
BY SEPTEMBER 10!

September 21 - Pre-Yom Kippur Dinner
September 22 - Break-the-Fast Meal
SIGN UP IS REQUIRED
BY SEPTEMBER 17!

Call Hillel at 549-1710 or sign up at www.umasshillel.org/highholidays sponsor: Hillel at UMass

THEY LEFT WITH A BLAST

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
OPEN EVERY DAY UNTIL 11PM!

Beer
Samuel Adams 24 pk btl $22.99*
Coronita 7oz 24 pk btl $17.99*
Miller Lite 20 pk btl $13.99*
Budweiser & Bud Light 20 pk btl $13.99*
Red Stripe Lager 12 pk btl $11.99*
Stella Artois Lager 12 pk btl $11.99*
Corona & Corona Light 12 pk btl $11.99*
Smirnoff Ice 12 pk btl $11.99*
Saranac 12 Beers of Summer 12 pk btl $10.99*
Busch Light 20 pk btl $9.99*
Landshark Lager 6 pk btl $6.69*
Saranac Pomegranate Wheat 6 pk btl $4.99*
*all beer prices plus deposit

WINE SALE
10% OFF
6 BOTTLES* OF WINE
EVERYDAY!!
MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750 ml bottles of varietal wines

Liquor
Crown Royal Canadian Whiskey 1.75 liter $47.99
Jack Daniels Tennesse Whiskey 1.75 liter $39.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 1.75 liter $38.99
Sauza Gold Tequila 1.75 liter $29.99
Stolichnaya Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $29.99
Beefeater London Dry Gin 1.75 liter $26.99

Liquor
Captain Morgan Spiced Rum 1.75 liter $25.99
Ballantine Blended Scotch Whiskey 1.75 liter $24.99
Skyy Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $24.99
Durango Gold Tequila 1.75 liter $21.99
Jim Beam Bourbon Whiskey 1.75 liter $19.99
Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $18.99
Svedka Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $18.99
Canadian Club Whiskey 1.75 liter $18.99
Viking Fjord Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $17.99
Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter $16.99
Denaka Vodka 1.75 liter $14.99
Ron Rico Vanilla Rum 1.75 liter $11.99
Rubinoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $9.99

FOUR SEASONS
584-8174
Sale 8/30 - 9/12 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

AT&T teams up with Apple for new phone

IPHONE from page 6

cell phone resellers.

"We are a wholesale company only. Although we could, we do not, and will not sell directly to end users, because we want to work together with our valuable resellers as a team and not interfere in their business," iPhoneSIMfree said in a statement.

Presumably, they did this to avoid legal hot water. The company still readied its lawyers though, expecting lawsuits to start flying soon enough.

Yesterday, The New York Post reported that iTunes will soon be able to convert any portion of any song into a ringtone. This new feature is set to be released as soon as possible this fall. Additionally, Apple is expected to halt production on the 4GB iPhone, while lowering the price of the 8GB model to a more affordable $399.

Even with this cost reduction, the pocket-sized product is still the must-have luxury item for members of society's upper crust. Well-to-do folk are now toting iPhones around like trendy females would a Prada coach bag - a stylish status symbol of sorts. They strut around with these nifty gizmos by their sides, almost seeming as if they're all part of Wall Street's elite.

The fact that one can access so much simply by touching and pinching a screen that fits in the palm of your hand is a frightening thought.

So, two months after its release, where does iPhone Mania leave us? It's tough to say, but one can't be sure if its effects will be good or bad, especially around college campuses.

If college students find themselves constantly preoccupied by Facebook, how distracting will it become when it's only a finger-tap away all day long?

After all, is it healthy to be that connected during every waking second?

Plus, does the average college kid really need an iPhone at this point in his or her life? Considering the frequency in which students lose their cell phones, one drunken night could easily result in a $500 mistake.

Since entire lives can more or less be managed by this palm-sized device, reality is scarily moving one step closer to something out of a futuristic sci-fi flick.

As long as hackers and tech geeks keep on dreaming up new possibilities for this life-changing PDA, who knows what insane direction the world of communication will head in or how fast it'll get there.

Whatever the case may be, plenty people will still be running to Apple stores to purchase this revolutionary piece of technology.

And then of course, some may already be reading this via iPhone right now.

Michael Cartwright can be reached at mcartwri@student.umass.edu

Apple iPhone combines the many features of the iPod with the features of a laptop computer and digital camera.

CEO Jobs: crazy idea man with a dream

Apple CEO Steve Jobs announced the new line of Apple iPods at an invite-only press conference yesterday in San Francisco. He highlighted the upgraded Nano and reintroduced the original iPod, naming it the iPod Classic.

IPOD from page 6

the Nano will now features a similar interface to the iPhone. Three games, including sudoku, will also be bundled with the Nano when it hits shelves this weekend.

The new Nano will come in two memory sizes: a 4-gigabyte model for $149 and an 8-gigabyte model for $199.

The original iPod, which Jobs has now dubbed the iPod Classic, is also getting a major upgrade. Thinner then the original and with a full metal design, the classic starts at 80GB of memory or 30 hours of audio storage at $249. There is also a slightly fatter version which will feature a ludicrous 160GB which translates to 40 hours of audio or seven hours of video at $349. The Classic also features a 24 hour battery life.

"This boggles the mind," Jobs said. "The original iPod could hold up to 1,000 songs. Today, an iPod can store 40,000 songs."

New iPod news was not all Jobs had to relay while on stage. The iPhone is also making new waves. Apple will be discontinuing the 4GB model of iPhone and slashing the price of the 8BG model from $599 to $399. The Wi-Fi download store will also be available for the iPhone, with a free software upgrade coming later this month.

Jobs said the company is on track to sell one million iPhones by the end of September. Research firm iSuppli reported Tuesday that the iPhone outsold all other smartphones in July.

Needless to say, the world of portable technology is evolving faster then ever before. When you consider the 160GB worth of storage for the iPod Classic is better then some laptops, there is no telling where they will go from here.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

Newest iPods

Apple's iPod family gets two new additions.

iPod touch

Screen 3.5 in. (8.9 cm); touch screen works as portrait and landscape
Battery 22-hour audio playback; 5-hour video playback
Price 8 GB, $299; 16 GB, $399
• Built-in light sensor adjusts brightness of screen
• Wi-Fi wireless capabilities
4.3 x 2.4 x 0.31 in. (11.0 x 6.18 x .80 cm) 4.2 oz. (120 g)

iPod nano Third generation

Screen 2 in. (5.1 cm) 65 percent brighter than previous generation
Battery 24-hour audio playback; 5-hour video playback
Price 4 GB, $149; 8 GB, $199
2.75 x 2.06 x 0.26 in. (6.98 x 5.23 x 0.65 cm) 1.74 oz. (49.2 g)

© 2007 MCT
Source: Apple
Graphic: Marina Feigelis

WRITE FOR ARTS & LIVING!

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 RT. 9, AMHERST

LIQUORS 44

New Canada $34.99
Don Julio Blanco 750 mls $44.99
Smirnoff 80° 1.75 liter $19.99
Crown Royal 750 mls $21.99
Belvedere 750 mls $26.99
Captain Morgan 1.75 liter $25.99
Bacardi 1.75 liter $25.99
Baileys Original Chocolate Mint & Caramel 750 mls $20.99
Crown Royal 750 mls $20.99
Tanqueray GIN 1.75 liter $30.99
Hennessy V.S. 750 mls $28.99
Myers's Rum Platinum 1.75 liter $17.99
Cuervo Tequila Gold 1.75 liter $15.49
Grand Marnier 750 mls $29.99
Ending: SEPT. 30, 2007

AT THE HADLEY LOCATION
468 Russell St. (rt) • Campus Plaza
413-253-9344
Visit us at our other locations:
NORTHAMPTON • 238 King St.
HOLYOKE • 64 Lincoln St.
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

THE MANY PERILS OF OVER-STUDYING

by half.com

UM prepares for Jordan, Raider offense after big opening week

FOOTBALL from page 14

tailback Jordan Scott is likely to have a busy afternoon. Scott carried the load for the Raiders against the Great Danes, running for 180 yards and a touchdown on 44 carries – earning him the Patriot League Offensive Player of the Week.

While the switch at quarterback doesn't concern Brown, he is definitely keeping his eye focused on Scott.

"If we don't control Jordan Scott, the game will be over," he said. "I'm not saying we need to go out and shut him down, but we just need to control him.

"I don't know if it'll be 44 [carries], that's a hundle – but it will be in excess of 25."

How the Minuteman front seven handle those carries will have a big effect on how successful new starter Relph will be. If the ground game has similar success this weekend, Relph will have an easier time throwing over the top of the linebackers to continue moving the chains. If not, the Minutemen can have fewer men up front and provide better coverage downfield.

Defensive captain Jason Hatchell is confident that the UMass defense is more than ready to handle a Raiders team that plays much differently on offense than the Crusaders did.

"It's a big switch from last week," Hatchell said. "Sixty-four [passing] attempts. I think it was, compared to the [58] running attempts that Colgate had last week. But we're excited for it and we welcome the challenge."

The Minutemen offense is a more balanced attack, with receivers J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher aiding quarterback Liam Coen in the passing game – and running backs Matt Lawrence and Tony Nelson providing a good 1-2 punch on the ground. Lawrence exploded in the opener, rushing for a career-high 153 yards. Coen will once again be without one of his favorite targets as starting tight end Brad Listorti will miss his second game in a row with a back injury – Ian Jorgensen will once again take his place.

Colgate's defense was stingy against Albany in the ground game, allowing 57 yards on 33 carries. It will be interesting to see how often the Minutemen decide to run the ball against the Raiders, in addition to seeing the number of carries that once again go Lawrence's way. Nelson had nine carries for 55 yards in the opener, while Lawrence received 23 handoffs.

Colgate is 6-6 in its last 12 games against teams ranked in the Top 25. Interestingly, two of those wins came against UMass – once in 2003 when the Minutemen occupied the No.5 spot and again in 2005 when the Minutemen sat at No.15.

"We have a little grudge going," Hatchell said, referring to Saturday's opponent. "It always turns out to be a good game. It doesn't matter what the preseason rankings are, or whether one team is better than the other."

The Minutemen certainly hope that the rankings hold true this time around.

NOTES

The first meeting between the two schools came back in 1914, with Colgate shutting out the Minutemen 25-0 on its home field … the home team has won all six matchups … Relph played two games last season, starting one … Coen was 11-of-17 for 117 yards and had two touchdowns and two interceptions in last season's meeting … Lawrence ran for 38 yards and a touchdown in that game, while Scott ran for 83 yards and a score on 21 carries … Game time is set for 1 p.m.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

Red-shirt sophomore Corey Davis and the Minuteman defense held Holy Cross to 43 rushing yards on 29 carries, an average of 1.5 yards per carry.

Annual rivalry renewed on the road for Minutemen

RIVALRY from page 14

Coen relieved Day in the second half and led a strong comeback effort that eventually fell short.

To begin the Maroon and White's title run in 2006, Brown and Co. downed the Raiders decisively, 28-7, en route to a 13-2 overall record.

The first meeting between the two schools was nearly a century ago, when Colgate shut out UMass, 25-0 on Oct. 10, 1914 in New York. The only other meeting, again on the road for the Minutemen, was a 40-35 loss on Nov. 2, 1974.

That playoff game in 2003 was played in the middle of a blizzard that had hit the state of New York hard. The lines could barely be seen on the field as the Minutemen's postseason was cut short.

Then in 2005, UMass turned the ball over seven consecutive times in quarterback Liam Coen's coming out party. The then-freshman entered the game in place of Tim Day. In the second half, he led the Minutemen from 17 points down to within three, but could not complete the comeback in his first game.

"[Coen] did some nice things in his first stint, but it wasn't a great day up there for us overall," Brown said. "He's had much better days since then, but he did take some positive steps in that second half. It's ended up being a good scenario for our program in the long term."

It certainly wasn't the start Brown or Coen had anticipated for the young quarterback, but considering the success the team has had since that loss to Colgate, things seemed to have worked out for No. 12 anyway.

"Obviously, you don't want to turn the ball over seven times in a row," Brown said. "But in terms of getting his feet wet and performing in that second half, it was kind of his coming out party."

Coen has of course moved on since that game (in which he threw one interception after Day threw four), and is looking forward to another chance to win in Hamilton, N.Y.

"That was a long time ago," Coen said. "I try not to think about it because then I remember what happened and how we ended up. There was a sour feeling the last time we went up there, so we want to go up there and take care of business."

To play a non-conference opponent so many years in a row is fairly uncommon, and considering the strange nature of some of the games, the intensity seems to be growing each time they meet.

However, Brown and his players balked at calling the matchup a full-fledged rivalry, instead referring to the respect they have for the Raiders.

"I think it's more of a respect for [Colgate]," Coen said. "Obviously they're in the Patriots League, and it's a good conference, but we should beat those guys. But they've come out and played well in all the games we played against them, and they've earned our respect."

Save for a Sept. 29 date with Boston College, Saturday's contest with Colgate is the last game the Minutemen will play that essentially doesn't count. UMass hosts Towson the following Saturday to begin conference play. From that point on, UMass will be focused on winning the Colonial Athletic Association championship.

And while this game may not have the same feel as say, the Nov. 10 matchup with New Hampshire that may very well decide the CAA title, there will still be a lot of energy in the air when the football leaves the tee at 1 p.m. on Saturday.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

TO ALL STUDENTS OF THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

Alpha Tau Gamma social fraternity continues the rush for male Pledges this week, September 4 to 8.

ATG alumni were with sign up sheets on Tuesday after your Soils class, and on Wednesday after your Botany class.

The ATG rush continues on Thursday in the Campus Center concourse

The rush ends on Saturday at a free barbecue on the NE side of Stockbridge Hall beginning at 1:00 p.m. Sign up sheets will be available. Bring your Stockbridge student ID.

The first meeting is on Monday evening, September 10.

The Pledge period ends on Saturday, October 27.

STOCKBRIDGE FOREVER

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN SPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM

Upcoming SGA Senate Elections

Nominations open Thursday the 6th at 10:00am
Nominations close Friday the 14th at 12:00pm
Pick up nominations papers in room 420 Student Union

Senate elections & Area Government elections
September 19th - 20th
at all dining commons and Campus Center Concourse

For questions e-mail the chancellor of elections at SGA@stuaf.umass.edu

Explorers fall in OT, Stanic scores three

A-10 SOCCER from page 14

The Colonials have started the season out at 2-0.

LA SALLE FALLS IN OT

Despite tying the game twice after falling behind to St. Peter's, La Salle succumbed to the Peacocks in the 98th minute. The Explorers out-shot St. Peter's 11-6 in the second half.

The same scoring pattern also occurred in La Salle's second game of the season. After equalizers from Kevin Lydic and Ryan Richter, St. Francis's John Sullhag won a penalty kick and converted in the 92nd minute.

One bright spot for the Explorers has been Ryan Richter. The freshman forward has netted two goals early in his career.

A-10 HAT TRICKS

Fordham's Dean Stanic wasted no time in finding the back of the net in 2007. The South African scored three goals, including a one-timer that gave the Rams a 2-1 lead.

It was the first hat trick for a Fordham player since Brian Borrhello did it in 2002 against St. Joseph's.

Stanic would see no such luck in the next game, as Fordham fell to Loyola, 2-1.

Not to be outdone by his A-10 counterpart, freshman forward Colin Baker recorded a hat trick two days later in St. Joe's 3-2 win over Coastal Carolina.

The goals not only helped St. Joseph's even its record at 1-1, but Baker was also named A-10 Rookie of the Week for his efforts.

SALVAGGIONE SAVES 49ERS

The action-packed week continued in the A-10 in Davidson, N.C. Forward Chris Salvaggione gave the 49ers a 2-1 victory over St. Mary's. Charlotte had been pressuring the entire game, and enjoyed an 18-8 shot advantage.

The victory was Jeremy Gunn's first as the head coach of Charlotte. The 49ers lost their first game of the season to San Jose State, despite getting off twice as many shots as their opponent.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Erick Perez-Segnini of George Washington earned Atlantic 10 Player of the Week after scoring the game-winning goal with three seconds remaining in the Colonials' 3-2 double overtime win over Howard.

Atlantic 10 teams playing well in non-conference games

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

Although conference play hasn't started yet, women's soccer in the Atlantic 10 is off to a fast start. As of right now four teams are undefeated. Four teams are 1-1 and only one team has one win and one loss. There are three teams who have yet to register a win. The teams are close and as conference play looms the race for the A-10 championship will become even tighter.

FIRSTS

The first week of play for the A-10 teams produced a lot of firsts. Eleven freshmen scored their first-career goal at the collegiate level. Those players are Whitney Weinraub of Charlotte, Jerica DeWolfe and Lauren Maybury of Dayton, Samantha Kaiser of Duquesne, Kristin Slack of George Washington, Alex Conley of La Salle, Jessica Babice of Rhode Island, Marilyn Wargo and Courtney Bosse of St. Bonaventure, Carly Salter of Saint Joseph's and Meredith Crowell of Temple.

Weinraub and Slack were voted A-10 Co-Rookies of the Week.

There was also a first in coaching wins. Interim head coach Tim Zundel of Duquesne got his first win at the Division I level when Duquesne won its home opener against Canisius, 2-0. Zundel was promoted from assistant coach to interim head coach when former head coach James Walker accepted a position at Penn State.

Freshman goalkeeper Jen Byer of Fordham recorded her first career-win and first career-shutout against Iona; Fordham won 1-0. Another rookie keeper, Amanda Prestigiacomo of St. Bonaventure, got her first win and first shutout against Cleveland State in the CSU Fall Classic. Sophomore goalie Megan Bastianelli of Saint Joseph's made four saves in a 1-0 win against Drexel to record her first-career shutout as well. Temple freshman Kara Williams got her first shutout in a 0-0 tie against Northern Arizona.

SCORING AT WILL

Though the teams weren't playing conference matches yet there were still plenty of goals scored. The Charlotte 49ers opened their season against the Citadel and unleashed six goals on their way to an opening day victory.

In its season opener, Rhode Island cruised past Providence 4-0. The most impressive scoring team thus far is La Salle. The Explorers recently won their match against Monmouth, 4-1, and that was after shutting out Wagner, 5-0. With nine goals in two games, the Explorers will look to keep the momentum throughout the entire season.

STANDOUT GOALKEEPING

Leading the way in goalkeeping is senior keeper Niki Reed from Dayton. She was voted A-10 player of the week. On a recent West Coast trip, she posted shutouts against Cal Poly and Loyola-Marymount. Dayton won those games 2-0 and 1-0, respectively.

Charlotte's Lauren Brown also posted a pair of shutout against East Carolina and The Citadel. She had a total of five saves through the two games.

MILESTONES

Charlotte senior midfielder Lindsey Ozimek has set a new school record for assists, with 32. She broke the record in a 2-0 win against FCU where she assisted on both of the goals.

Senior Cassie Winchell of Saint Louis only needs one more goal to be third leading goal scorer in university history.

After a solid West Coast road trip, the Dayton received votes in the NSCAA/adidas Top 25 Coaches Poll. The Flyers also moved up two spots in the Soccer Buzz/ Great Lakes Regional Poll from 12th to 10th, which is their highest position since the 2005 season.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu.

Dayton goalkeeper Niki Reed received the first Atlantic 10 Women's Soccer Player of the Week award in 2007 after two shutouts.

BUY USED TEXTBOOKS

save a tree
(and a couple bucks)

We have the largest selection of used books anywhere.
And everything you need for Back-to-School.

- correct textbook versions - we checked for you
- reference materials and study guides
- supplies and academically-discounted software
- huge selection of school apparel and gifts
- online or in-store purchase options
- and much more!

home of THE HALF BACK GUARANTEE

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413 545 2619

www.umass.bkstr.com
proudly part of efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

SEP 6 2007

GIVE US YOUR COMICS

AND WE WILL GIVE YOU PEPPERSPRAY

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			8	5	1			4
4							7
	5	9			3
6		7	3
8	9						5	3
					8	4		9
			4			8	2
	7							6
3			2	8	6

ACROSS
1 Inflatable floaters
6 Black-and-yellow stinger
10 Money owed
14 Writer Grasgow
15 ___ vera
16 Fashion magazine
17 Texas shrine
18 Pool pull-over
19 Opponents
20 Ingredient
22 Transmits
23 Plucking tool
24 Dance partner?
25 Harden
26 Forum footwear
29 Paint layers
32 Laurel and Hikita
34 Also
35 Part of B.A.
36 Blockade
37 Second to none
38 Columnist Herriott
39 Campers' abodes
40 Molds
41 Splashes clumsily
43 Long period
44 Precipitation
45 Frontal lobe surgery
50 Mathematics sign
52 Abject meal
53 Guinness or Baldwin
54 Put on
55 Pizzey and Gray
56 Ione ___ Leitch
57 Facial feature
58 Feel
59 Give guff to
60 Puts in a lawn
61 Difficult journeys

DOWN
1 Respond to a stimulus
2 Permit
3 Olympic symbol
4 Violent windstorms
5 Takes a couch break
6 Irrigate
7 Shepard and King
8 Alphabetize
9 Rally leader
10 Argue for 11 Extends
12 Used leeches
13 1979 Polanski film
21 Trawling device
22 Chips off the old block
24 Regional
26 Droops
27 Clueless
28 Heavy imbibers
29 Finks
30 Spoken
31 Lawyers
32 Commandment brassages
33 Asian holiday
36 Spotted
37 Casual talker
39 ___ day and age
40 Most calm
42 Tasty toppings
43 Flow a partner
46 Glaringly vivid
46 Forewarnings
47 Think out loud
48 Capital of Belarus
49 Affirmative responses
50 Large group
51 Old-time panelist Chase
52 Jolly laugh
54 London loos

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN wants YOU!

I KNOW I GOT SKILLS. I KNOW I GOT BILLS. AND I KNOW YOU GOT COMICS

SO WHY HAVEN'T YOU SUBMITTED THEM YET?

PUNK!

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"MTV is to music as KFC is to chicken!"

-Lewis Black

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

DREAM NATION By Louis Coppola

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"Could I get some ice over here?"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Spend tonight spooning with your roommate. Make sure you are the little spoon.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are a beautiful flower frequently visited by hummingbirds and frisky squirrels.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If you are wearing a white shirt, avoid in-flight birds. They see it as a bullseye.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Channel the saucy spirit of Antonio Banderas and dance the night away.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
If you keep running into a dashing upperclassman, give him the rope and grope.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Before you moved in, tiny mystical gnomes inhabited your dorm room.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Pimp your ride by duct taping an iHome to your bicicleta and blasting Shania Twain.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Remember, until the sun stops rising, every day is a Sunday.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Today's your lucky day; find a rusty kettle and stroke it.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Stand up in class and launch headlong into an angry tirade about goose feces.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The only thing more bumptious than your brash and brazen voice is your stench.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Visit a local farm and gorge on foxy fruit, virile vegetables and other potent produce.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Feoring Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

APARTMENT FOR RENT

2, 3, 4 bedroom apts for rent in Amherst. Clean, newly constructed building, centrally located. Call: (413)687-1402

AUTO FOR SALE

1973 Plymouth Barracuda Excellent cond, 51000mi, clear title, Ext:Rend, Int:Black, 2dr, automatic. dockyauto@hotmail.com or (320)310-0729

2001 Hyundai Accent 107K miles, $2,000.00 Ren's Mobil, 161 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-9059 / 253-7616

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

AUTO FOR SALE

2001 Volvo S60, 77K miles, $8,800. Loaded, Recent Battery, Brakes & Tires. www.nikolino.com/volvo call 413/323-9341

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

B2B Appointment Setting Person with excellent phone skills wanted to set B2B appointments for a New England based payroll service company. Reply to: payrolldone@yahoo.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext 162

Cheerleading Coach Needed Seeking coach for Mount Holyoke College Cheerleading club. Cheerleading experience required, coaching/gymnastics experience a plus. Email sbmcrae@mtholyoke.edu for more information.

EMPLOYMENT

Delivery Drivers Wanted Must have own car. Flexible schedule, earn up to $14hr. call Delivery Express. 413-549-0077

Driver 6hrs per week $12.00hr plus gas. Car needed. 413-549-1578

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply Dp Dough Downtown Amherst

Handyman/Gardener. Lite household repairs, lawn maintenance. Car needed. $12.00/hr plus gas. 413-549-1578

Household Help, 5 to 6hrs/wk. $12.00 hr. Car needed. Close to UMass 413-549-1578

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Sperm Donor Wanted
We are looking for a healthy, bright, athletic male college student to donate sperm. I will pay for pre-tests and compensate you $300 per donation. Serious responses only. Contact us at leightonej@yahoo.com

FOR SALE

2005 Verucci SCOOTER 49cc New Battery and Tune-up. $900.00 or B.O. 413-423-3050 leave message

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different images. FINE ART, MUSIC, MOVIES, MODELS HUMOR, ANIMALS, PERSONALITIES, LANDSCAPES, MOTIVATIONALS, PHOTOGRAPHY. MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8 AND $9

FOR SALE

SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge – Student Union ON Monday Sept. 3rd thru Friday Sept. 7th, 2007 THE HOURS ARE 9 A.M. – 5 P.M. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM

HOUSE FOR RENT

Shutesbury - Lake Wyola 4 bedroom, partially furnished. Lease 9/4-5/23/08 $1,100/mo. Plus utilities. (860)675-7557

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website!
4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

You can submit classifieds online at WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM or stop by Room 113 in the Campus Center basement

UD's Cuff sets school record

CAA FOOTBALL from page 14

win over William & Mary.

"Omar is just a special, special player and sometimes people forget how good he is because he missed most of last year," Keeler said.

Cuff scored a school record seven touchdowns and a record six rushing touchdowns. He also set CAA records for most points scored (42), rushing touchdowns (6) and total touchdowns (7). He carried the ball 30 times for 244 yards, with six rushing touchdowns. He also caught four passes for 52 yards and a score.

Cuff an All-American in 2005, missed several games in 2006 with an ankle injury. Keeler brought him back slowly in the spring to make sure that he was healthy and only gave him a couple reps during the first scrimmage of the season.

"What makes Omar so special is that he has tremendous vision, great balance, can cut on a dime and pretty good speed, he can do it all," Keeler said.

Towson's senior linebacker Brian Bradford earned CAA Defense Player of the Week honors for his 17-tackle performance against Central Connecticut State. The Tigers won the contest 20-10. Bradford also forced a fumble and recored a tackle for a loss.

LATE START

Hofstra (0-0) opens its season this Saturday against Furman. Hofstra is picked to finish fifth in the CAA North Division. The Pride is 20-4 in home openers. Junior transfer Bryan Savage is the starting quarterback coming out of camp.

The 6-foot-3, 218 pound quarterback, ultimately won the job because Hofstra coach Dave Cohen likes his size and athleticism. Savage played at Coffeyville Community College in Southeast Kansas. Before Coffeyville, Savage red-shirted for Div. I Football Bowl Sub-division Wisconsin in 2004 and practiced with the Badgers in 2005.

"I believe we are a better football team than we were a year ago and I'm excited to see how we measure up in a game day," Cohen said. "Offensively we have some very good players, too. I don't think it's just a defensive program in anyway."

No. 5 New Hampshire (0-0) will also start this Saturday against conference rival No. 10 James Madison. The Wildcats defeated the Dukes 43-27 last year. Last week, James Madison lost its season opener to North Carolina, 37-14.

"JMU has one of the top programs in the CAA. [the Dukes] have been in the playoffs two of the last three years, they are a very good football team," UNH coach Sean McDonnell said. "It is a major challenge for New Hampshire; we are coming down to a situation where our opening game is away. They've had a lot of success at home and we've got to find a way to match their intensity, their speed, their athletic ability and I'm very impressed with them from top to bottom."

UNH senior quarterback Ricky Santos needs one touchdown to set a CAA record for passing touchdowns. Santos is currently tied at 99 with Chris Boden, who set the record during his career at Villanova from 1996-1999.

SEASON LEADER BOARD

With Week 1 over and all but two teams have played at least one game, W & M junior quarterback Jake Phillips leads the league in passing, throwing for 433 yards and completing 26-of-41 throws with two passing touchdowns. Phillips also rushed for 29 yards as W & M used a pass-heavy offense to play catch up in a 49-31 loss to Delaware.

Cuff leads the league in rushing gaining 81 yards per carry, including a long run of 48 yards. Massachusetts senior Matt Lawrence is second with 153 rushing yards on 23 carries.

Richmond senior Arman Shields leads all wide receivers with 12 receptions. UMass senior DJ Moore leads with 163 receiving yards and W & M junior D.J. McAulay ranks first with 23.1 yards per catch.

Richmond sophomore kick returner Justin Rogers is second in all-purpose yards with 201 yards (all in the return game), including a 93-yard kickoff return for a touchdown.

Rhode Island defensive back Raji El-Amin leads the CAA with two interceptions and UMass senior defensive end David Burris leads all players with three sacks.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Senior quarterback Ricky Santos and the New Hampshire Wildcats have yet to begin their 2007 season. Santos needs only one touchdown to set the conference record for career passing touchdowns.

Senior running back Omar Cuff set a school record with six total touchdowns in Delaware's season-opening win over William & Mary.

Big opening week earns King A-10 conference honors

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Though the Massachusetts field hockey team only mustered two goals through its first three games, it did show signs of offensive pressure in the first victory of the season.

The Minutewomen (3-1) peppered Sacred Heart's Kristen McIntire with 13 shots on net, while the goalkeeper allowed one goal.

Sophomore midfielder Cher King led the assault with four of her seven shots on net. She led the team in shots on goal each game, and it is no coincidence that she leads the team with four goals early on in the season.

King is the only player on the team with multiple goals. The team will continue to see more offensive improvement if more players start to shoot the ball more frequently.

In fact, the Atlantic 10 named King its Co-Player of the Week along with West Chester's Sara Conrad. Her two goals against Harvard are the most scored by a Minutewoman since 2000.

King scored in all three UMass victories and is on a pace to score 19 goals in the regular season. If her goal production continues near this pace, she will shatter her personal best for goals.

King's seven goals last year finished second on the team to Lauren Gillespie's 13. Gillespie has yet to find the back of the net this year.

ON A ROLL

Coach Justine Sowry is off to a quick start in her first season as coach of the Minutewomen.

The former Australian national team goalie has been using a dual-goalkeeping system based on the opponent, and so far it has worked to perfection. The Minutewomen's stingy defense and timely scoring also contributed their success.

Though these wins are extremely important for a program on the rise, the team must win its share of league games to advance to the A-10 tournament. The Minutewomen will not play a league game until Oct. 5 against West Chester. There are still seven remaining non-conference games before then.

The beginning of this season has been the complete opposite of last year. The Maroon and White began last season 1-3, although all the losses came far from home on the West Coast. The Minutewomen are currently enjoying a three-game win streak, which they didn't do at all in 2006. Last year's 6-14 record included two four-game losing streaks.

DEFENSE WINS THE GAME

In 440 minutes this season, Sarah Williams is yet to allow a goal. She has stopped all eight shots she has seen.

The team's other goalkeeper, Becky Letourneau, has allowed one goal. Similar to Williams, Letourneau has faced 13 shots, but has made two fewer saves. The five goals the Minutewomen scored against Harvard this past Sunday were the most goals recorded by the team in seven years. It opened the 2000 season with a 7-0 victory at Colgate. The 2000 season also happens to be the last time the team started 3-1.

Time was running out for Kristina DeRosario, but she finally found the back of the net for the first time against Harvard. The senior is a defensive specialist so scoring goals is not her primary function.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

UMass Field Hockey

WANT TO WRITE FOR NEWS? EMAIL US AT NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0080
90 AMHERST

Sprint ahead

Faster than you can change your major.

Wear out your thumbs with unlimited texting. And start night calling at 7 p.m. with a Sprint Power Pack Plan. Go ahead, live in the nanomoment.

FREE
M300 by Samsung
Rated for SprintSpeed

$29.99 two-year price, plus $29.99 mail-in rebate with new line activation and two-year agreement.

Get unlimited texting free for six months with your student ID card, new line activation and two-year agreement. Visit a Sprint retailer near you.

After six months, pay the regular monthly charge. Offer good only in store.

1-800-SPRINT-1 sprint.com/college

SEP 6 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SEP 7 2007

Time for a change

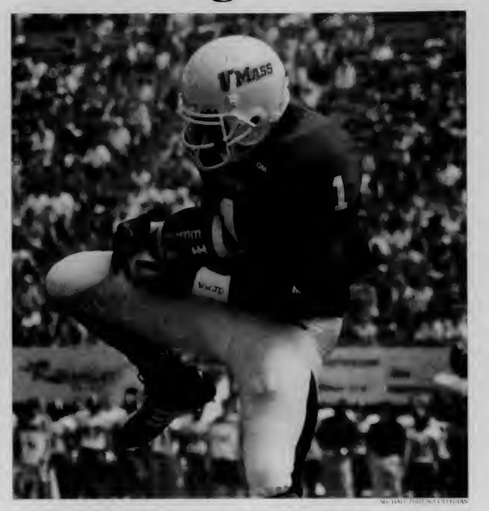
Brown, Minutemen in search of first-ever win at Colgate

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's happened in each of the last four years.

Whenever the Massachusetts football team (1-0) and the Colgate Raiders (1-0) square off on the gridiron, the home team wins. It's a trend that the Minutemen would love to end this Saturday in Hamilton, N.Y.

"We just haven't had good luck up there," UMass coach Don Brown said. "We went up there in 2003 and got beat, and we went out there in 2005 and turned the ball over seven times and got beat. So, we're just focused on going out there and playing our best football and see what happens."



The marquee matchup between the schools came in 2003, when UMass fell to Colgate, 19-7, in the first round of the NCAA tournament. The Minutemen took the 2004 and 2006 versions of the series, with the Raiders taking the victory in 2005. This will be the final matchup in the current series between the schools.

No. 3 UMass comes into this weekend's game after taking its opener, 40-30, against Holy Cross at McGuirk Stadium last Saturday. The Raiders edged Albany, 13-11, in their season opener at Andy Kerr Stadium in Hamilton.

Despite picking up the victory, Colgate head coach Dick Biddle decided to make a switch at quarterback, benching junior Anthony Fucillo in favor of junior signal caller Alex Relph. Albany sacked Fucilli five times and he competed only five passes on nine attempts for 31 yards; Relph was 2-of-6 for 39 yards.

No matter who Biddle decided on for a starting quarterback, one thing is for sure – starting

See FOOTBALL on page 10

Wide receiver J.J. Moore and the Minutemen travel to Hamilton, N.Y., this Saturday for a non-conference showdown with Colgate. The Minutemen defeated Colgate, 28-7, in their opener last season.

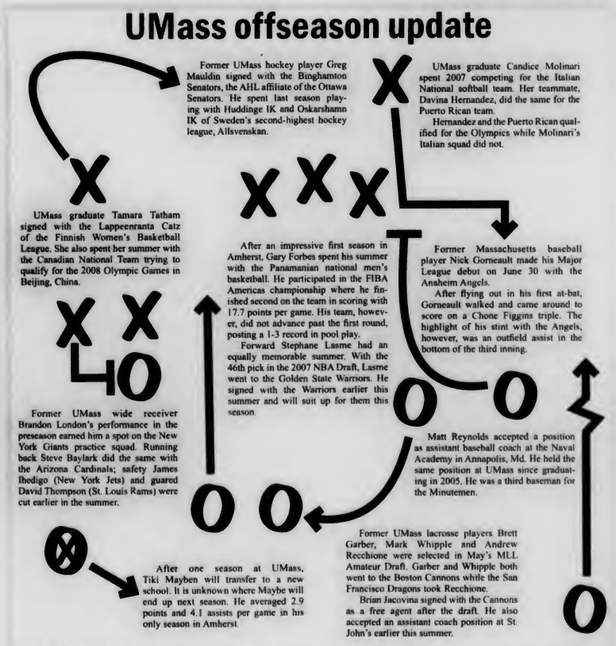
History between teams adds to early season matchup

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Some weird things happened in the first week of college football. The winningest program in college football history lost to a Football Championship Subdivision team, and the Massachusetts football team got a considerable fourth-quarter scare at home from a lesser opponent.

The strange occurrences are likely to continue this week as well. They usually do when UMass travels to Colgate. The Minutemen will visit Hamilton, N.Y. Saturday for the final game of a four-year series between the two schools.

The season before the start of the series, the rivalry really began, as Colgate defeated UMass, 19-7, at home in the first round of the NCAA playoffs. The teams have swapped wins since that point, but the Raiders hold the advantage in the all-time series, 4-2. However, the home team has won every meeting in the series.



Following that playoff disappointment, the Minutemen avenged their loss in the second game of the 2004 season – UMass coach Don Brown's first season at the helm.

UMass won the rematch, 30-20. Steve Baylark's pair of touchdowns in the first quarter propelled the Minutemen to a 14-point lead that they never relinquished.

However, Colgate knocked off UMass again in 2005, 17-14, in an ugly game for the Maroon and White. Quarterback Tim Day had a downright awful day behind center, tossing four interceptions in the first half. Liam

See RIVALRY on page 10

UMass offseason update

Graphic Design: Chris Martin

URI, SLU start '07 season in Top 25

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Atlantic 10 was well represented in Soccer America's preseason national rankings.

Rhode Island, who finished with a 12-5-6 record and went on to the second round of the NCAA tournament last year, came in at No. 22.

A-10 Soccer

The preseason accolades failed to help the Rams win their first game of the season against No. 15 Harvard. However, they did rebound and defeat Providence 2-0 in their second game of 2007.

URI will be tested this weekend in South Bend when they take on No. 9 Notre Dame and No. 4 Indiana.

Saint Louis followed just behind URI at No. 23 in the preseason poll. They won the A-10 regular season title with a 12-5-2 overall record. Their roster includes junior midfielder Eric Sweetin who is an early candidate for the Hermann Trophy, given to the top collegiate soccer player.

The Billikens moved up 10 spots in the NSCAA poll to No. 10 with their impressive 1-1 tie with then-No. 14 Southern Methodist. The schedule does not get any easier for SLU with a trip down to Durham, N.C., that includes a showdown with No. 2 Duke.

Both URI and SLU will be favorites in A-10 and also advance to the NCAA tournament.

GW's Perez-Segnini shares award

Erick Perez-Segnini of George Washington was named the A-10's Co-Player of the Week along with aforementioned Dean Stanic.

The junior midfielder scored two goals in the adidas DC College Cup. One of his goals was a game-clincher with three seconds left in the second overtime against Howard.

See A-10 SOCCER on page 11

Junior midfielder Eric Sweetin leads a talented Saint Louis team that enters 2007 as a favorite for the Atlantic 10 Championship.

App. St. victory 'good' for FCS football

CAA coaches proud after Champs shock powerhouse

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Appalachian State shocked the world last week with a win over the then No. 5 Michigan Wolverines. Division I Football Championship Sub-divisIon coaches of the Colonial Athletic Association gave their thoughts about the game.

"It was awesome, I don't know how anyone else felt, it certainly brought warm feelings to my heart," Hofstra coach Dave Cohen said during the CAA teleconference. "It wasn't a fluke situation, those Appalachian State guys are running right by the Michigan secondary."

CAA Football

Delaware coach K.C. Keeler and some of his assistant coaches have ties to Michigan and had a hard time choosing sides.

"I can't remember a time in my life that I never rooted for Michigan and this was a time that I was on the fence, I was really pulling for App. State," Keeler said. "It was good for our league; it was good for our level of football."

"After [Michigan running back Mike] Hart scored the touchdown I thought Appalachian State was going to lose the game, but then they came back and kicked a field goal and blocked a field goal," Towson coach Gordy Combs said. "I think it's great for the Football Championship Subdivision to get a win like that."

"It makes it harder for us to sneak up on people," Maine coach Jack Cosgrove said. "The most impressive thing that I thought about the Appalachian win was just that they went toe-to-toe with them, it wasn't like when we snuck one out at Mississippi State, we hung around for 57 minutes and at the end stole a win."

Players of the Week

Delaware senior running back Omar Cuff was awarded CAA Offensive Player of the Week. Cuff led the No. 19 Blue Hens to a 49-31

See CAA FOOTBALL on page 13

UM SEEKS REVENGE IN VERMONT PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 90 LO: 70 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 2007

Young adult health resource launched

BY MICHELLE ONORIO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Internet entrepreneur Steve Case launched an addition to his Web site this week that aims to help young adults deal with the common hurdles of living away from home. The site, RevolutionHealth.com plans to add a new "College Health Center" which provides students with information on four key areas: mental and sexual health, relationships and healthy living.

"It is easier to get a cup of coffee on the weekend than to find out if your kid has an ear infection. We want to make it easy to learn how to lose a few pounds, eat healthier and prevent chronic disease," Case said in a conference call interview.

After Case's brother Dan was diagnosed with a brain tumor in 2001, their family started to search for answers and possible treatments online – all of which were contradictory. It was then that Case realized how crucial information can be to the family members of the terminally ill. But when RevolutionHealth.com was launched in April, their "College Health Center" had not yet been developed.

Case, the co-founder of AOL says he found himself surprised at the lack of resources for students on college campuses, especially those having to do with mental health issues. After the Virginia Tech shooting last April where Seung-Hui Cho shot and killed 33 people, including himself, Case decided to provide a resource for college students in the place most young adults are drawn to for information in the first place: the Internet.

"We developed our College Health Center because we believe that everyone should have a trusted resource they can visit to learn more about their mental health and other college-related challenges, especially at this time of year," said Case. "College students use the Internet to answer their everyday questions, and now they can turn to one trusted resource that can help answer questions about personal health, mental health and relationships."

Now that millions of college students are back on campuses across the country, the Web site has launched the first Online College Mental Health Fair, which partners 11 national non-profit groups. Active Minds, Anxiety Disorders Association of America, Rape Abuse and Incest National Network and Depression and Bipolar Support Alliance who focus on anxiety, sexual assault and mental disorders are some of the featured partners.

All the partners have information cyber-booths that provide confidential and accurate information on a variety of topics. As a motivator, RevolutionHealth.com will make a donation up to a total of $10,000 for every visitor at each booth.

"Many college students, as well as their parents, struggle with the adjustment to college life," Case wrote on his Web site. "We developed our college health initiatives because we believe that everyone should have a trusted resource to go to learn more about mental health and other college-related challenges, especially at this time of year."

After the Virginia Tech shootings, both the college campuses and the media worndered if the current intervention and prevention protocol in place was sufficient to forestall such tragedies from happening.

Dr. Edward Hallowell, a Harvard-trained psychiatrist, said in an interview how critical it is to help students navigate through the sudden changes that occur during those first months in college.

"Prevention and early intervention are the critical first steps necessary to keep students healthy, productive and successful in school when they encounter personal problems," Dr. Hallowell said on the Revolution Health Web site. "College students often experience significant adjustment issues once they are away from home without their normal support structures, and for some students the stress can have a serious impact on their mental health."

Often it is the most talented and gifted students who wrestle with these issues, but they hold back on getting help because they have no idea of how simple, practical and effective that help

See STUDENT HEALTH on page 2

University Health Services, located on Infirmary Way provides primary care for UMass students, faculty and staff. Urgent care for UHS is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week during the school year.

U.S. President George W. Bush and Chinese President Hu Jintao plan to fight climate change after both nations were labeled polluted.

Bush and Jintao tackle global warming

BY TOM RAUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

President Bush and Chinese President Hu Jintao, leaders of two of the world's worst polluting nations, called Thursday for greater international cooperation in tackling climate change without stifling economic growth.

Bush also was to push for expanded trade with Pacific Rim nations and appeal for help in getting stalled global trade talks going again. He was laying out his views on the environment, energy security and the economic costs of terrorism in a speech to business leaders from the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum.

Climate change was high on the agenda of the U.S. and Chinese presidents in a 90-minute meeting and aides said it would be an important aspect of Bush's speech. The president also was to meet with Russian President Vladimir Putin, among heads of state here for the annual meeting of the 21-nation economic gathering.

Bush has been criticized by environmentalists and others for his opposition to the 1997 Kyoto treaty against global warming, and China has long been slammed for the huge amounts of greenhouse gases its power plants and industries pump into the atmosphere. The fact that neither China nor India, another major global polluter, were covered by Kyoto was one reason Bush has opposed it.

But both leaders seemed to be generally in agreement on the subject.

"We believe that the issue of climate change bears on the welfare of the whole humanity and sustainable development on the whole world," Hu told reporters after his meeting with Bush.

"And this issue should be appropriately tackled through stronger international cooperation."

Climate control has been designated a top agenda item for this year's APEC meeting.

"We talked about climate change and our desire to work together on climate change," Bush said.

Aides said the president would give a more detailed account of his climate change proposals in his speech to APEC business leaders.

One of them is a proposal to eliminate tariffs on environmental and clean-energy technologies. In his talks with Hu, Bush invited the Chinese leader to consider doing the same, said Dan Price, a presidential economic adviser on the National Security Council.

President Bush on the issue of climate change, and both sides welcomed the attention of APEC to the issue, and they confirmed the importance of addressing this pressing problem cooperatively and responsibly, and in a manner that does not stall or stunt economic growth," Price said.

He had suggested the United Nations should be the one to spearhead climate control efforts. Price said that wasn't necessarily contradictory to the Bush approach.

The U.S. and China leaders also talked

See GLOBAL WARMING on page 2

Study shows rapid increase in suicide

BY GREG BLUESTEIN
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

The suicide rate among preteen and young teen girls spiked 76 percent, a disturbing sign that federal health officials say they can't fully explain.

For all young people between ages 10 to 24, the suicide rate rose 8 percent from 2003 to 2004 — the biggest single-year bump in 15 years — in what one official called "a dramatic and huge increase."

The report, based on the latest numbers available, was released Thursday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and suggests a troubling reversal in recent trends. Suicide rates had fallen by 28.5 percent since 1990 among young people.

The biggest increase — about 76 percent — was in the suicide rate for 10- to 14-year-old girls. There were 94 suicides in that age group in 2004, compared to 56 in 2003. The rate is still low — fewer than one per 100,000 population.

Suicide rates among older teen girls, those aged 15-19 shot up 32 percent; rates for males in that age group rose 9 percent.

"In surveillance speak, this is a dramatic and huge increase," Dr. Ileana Arias said of the overall picture. She is director of the CDC's National Center for Injury Prevention and Control.

More research is needed to determine whether this is a trend or just a blip, said one child psychiatrist, Dr. Thomas Cummins of Children's Memorial Hospital in Chicago. "We all need to keep our eye on this over time to see if this is a continuing trend."

Overall, there were 4,599 suicides among young people in 2004, making it the third-leading cause of death, surpassed only by car crashes and homicide, Arias said. Males committed suicide far more often than females, accounting for about three-quarters of suicides in this age group.

The study also documented a change in suicide method. In 1990, guns accounted for more than half of all suicides among young females. By 2004, though, death by hanging and suffocation became the most common suicide method. It accounted for about 71 percent of all suicides in girls aged 10-14; about half of those aged 15-19; and 14 percent between 20-24.

See SUICIDE on page 2

Students and family enjoy the Campus Carnival held yesterday afternoon on the library lawn. The event offered activities, carnival games, food, prizes and music from Lazer 99.3 FM.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 3

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPEC EDITOR Adam Stiggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derreck Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Dotchetenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR, EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND FINAL EXAMINATIONS. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRIBBLER IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

MAUREEN MAJEROWSKI
1932 - 2007

GRANBY - Maureen M. (Courchesne) Majerowski, 75, of Granby, died Thursday morning, Sept. 6, 2007 in her home. Born in Holyoke, July 4, 1932, she was the daughter of the late Henry & Margaret (Dougherty) Courchesne. Maureen was a 1950 graduate of Chicopee High School.

She was a member of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church, and had lived in Granby for the past 43 years. Maureen was employed as the Assistant Operations Manager for the Daily Collegian Newspaper at University of Massachusetts in Amherst where she worked for the past 26 years.

The sister of the late Patsy Desorcy and Bob Courchesne, Maureen is survived by her husband of 55 years, Frank Majerowski, her children, Debbie Renne and her husband Grant of Ponce Inlet, FL, David Majerowski and Stephen Majerowski both of Granby, Maureen Couture and her husband Thomas of Marlborough, CT and Kristen Fugler and her husband David of Granby, one brother, John Courchesne of Ware, five sisters, Eileen Bryden of Atlanta, GA, Kathy Bulecza of Orlando, FL, Peggy Moriarty of Hatfield, Gail Nadeau of Chicopee and Barbara Delude of Belchertown.

She is also survived by 12 grandchildren, Sarah McClure, Stephen Bieniek, Caitlin, Emily and Evan Couture, Jay, Kyle, David and Amelia Majerowski, and Patrick, Shane and Aaron Fugler, as well as many nieces and nephews.

The Funeral for Maureen will be on Saturday at 10:30am from the Ryder Funeral Home, 33 Lamb St., South Hadley followed by a Funeral Mass in Immaculate Heart of Mary Church, Granby at 11:30am. Burial will be in West Cemetery in Granby. Calling Hours for Maureen will be on Friday from 4 – 8pm.

U.S. and China fight climate change

GLOBAL WARMING from page 1

about North Korea, Iran and Chinese product safety. Hu "was quite articulate about product safety, and I appreciated his comments," Bush said. White House aides later said Hu expressed a willingness to step up Chinese efforts to ensure the safety of products and to crack down on efforts to ship tainted foods.

Bush said he accepted Hu's invitation to attend the 2008 Summer Olympics. And the two leaders talked about establishing a "hot line" like the longtime one between Washington and Moscow to alert each other to possible military situations that might seem threatening or be ambiguous.

Both leaders expressed opposition to efforts within Taiwan to seek U.N. membership. The U.S. has opposed steps toward independence for the self-governing island, which Beijing considers a renegade province, preferring to adhere to its "One China" policy even as it continues to sell military supplies to Taiwan.

Bush has called for greater reliance on technology to combat global warming. Although early in his first term, he had insisted that the science of what causes global warming was not yet settled, more recently he has been less questioning of a link between human activity and higher global temperatures, and supportive of programs to tackle the problem.

Earlier this week, Bush said it was an "urban legend that is preposterous" for critics to suggest that his opposition to the Kyoto treaty showed a lack of environmental awareness or concern about climate change.

In his speech, the president was also issuing an appeal to Asia-Pacific business leaders for their help in getting stalled global trade liberalization talks restarted.

The trade talks known as the Doha round have stumbled since their inception in Qatar's capital in 2001, largely because of wrangling between rich and poor countries over eliminating barriers to farm trade and, more recently, manufacturing trade.

Col. Richard Bachmann, Jr. criticized NASA yesterday of disregarding the mental health of its astronauts, who were supposedly found intoxicated on launch day.

NASA officials watch out for drunk astronauts

BY MARCIA DUNN
AP AEROSPACE WRITER

An Air Force doctor who headed a controversial astronaut health study told Congress on Thursday that NASA is discouraging open communications by rebutting reports of drunken astronauts on launch day and deriding the claims as urban legends.

The bigger issue, more than drinking, is NASA's apparent disregard of mental health and behavior issues among its astronauts, and the demoralizing reluctance among flight surgeons and astronauts to report improper conduct, said Col. Richard Bachmann Jr.

Last week, NASA released the results of its own internal investigation, saying it had found no evidence or even hints of astronaut intoxication before launch, contrary to what the Bachmann committee had reported a month earlier.

While defending his report, Bachmann said he understands NASA's outrage over his medical panel's citing of at least two instances of launch-day intoxication. Even though fellow astronauts or flight surgeons notified their bosses about the crew members' drunken state, they were ignored, Bachmann's committee was told confidentially.

"Public statements that such things are simply impossible, challenging the veracity of the findings, referring to them as unproven allegations or urban legends, rather than acknowledging how difficult raising such concerns can be, do not encourage openness and safety, make future reporting even less likely, and increase the risk of future mishaps or incidents," Bachmann told the House Subcommittee on Space and Aeronautics in Washington.

NASA's inability to find even a single case of astronaut drunkenness on launch day doesn't prove it didn't happen, said Bachmann, commander of the Air Force School of Aerospace Medicine. Rather, it shows only that the NASA employees who told his panel about the incidents did not bring them up during NASA's internal review, he said.

"We believe this may represent continued fear and barriers to communication and may be a cause for greater, not less concern," he said.

Both the Challenger and Columbia disasters were blamed, in part, on miscommunication and broken safety cultures within the space agency.

The independent but NASA-appointed health review committee heard from astronauts and flight surgeons earlier this year who were "eyewitnesses to the events" and freely volunteered the information regarding astronaut intoxication, Bachmann said.

NASA also plans to conduct an anonymous survey this month of its astronaut and flight surgeons in an attempt to ferret out any additional information on the drinking issue or other problems.

Suicide rate spikes 76 percent

SUICIDE from page 1

"While we can't say (hanging) is a trend yet, we are confident that's an unusually high number in 2004," said Dr. Keri Lubell, a CDC behavioral scientist who was one of the study authors.

Scientists speculated that hanging may have become the most accessible method.

"It is possible that hanging and suffocation is more easily available than other methods, especially for these other groups," Arias said.

The CDC is advising health officials to consider focusing suicide prevention programs on girls ages 10-19 and boys between 15-19 to reverse the trends. It also said the suicide methods suggest that prevention focused solely on restricting access to pills, weapons or other lethal means may be of limited success. As for why rates are up, Richard Lieberman, who coordinates the suicide prevention program for Los Angeles public schools, said one cause could be a rise in depression during tumultuous adolescent years.

"There's a lot of pressure in and around middle school kids. They're kind of all transition kids. They're turbulent times to begin with," he said. "The hotline's been ringing off the hook with middle school kids experimenting with a wide variety of self-injurious behavior, exploring different ways to hurt themselves."

Arias said the declining use of antidepressants in those age groups might play a role. But it's "not the only factor" that health officials will be studying. Four years ago, federal regulators warned that antidepressants seemed to raise the risk of suicidal behavior among young people, so black box warnings were put on the drugs' packaging. When partial teen suicide data was published earlier this year, experts noted at the time that the drop in sales of the drugs corresponded with a rise in the suicide rate. Now there is concern that some children who need the medication aren't getting it.

"For some, talking about suicide is awkward," she said. "Our goal is to stop suicides, and to do that we need everyone's willingness to talk about it."

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0900
RT. 9, AMHERST

Web site helps out college students

STUDENT HEALTH from page 1

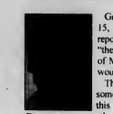
can be."

The Web site also features articles that give advice to college students on how to approach one's partner about their sexual history and also teaches about the most effective forms of birth control. Another section features an alcohol calculator, which using a person's height, weight and alcohol consumption, determines a person's blood alcohol level and whether they would be capable of driving a motor vehicle or not. The content on the Web site comes from MayoClinic.com, Cleveland Clinic and Harvard among others.

While RevolutionHealth.com provides a way for students to research their symptoms and problems, certain issues require immediate care. University Health Services located on the University of Massachusetts campus has a Mental Health hotline 24 hours a day and an emergency nurse on call. For further information visit UHS online.

Michelle Chorio can be reached at mjchorio@student.umass.edu.

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!



Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to An Science	Engin 110	Intro To Chem. Engin	MIE 210	Statics
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro To Co. & Env.	MGT 260	Intro To Law
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to ECE	MGT 301	Principles of Mgt
Anthro 102-A	Arch. & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Mech. & Indus.	MicBio 160	Bio. Of Cancer &
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	Engl WP 111/112		Music 100	Appreciation Intro
Anthro 104-A	Culture,Soc.& People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env. Biology	Music 101	Hist. of Music
Art Hist 100	Survey: Ancient & Med.	EnvSci 112	Fund. Of the Environ.	Music 103	History of Jazz
Art Hist 115	Intro. To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro. To Environ Policy	Nursing 100	Pers. Of Nursing
Astron 100 1-4	Intro. To Astronomy	EnvDes 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 210	hum Growth & Dev.
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	FoMgt 250	Quant. Tools Mgt.	Nursing 301	Pathophysiology
BioChem hem 285	Cell & Molec. Biology	FoMgt 300	Fund. Of Finance	Nursing 315	Physical Assessment
BioChem 420	Elem Biochemistry	FoMgt 301	Corp. Finance	Nursing 327	Mental Health Nurs
BioChem 471	Elem. Physical Chem	FoMgt 304	Info. Tech. Finance	Nutr 130	Under Nutrition
BioChem 523	General BioChemistry	FoMgt 320	Investments	Phil 110	Intro To Philosophy
Bio 100 U1-A4 B D	Intro to Biology I	Forest 528	Forest & Wetlands Hyd	Phil 164	Medical Ethics
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem. French I	Physics 100	Concept. Physics
Bio 105	Biology of Soc. Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Environ. Change	Physics 125	Seeing the Light
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 131	Intro to Physics I
Bio 108	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Landscape	Physics 132	Intro to Physics II
Bio 280	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro To Oceanogra	Physics 139	Intro to Physics
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic earth	Physics 152	General Physics II
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem. German	Physics 181	Physics I -Mech
Chem 111/112	Gen Chem.-Sci. Majors	Hist 111	World Hist. 1500-Pres	Physics 281	Comput. Physic
Chem 261/262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 101 A	Western Thought	Physics 421	Mechanics I
Chem 269	Org. Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist. of China I	PolSci 101-B	American Politics
Chem 471	Elem. Phys. Chem	Hist 150	Dev. Of Amer Cu.-1866	PolSci 121 B	World Politics
CmpSci 105	Intro. To Comp. Sci	Hist 151 A	Dev.of Amer. Cu. II	PolSci 162	Constitutional Law
CmpSci 120	Problem Solving w/Int	HT Mgt 100	Intro to Hosp. & Tour.	PolSci 255	Am. Foreign Policy
Cmpsci 187-A	Program. W. Data Struc	HT Mgt 150	Food Pre- Mgt.	Psych 100 1-9	Intro. To Psychology
CmpSci 287	Prog. Lang. Paradigms	HT Mgt 250	Food Service Mgt.	Psych 240 A-C	Stats For Psych
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	HT Mgt 260	Hosp. Personnel Mgt.	Psych 241	Methods of Inquiry
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 320	Learn & Think
Comm 240	Modes of Hum Comm.	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 330	Phys. Psychology
ComDis 210	Intro. To Comm. Disor.	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutrit.	Psych 335	Behav. Endocrin.
ComDis 211	Anat & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Prevent. & Care of At.	Psych 350	Child Development
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang. Disor.	Kin 297 A, C	Anatomy & Phys. II	Psych 380	Abnorm. Psychology
Econ 103 A-F	Intro. To Microeconomic	Kin 380	Diets, Supple. & Ath.	Soc 106 A, D	Race, Gender Class
Econ 104	Intro. To MacroEcon.	Kin 440	wellness in The Wor	Span 110/126	Elem. Spanish I
Econ 203 A-B	Intro. Microecon Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills.	Span 126	Elem. Spanish II
Econ 204-B	Intro. Macroecon. The	Math 101-104	Pre/ alc. Algebra	Span. 311	Ad. Grammar
Econ 305	Marxian Economics	Math 113	Math For Elem.Teach
ECE 852	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Meth. & Prob.

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

Students connecting students
past. present and future.
Enhance networking skills while interacting with alumni, faculty, and staff.
Be a Chancellor's Personal Host!
Create traditions and be a part of UMass Amherst history by planning and attending campus programs like the Commencement Ball.
Strengthen leadership skills through professional and personal development.
Interesed? Join us Monday, September 10 @ 5:15 p.m.
(Yes, there will be food.)
Memorial Hall • 413.577.1390
sae@stuaf.umass.edu • www.umass.edu/rso/sae
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION UMASS AMHERST
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Petraeus report grades Iraq war progess

Ben Duffy

General David Petraeus' report is due to Congress on Sept. 15, 2007. General Petraeus' report will essentially amount to a report card on the Iraq War thus far, with special focus on how "the surge" is going. As a four-star general and chief commander of Multinational Force-Iraq, you might think that his assessment would be taken seriously. You would think wrong.

The Petraeus Report might prove to be entirely too positive for some "anti-war" liberals to believe. It seems that since the day this war began there has been an echo chamber of nay-sayers who have proclaimed that we "just aren't seeing any progress in Iraq." When progress actually emerges, they choose not to believe it.

The campaign to impugn the integrity of General Petraeus is in full swing.

Has there been positive news from Iraq since the surge began? Absolutely. Truck bombs and other major al-Qaida style attacks have declined 50 percent U.S. military command in Iraq told USA Today.

"The enemy had the initiative and the momentum in '06," said retired general Jack Keane, co-designer of the surge strategy. "We've got it now."

Even David Morris of the left-leaning Salon.com had to admit that the once enflamed city of Fallujah has now been pacified.

"I've been traveling throughout western Iraq for almost a month now and what I've seen so far has been shocking, but not in the way you might expect: Against all logic and expectations … parts of Iraq actually seem to be getting better. During the second week of August I spent five nights with a Marine platoon in downtown Fallujah, and after the typical harrowing Humvee ride in … I took off my body armor and didn't put it back on for the better part of a week … Fallujah, once the symbol of everything gone wrong with the American mission in Iraq, seems to be breathing again … The Marines haven't had anyone killed in action in over three months."

All of this positive news from Iraq has liberal pundits scrambling to discredit the Petraeus report in advance. They've hitched their wagon to American defeat in Iraq, and they hope that it drags their sorry skins to victory in 2008 and beyond.

Just ask Rep. Jim Clyburn (D-SC). A Washington Post reporter asked him: "What do Democrats do if General Petraeus comes in September and says: 'This is working very, very well at this point, we would be foolish to back away from it'?"

Clyburn's answer: "Well that would be a real big problem for us, no question about it."

Good news from Iraq would be a problem for the Democratic Party? I could have told you that; I'm just astonished that Clyburn would admit it.

The campaign to impugn the integrity of General Petraeus is in full swing. Liberal blogger Andrew Sullivan anticipates a positive report in September, and has already decided to disbelieve it. His only reason is because the general appeared on Hugh Hewitt's conservative radio program.

"The only thing worse than a deeply politicized and partisan war is a deeply politicized and partisan commander," wrote Sullivan. "But we now know whose side Petraeus seems to be on: Cheney's. Expect spin, not truth, in September."

Liberals are already laying the groundwork to disbelieve the September report. If it's negative, then it's reflective of the truth. If it shows significant progress – which it probably will – then it's just more White House spin. Cover your ears and don't listen to a word that the silly Bush stooge, Petraeus, has to say.

Is Petraeus a Bush thinky? If he is, he sure managed to hide it from the senate, which unanimously confirmed his position as U.S. Commander in Iraq. Not a single senator voted against his nomination. Keep in mind that he was confirmed in January 2007, which means that the Democrats controlled the Senate.

Petraeus is the best military mind we have, and everyone seemed to acknowledge that fact when he was confirmed. He wrote the military's manual on counterinsurgency operations. Petraeus was previously the commander of the prestigious 101st Airborne Division. While many parts of Iraq were in disarray, his division's sector of Iraq was under control.

Even PBS's "Frontline" had to admit, "Having launched some 4,500 reconstruction projects and used tough military tactics to quell security threats, Petraeus had the kind of success in and around Mosul that Washington had hoped for, making Mosul a showcase for visiting Congressmen."

Petraeus rose to the top because he distinguished himself as an outstanding commander. He was unanimously confirmed by a Democrat controlled Senate. So why are liberals so intent on not believing that he might be making a difference in Iraq?

I have a few guesses on that. First, liberals are so bent on losing this war that they cannot tolerate success. Second, losing the war in Iraq and blaming it on conservatives would benefit them in elections for years to come. Third, the idea of this whole Iraq project backfiring on us gives them a rush of schadenfreude.

Unlike liberals, I welcome good news from Iraq. Maybe with General Petraeus in the driver's seat, we can wrap this thing up ASAP and go home as winners. It's becoming abundantly clear that such a result is not the goal of the Democratic Party.

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

Cut Israel's foreign aid

In the aftermath of the Minnesota bridge collapse, a rational American would hope for and expect an increase in spending on the public sector for things like transportation and highway maintenance. Instead, the Bush administration has recently announced a $30 billion dollar military aid package to Israel, a deal which will take place over the next ten years.

Bruce Lerner

This package represents a 25 percent increase to the current level of aid. The justification for this massive "gift" is that Iran is an unruly country with plans for Middle East domination. Therefore, Israel must be given more goodies with which to defend American interests. An interesting insight comes up at this point: we live in a democracy, and Americans don't want the U.S. to go to war with Iran. They favor diplomacy over force.

According to a recent poll from the Program on International Policy Attitudes (PIPA), 74 percent of Americans want the U.S. to solve any Iranian issues by "trying to build better relations." This is hardly what our administration has been doing lately with its frequent and illegal shows of force aimed at intimidating Iran.

In any confrontation, even an accidental one that occurs during one of these military exercises, Israel will be the first one to get the call to attack Iran, as it is the largest recipient of U.S. military aid in the region. That is why it is crucial to limit and not to increase the billions in aid that Israel already receives.

It is crucial to limit and not to increase the billions in aid that Israel already receives.

This thought is in contrast to Undersecretary of State, R. Nicholas Burns's statement that the aid is an "investment in peace, in long-term peace." Perhaps he also thinks that ignoring the sentiments of the majority of Americans is democratic.

The PIPA survey did state that a majority of Americans favor a limited military strike on Iran's weapons facilities in the case that Iran was developing nuclear weapons.

Surely, in order to whip up a frenzy of fear and patriotism, Bush will try to give evidence that Iran is developing nuclear weapons. Of course, Bush would not need to mention that the U.S. is wasting more of our tax dollars on new nuclear stockpiles, thereby violating the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, according to the department of energy website. One can only hope that people in the country will remember what happened the first time Bush made claims about WMDs in a Middle Eastern country.

There are many other reasons to cancel military aid to Israel. We can infer the type of peace that Burns referred to when we think of the Lebanon War last summer, during which 1,000 or so civilians were killed during the massive Israeli bombardment of densely populated urban areas.

Regardless of the consequences that follow with the importation of new weapons, a question needs to be asked as to whether the U.S. can afford to do this. The Iraq occupation is being dragged out as long as possible by the stubborn hawks in the White House, leaving the country in massive debt. It is foolhardy for politicians to advocate any sort of increase in aid given the levels of poverty and hunger in the U.S.

They have never heard of the phrase 'tight times' or 'tightening the belt.' All of the money being wasted on useless conflicts could be used to feed, house, and educate every last man, woman, and child in the United States. Any UMass student understands the cost of an education, and that cost could be minimized if people stood up for their tax dollars. After all, this is a state school, meaning it is government run.

Casey Dinges of the American Society of Civil Engineers, stated that the U.S. will need to spend $390 billion dollars over the next 20 years for wastewater infrastructure alone. This is only one of numerous domestic concerns that will cost many dollars to amend. There should be zero talk of aiding other countries while there is not enough money in the coffers to ensure clean water for our children.

That is not even to specify that the investment is in murderous technology that won't help the Israeli or Palestinian people in any way. American people clearly have to worry more about falling into a river while driving to work than about a non-existent Iranian nuclear weapon.

Clearly, Americans need to find a way to make their money work for them as opposed to for Bush and his friends. If people don't do anything about the worsening conditions in our own country, the leadership will feel emboldened and will continue to spend everyone's resources on foolish and dangerous expeditions abroad or on supporting military powers that are thousands of miles away. Apparently, this is to preserve America's freedom and to ensure cheap energy. However, America needs to move to renewable energy sources in order to remain free from Hurricanes. And if everyone knows, gas is expensive!

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu

McDemocracy

S.P. Sullivan

I err not; the immediate imagery that sentence evokes, the male employees flipping burgers in red-and-yellow Capri pants or Ronald McDonald with a Euro-trash blowout, is not quite accurate. The Golden Arches – as American an institution as the apple pie they serve or the obesity they cause – are intact; they're just a different color.

The McDonald's Corporation's European division, under the leadership of its first non-American president Denis Hennequin, has initiated a major overhaul of its franchises in France, England, Germany and other nations across the continent. The initiative was a highly successful attempt at bolstering sales in the European Union, which had hit a slump in the late nineties due to obesity concerns and a general distaste for grumpy, underpaid employees. These things don't faze Americans; Europeans weren't as pleased.

But Hennequin brought about a whirlwind of changes in menus and decor in European restaurants that resulted in a 15 percent increase in European sales. And although the United States still accounts for the largest chunk of McDonald's revenue, Europe has become a close second. Restaurants were befit with trendier seating, less austere colors—even the golden arches were toned down to a mellower yellow. Likewise, menus were given a little more local specificity; porridge is on the breakfast menu in London, and French Big Macs are topped with a variety of fine cheeses.

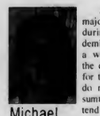
Maybe McDonalds' European success could be attributed to some fancy decor and the cafe lattes added to menus in the more posh European metropolises. But what it comes down to is the understanding on part of Hennequin – an astute businessman who started flipping burgers at a franchise in France – that not anything and everything American will be loved abroad. Like most aspects of the political discourse in this country, the two competing conceptions of our international image are that we are either the proverbial city-upon-a-hill of nations, or a vicious imperial regime. The truth lies somewhere in between.

The McDonald's Corporation and Denis Hennequin have been able to look past the they-hate-us-for-our-freedom rhetoric our politicians espouse and realize that yes, American institutions have a lot to offer the world. But perhaps not everything American is appropriate across the pond. Maybe our government could look to Ronald McDonald as a model for foreign policy.

Democracy in the Middle East? Sure, just hold the separation of church and state; you're not going to ease sectarian violence by barring the Imams from the capitol. Capitalism in Africa? Although a market economy is great for the fast-paced, highly technological nation we all know and love, countries that have such dramatic income gaps probably shouldn't abandon generalized reciprocity just yet.

Maybe our government could look to Ronald McDonald as a model for foreign policy.

Much like the United States, McDonald's is ubiquitous, you'll find Grimace and the gang anywhere you can find an American embassy. In fact, Thomas Friedman's 1999 book, "The Lexus and the Olive Tree" presents the theory that "No two countries that both had a McDonald's had fought a war against each other since each got its McDonald's." And although this statement is more of a commentary on the strong economic ties created by globalization, it shows that McDonald's has to be doing something right.



Hennequin's influence has helped the McDonald's Corporation realize the truth that many Americans fail to realize – that we are neither absolutely loved nor absolutely hated abroad. Europe's McDonald's has taken the good things its business has to offer as an American institution – efficiency, affordability and consistency and left behind the low-grade fat garbage that makes other nations dislike us to begin with. It is common knowledge that the striking red and yellow are designed to get you in and out, but Europeans like to take their time when they eat, so rather than tell its European customers "too bad – we're the financial giants around here and we call the shots," McDonald's did the dirty deed that every politician avoids like the plague: they compromised.

If we are to rebuild our once-sterling image abroad – an image that has, understandably, been pretty tarnished by our bumbling war on terror – we're going to have to follow the Happy Meal model. Making our presence abroad known, whilst simultaneously catering to the needs of individual countries, might just be enough to do the job. We can no longer just set up shop in any given country and expect rose petals to be thrown at our feet; we need to pay closer attention to what we can offer them, as opposed to just what they can offer us.

One of the purported goals of the Bush administration is to spread the glory of American democracy across the globe. Unfortunately, they've more or less screwed that one up. But maybe, with a little Hennequinian fine-tuning, there's still a chance for McDemocracy.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor and can be reached at editorial@dailycollegian.com

Recap of strange summer news

Michael Cartwright

As a journalism major, I am urged during the academic year to keep a watchful eye on the daily news, and for the most part, I do my job. In the summer, however, I tend to be more concerned with who's performing at The Middle East that night than I am with what happened in the Middle East the night before. Basically, I become the sort of "U.S. American" who knows a lot less about what is going on in "The Iraq" than he probably should.

This summer was different though. I scrolled up and down the online pages of Yahoo! and CNN with the same frequency I played Wiffle Ball in the backyard. I can now eloquently articulate the intricacies of all major global affairs. Just kidding. I cannot even come close. Truthfully, it wasn't the informative world reports that kept me on top of things. Yes, I educated myself daily on Darfur, but mostly I just loved laughing at all of the ridiculous and absurd stories that could be found under various websites' "odd" and "bizarre" categories.

Although I wish I could type out 5000 words, I'll still use this brief column to review a few of the summer's most amusing news items:

July 14: A bus driver in Lindau, Germany told a 20-year-old woman seated near the front of the bus to switch seats or else he'd be forced to kick her off the bus. This doesn't seem like much of a story until you find out why the German driver made such an unusual demand. Reportedly, the driver told the woman she was "too sexy for his bus" and that her "cleavage was distracting him" every time he looked in the rearview mirror, making it difficult for him to focus on the road. The humiliated woman had no choice but to change seats.

When I first read this story, I didn't think the driver could do this, but apparently, what he did was perfectly legal, and was later backed up by the bus company's spokesman. Knowing this, I now almost hope the PVTA bus drivers pull this exact move come Halloween this semester.

I can now eloquently articulate the intricacies of all major global affairs. Just kidding.

PVTA driver: "Excuse me, sweetie, but you're going to have to move to the back of the bus. Your half-exposed breasts are just too damn massive and distracting."

Nurse # 26 : "Wait, what? Who? You mean, like, me? Oh my God, that is so like, I don't even know. You're like, treating me like that old black lady from that Outkast song. And like, aren't you being like, sexual or something?"

PVTA driver : "No, hun -- I'm not being sexist If that's what you're asking. So, please, you and the other 25 nurses need to relocate before I inadvertently sideswipe Bucketman.

That also goes for the set of Charlie's Angels back there, the three mischievous kittens up front, and the blacked-out skank covered in nothing but eight inches of duct-tape. Oh, and her name was Rosa Parks, and she's not old – she's dead."

July 16: 38-year-old Dana Shelton stood dazed outside a bar that night in Largo, Florida. Minutes earlier, local police came to the scene after receiving a disturbance call. When the intoxicated Shelton says a series of police cars pull up to the establishment, he quickly picked up his cell phone and began dialing 911 to report what was happening. He was not arrested but was later charged with misdemeanor misuse of the emergency number.

Shelton called 911 asking police to help him with the, um, police. I think it's safe to say he had his fair share of Sunday pops that evening. I just wish I could have seen the confusion on the faces of the cops surrounding him. I'd also steal/sell off all of my sister's American Girl dolls (still inside their original packaging) to listen to that 911 call.

August 20: Red Maday arrived at the Department of Workforce Services in Gillette, Wyoming that morning. He was wearing a pair of dusty blue jeans, spurs, a blue, cowboys hat, and a dirt covered shirt. The Minnesota native lost his license ten years ago following a hit-and-run accident, and after not being able to find a job back home decided to search for work out west.

How did someone with no money or transportation, reach Wyoming, you might ask?

Simple.

For six weeks and 1500 miles he rode steadily atop his new mule. Maday said he could have probably gotten a job in Gillette, but wasn't willing to part with his draft animal.

"He makes me happy. He's my best friend and I'm not getting rid of him for nothing," Maday said.

Ok, if you're laughing right now, stop it. There is nothing odd about this story whatsoever. Red Maday is without a doubt, the hero of my summer, that's all.

I came to think of Mr. Maday and I suppose laughter is the best I can do.

Depressing analogies of life got you down? Maybe it's time to saddle up a mule and ride it a couple thousand miles to happiness.

As you can imagine with the police [illegible] I'm not enough of yourself in [illegible] Just cut up from Express's [illegible] The weather's getting [illegible] a turtleneck and take [illegible] back of the bus.

Michael Cartwright can be reached at [illegible]

SEP 7 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

KRISTEN COLLINS-DAVIS/COLLEGIAN

Salsa night

Grammy nominated band, Tiempo Libre, performs part of First Week 2007 last night in the Campus Center. Prior to the bands performance, dance instructor, Boricuas Unido, taught students in the audience how to salsa dance.

Trade Roots sponsors music festival

Reggae music comes to Western Mass. this weekend

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jaya Boerman is bringing Amherst more than African art and Bob Marley records on Sept. 23. As the owner of Trade Roots, he is getting together a dozen local reggae bands to celebrate the store's fifth anniversary with Trade Roots Music and Arts Festival at Amherst Common.

"It's a free festival that's definitely going to be very positive and inspiring," Boerman said. "As long as it's a sunny day it'll be a pretty cool event."

The bands involved in the festival include local band Loose Caboose, the Black Rebels, Ras Daniel and The Alchemystics. The Black Rebels consists of Manou Afrika, his wife and two teenaged boys. Ras Daniel, also known as Daniel Rosen, and his girlfriend assisted Boerman in pulling the event together.

"[They] have done a lot of legwork," Boerman said, "getting the word out there and meeting people."

Rosen, who works with Valley Free Radio WXOJ 103.3, was originally scheduled to perform at the Vermont International Reggae Music Festival, but it was cancelled due to revenue complications. Boerman said that he was anxious to perform and more than willing to help out with the Trade Roots Festival.

The festival is running on limited funds and all of the bands are donating their time in support of Boerman. He went on to say that they did not pick out a headlining band so that the vibe stays neutral between them.

"Reggae music is based on one love," he said. "Many people who are involved are doing the works of Jah. [Trying] to spread the love and an understanding for all people [and] continue the work of Bob Marley."

Boerman said that interested bands contacted him from cities as far as Chicago.

"It's pretty amazing how [word of the event] spread so quickly," Boerman said. "Random people [and bands] are contacting me knowing they weren't going to get paid [for performing]."

They had 30-40 bands interested in performing but the lineup was cut to about a dozen so each band and DJ would have enough time to perform a decent

See FESTIVAL on page 5

Hollywood stars turn to indie films

BY ETHAN SACKS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Director James Mangold managed to rustle up quite a posse to help bring his movie "3:10 to Yuma," opening Friday, into theaters.

Without lassoing Russell Crowe for the role of the notorious rogue Ben Wade, or Christian Bale as a one-legged rancher commissioned to bring the outlaw to jail, the taut, character-driven drama might never have gotten made.

In Hollywood, as lawless a town as there ever was, it's easier to make a $150 million film than a $55 million one like "3:10 to Yuma." Effects-heavy blockbusters always have a shot at putting ticket buyers in seats. But a hard-edged, leathery Western like the one Mangold had wanted to make ever since he saw the 1957 original as a teenager?

It needed stars attached who believe in the director's passion project, too. Nowadays, that's part and parcel of being a major draw. Actors can juggle small projects with big ones, and it's not considered "vanity work."

"Actors are dying to be in good movies," says Mangold. "The fact is, they want to make great films. And they have interests beyond the highest paycheck every quarter.

"I think it's the only reason good films are being made."

A rebel in the mode of the charismatic Wade, Crowe relishes picking parts that appeal more to critics than studio execs, anyway. Of his upcoming role as a manipulative CIA handler in the Ridley Scott-directed "Body of Lies," the 43-year-old actor recently said: "I think it's very timely. I don't think it'll be very popular, but that's never been part of my thought process."

"The Assassination of Jesse James by the Coward Robert Ford," opening Sept. 21, is less a Western than an art-house drama that happens to wear a cowboy hat, but it also relies on a big name on the marquee: Brad Pitt.

Director Andrew Dominik had just one film to his name, the critically acclaimed Australian film "Chopper," and knew he'd have a tough sell adapting a film from Ron Hansen's novel.

"The characters seemed to struggle more with themselves than each other," Dominik says. "It became fairly clear that there was no way that someone was going to finance this film without a movie star."

Knowing he needed help getting his project into theaters, he slipped a copy of the book to Pitt in 2004. Who better to fill the boots of the preeminent celebrity of 1880s America and the subject of fixation by the titular coward (played by Casey Affleck) than Pitt?

"He's got a lot of power, and he's not afraid to use it," says Dominik. "I really admire him for it."

"Once you reach a certain level of success as an actor, you can bounce back and forth between projects 180 different size38," says Paul Dergarabedian, president of box-office tracking firm Media by Numbers. "One subsidizes the other."

Or as Jesse's sidekick Dick Liddil (Paul Schneider) memorably puts it in the movie, "Poetry isn't for whores."

Of course, attracting a star pulls both ways. Ira Deutchman, CEO of Emerging Pictures, an independent distribution company, has seen how important a big name can be in getting a film made. As a producer of 1998's "54," Deutchman couldn't get Miramax to move to the beat until he got Mike Myers to play disco impresario Steve Rubell.

"Even if you're trying to make a low-budget movie by Hollywood studio standards, 1980sse studios38 are going to try to get the same kind of ... star power as if you were making a huge Hollywood movie," says Deutchman.

No worries: The list of actors who happily have a foot in both worlds is an esteemed one.

George Clooney has become the patron saint of the "one-for-you, one-for-me" model. He plays a fixer for a corporate law firm in "Michael Clayton" (Oct. 5) and a fading 1920s football player in the romantic comedy "Leatherheads" (Dec. 7), which he also directed. He was last seen in "Ocean's 13," which was, of course, hardly a gamble. parts.

George Clooney is one of many movie stars who have lately stared in Hollywood blockbusters as well as lower budget independent movies.

Acclaimed opera singer passes away

BY ELAINE GURGIAN
ARTS REVIEWS EDITOR

Luciano Pavarotti was more than a singer of incredible gifts. Pavarotti will be remembered because he had the charisma to convince any listener that opera could be amazing, transporting stuff. With him as a name brand, opera was something that gobs of people came to know, at least a little.

In my imagination, the time I heard Pavarotti was unforgettable. He was in tip-top form, his sweet tenor spinning and pinging with the best of them. The rest of the cast was stellar, and the hall was small enough so that the audience could appreciate every little wink and smile.

Sadly, that wasn't what really happened.

The truth is that I saw Pavarotti in June 2000 at Cleveland Browns Stadium, as one of The Three Tenors. From a stage on the field, Pavarotti, Placido Domingo and Jose Carreras trotted out a series of excerpts from famous operas. The lineup included Pavarotti's signature aria, "Nessun Dorma," from Puccini's "Turandot."

In retrospect, watching Pavarotti come onstage like the superstar that he was, arms held high to acknowledge the applause even before it began, was as exciting as any of the singing.

Those of us in the better seats sat in the sun, preposterously attired in formal gear. I sweltered through the show in my all-black long skirt and top, admiring parts of the performance but disappointed by lost opportunities. Why not hand out programs with translations, so people hearing "Nessun Dorma" for the first time knew the story of the icy Princess Turandot and the three riddles she asked her suitors? Afterward, I struggled with balky technology when I tried to file my deadline review.

Not exactly a perfect sunset kind of memory.

Nevertheless, news of Pavarotti's death made me very sad. After all, you don't measure this singer (or any performer) by a single concert, or your personal reasons for enjoying it or not. Anyway, the memory of listening to the first recording I bought of "La Boheme," with Pavarotti singing opposite Mirella Freni with the Berlin Philharmonic and Herbert von Karajan, easily trumped one afternoon of ersatz opera.

At its best, Pavarotti's brand of opera was the real deal: technically accomplished and musically in good taste. It could be frustrating to see him take the easy path, with concerts like The Three Tenors. Still, his fame was based on a musicianship that thrilled opera-lovers and newcomers alike, including soccer fans at the World Cup.

What current opera singer does everyone know? Placido Domingo's reputation is huge, but he doesn't seem to me to court his fans with the same enthusiasm as Pavarotti. (Points, though, for appearing on "Sesame Street," as Pavarotti did.) Andrea Boccelli has mass appeal, but many listeners (count me in) aren't satisfied with his musicianship.

Luciano Pavarotti should be remembered for his solo performances not for the The Three Tenor concerts later in his career.

HBO new fall premiers Sunday

BY RICK KUSHMAN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

It's a good weekend coming on cable, and the best part will be the return on Sunday of HBO's reliably painful and funny "Curb Your Enthusiasm."

But first, let's get to a new, roguish little gem of a series from BBC America premiering Saturday (at 9 p.m.) called "Torchwood," which is something of a blend of "The X-Files," "Men in Black" and Monty Python.

Torchwood is the name of a super-secret group "separate from the government, outside the police, beyond the United Nations," someone explains that uses alien technology to solve crimes. Often, those crimes are committed by actual aliens.

The group is led by Captain Jack Harkness (John Barrowman), a modern, swashbuckling-style crime fighter who may or may not be human, sane or even male. But he is cool, and so is the rest of his team.

Layered through this crime procedural/alien hunt is a mischievous British wit that is sometimes sly and casual, sometimes borderline slapstick.

Like a scene early in the episode. The Torchwood team is investigating a murder and is using an alien tool that can temporarily bring the dead back to life. One member, Toshiko (Naoko Mori), is asking the victim about his stabbing death. But the dead guy doesn't buy that he's passed on.

"I can see you," the dead guy says.

"Trust me," Toshiko reassures him, "you're dead."

"I don't want to be dead," the guy says.

It's also got moments of classic sci-fi wonder, like when Captain Jack introduces Gwen, a police constable, to her first alien. "He was born on another world," Jack says, "and he's real."

Gwen (Eve Myles) stumbles on the Torchwood gang at a crime scene and becomes obsessed with the team and Captain Jack.

She eventually tracks them to their headquarters which, for the record, is near a rift in the space-time continuum through their regular pizza deliveries, and, as so often happens in these sorts of adventures, joins the squad so we can see it all through fresh eyes.

Her eyes are neither cynical nor docile, and, at least through Saturday's episode, she's a good, spunky foil for the Torchwood crew.

There's a moment when Captain Jack shows Gwen an invisible elevator. She worries someone could fall into its invisible shaft.

"I show you something fantastic," Jack says, "and you find fault."

"Torchwood," too, is something fantastic, but there are few faults to find in this smooth, grown-up charmer of a series.

More unclear is HBO's new drama on Sunday (at 9 p.m.), "Tell Me You Love Me," which is this season's reach for the outer bounds of what gets shown on cable.

The drama is the story of three couples in various stages of relationships and of stress, and it's about sex, connections and everyday moments, but especially about sex. To say it is explicit understates the case.

The point, it seems, is that sex can be romantic or unattractive, healing or troubling, the glue or the wedge, and it is always important. On pay cable, that's a fine point to make.

The problem with the series as someone says about a marriage is that, if you take out the sex, there isn't much left.

"Tell Me You Love Me" is shot and directed with loads of gravitas, and with a starkness that can be intimate and jarring. But even with all that seriousness, and even with all the body parts and the couples on top of the sheets, there's nothing especially compelling here, at least in the early episodes.

And now for something completely lacking gravitas, we bring you season six of "Curb Your Enthusiasm" (at 10 p.m. Sunday), two years after we last saw the bungling adventures of Larry David.

On the season opener, Larry is trying to duck two different parties without offending anyone, and if you watch this show at all, you know that "not offending anyone" is not one of Larry's strengths.

The two-year wait pays off in another great episode, though David told TV critics this summer that he wasn't sure he would bring the show back for another season. He also said that doing the show is hard, and he needs to trick himself by saying every season is his last.

"That's the only way I can get through the season," David said. "If I thought that I had to come back and do it again, I would never do it in the first place."

So why did he decide to jump into another year if it's so hard on him?

"Well, the season ended," he said, "and I went into my office, and I was sitting at my desk, and I went, 'Jeez, I don't have anything to do. What am I going to do now?'

"And I thought, 'This is very uncomfortable. I better do another season.'"

So, he was asked, he's miserable doing the show and miserable not doing the show?

"There you go," David said. "Exactly."

The SOURCE

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday September 7

RECREATION
The Mullins Center is hosting free iceskating starting at 1 p.m.

PHOTOGRAPHY
The UMass Amherst library for Intergrated Sciences and engineering is hosting the photography of Suzanne Bell.

ART
Amherst College presents Lewis Carroll's illustrations and notes.

MUSIC
Zoe Darrow and the Fiddleheads will be performing at the Iron Horse in Northampton.

Sunday September 9

FILM
Amherst Cinema is showing the film "Lady Chatterley."

CBS in the hot seat

BY MAUREEN RYAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of the most chilling documents to come down the pike in a while is the [illegible] parents of participants in "Kid Nation" signed.

If you haven't heard of "Kid Nation," it's a CBS reality show set for a Sept. 19 debut. If the network gets the program, that is. "Kid Nation" is now under investigation by New Mexico authorities, who are looking into whether producers broke any laws during the show's filming in that state a year or so ago.

Though CBS denies any wrongdoing, and has said that the making of the show did not violate any laws, some "Kid Nation" participants, all of whom were between the ages of 8 and 15, were injured during the course of facilitating, according to news reports. (One 9-year participant, as originally reported, was hit in the head by an ax, and one child sustained a burn from hot grease.)

The kicker: The parents of these kids had to sign a contract saying they would not sue over anything that might happen to their kids, up to and including death.

According to the document posted on TheSmokingGun.com, the parents "acknowledge, via the contract they signed, that the show was 'inherently dangerous' and could expose their children to 'unidentified hazards and conditions that may cause serious bodily injury, illness or death.' The parents had to relinquish all legal claims on CBS if anything did happen to their children. Oh, and unless the families stick to the terms of a confidentiality agreement that the network is still enforcing, they could be liable for a $5 million penalty.

All for a $5,000 "stipend," which is what most kids got for participating in the show. By my calculation, many of the kids who participated in the show, if they did work 14-hour days for 40 days, got less than $9 an hour.

No wonder the broadcast networks aren't about to give up on reality TV, despite its relatively lackluster performance of late: the genre is not exactly bankrupting them.

Seriously, though, if we learned that a corporation were using child labor having kids work 14-hour days, without any days off, with children getting injured on occasion, we'd be outraged.

An 8-year-old working all day and half the night, and the kid's employer refusing to promise that the "pain-and-suffering" of the people who might treat the child in the event of an emergency?

That ominous contract language flies in the face of CBS' attempts to bill "Kid Nation" as a happy-go-lucky "summer camp" experience.

"In order for a reality show ... to really get out there and change the landscape of television, you have to sort of stir public debate," CBS entertainment president Nina Tassler said about "Kid Nation" at a press event in July. "We know we're going to create some controversy, ... But I think the whole objective was to get out there, do something different, and try and reach out and have people talk about the show, which is what's happening."

Yes, but at this point, the "Kid Nation" debate centers on how children were used to create an entertainment property for CBS, a network that plans to charge big bucks for "Kid Nation" commercial spots. The network could have done some things to prevent the "Kid Nation" buzz from going sour, but they would have cost money. And cutting corners when kids are involved that's not courting controversy, that's risking condemnation.

The fact is, the kids on the show should have been covered by entertainment-union contracts that would have protected their interests, limited the hours they could work and guaranteed appropriate on-set medical care and supervision.

Even if all that had been done, in my opinion, CBS shouldn't have used performers under 12. The idea that an 8-year-old could realistically consent to this kind of experience doesn't really fly.

And I hesitate to think of what these kids will think of the way they're edited. It's one thing for a contestant on "Survivor" to feel they were made to look villainous or stupid; it's quite another for a 5th grader to face the entire school after having been made to look foolish on national TV.

But maybe what the middle-school critics or grown-up critics think of "Kid Nation" won't really matter in the end. After all, CBS is as of press time soliciting applications for "Kid Nation 2" on its Web site.

Though CBS denies any wrong doing the network is currently being investigated in New Mexico for putting children in dangerous situations.

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION

Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, Softball, Ice Hockey & Volleyball

Clinics: Football-Sept. 11, 12, 13 Soccer-Sept. 11, 12, 13, 14
Co-ed Softball-Sept. 17, 18 Field Hockey-Sept. 17
Ice Hockey-Sept. 18, 19, 20 Volleyball-Oct. 2, 3, 9, 10
Call for requirements, times and locations

Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693

On The Web: www.umass.edu/campusrec

Reggae comes to Mass.

FESTIVAL from page 4

set between 30 and 45 minutes.

"All of the staging, sound systems, Porto-potties [etc.] are taken care of through vendors and donations," Boerman said, adding that One Way Screen Printing and Captain Video of Amherst are only two of their sponsors.

The Easthampton Valley Community Development Corporation (CDC) has also been a big help to the cause. The CDC is an organization that helps small businesses develop. Boerman said that they offered to help promote the festival if Boerman would do the same for them.

"It turned out to be a lot more work than imagined," he said. "We've learned a lot in the process and have got a lot of feedback."

Boerman got the idea to have a reggae festival last year as a milestone for Trade Roots' success and to introduce this type of event to Western Massachusetts.

"There [aren't] many reggae festivals on the East Coast and none of them focus 100 percent on local musicians," Boerman said. "Western Mass. is pretty limited on festivals."

Trade Roots originally started when a friend of Boerman, who he would not name, quit the Peace Corps and began making trips to Africa and shipping back artwork. Soon after, a third party jumped on the bandwagon, who also remains unnamed, but the trio eventually broke up, leaving Boerman with control over the shop.

"It started out as an African art gallery," Boerman said adding they also began vending reggae records for local DJs. Once people began requesting reggae CDs they adjusted their focus to fit the demand.

Now, Trade Roots imports art from African artists and fair trade organizations like Global Crafts, located in Florida, where it is ensured that artists receive a fair commission for their work.

"We're expecting 500-1,000 people," he said, "any more than that would blow my mind. Hopefully everyone there will have a positive vibe."

The fest is on Sunday Sept. 23 and goes from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m.

"We just try and be a positive influence on the world," Boerman said. "We like to have something for everyone."

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodisett@student.umass.edu

Trade Roots started off originally as an African art gallery. The store presently imports art from the Florida company, Global Crafts.

WRITE FOR ARTS
E-MAIL US AT
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
OR VISIT THE NEWSROOM IN
THE BASEMENT OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

Back 2 Cool
Citizens of Humanity
7 for all Mankind
Chinese Laundry
Steve Madden
Free People
Mavi
Ugg
Keds
Vans
Frye

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Yes, summer is over. But believe it or not, there is an upside.

College Students
Get 15% OFF full-price items
Must show valid college ID

Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
351 East Russell St

eastern mountain sports

Key stretch for Minutemen this weekend

M. SOCCER from page 10

UMass coach Sam Koch said. "But they have a lot of guys that help him and who can be on the end of a pass that goes into the back of the net. We have to be careful of him, but also of the other guys they have up top."

Not surprisingly, the sophomore phenom owns the only Catamount goal scored this season. That tally was the game-winner in the team's opening match against San Francisco.

Though the team followed that win with a loss to No. 5 Santa Clara, a victory over the Dons is a good indication of the team's ability. Traveling to the West Coast is a difficult way to begin a season, but a 1-1 record against two 2006 NCAA tournament participants is a respectable accomplishment.

The Minutemen's second opponent in three days features a far less dangerous offense, but poses a challenge with its physical style on the pitch. Though UNH has yet to score a goal this season, its size and strength in the midfield and on defense can lead to low-scoring battles.

"Unfortunately, when a team hasn't scored a goal yet, they're fighting at the bit to get the first one," Koch said. "Scoring for them is not something that they've done a lot. They've been playing just to get the 0-0 tie, with the idea to counter and sneak one in. That's what Maine did to us."

This matchup could create a similar circumstance to the team's first game, a 1-0 loss at Maine. In that contest, the Minutemen dominated offensive possession, shots on net and corner kick opportunities, but couldn't finish any offensive opportunities.

However, the Minutemen are not taking the Wildcats lightly.

"We're going into this tournament with the idea that we can win it," Koch said. "But we can also be 0-2. UNH is a difficult team to play against – they're big and they don't let you play."

The Wildcats fell to Portland, 3-0, but fought Washington to a scoreless tie to begin the season. Once again, an early season West Coast trip can put a team's ability out of perspective. But UNH will find it difficult to hide its offensive shortcomings against the Minutemen.

Koch has had a predictable starting lineup, using the same starting eleven for both games. But he's not hesitant to make changes where necessary. For example, after using forward Prince Ofosu as an early first-half substitute in the preseason, Koch has started the junior on the right wing.

"We have about 15 guys who can start," Koch said. "It depends on their fitness level and injuries and who's in a slump. The bottom line is that we want to try to keep it as uniform as we can. Friday, we might start Mark DeSantis, who hasn't started. We might start him in the midfield or up top, just to keep people on their toes."

With two games in three days, fatigue could become an issue for all four participants in the tournament. However, it's probable that the starting lineups will look very similar for the Minutemen in both games.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Junior Prince Ofosu and the Minutemen hope to continue their strong offensive production for a pair of games this weekend in Vermont for the Smith Barney Nike Soccer Classic. Ofosu has one goal in two games this season.

KRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Junior Tony Bassett assisted on Prince Ofosu's game-winning goal against Dartmouth in UMass's first win of the season.

Offensive production will prove key held the Minutemen scoreless five times. The offensive drought eventually found its way into the backfield. Those two games included, opponents out-scored UMass 11-1 in a seven-game, mid-season span. A 5-0 loss to La Salle on Oct. 1 stands as the peak of this stretch.

OFFENSE from page 10

But Koch refuses to allow any talk of revenge to fill the heads of his young, yet experienced, team. To keep his group loose and focused on winning and winning alone, Koch addressed the trip in a rather peculiar manner.

"Anytime you can make a trip where there is a Ben and Jerry's right on the side of the highway, it's good," he joked.

Koch does, however, hope that the yearly matchup with UNH and the newly established series with UVM spark a rivalry among the New England schools. While the annual contest with Rhode Island remains the most heated of the in-state battles since it's also a conference game, a little added incentive to beat a team never hurts. The revenge factor simply has too many possible negative consequences should another loss occur.

After a 1-0-1 start to 2007, the Minutemen arrive in Burlington for these two games looking to find a consistent rhythm, rather than attempting to maintain one, as was the case last season. However, the same applies for the Wildcats who haven't scored a goal after two games.

Koch hopes they score their first goal of the season in their opening game of the weekend against Michigan State to avoid facing a desperate team. UNH's offensive inferiority worries Koch when he thinks about what happened in his team's first game of the season when a late Maine goal off a counterattack gave the Black Bears a 1-0 win.

The Catamounts are in a completely different position entering their annual Smith Barney Nike Soccer Classic.

"It's an exciting trip for us," Koch said. "You've got Vermont who beat San Francisco, which has been an NCAA tournament team over the last couple of years. And they lost to Santa Clara, 2-0, at Santa Clara's field in incredible heat. So I think we're looking at a team that's a good team.

"But we're excited because I think we can beat them. And we're going into this tournament thinking we can leave 2-0, but we could also be 0-2."

Koch can preach the need for a level-headed approach to this weekend's trip as much as he wants, but his players understand what exactly two wins this weekend would accomplish; not only for the 2007 season but for the program in general. Wins over these regional opponents improves the image of UMass soccer a great deal to some of New England's top high school players.

It is crucial that Koch keep his players focused on returning from this trip with wins, but also in synch with each other.

Joe Melvin can be reached at jmelvin@student.umass.edu.

Captains providing solid leadership selected as team captains at the start of the season, having displayed the necessary leadership time and again.

NOTEBOOK from page 10

"They're good kids. They're focused," Rudy said. "They train hard and they don't balk. They lead and they lead by example, and I like that. I think that's the way captains are supposed to be."

Roehrig, a midfielder, has accumulated eight goals and seven assists for 27 points in her career. Last season she had six points on two goals and two assists.

Parry, a forward, piled up four goals and four assists for 11 points in 2006. She has a sum of five goals and 10 assists (19 points) in her collegiate career.

Walker, a goalkeeper who red-shirted her freshman season, is third in UMass history in career saves (296) and fifth in shutouts (19). Last year, she recorded seven shutouts, and on eight occasions held opponents to one goal. She also finished with a .846 save percentage and a career-best 0.96 goals-against average.

The impressive season earned her an Atlantic 10 First-Team All-Conference selection for the second straight year. She has allowed one goal so far – a shot by Providence College's Megan Mancarella off a corner kick in the 60th minute of Sunday's 1-1 tie.

Walker made 16 saves in the outing and is now 72 shy of tying Danielle Dion's all-time school record of 384.

A DAY OF REMEMBRANCE

On Tuesday, the Minutewomen take on Albany on the sixth-year anniversary of the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Rudy thinks there will be some sort of pre-game ceremony or moment of silence for those lost, but he could not guarantee.

"I would suspect that there would be (something), just because (one) of the occasion of the event and the seriousness of it and, two, we're playing in New York," Rudy said.

"If it's not brought up I will certainly mention it beforehand," he added.

Immediately after the attacks, many schools, including UMass, cancelled a week's worth or so of games out of respect for the national tragedy. That weekend, however, the coach of Binghamton University, a college in upstate New York, contacted Rudy and asked if the Minutewomen would like to play as scheduled as a symbol of recovery and triumph.

Rudy said he felt it was important to regain some normalcy in such uncertain time and agreed to keep the game.

"I just didn't think (the sadness) should go too long. Because then it's a double win for (the terrorists)," he said.

UMass won 6-2 in what Rudy called an emotional and meaningful matchup.

Dominic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

SARA KOSTRO/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Jenny Roehrig and the Minutewomen enter this Friday's game against Iona with a 1-0-1 record.

TO ALL STUDENTS OF THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

Alpha Tau Gamma

the Stockbridge social fraternity concludes the rush for male Pledges this week. September 4 to 8.

ATG alumni were with sign up sheets on Tuesday after your Soils class, and on Wednesday after your Botany class and on Thursday in the concourse of the Campus Center

The rush ends on Saturday at a free barbecue on the NE side of Stockbridge Hall beginning at 12:00 NOON

Sign up sheets will be available. Bring your Stockbridge student ID.

The first fraternal meeting is on Monday evening, September 10 in the Campus Center room 903

The Pledge period ends on Saturday, October 27.

STOCKBRIDGE FOREVER

Remember when you felt like this?

Find it again...

UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel

Dwight Chapel
885 Federal Street Bernardston, MA 01007 • 413 256 8090 www.dwightchapel.org • Pastor Emmanuel Hogg
We're growing in Christ come grow with us!

Does Your Group Need Money?

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.

Deadline for the first grant review is Friday, September 14!

Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.

Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year.

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
99 AMHERST

COURTESY - MASSACHUSETTS

In his 20th season at UMass, coach Jim Rudy enters Friday's game with Iona one win shy of 300 for his career.

Rudy one win shy of historic mark be fairly good, but with the loss of two key players that are [seniors] [Christina] Nunes and [Tina] Rodriguez, they were key defensive aspects for us. We've been hoping to break out; we've been working on our attack all week."

W. SOCCER from page 10

Rodriguez is still trying to come back from an ACL injury and Nunes injury is unknown at this point.

The Maroon and White will try to break out of the offensive slump by creating more plays and having good possessions.

"The key thing is to play good possession and don't play possession just for the purpose of possession," Rudy said. "Our connection percentage particularly against Maine when we got really, tired was very low and we need to improve our connection rate, get the ball moving and change the point of attack whenever we can and get to the end line. Get penetration so we can get to the end line and create some things, create knock downs, create corner kicks, create goals."

Although the Minutewomen are undefeated, they have been out-shot and have allowed more corner kicks. The Maroon and White have 10 corner kicks this season, but have allowed 20.

Playing at home might change the atmosphere, however Rudy thinks it also might feel like an away game because it's the first time they have played at Rudd Field since last season. The players have to get used to playing at home again and going through their pre-game rituals.

"It will be nice to get the first one out of the way," Rudy said.

Going into the game there are no major injuries other than Nunes and Rodriguez. Some of the players have the normal bumps and bruises, however Rudy said everyone is ready to play. Rudy will use the same lineups and will have the same two or three player bench rotation if needed.

"I'm not going to play players unless there is a tactical need to do it," Rudy said about bringing players off the bench. "I'm not one of those coaches that substitutes just to substitute or to create pressure – it has to have some meaning to it."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Stellar defense paying off

Goalkeepers, seniors lead Minutewomen in 2007

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the exception of Sunday's 5-0 victory over Harvard, the Massachusetts field hockey team has been involved in nothing but one-goal games.

The Minutewomen are 3-1 and look poised to easily surpass their six wins from 2006. As witnessed by three 1-0 games, the defense has been responsible for the majority of the team's success.

Leading the defense are two seniors who have one more chance to advance deep into the Atlantic-10 tournament in their respective careers.

Erin O'Brien has been a staple of the UMass defense since she arrived in Amherst in 2004. After starting fourteen games her freshman year, O'Brien has since been on the field every time the opening whistle has blown.

Expectations are high for the back from Annandale, Va. UMass coach Justine Sowry named O'Brien the captain for the 2007 campaign, and strong leadership will be imperative on a team with six freshman and five sophomores.

Despite being a defensive-minded player, O'Brien can provide an offensive threat at times as well. She netted three goals and assisted on three others in 2006.

Kristina DoRosario came to UMass from the University of Toronto in 2004. After sitting out her freshman season due to NCAA rules, DoRosario has started 21 and 19 games, respectively, in the last two seasons.

The Canadian midfielder is a versatile player who can also play at the back position, if needed.

"Defensively, Erin O'Brien and Kristina DoRosario have been absolutely outstanding," Sowry said. "They're definitely a brick wall back there."

The first-year coach believes the strong defense will help set up the offense. Leading scorer Cher King has four goals on the season, but Sowry also credits her for contributing on the defensive end, which in turn enables offensive opportunities to present themselves.

"When you talk defensively, it's the whole team," Sowry said. "It starts from the front players – the forward players – and being able to lead a press.

"In terms of attacking, it starts from the back – trying to outlet the ball and passing it up to the forward line."

The defense has been the bread-and-butter for UMass all year, but the offense showed signs of clicking in the team's most recent game against the Crimson.

Sowry was pleased with how her team converted on goal scoring opportunities in that game. She stressed that balls entering the circle are the best chances her team will get to find the back of the net.

"If you look at the game against Harvard, it was eight shots on goal and five goals," Sowry said. "Our effectiveness and efficiency in the circle was absolutely fantastic."

This efficiency was a vast improvement over the one goal the Minutewomen scored after pressuring the Sacred Heart goalie with thirteen shots back on August 29.

"What we're really focusing on in the moment is what we do in the circle, because we would generate a lot of opportunities from the circle," Sowry said "But we'd get nothing from it [referring to games earlier in the season], whether it would be a shot on goal or winning a penalty corner, or putting the ball in a dangerous situation."

Sowry says that changed during the Harvard game.

"Now we're getting the opportunities and we're getting the efficiency, so that's the bonus on the attack side."

Although she's clearly enthused about the progress her team has made on the offensive end, Sowry says it still needs to improve.

"I think the efficiency in the circle is still something we need to strive for," she said. "The goals will come from the rebounding and getting into the goal scoring positions."

The Maroon and White's offense will get its toughest challenge yet this weekend when they go against a Vermont team that has allowed only one goal in four games this season.

This matchup has the potential to be an epic defensive struggle, and the Minutewomen defense has shown to be up to the challenge for all corners this season.

As long as the Minutewomen continue to win games this season, their coach doesn't care how it's done.

"A win's a win, right?" Sowry said with a smile.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Senior back Erin O'Brien's play in the UMass backfield has propelled the Minutewomen to a 3-1 start in her final season in Amherst. This is her second season serving as team captain.

UM travels to Vt. for Classic

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

Minutewomen is the home-field advantage for the Catamounts. Vermont has won its first two home games of the year against Fairfield and Brown. With these two wins, Vermont has won six of its last seven at home. The only loss came in late October of last season.

Another thing the Minutewomen must defend is the quick offense of the Catamounts. Vermont is an early scoring team. So far this season, they have outscored opponents 8-0 in the first half of games.

UMass leads the all-time series with Vermont 7-1. Vermont's sole win against the Minutewomen came last season when they beat UMass 6-4.

The second game of the tournament is against regional rival New Hampshire. The Wildcats have a 2-2 record so far this season. The Wildcats hope to rebound from losing two games to Rider and Harvard after beating Colgate and winning their season opener against Saint Louis.

UNH is one of the more common opponents for UMass. The Minutewomen have played the Wildcats 33 times with a winning record of 18-13-2. UNH got the better of UMass in their meeting last season. Sophomore Megan Shea had a hat trick in that game which led the way to a 4-1 Wildcat victory.

This is the first year UMass will be participating in the Sheraton Catamount Classic. The Minutewomen look to avenge both 2006 losses against Vermont and New Hampshire.

A strong 3-1 record and a stingy defense only bolster the chances that UMass will come back to Amherst with two victories and the tournament title.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY - MASSACHUSETTS

Junior Erin Parker and the Minutewomen travel to Burlington, Vt. this weekend for games with Vermont and New Hampshire.

Every Tuesday Night
10¢ Wings
7:00pm to 11:00pm

Charlie's tavern Since 1978

BUSCH
BUD LIGHT
2 Pool Tables
JIM BEAM
6 TV's
KENO

- $1.99 JIM BEAM & COKE
- $2.50 MARGARITTAVILLE TEQUILA SHOTS
- $4.50 22 OZ LONG ISLAND ICED TEA
- $5.00 PITCHERS OF BUSCH
- $6.00 PITCHERS OF BUD & BUD LIGHT
- $10.00 BUCKETS OF ROLLING ROCK BOTTLES
(2 Persons per bucket)

Join the "Addicted to Charlie's" Facebook Group for more details and up-to-date information!

Saturday, September 15th - Beirut Tournament
Chance to Win $150.00 Gift Certificate
Open Monday—Thursday 4:00pm to 1:00am Friday—Sunday 11:00am to 1:00am

1 Pray Street Amherst, MA 01002 Phone: (413) 549-5403

RadioShack. Do Stuff™

NOBODY DOES STUFF LIKE COLLEGE STUDENTS.

AND RADIOSHACK CAN HELP YOU DO IT.

10% DISCOUNT WITH STUDENT ID*
on a qualifying purchase.

Everyone's Approved! Prepaid Wireless Phones.
• No Credit Checks • No Long Term Commitments • No Annual Contracts

SAVE 10% On Any GoPhone when you buy a $25 Airtime Card and Present Your Student ID²

C139 GoPhone from MOTOROLA® $19.99 Before discount 17.088 While supplies last

A117 GoPhone from SAMSUNG® $49.99 Before discount 17.2543

Unlimited Talk to All of AT&T's Wireless Customers– Over 62 Million–on a Select Plan¹

RADIOSHACK HAS THE GEAR THAT LETS YOU DO MORE STUFF:
- Networking
- Printers
- Calculators
- Flash Drives
- Memory Cards
- Computer Accessories
- Wireless Accessories
- Stereos
- MP3/iPod Accessories
- LCD TVs
- Digital Cameras
- Cables, Connectors
- Surge Protectors
- Desk Lamps

WE'RE NEAR YOUR CAMPUS WITH THE GEAR YOU NEED.
Campus Plaza
458 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035

*Offer good 8/13-9/30/07 at the above location(s). Valid with presentation of student ID at time of sale. In-store merchandise only. Excludes wireless phones, iPods, computers, gift cards, service plans, replacement plans, clearance or discount offers. ¹Mobile to Mobile Minutes may be used when directly dialing or receiving calls from any other AT&T phone number from within your calling area. ²Offer good 8/13-9/30/07.

SEP 7 2007

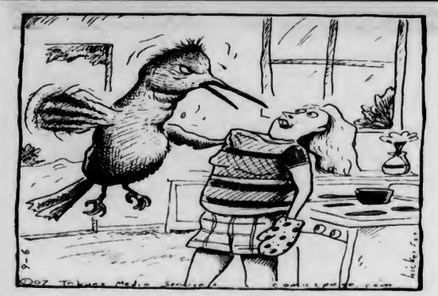
amherst cinema
FRI 9/7-THU 9/13
STUDENT SPECIAL
Present this ad at the Box Office with your Student ID and receive a movie ticket for ONLY $5.00
Expires 9/13/2007
OPENS FRI 9/7 Baby Friendly Show 9/12 1:30
DEATH AT A FUNERAL
1:30 3:30 7:30 9:30
Paprika OPENS FRI 9/7 5:00 9:20
LADY CHATTERLY 2:30 8:00
TALK once TO ME 2:00 7:00 9:00
28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		9			3		4
			5	6		2
4				9		6	3
		7				1		3
			9		8
2		1				8
	9	8		2				6
		2		8	9
	7		3			9

Quote of the Day

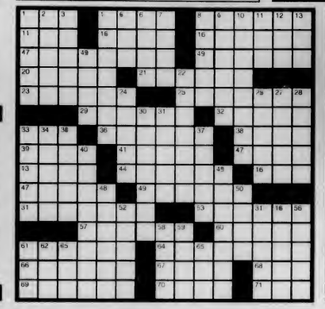
"To me, the whole process of being a brush stroke in someone else's painting is a little difficult."
-Madonna



Welcome To Falling Rock National Park - By Josh Shaler

Paul - By Billy O'Keefe

The Quigmans - By Bruce Hickerson



"Where's the feeder? OK, listen... You score me some sugar and I won't beat you to death with my wings."

Seven O's
Every Wednesday Karaoke
******
Live Band
Fri. 9/7/07 Backwood Band
Sat. 9/8/07 Invasion Band
****
Student Band Wanted
Need a place to play?
Come to Seven O's
Call 413-530-6996
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM to 1 AM M-F
1 PM to 1 AM Sat&Sun
Next To Cuppboe Apts.

ACROSS
1 Real cool, once
6 Slightly moist
8 Spring bloomer
14 Hurly-burly
15 Self images
16 Cal mysteries author, Jackson Braun
17 Republicans
19 Eyetalkers
20 Jobs of computers
21 Division of a poem
23 Charge with excitement
25 House seller
29 Made invalid
32 Russian writer Maxim
33 Make things happen
36 Bedevil
38 Type of tide
39 Lackluster
41 Inert gas
42 Open-mouthed stare
43 Oven setting
44 Obscures
46 Foil material
47 Regions
49 Disrespect
51 Bedtime vision?
53 Absolution
57 Tarry
60 Hokey
61 Apprentice doctor
64 Liquor libation
66 Total washout
67 Bill Clinton's hometown
68 Sound as a cow
69 Like melting snow
70 Musical's place
71 Massachusetts cape

DOWN
1 Old-style verb form
2 Mrs. Bunker
3 Artist's model
4 Build up
5 Way back when
6 Clips the lawn
7 Hey, over here!
8 Single-handedly
9 Turn from side to side
10 The whole time
11 Stretch out
12 Musician's organ
13 Response to a query
18 Tel ___-Jaffa
22 Backbreaking
24 Pale purple
26 Pick up the tab
27 Giraffe's cousin
28 Age
30 Sweetheart
31 Push
33 Some Egyptian clerics
34 Barton of the Red Cross
35 Abducted
37 Eventually become
40 Like the Sleepy Hollow horseman
45 Let up on
48 Discredit
50 Race pace
52 Bug
54 Serious play
55 Leek relative
56 Synthetic fabric
58 Sound on the rebound
59 Space
61 Contingencies
62 Nothing at all
63 Letter following sigma
65 Numbers pro

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are shallow and emit a fowl odor. Just like our beautiful campus pond.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Tell a stranger you are their guardian angel and follow them around all day.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Get hopped up by filling your shoes with mexican jumping beans.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Brighten up by trying to be a mostly sunny kind of person instead of partly cloudy.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Honor the first weekend of the year by wearing parachute pants. Hammer time!

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Sometimes the best thing to wear is nothing at all.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Earthquakes are the result of the earth dancing to celebrate your existence.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If there were ever a time to steal a busload of burritos from the Blue Wall, this is it.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Opportunities are slipping through your hands like octopi through a coral reef.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Measure your success in extremely tiny units so it looks like you've done alot.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Today is your lucky day. Use it well because you only get one...ever.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
76% more people bite their own tongue on friday than any other day. Chew carefully.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Ya heard?

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Auto for Sale

1997 SAAB 900S
5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150
413-323-6362

2001 Volvo S60, 77K miles, $8,800, Loaded, Recent Battery, Brakes & Tires.
www.nikolino.com/volvo call 413/323-9341

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4
2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250 413-323-6362

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs.

Training provided.
1-800-965-6520. Ext 162

Cheerleading Coach Needed
Seeking coach for Mount Holyoke College Cheerleading club. Cheerleading experience required, coaching/gymnastics experience a plus. Email sbmcrae@mtholyoke.edu for more information.

Delivery Drivers Wanted
Must have own car. Flexible schedule, earn up to $14hr. call Delivery Express. 413-549-0077

Driver 6hrs per week $12.00hr plus gas. Car needed. 413-549-1578

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply Dp Dough Downtown Amherst

Handyman/Gardener. Lite household repairs, lawn maintenance. Car needed. $12.00/hr plus gas. 413-549-1578

Household Help, 5 to 6hrs/wk. $12.00 hr. Car needed. Close to UMass
413-549-1578

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Sperm Donor Wanted
We are looking for a healthy, bright, athletic male college student to donate sperm. I will pay for pre-tests and compensate you $300 per donation. Serious responses only. Contact us at leightonej@yahoo.com

For Sale

2005 Verucci SCOOTER 49cc. New Battery and Tune-up. $900.00 or B.O. 413-423-3050 leave message

THE BIGGEST POSTER SALE. Biggest and Best Selection. Choose from over 2000 different ima es. FINE ART, MUSIC, MOVIES, MODELS, HUMOR, ANIMALS, PERSONALITIES, LANDSCAPES, MOTIVATIONALS, PHOTOGRAPHY. MOST IMAGES ONLY $7, $8 AND $9 SEE US AT Cape Cod Lounge – Student Union ON Monday Sept. 3rd thru Friday Sept. 7th, 2007. THE HOURS ARE 9 A.M – 5 P.M. THIS SALE IS SPONSORED BY WMUA 91.1 FM

House for Rent

4 bedroom, partially furnished. Lease 9/4-5/23/08. $1,100/mo. Plus utilities. (860)675-7557

Services

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe.
413-548-9992
27 Pray Street, Amherst
www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/www.ststravel.com.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Save yourself the troubles. Recycle.

UM runners head to N.H. for first meet

LaFreniere, O'Brien lead teams to Hanover for Invitational

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The men's and women's cross country teams travel to Hanover, N.H. this Saturday for their first meet of the season at the Dartmouth Invitational.

The men's team will run the 8K while the women will compete in the 5K. Last year both the men's and women's team took third-place at the invitational.

"Dartmouth is a great cross country course," UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutemen are competing against five other schools including Dartmouth, Central Connecticut, Southern Connecticut, and Keene State.

It's an early meet for all of the New England schools and it should show where all the schools stand, according to O'Brien.

"The first contest of any sport, the coaches are all uncertain," O'Brien said. "I think we have a really solid team, a little on the younger side, but good talent and a youthful approach."

Jess Regnier and Joe Czupryna are both juniors and are expected to lead the team in this meet. Regnier is the number-one returning runner from last year. Czupryna was very strong at the end of last year and has shown continued progress, according to O'Brien.

"We're really happy with the way things are going [in practice]," O'Brien said. "The returning runners did their homework and the incoming freshmen are motivated and want to contribute to a new school."

O'Brien explained that he generally tries to bring younger runners on gradually during the season. The younger runners aren't as familiar with races like Dartmouth. The meet next week at home is easier and will be better for the less experienced runners, according to O'Brien.

"We as coaches need to evaluate where the younger kids stand," O'Brien said.

The coaches are excited and looking forward to the next two weeks. They combine the Dartmouth meet and the September 15 home meet as a "two week package", according to O'Brien.

The Minutewomen will be competing against Dartmouth, US Naval Academy, and Keene State in the event this weekend.

Mass should have good competition in this meet. Dartmouth is usually nationally ranked while Keene State is division one, but has two nationally-ranked runners. UMass is unfamiliar with the skill level of the US Naval Academy, according to UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere.

"We're a very young squad," LaFreniere said. "I would say that we don't have a lot of experience, but I do like their attitudes and they are hard workers."

LaFreniere expects senior captain Christina DeRosa to lead the team.

"She should be able to run with the top athletes at the race on Saturday," LaFreniere said.

Senior captain Amber Sayer and Shivy Zan are expected to run in the top three, according to LaFreniere.

"I'm looking at practice, a nice surprise is Lauren Stocker, a freshman," LaFreniere said. "She is in very good shape, very fit, and she's ready. She'll easily make the top five."

LaFreniere thinks freshman Gina Perno could possibly round out the top five. She is an 800-meter specialist in track.

"We're loaded with freshman," LaFreniere said. "From practice Sam Sacchetti and Kristin Darling [both freshman] are running in a tight little pack. It's wide open with the freshman."

The men and women's teams are both young, but coaches seem to be excited about the enthusiasm and dedication of their respective teams.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at Mturtine@student.umass.edu

Ryan Durkin and the UMass cross country teams are competing in the Dartmouth Invitational this weekend in Hanover, N.H.

WRITING FOR NEWS IS GOOD.
YOU LIKE TO BE GOOD, RIGHT?
RIGHT?
NEWS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Owls begin season strong

Temple, West Chester start 2007 season on right foot

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

West Chester forward Sara Conrad earned this week's Atlantic 10 Player of the Week award for her first-career hat trick against Lehigh on Sept. 2.

The second week of Atlantic 10 field hockey is coming to an end with LaSalle, Massachusetts and Rhode Island at the top of the leaderboard.

LaSalle

LaSalle is 3-2 in non-conference play. The Explorers lost to Drexel on Aug. 29 in overtime with a final score of 3-2. LaSalle also lost to Hofstra 3-2 in a double-overtime on September 1. The win came with help from Kara Harpel who scored two goals and an assist.

During the Hofstra Invitational LaSalle was able to boost its record after the 4-2 win against Sacred Heart on September 2.

Rhode Island

Rhode Island opened its season on September 1 with a 2-1 win against Sacred Heart. Rhode Island then traveled to the Pete Invitational on September 2 where they beat Hofstra 1-0, although they were outshot by Hofstra 11-10. Rhode Island won the tournament.

On September 7 Rhode Island will compete against St. Francis for its home opener.

Richmond

Richmond started its season off with a 4-3 loss against eighth-ranked Virginia on August 30. Richmond had a second loss on September 1 against Delaware with a score of 1-0. That was the second-straight one-goal loss for the Spiders.

The Spiders will travel to Virginia Commonwealth on Friday night.

Saint Joseph's

Saint Joseph's is 1-2 in non-conference play. The Hawks started out the season with a double-overtime loss against Hofstra on August 29. The final score of the game was 2-1. Their second loss came on September 1 against Fairfield with a score of 1-0.

Saint Louis

Saint Louis started out the season with a 1-0 victory over Missouri State on August 28. Their season went downhill from there with four consecutive losses – two of which were against No. 13 Ohio State and No. 15 Indiana.

Saint Louis will host No. 7 ranked Michigan State on September 9 for their third-straight game against a nationally-ranked Big Ten school.

Temple

Temple is 3-1 on the season with its only loss against Michigan on August 30. On September 1 the Owls beat Penn 4-2. In the Temple Invitational on September 2, Temple defeated Lock Haven 3-2 in overtime.

On Friday Temple will travel to Albany.

West Chester

West Chester started the season with two wins, one against Rider on August 29 and the other against Lehigh on September 2. West Chester's non-conference record is 2-1 so far this season.

West Chester will host Monmouth on Saturday for an afternoon game.

Player of the Week

West Chester senior forward Sara Conrad was named this week's Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week. Conrad's skill helped West Chester to its first winning streak since 2005. Conrad had her first-career hat trick in the 3-2 win against Lehigh last Sunday.

Rookie of the Week

LaSalle freshman forward Beth Carey was named A-10 Rookie of the Week for the second-straight time. She scored a goal and an assist in the last three games for LaSalle.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at Mturtine@student.umass.edu

Sprint ahead
Faster than you can change your major.
Wear out your thumbs with unlimited texting. And start night calling at 7 p.m. with a Sprint Power Pack Plan. Go ahead, live in the nanomoment.
FREE
M300 by Samsung
Rated for SprintSpeed
$29.99 two-year price, plus $29.99 mail-in rebate with new line activation and two-year agreement.
Get unlimited texting free for six months with your student ID card, new line activation and two-year agreement. Visit a Sprint retailer near you
After six months, pay the regular monthly charge. Offer good only in store
1-800-SPRINT-1 sprint.com/college

SEP 7 2007

SEP

10

2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM seeks revenge in Vermont

Minutemen head to Burlington for two

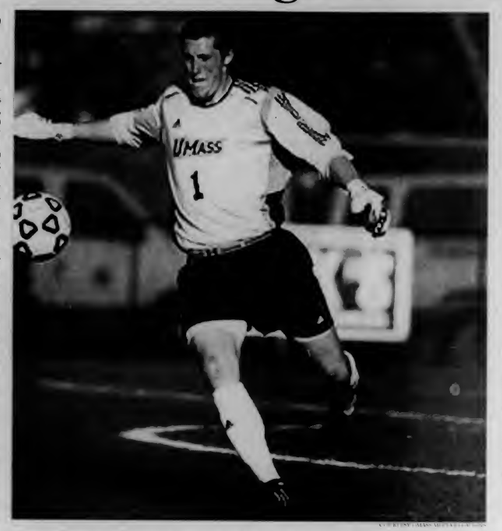
BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When it stared down back-to-back games with Vermont and New Hampshire last season, the Massachusetts men's soccer team was on track for a record-breaking season. Not only did the Minutemen sport an undefeated 6-0-1 record, the team received national recognition as the No. 22 in the NSCAA/adidas poll during mid-September.

Flash forward to 2007, the Minutemen face the same two teams in consecutive games, this time for a weekend series under different circumstances. Instead of facing both squads in the confines of Rudd Field like last year, UM travels to Burlington, Vt., to play both teams as a part of the Smith Barney Nike Soccer Classic.

The Maroon and White will square off against Vermont (1-1-0) today at 4:30 p.m. and face UNH (0-1-1) on Sunday. Michigan State (2-0-0), the fourth team in the invitational tournament, will not play UMass.

Though both schools provide their own regional rivalry for the Minutemen, each squad poses their own unique challenges for UMass with different styles of soccer.



UVM returns nine starters to a team that went 9-7-4 last year and finished second in the America East regular season standings.

The biggest offensive threat the Minutemen will face all weekend is sophomore forward T.J. Gore. Though only in his second year with the Catamounts, Gore made a name for himself last season against the Minutemen.

The forward scored a goal in the 89th minute of regulation to break a scoreless stalemate. Cutting through the UMass defense, Vermont forward Tyler Hasman launched a shot on net. UM goalie Zach Simmons made the initial save, but Gore was in position to put the rebound in the net for the game's only goal.

"He's a guy that you have to be aware of,"

See M. SOCCER on page 6

Red-shirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons has allowed two goals in two games for the Minutemen. He allowed one goal in his last effort against Dartmouth to earn the victory.

Koch keeps team focused on task

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team's 2006 schedule can easily be divided into two very distinct categories – the seven games before New Hampshire and Vermont came to Amherst and the 10 after.

UMass won 6-of-7 to begin the season and welcomed UNH and UVM to Rudd Field for a final tune-up before Atlantic 10 play.

The Minutemen promptly forgot how to score and before UMass coach Sam Koch knew it, the A-10 season ended with his team in the cellar. The pair of losses to their regional rivals in the season's third week foreshadowed the downfall that haunted the players all offseason.

This weekend's games have no true bearing on the standings that will decide UMass's eventual fate, but the trip North means more than most. Last season, both teams afforded the Minutemen enough chances to win – UMass simply didn't convert the chances into goals.

Against the Catamounts, UMass fired eight shots on goal including several great chances before T.J. Gore's 88th-minute tally deflated the Minutemen. Sophomore Bryan Hogan said before the 2007 season began that the loss to Vermont in 2006 hit him and his teammates harder than most. The winning streak they put together was gone – along with the No. 22 ranking in the NSCAA/adidas poll – and it was difficult for them to cope with something they'd yet to experience.

When looking at the numbers from the game with UNH, Hogan's words are more than accurate. The Minutemen didn't record a shot on goal in the first half and only when facing a 1-0 lead late did they force a quality chance. Hogan looked to have tied the game in the 90th minute, but UNH goalkeeper Brian Levey made a wonderful save to maintain his team's 1-0 advantage.

In the six games following UMass's first two losses of the 2006 season, opposing goalkeepers

See OFFENSE on page 6

Rudy goes for 300 at Rudd

Iona comes to Amherst for Minutewomen's home opener

BY STEVE GAMBS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a long weekend on the road, the Massachusetts women's soccer team will play its home opener today at 4:30 p.m. against Iona. UMass coach Jim Rudy needs just one win to reach the 300-career victory mark.

Last season, the Minutewomen defeated the Gaels 3-1 at Iona. Junior forward Vanessa Patry scored two goals in a five-minute span. Iona finished last year at a disappointing 4-11-4, and have been shutout in its first two games in 2007.

Sydney Stoll and the Minutewomen entertain the Iona Gaels on Friday at Rudd Field for the 2007 home opener. The sophomore forward registered a game-winning goal in the season opener against Maine.

UMass lost its home opener to New Hampshire 2-0 last season, but are an impressive 23-5-1 all-time in home openers.

The Minutewomen (1-0-1) have been preparing for Iona all week as both teams have played two games this season. The Gaels dropped their first game to Fordham, 1-0 and the second game to Stony Brook, 2-0. Despite the losses, UMass coach Jim Rudy is not overlooking the Gaels.

"[Pepe] is a front-runner who is small, but [with] very good speed and vision and skill," Rudy said. "[Danis] is a good front-runner, good speed, good quickness, a freshmen, but is going to be a package to handle. [Dixon's] ability to run from behind may create some problems for us, particularly because the front two are such hard workers. She has the potential to be very dangerous."

Junior midfielder Liz Allan is one of the better players for the Gaels. Allan talked to UMass about transferring, although the Minutewomen had a full squad. Allan is from Twickenham, England where she played on a professional club team for the Fulham IX Ladies Reserves.

"That's their best player, she's a defensive midfielder, very experienced, she's good in the air, organizes well, tackles well, connects well," Rudy said. "She's the leader, very tough [and] very vocal."

Rudy hopes the offense will be more productive this week. In two games the Minutewomen have scored two goals and are averaging six shots per game while their opponents are averaging 15.

"We would really like to kick our offense into gear here," Rudy said. "Our offense we thought was going to

"They play with a back four that are very disciplined, they keep it tight, they keep the spaces small and their goalkeeper is pretty solid," Rudy said.

Iona junior Suzanne Baldissard is not a typical goalkeeper, as she stands at 5'10. Baldissard had four shutouts last year in her first full season in net. On the attack side, the Gaels have a solid cast of young talent including sophomore Mariel Pepe and freshmen Carol Danis and Abby Dixon.

See W. SOCCER on page 7

UMass hits road for early tournament

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-1) is off to its best start in seven years and will head north to Vermont for the Sheraton Catamount Field Hockey Classic this weekend.

The Minutewomen face the undefeated Vermont Catamounts (4-0) on Saturday and the New Hampshire Wildcats (2-2) on Sunday.

UMass's offensive attack is led by sophomore Cher King. She leads the team with four goals and nine points. She has two game-winners, both coming in 1-0 contests. King's impressive week earned her the Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week and UMass-Dinn Brothers Player of the Week.

On the other side of the ball, the defense has been almost impenetrable. After giving up the game-winner in overtime against Syracuse, they have held opponents scoreless in the last three games.

Vermont's unbeaten streak in both 2007 and in the Sheraton Catamount Classic will be on the line. The Catamounts won the inaugural tournament last season, besting Miami (OH) and Davidson.

Vermont beat Brown, 3-1, on Saturday giving the Catamounts only their second-ever 4-0 start. Much like UMass, Vermont has a very tough defense to get through – registering three shutouts to start the 2007 season. The Catamounts almost shut out the Bears in their next game, as well, before allowing a goal with just nine minutes remaining.

Another parallel they have to the Minutewomen squad is that Vermont has its own award-winner. Senior Danielle Collins received the America East Field Hockey Player of the Week. She posted five goals and two assists for a total of 12 points.

One factor working against the

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

Sophomore goalkeeper Sarah Williams has registered two of the three Minutewoman wins this season.

Home-field advantage a welcomed site

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rudd Field gets its first NCAA action in about 10 months today when the Massachusetts women's soccer team takes on Iona in UMass's home opener.

The Minutewomen have struggled in home openers in recent years.

The Minutewomen have lost six of their last eight home openers, by a combined score of 19-6.

The two wins were against Alabama-Birmingham in 1999 and St. Bonaventure in 2003.

"Home openers can often be like away games in many ways," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "You haven't gone through the routine yet of friends and parents and family, the pre-game music and the agenda of getting through the first game at home.

"It's going to sort of feel like home, but it's not quite home yet," he continued.

Rudy added that determination and focus are vital for his team to start turning around this negative trend.

"It's going to be the first time we're going to be playing a game coming from classes, as well. So, that's a big change. But [the players] come to play," he said.

MR. 300

The home opener also is also Rudy's first bid to become the ninth coach in NCAA history to amass 300 career wins.

But the plateau is the last thing on his mind.

The most important thing, he says, is that his squad plays well and helps its own cause in the Atlantic 10 Conference with another victory.

"I haven't really thought about it except when people bring it up. I wasn't even really aware of it," he said. "I've got wins at UMass, I've got wins at Central Florida, I've got men's wins, I've got women's wins and I don't really add all that stuff up."

UMass Soccer

He said he is concentrating on getting his team rolling and that if you start to fixate on things like statistics and milestones you lose your focus on the big picture – the team.

Rudy broke the UMass record for a women's soccer coach with the most wins on Sept. 28, 1996, when the Minutewomen defeated Saint Joseph's 5-0. The victory, his 121st, surpassed Ken Banda at the top of the all-time list.

OH CAPTAINS, MY CAPTAINS

Senior Jenny Roehrig, junior Vanessa Patry and red-shirt senior Kristin Walker were

See NOTEBOOK on page 6

WOMEN'S SOCCER COACH JIM RUDY WINS NUMBER 300 | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAINY : HI: 76 LO: 57 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2007

Foundation awards grant

Engineering transfer students receive $600,000 in aid

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A National Science Foundation (NSF) five-year grant for nearly $600,000 will allow the University of Massachusetts to financially support transferring engineering students from local community colleges.

According to the University, the grant will be used to create a comprehensive, faculty-led program for recruitment, financial aid and academic advising within the College of Engineering. A portion of the grant will also support 22 transfer students annually with a $6,000 scholarship, starting in the second year of the grant.

The project is designed to create opportunities for talented but financially disadvantaged engineering students, according to the University.

"I am really delighted that the faculty here has won this major support from the NSF," said Michael F. Malone, the Ronnie and Eugene Isenberg Distinguished Professor and Dean of the College of Engineering.

"This will go a long way toward improving access, diversity and retention, especially for students from our excellent community college partners in Greenfield, Holyoke and Springfield."

Only community college students studying chemical, civil computer systems, electrical, industrial or mechanical engineering will be eligible for participation in the program.

Although recruitment will be primarily aimed at students attending local community colleges, transfer students will also be drawn from four-year colleges without an engineering program, according to the College of Engineering Web site.

Factors such as race and ethnicity, family background, and academic achievement, will come into consideration by the college as well.

Those qualified for the funding can expect to be supported by the grant until the completion of their degree. The college is projecting about 33 of the engineering students aided by the program to graduate by the expiration of the NSF grant.

Selected students have the option to participate in a summer Research Experience for Undergraduates Program, a residence hall floor, and a weekly seminar to facilitate the transition of transfer students into UMass.

A college-based Career Services office and two diversity support programs, the Multicultural Engineering and Women in Engineering programs, will also be made available to the engineering students, according to the University.

The Scholarships in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (S-STEM) program was established to increase the national number of scientists and engineers in compliance with the American Competitiveness and Workforce Improvement Act of 1998, according to the NSF Web site.

Student Center addition to Marcus Hall, which partly houses the University of Massachusetts Engineering Department.

UMPD crack down

Arrests, break-ins prevalent over weekend

Arrests
Liquor law – 14
Disturbace (Disorderly Conduct) – 1
OUI – 2

Breaking & Entering / Larceny / Burglary
Motor Vehicle – 1
Larceny – 7
Breaking & Entering – 4

Drug Law – 5 (1 arrest)
Sex Offence – 1

Statistics based on University of Massachusetts Amherst police log.

Mellon award for mentoring

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts has been awarded a three-year $400,000 grant toward a mentoring program for new and underrepresented faculty on campus. The grant was given by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation of New York last Friday and is aimed to expand and develop support networks for professionals.

UMass has received a Mellon grant in the past, a $47,000 grant geared toward studying the challenges of being a new and underrepresented faculty member, whether on campus, at the Five Colleges or nationally. Meanwhile, other efforts were focused on finding the best practices for planning a mentoring program.

Similarly, smaller pilot grants were given to departments and programs to build on networks, including anthropology, history, psychology, women studies and "Blacklist," a support group for female faculty members of color.

As a result of the grant, new and underrepresented faculty members can use the knowledge and support of an extensive variety of mentors, including peers, senior faculty, librarians and administrators. Under this program, mentoring will be promoted at three levels: individual; department, school, college and interdisciplinary; and campus-wide.

"This is an extraordinary opportunity for UMass Amherst to support its young faculty with one of the most active and innovative mentoring programs in the country," said Charlene Seymour, provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs at UMass. "How grateful we are to the Mellon Foundation for working with us over the past two years to craft an initiative that truly respects and supports the power of faculty-driven, context-sensitive mentoring," she added.

The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation currently awards grants in six areas: higher education and scholarship, scholarly communications, research in information technology, museums and art conservation, performing arts, and conservation and the environment. It aims to "strengthen and sustain institutions and their core capacities, rather than be a source for narrowly defined projects."

"So many faculty members have shared their ideas with us about what they want and need in terms of mentoring," said Director of New Faculty Initiatives Jung Yun. "We're thrilled the Mellon grant will be able to create such opportunities for them and support their innovation."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu

UMass running back Tony Nelson picked up 20 yards rushing in the 35-17 victory over the Colgate Raiders on Saturday in Hamilton, N.Y. The No. 2 Minutemen are now 2-0.

UM escapes with road win

The Massachusetts football took advantage of its first road game of the season, defeating Colgate (1-1) in Hamilton, N.Y.

The Minutemen struggled to find offensive consistency in the first half and went into halftime with a 14-10 lead.

Senior wide-receiver J.J. Moore sparked the UM attack in the second half with two touchdowns. He returned a punt 58 yards in the third quarter, then caught an 11-yard touchdown pass from Liam Coen late in the game to put the Minutemen up 35-17.

The tailback duo of Matt Lawrence and Tony Nelson had another strong day, out of the backfield, combining for 196 yards on 26 carries.

On defense, UMass held strong in the red zone and caused several game-changing Colgate turnovers.

None was more important than Courtney Robinson's interception in the second quarter. The turnover lead to a Coen passing touchdown to fullback Breyone Evans. The score allowed the Minutemen to permanently retake the lead.

After allowing 230 yards of total offense in the first half, UM held the raiders to 82 in the second

UMass	35
Colgate	17

UMass EWB works with Brazil

Group aids in Amazon water treatment project

BY CARA GRANNEMANN AND DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Members of the University of Massachusetts Engineers Without Borders (EWB) have returned from an assessment trip aiding in the set up of a safe and reliable clean water source for rubber trappers of the Brazilian Amazon.

According to the University, the 2-million-acre parcel of land known as the Chico Mendes Extractivist Reserve accumulates plenty of water, but is often contaminated with parasites and biological pollutants.

Students with the UMass chapter of EWB plan to present ideas and possible engineering solutions to Brazilian non-governmental organizations, universities contacts, and local communities and organizations.

"Our purpose is to make their lives easier so they can stay there is a viable way," said EWB Amazon team member Mare Santos in a press release.

"Our goal is to give them safe water sources, health sanitation facilities, and possibly electricity so they can survive and thrive in their forest environment," he added.

Using feedback from the local community and Brazilian organizations the students will design a culturally inexpensive, sustainable and culturally acceptable engineering solution to the unhealthy water supply in the reserve.

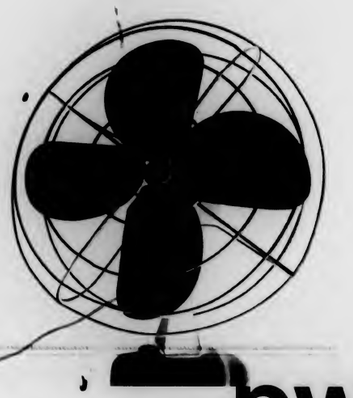
The UMass chapter of EWB will begin looking at the problems with the water supply over the next several months and plan have a prototype in place in the rubber tapping reserve next summer, according to the University.

"We will discuss these water problems, and the culture surrounding them, with the whole UMass chapter of EWB in the coming months," said Marina Pereira, a graduate student from Quincy in environmental engineering born in Brazil. "Then we'll come up with what we think are sustainable solutions that can be carried out by the communities themselves."

According to Santos the team is working hard to educate themselves on the local communities and tailor their designs on the needs and considerations of the people who live there.

"An important component of the process is to work with the community to develop a design that the community itself has chosen and wants to implement," he said.

"When we give the workshop we'll not only be educating them about basic water and sanitation engineering principles to improve their water quality, but we'll also be learning from the residents how best to incorporate local materials, address local environmental conditions, and respond to local cultural concerns."



The rubber-tapping community began when new automobile companies needed rubber for tires at the beginning of the 20th century, according to the University.

The government tapper reserve system followed the assassination of Mendes in 1988 after he had organized Brazilian tappers resisting the destruction of the forest.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Hope conquers sweat.

pwc.tv/ch1

Project New Orleans now playing on Channel 1.

*connectedthinking

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate, non-independent legal entity. "connectedthinking" is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

SEP 10 2007

Matthews, Mayer rock Virginia Tech at benefit

Concert aims for solace

By T. Rees Shapiro
The Collegiate Times

BLACKSBURG, Va. -- There were men, women and children. There were laughs, tears and cheers. There were 52,000 living, breathing faces of all races, cultures and religions, situated in the familiar gathering ground of Lane Stadium. They came together in the warm early September evening air to celebrate the opening of a new chapter in Hokie life on the Virginia Tech campus for the 2007 fall semester.

They crammed into the bleachers and benches, stood shoulder against shoulder, arms raised and bodies bouncing to the beat of each performer.

Perhaps for the first time, certain members of the crowd had their minds elsewhere, briefly straying from the not-so-distant-memories of gunshots and the blare of ambulances. Though their hearts may stay steady with the respect and love for the 32 victims of the shootings on April 16th, the fans in the stadium, students of Virginia Tech, and mourners alike, would all just as gladly not be enjoying the thrilling sounds of Phil Vassar, Nas, John Mayer and Dave Matthews Band.

Most might wish the concert had never happened.

A select few would still be here. Their names and memories not ingrained into the memory of the Hokie Nation or engraved into 32 slabs of Hokie stone buried into the earth beneath the careful watch of Burruss Hall's shadow.

However, weeks after the tragedy occurred, university officials began their search for the perfect motivator for the new school year, a uniting event that could facilitate the ease into academics, and more importantly the healing of scarred hearts for the victims.

"We are all looking for different ways to heal," said Dr. Zenobia Hikes, vice president for Student Affairs. "Music is always therapeutic, being in Lane, all of us having one thing in common, being part of the Hokie Nation, this will begin to move us beyond the grief.

"Right after the tragedy a lot of artists contacted us. Everybody wanted to give something special to the Hokie Nation. Dave Matthews' label [was] one of those that had contacted us, his label put this together."

Matthews, Mayer, Nas and Vassar all performed the concert pro-bono to honor the victims of the tragedy and to help warm the souls of the student body.

Throughout the night, the combined artists provided the audience with plenty of memories. Phil Vassar welcomed football head coach Frank Beamer on stage during his set, and Vassar said to Beamer, "I feel so sorry for LSU."

Rap performer Nas stormed the stage with a maroon "Hokies United" shirt, while DJ Scratch asked, "Everybody back to front to put one finger in the air right now for unity."

"He did a really good job," said Anthony Reale, a sophomore. "He didn't disappoint. Everybody was thinking he was going to be bad for the concert, but I thought he was good."

John Mayer also wore a "Hokies United" shirt to show his support, but kept his words to the crowd at a minimum and let his legendary guitar work do the talking. But he did mention, "The whole world should be like this all the time. I'll remember this."

"Music is always therapeutic, being in Lane, all of us having one thing in common, being part of the Hokie Nation, this will begin to move us beyond the grief."

His song "I Don't Need No Doctor" provided energetic remedying to really get the crowd grooving, but the crowd favorite was "Waiting on the World to Change."

"It relates to what happened here on 4/16," said Lauren Hartman, a freshman. "How the world has changed, and how we've come together after what has happened."

But under blue and green lights, the organ driving tune, Mayer's "Gravity," which he declared his prayer to the crowd, produced sways and hands held high. He played face-melting solos, and tear-inducing riffs and combined with LeRoi Moore from Dave Matthews Band for a particularly soulful duet to end the ballad and his show.

The lights dimmed on the crowd, and like electricity before a summer rainstorm, the crowd moved to its feet, up to its tip toes, eager for the headliner of the event, Dave Matthews Band.

A constellation of cell phones, flashing cameras and lighters illuminated the dark Lane Stadium seconds before the opening chords of "Two Step" played and commenced a three-hour tour de force.

"There is no place I'd rather be in the world," Matthews said, "than right here with y'all."

The Virginia-based band played the gamut of its career recordings including "Dream Girl," "Crash," a collaboration with John Mayer on "#41," and a meshed "So Much to Say," with "Too Much."

Though Matthews and the others did not receive any monetary compensation for the concert, they seemed to have received an even greater reward.

"Thanks for having us," Matthews said, "It's been a great night for us, we will remember it for all time."

"We always feel united here in Lane," said Patrick Curboy, a marketing management major. "Some nights more than others though. After a tough football game, a great concert really felt good. The atmosphere was great."

Matthews, Boyd Tinsley, violinist, and Carter Beauford, drums, were all smiles on stage and seemed to be genuinely enjoying themselves up there, happy to be among the Hokies, and entertaining the crowd with their upbeat and jamming tunes.

Perhaps the most poignant and touching moment of the night was when Dave and crew covered Bob Marley's, "Everything is Going to be Alright," which had the crowd's hands clapping and voices in unison during the chorus. The cover warped into "Stay," which ended the regular portion of the concert, and the double screens opposite the stage showed a ribbon with a VT in honor of the victims.

"Have a great year," Matthews said to the crowd, "I hope it's the best year you guys have."

The band returned after a short break to perform an encore of "Ants Marching," to which Tinsley burnt up the strings, Beauford beat up the drums, and Dave strained his voice a little harder to liven up the crowd for their last song of the night. The band waved goodbye and stood in front of the crowd arm-in-arm, united to a warm and thankful round of applause from the fans.

"We are so lucky," said Georgene Clements, a freshman. "I don't even know what to say; it was an amazing way to start my college career." Clements said the events of 4/16, and the rally of the students in the weeks after, "Only made me want to come here even more."

The crowd, bedecked in orange and maroon, boasted smiles a mile-wide and hummed happy tunes recently played during the procession out.

The memory of April 16 may linger for Tech students, but as the students and fans dispersed, sorrow and grief were at least temporarily forgotten.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 5

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Kaine Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Bice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Emily Nichols
Asst. Arts & Living Olga Drabchenko
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Cara Grannemann
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Autumn semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

UMass Amherst Police log

Thursday
September 6

11:26: UMPD responded to a report of larceny in Goodell Library.

11:31: UMPD responded to a report of larceny in the Isenberg School of Management.

09:35: UMPD investigated the theft of a 2003 Mitsubishi Galante SE from Lot 33 on Orchard Hill Dr. The car is registered to Kerry Berman of Danvers, MA.

17:30: Ross E. Aronson and Sean T. McGuire, 19, were arrested on liquor law violations outside of Washington Dormitory.

22:28: Nicholas D. Narahara, 19, of Marlborough, MA was arrested on drug charges for possession of a Class D substance.

First Weekend Crime Wrap

Friday
September 7

13:46 - 14:13: UMPD responded to larceny reports in Machmer Hall, the Student Union, Whitemore Administration Building Cafe and Dickenson Hall.

17:06: UMPD investigated reported damage to four automobiles on University Drive.

Saturday
September 8

01:33: Peter Moschetto, 18, of Lawrence, MA was arrested for disorderly conduct outside Patterson Dormitory.

20:04: UMPD respond to a B&E/burglary report at Hamlin Dormitory.

22:29: Paul Edward Laffin, 21, of Harwich, MA and Michael G. Blythe, 19, of Monroe, CT were arrested for OUI, liquor.

Sunday
September 9

08:31: UMPD responded to a B&E/burglary report in Lot 11 on Stadium Drive.

14:38: UMPD respond to a larceny report at Worcester D.C.

Compiled by Will McGuinness

65-year-old gets carded in supermarket, is denied wine

FARMINGTON, Maine – A 65-year-old woman who went into a Farmington supermarket to buy wine was turned away because she didn't have an Identification card with her. But Barbara Skapa of Mount Vernon says that won't happen again.

"I'll be bringing my driver's license with me from now on," Skapa said.

She normally carries her license, but with her leg in a cast, Skapa was being driven by a friend when she went into the Hannaford Bros. market last week in and picked up several items, including a few bottles of wine.

The cashier told her it was policy to check for identification, said Skapa, who believes "no one would mistake me for 30 or even 40."

Skapa asked if her friend could buy the wine for her, but that was disallowed too because it's considered "third-party" purchasing. Skapa asked to see the manager.

A spokeswoman for the supermarket chain, Rebecca Bowes, said Hannaford's new policy is to check IDs of anyone who looks under 45 and wants to buy alcohol. The previous policy was to check for proof of age of those who look younger than 30.

The policy is not unlike those of many other Maine businesses and chains who want to stop minors from illegally buying alcoholic beverages and cigarettes.

In 2005, the state l egislature passed a law that requires identification from those who look under 27 years old before they can buy either.

The Big Apple chain's 90 stores in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont require clerks to require identification from anyone, regardless of age, who buys alcohol or tobacco.

The strict policy went into effect after two Portland stores sold alcohol to minors in one night.

Earlier this year, some Portland establishments tightened their ID policies following an undercover sting of dozens of bars and convenience stores that led to 20 summonses for selling alcohol to underage customers.

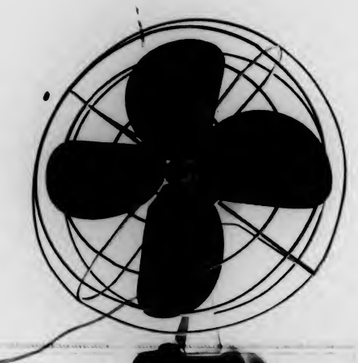
One restaurant, the Flatbread Co., told employees to card anyone ordering drinks who looks under 40.

A pilot program called Card MI was launched recently by the state Office of Substance Abuse and Maine's Higher Education Alcohol Prevention Partnership. It gives participating businesses educational guidebooks and material to help employees spot fake IDs.

-Associated Press

Get the experience you need by working for one of the largest daily college papers in the country.
news@dailycollegian.com

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 RT. 9, AMHERST



ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Free Networking Breakfast
for
Students, Faculty, Staff, Alumni
Sponsored by the
UMass Amherst Alumni Association
and Brueggers Bagels of Amherst
(Limited to first 250 people)
Wednesday, September 12
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Memorial Hall
BRUEGGER'S BAGEL BAKERY

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to An. Science	Engin 110	Intro To Chem Engrn	MIE 210	Statics
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro To Civ. & Env.	MGT 260	Intro To Law
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to IE I	MGT 301	Principles of Mgt.
Anthro 102-A	Arch. & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Mech. & Indus	MicBio 160	Bio of Cancer &
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	Engl WP 111/112		Music 100	Appreciation Intro
Anthro 104-A	Culture,Soc. & People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env. Biology	Music 101	Hist. of Music
Art Hist 100	Survey Ancient & Med	EnvSci 112	Envsci 110 the Environ	Music 103	History of Jazz
Art Hist 115	Intro To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro To Environ Policy	Nursing 100	Pers. Of Nursing
Astron 100 1-4	Intro To Astronomy	EnvDes 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 210	Hum Growth & Dev
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	FoMgt 250	Quant. Tools Mgt	Nursing 301	Pathophysiology
Bio/BioChem 285	Cell & Molec. Biology	FoMgt 300	Fund. Of Finance	Nursing 315	Physical Assessment
BioChem 420	Elem Biochemistry	FoMgt 301	Corp Finance	Nursing 327	Mental Health Nurs
BioChem 471	Elem. Physical Chem	FoMgt 304	Info. Tech. Finance	Nutr 130	Under Nutrition
BioChem 523	General Biochemistry	FoMgt 320	Investments	Phil 110	Intro. To Philosophy
Bio 100 A1-A4 B D	Intro to Biology I	Forest 528	Forest & Wetlands Hyd	Phil 104	Medical Ethics
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem French I	Physics 100	Concepts Physics
Bio 105	Biology of Soc Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Environ. Change	Physics 125	Seeing the Light
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 131	Intro to Physics I
Bio 108	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Landscape	Physics 132	Intro to Physics II
Bio 280	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro To Oceanogrs	Physics 139	Intro to Physics
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic earth	Physics 152	General Physics II
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem. German	Physics 181	Physics I - Mech
Chem 111/112	Gen Chem-Sci Majors	Hist 111	World Hist. 1500-Pres	Physics 281	Comput. Physic
Chem 261/262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 181 A	Western Thought	Physics 421	Mechanics I
Chem 269	Org Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist of Christ I	PolSci 101 H	America Politics
Chem 471	Elem. Phys Chem	Hist 150	Dev Of Amer Civ. 1866-	PolSci 121 H	World Politics
CmpSci 105	Intro To Comp. Sci	Hist 151 A	Dev of Amer Civ II	PolSci 162	Constitutional Law
CmpSci 120	Problem Solving w/Info	IEMgt 190	Intro to Hosp. & Tour	PolSci 255	Am. Campaign Policy
CmpSci 187-A	Program. W/ Data Struc	IEMgt 150	Food Pro. Mgt	Psych 100 1-9	Intro. To Psychology
CmpSci 287	Prog. Lang. Paradigms	IEMgt 250	Food Service Mgt	Psych 240 A-C	Stats. For Psych
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	IEMgt 260	Hosp. Personnel Mgt	Psych 241	Methods of Inquiry
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 320	Learn & Think
Comm 240	Modes of Hum Comm	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 330	Pers. Psychology
ComDis 210	Intro To Comm Disor	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutrit	Psych 335	Behav. Endocrin
ComDis 211	Artic & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Prevent. & Care of At	Psych 350	Child Development
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang. Disor	Kin 297 A, C	Anatomy & Phys. II	Psych 390	Abnorm. Psychology
Econ 103 A-J	Intro To Microeconomics	Kin 380	Diets, Supple. & Ath.	Soc 100 A, D	Race, Gender & Class
Econ 104	Intro To Macroeconom	Kin 440	wellness in Dy. Wor	Span 110-126	Elem. Spanish I
Econ 203 A-B	Intro Microecon Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills	Span 126	Elem. Spanish II
Econ 204 B	Intro Macroecon The	Math 101-104	Prel. alc/Algebra	Span 311	Adv. Grammar
Econ 305	Marxian Economics	Math 113	Math For Elem Teach
ECE 5*2	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Meth & Prob

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Hope conquers sweat.

pwc.tv/ch1

Project New Orleans now playing on Channel 1.

*connectedthinking

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking" is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

SEP 10 2007

Matthews, Mayer rock Virginia Tech at benefit

Concert aims for solace

By T. Rees Shapiro
The Collegiate Times

BLACKSBURG, Va. -- There were men, women and children. There were laughs, tears and cheers. There were 52,000 living, breathing faces of all races, cultures and religions, situated in the familiar gathering ground of Lane Stadium. They came together in the warm early September evening air to celebrate the opening of a new chapter in Hokie life on the Virginia Tech campus for the 2007 fall semester.

They crammed into the bleachers and benches, stood shoulder against shoulder, arms raised and bodies bouncing to the beat of each performer.

Perhaps for the first time, certain members of the crowd had their minds elsewhere, briefly straying from the not-so-distant-memories of gunshots and the blare of ambulances. Though their hearts may stay steady with the respect and love for the 32 victims of the shootings on April 16th, the fans in the stadium, students of Virginia Tech, and mourners alike, would all just as gladly not be enjoying the thrilling sounds of Phil Vassar, Nas, John Mayer and Dave Matthews Band.

Most might wish the concert had never happened.

A select few would still be here. Their names and memories not ingrained into the memory of the Hokie Nation or engraved into 32 slabs of Hokie stone buried into the earth beneath the careful watch of Burruss Hall's shadow.

However, weeks after the tragedy occurred, university officials began their search for the perfect motivator for the new school year, a uniting event that could facilitate the ease into academics, and more importantly the healing of scarred hearts for the victims.

"We are all looking for different ways to heal," said Dr. Zenobia Hikes, vice president for Student Affairs. "Music is always therapeutic, being in Lane, all of us having one thing in common, being part of the Hokie Nation, this will begin to move us beyond the grief.

"Right after the tragedy a lot of artists contacted us. Everybody wanted to give something special to the Hokie Nation. Dave Matthews' label [was] one of those that had contacted us, his label put this together."

Matthews, Mayer, Nas and Vassar all performed the concert pro-bono to honor the victims of the tragedy and to help warm the souls of the student body.

Throughout the night, the combined artists provided the audience with plenty of memories. Phil Vassar welcomed football head coach Frank Beamer on stage during his set, and Vassar said to Beamer, "I feel so sorry for LSU."

Rap performer Nas stormed the stage with a maroon "Hokies United" shirt, while DJ Scratch asked, "Everybody back to front to put one finger in the air right now for unity."

"He did a really good job," said Anthony Reale, a sophomore. "He didn't disappoint. Everybody was thinking he was going to be bad for the concert, but I thought he was good."

John Mayer also wore a "Hokies United" shirt to show his support, but kept his words to the crowd at a minimum and let his legendary guitar work do the talking. But he did mention, "The whole world should be like this all the time. I'll remember this."

"Music is always therapeutic, being in Lane, all of us having one thing in common, being part of the Hokie Nation, this will begin to move us beyond the grief."

His song "I Don't Need No Doctor" provided energetic remedying to really get the crowd grooving, but the crowd favorite was "Waiting on the World to Change."

"It relates to what happened here on 4-16," said Lauren Hartman, a freshman. "How the world has changed, and how we've come together after what has happened."

But under blue and green lights, the organ driving tune, Mayer's "Gravity," which he declared his prayer to the crowd, produced sways and hands held high. He played face-melting solos, and tear-inducing riffs and combined with LeRoi Moore from Dave Matthews Band for a particularly soulful duet to end the ballad and his show.

The lights dimmed on the crowd, and like electricity before a summer rainstorm, the crowd moved to its feet, up to its tip toes, eager for the headliner of the event, Dave Matthews Band.

A constellation of cell phones, flashing cameras and lighters illuminated the dark Lane Stadium seconds before the opening chords of "Two Step" played and commenced a three-hour tour de force.

"There is no place I'd rather be in the world," Matthews said, "than right here with y'all."

The Virginia-based band played the gamut of its career recordings including "Dream Girl," "Crash," a collaboration with John Mayer on "#41," and a meshed "So Much to Say," with "Too Much."

Though Matthews and the others did not receive any monetary compensation for the concert, they seemed to have received an even greater reward.

"Thanks for having us," Matthews said, "It's been a great night for us, we will remember it for all time."

"We always feel united here in Lane," said Patrick Curboy, a marketing management major. "Some nights more than others though. After a tough football game, a great concert really felt good. The atmosphere was great."

Matthews, Boyd Tinsley, violinist, and Carter Beauford, drums, were all smiles on stage and seemed to be genuinely enjoying themselves up there, happy to be among the Hokies, and enertaining the crowd with their upbeat and jamming tunes.

Perhaps the most poignant and touching moment of the night was when Dave and crew covered Bob Marley's, "Everything is Going to be Alright," which had the crowd's hands clapping and voices in unison during the chorus. The cover warped into "Stay," which ended the regular portion of the concert, and the double screens opposite the stage showed a ribbon with a VT in honor of the victims.

"Have a great year," Matthews said to the crowd, "I hope it's the best year you guys have."

The band returned after a short break to perform an encore of "Ants Marching," to which Tinsley burnt up the strings, Beauford beat up the drums, and Dave strained his voice a little harder to liven up the crowd for their last song of the night. The band waved goodbye and stood in front of the crowd arm-in-arm, united to a warm and thankful round of applause from the fans.

"We are so lucky," said Georgene Clements, a freshman. "I don't even know what to say, it was an amazing way to start my college career." Clements said the events of 4/16, and the rally of the students in the weeks after, "Only made me want to come here even more."

The crowd, bedecked in orange and maroon, boasted smiles a mile-wide and hummed happy tunes recently played during the procession out.

The memory of April 16 may linger for Tech students, but as the students and fans dispersed, sorrow and grief were at least temporarily forgotten.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 5

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Staigin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Emily Nichols
Asst. Arts & Living Olga Deshchenko
Asst. Arts & Living Brian McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Cara Grannemann
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. Became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

UMass Amherst Police log

Thursday
September 6

11:26: UMPD responded to a report of larceny in Goodell Library.

11:31: UMPD responded to a report of larceny in the Isenberg School of Management.

09:35: UMPD investigated the theft of a 2003 Mitsubishi Galante SE from Lot 33 on Orchard Hill Dr. The car is registered to Kerry Berman of Danvers, MA.

17:30: Ross E. Aronson and Sean T. McGuire, 19, were arrested on liquor law violations outside of Washington Dormitory.

22:28: Nicholas D. Narahara, 19, of Marlborough, MA was arrested on drug charges for possession of a Class D substance.

First Weekend Crime Wrap

Friday
September 7

13:46 - 14:13: UMPD responded to larceny reports in Machmer Hall, the Student Union, Whitemore Administration Building Cafe and Dickenson Hall.

17:06: UMPD investigated reported damage to four automobiles on University Drive.

Saturday
September 8

01:33: Peter Moschetto, 18, of Lawrence, MA was arrested for disorderly conduct outside Patterson Dormitory.

20:04: UMPD respond to a B&E/burglary report at Hamlin Dormitory.

22:29: Paul Edward Laffin, 21, of Harwich, MA and Michael G. Blythe, 19, of Monroe, CT were arrested for OUI, liquor.

Sunday
September 9

08:31: UMPD responded to a B&E/burglary report in Lot 11 on Stadium Drive.

14:38: UMPD respond to a larceny report at Worcester D.C.

Compiled by Will McGuinness

65-year-old gets carded in supermarket, is denied wine

FARMINGTON, Maine — A 65-year-old woman who went into a Farmington supermarket to buy wine was turned away because she didn't have an Identification card with her. But Barbara Skapa of Mount Vernon says that won't happen again.

"I'll be bringing my driver's license with me from now on," Skapa said.

She normally carries her license, but with her leg in a cast, Skapa was being driven by a friend when she went into the Hannaford Bros. market last week in and picked up several items, including a few bottles of wine.

The cashier told her it was policy to check for identification, said Skapa, who believes "no one would mistake me for 30 or even 40."

Skapa asked if her friend could buy the wine for her, but that was disallowed too because it's considered "third-party" purchasing. Skapa asked to see the manager.

A spokeswoman for the supermarket chain, Rebecca Howes, said Hannaford's new policy is to check IDs of anyone who looks under 45 and wants to buy alcohol. The previous policy was to check for proof of age of those who look younger than 30.

The policy is not unlike those of many other Maine businesses and chains who want to stop minors from illegally buying alcoholic beverages and cigarettes.

In 2005, the state Legislature passed a law that requires identification from those who look under 27 years old before they can buy either.

The Big Apple chain's 90 stores in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont require clerks to require identification from anyone, regardless of age, who buys alcohol or tobacco.

The strict policy went into effect after two Portland stores sold alcohol to minors in one night.

Earlier this year, some Portland establishments tightened their ID policies following an undercover sting of dozens of bars and convenience stores that led to 20 summonses for selling alcohol to underage customers.

One restaurant, the Flatbread Co., told employees to card anyone ordering drinks who looks under 40.

A pilot program called Card ME was launched recently by the state Office of Substance Abuse and Maine's Higher Education Alcohol Prevention Partnership. It gives participating businesses educational guidebooks and material to help employees spot fake IDs.

-Associated Press

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
90 AMHERST

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Free Networking Breakfast
for
Students, Faculty, Staff, Alumni
Sponsored by the
UMass Amherst Alumni Association
and Brueggers Bagels of Amherst
(Limited to first 250 people)
Wednesday, September 12
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Memorial Hall
BRUEGGER'S BAGEL BAKERY

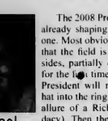
Get the experience you need by working for one of the largest daily college papers in the country.
news@dailycollegian.com

SAVE $$$ ON YOUR COURSE BOOKS.
BUY THEM HERE.
LOWER PRICES ON THESE BOOKS AND LOTS MORE!!!

Course	Title	Course	Title	Course	Title
AnSci 101	Intro to An. Science	Engin 110	Intro To Chem Engrn	MIE 210	Statics
AnSci 360	Farm Animal Care	Engin 111	Intro To Civ & Env	MGT 260	Intro to Law
Anthro 100	Human Nature	Engin 112	Intro to ECE	MGT 301	Principles of Mgt
Anthro 102-A	Arch & Prehistory	Engin 113	Intro to Mech & Indus	MicBio 160	Bio Of Cancer &
Anthro 103-A	Human Origins	Engl WP 111/112		Music 100	Appreciation Intro
Anthro 104-A	Culture, Soc. & People	EnvSci 101	Intro to Env Biology	Music 101	Hist of Music
Art Hist 100	Survey Ancient & Med	EnvSci 112	Fund. Of the Environ	Music 103	History of Jazz
Art Hist 115	Intro To Visual Arts	EnvSci 213	Intro To Environ Policy	Nursing 100	Prev. Of Nursing
Astron 100 1-4	Intro. To Astronomy	Env Des 335	Plants & Design	Nursing 210	Hum Growth & Dev
Astron 101	Exploring the Universe	FoMgt 250	Quant. Tools Mgt	Nursing 301	Pathophysiology
BioBiol hem 285	Cell & Molec Biology	FoMgt 300	Fund Of Finance	Nursing 315	Physical Assessment
Biol hem 420	Chem Biochemistry	FoMgt 301	Corp Finance	Nursing 327	Mental Health Nurs
Biol hem 471	Chem. Physical Chem	FoMgt 304	Info Tech Finance	Nutr 130	Under Nutrition
Biol hem 523	General Biol Chemistry	FoMgt 320	Investments	Phil 110	Intro To Philosophy
Bio 100 A1-A4 B D	Intro to Biology I	Forest 528	Forest & Wetlands Hyd	Phil 164	Medical Ethics
Bio 103	Plant Biology	French 110/120	Elem. French I	Physics 100	Concept. Physics
Bio 105	Biology of Soc. Issues	GeoSci 100	Global Environ. Change	Physics 125	Seeing the Light
Bio 106	Human Biology	GeoSci 101	Earth	Physics 131	Intro to Physics I
Bio 108	Biodiversity	GeoSci 102	Human Landscape	Physics 132	Intro to Physics II
Bio 280	Evolution	GeoSci 103	Intro. To Oceanogra	Physics 150	Intro to Physics
Bio 287	Intro to Ecology	GeoSci 105	Dynamic earth	Physics 152	General Physics II
Chem 110	General Chemistry	Ger 110/120	Elem. German	Physics 181	Physics I: Mech
Chem 111/112	Gen/Chem/Sci. Majors	Hist 111	World Hist 1500-Pres	Physics 281	Comput. Physic
Chem 261/262	Organic Chemistry	Hist 101 A	Western Thought	Physics 421	Mechanics I
Chem 269	Org. Chem Lab	Hist 114	Hist of China I	PolSci 101-B	American Politics
Chem 471	Elem Phys. Chem	Hist 150	Dev. Of Amer Civ. 1866	PolSci 121 B	World Politics
CmpSci 105	Intro To Comp. Sci	Hist 151 A	Dev of Ameri Civ II	PolSci 162	Constitutional Law
CmpSci 120	Problem Solving w Info	HT Mgt 100	Intro to Hosp & Tour	PolSci 255	Am. Foreign Policy
CmpSci 187- A	Program. W. Data Struc	HT Mgt 150	Food Pro Mgt	Psych 100 1-9	Intro To Psychology
CmpSci 287	Prog. Lang. Paradigms	HT Mgt 250	Food Service Mgt	Psych 240 A-C	Stats for Psych
Comm 118	Intro to Interpers. Comm	HT Mgt 260	Hosp. Personnel Mgt.	Psych 241	Methods of Inquiry
Comm 121	Intro to Media & Culture	Hum Dev 270	Child Development	Psych 320	Learn & Think
Comm 240	Modes of Film Comm	Kin 100	Intro to Kinesiology	Psych 330	Phys. Psychology
ComDis 210	Intro. To Comm. Disor	Kin 110	Human Perf. & Nutrit	Psych 335	Behav. Endocrin
ComDis 211	Anat & Phys. Speech	Kin 215	Prevent. & Care of Al	Psych 350	Child Development
ComDis 315	Speech & Lang. Disor	Kin 297 A-C	Anatomy & Phys II	Psych 380	Abnorm. Psychology
Econ 103 A-B	Intro To Microeconomic	Kin 380	Diets, Supple & Ath	Soc 100 A, D	Race Gender Class
Econ 104	Intro To Macroecon	Kin 440	wellness in The Wor	Span 110 126	Elem. Spanish I
Econ 203 A-B	Intro. Microecon Theor	Math 100	Basic Math Skills	Span 126	Elem. Spanish II
Econ 204 B	Intro. Macrecon The	Math 101-104	Prel. alc/ Algebra	Span 311	Adv. Grammar
Econ 305	Mathem Economics	Math 113	Math For Elem Teach
ECE 572	Optoelectronics	Math 121	Linear Meth & Prob

Jeffery Amherst College Store
26 South Prospect St. Amherst
(behind the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop) 253-3870, 253-7816
Rush Hours: 8:30-8 M-Sat, 12-5 Sun Sept. 1 - Sept. 15

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Once again, that good old debate

Michael Dennis

The 2008 Presidential election is already shaping up to be a historic one. Most obviously, there's the fact that the field is wide-open on both sides, partially due to the fact that for the first time in a while the Vice President will not be throwing his hat into the ring (despite the sensual allure of a Richard Cheney candidacy). Then there's the reality that whoever comes into office is going to be burdened with a disastrous foreign policy, and a deficit that would make even the proudest yacht owner blush. Not to mention that the two front-runners on the Democratic side are a woman and a black man.

And yet already in this obnoxiously early election cycle, we've been distracted by issues that are a waste of our time. Not a waste of our time because they're not important, but rather, because there's no reason why, in this day and age of supposed equality and freedom, we're actually still having 'that' conversation.

'That' conversation, of course, pertains to the battle over marriage rights. It's different from more complex political issues in that... well... it's really not that complex. At risk of sounding hokey, you either think everyone deserves equal rights, or you don't.

Sure, you'll hear people talk about "protecting the sanctity of marriage," or advocating on behalf of the family. My typical response to such a notion would be peppered with a potpourri of four letter words, but I'll offer you my abridged version here...huh? Seriously? So, if gays gain the right to marry, then heterosexual marriages will suddenly be invalidated? I can see it now – a Catholic couple goes to visit the priest before getting married, and he sits them down and says, "Now, are you sure about this? Nancy here is a great catch and all, Bernard, but are you sure you wouldn't be happy with, uh, someone more of your own gender?"

And forgive me for stating the obvious, but if conservatives are so concerned about calling out people who supposedly don't care about the sanctity of the family, why don't they rail against radical Mormons? Or Las Vegas wedding chapels? Or why not just outlaw divorce altogether? The simple answer: radical right-wingers are usually the types who don't like to take a look at themselves in the mirror. (Too scary).

At risk of sounding hokey, you either think everyone deserves equal rights, or you don't.

But you see, the scary thing about the marriage debate today is that it's not just Romney and Co. who refuse to grant equality to those who deserve it. It's Democrats, too – you know, the ones who are supposed to like people and not be mean and stuff. (The ones who hug fluffy things and eat granola.) I will say this: the main difference is that most of the Republican candidates who oppose gay rights are doing so on purely fanatical and hateful grounds, while most of the Democrats support civil unions, but are just too spineless and fearful of political fallout to do the courageous thing and extend those rights to include marriage. So I guess what I'm saying is that Republicans are genuinely bigoted and Democrats are just pretending to be? My head hurts.

Civil unions are a step in the right direction, sure. But why take just a step in the right direction when another half step will get you to your destination? If you're willing to go as far as granting same-sex couples basically the same rights as heterosexual couples, then why can't you just say they're married? The common claim, cited by several Democratic candidates at the recent gay rights forum hosted by the Logo Network, is that America "isn't ready" for gay marriage.

A cop out, to be sure, but just to cover all the bases, I'd love an explanation of how exactly we'll know when America is prepared. Will we get a nice letter? How about a Hallmark sympathy card that says on the front, "Sorry about not liking gays before..." Inside, it will read: "To Whom It May Concern, We were once opposed, but now we're prepared. Bring us same-sex marriage! Signed, America."

Of course, the notion that America will suddenly become "ready" for something so divisive is asinine. Religious doctrine won't drastically shift at any point in...Well...ever, probably. (Consider the fact that there are people in existence who still refuse to believe in evolution.) And think back to other social struggles, like civil rights and women's suffrage. It takes the courage of not only individuals involved in the movement, but politicians who are willing to lay it on the line and force change because they know it's right. In the Democratic field of candidates, few such individuals exist today (save for Dennis Kucinich and Mike Gravel).

I for one am looking forward to the day when marriage rights are extended to everyone, and we can finally move on and focus on the stuff that matters. Like obsessing over young celebrities who get into a whole heap of zany trouble, or scapegoating China for our super-capitalist woes, or better yet, divulging skeezy details of family values politicians (coincidentally, also Republicans) soliciting sex in bathrooms. Oh, America...you're always up to something kooky!

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at michael.e.dennis@gmail.com

A time for reflection

A year ago, five full years after the catastrophically altering events of September 11, I wrote an editorial from my ship, USS Enterprise CVN-65, which was in the Persian Gulf conducting combat operations in Iraq and Afghanistan. The questions that I raised then – primarily uncertainties pertaining to the direction of the country, a shortage of national political leadership, and a deficiency of collective public will and wherewithal – are even more acutely relevant today, six years after September 11, as the nation prepares for the crucial decisions inherent in choosing a new leader of the Western World.

Brad DeFlumeri

Indeed, America has arrived at a political, cultural, economic and social crossroads where the ambiguity of the future of the Iraq war is merely a symptom of a larger and more pervasive malady. As General David Petraeus prepares his crucial report to Congress and the President on the current state of affairs in Iraq – a report which most conservatives and liberals agree will be positive and declare the troop surge a success – it is imperative that we take a broader and more thoughtful view of the war and the country's ultimate destination than the current climate of hyper-politicization allows for.

It is in this context of momentous and painstaking uncertainty that we must demand stronger national leadership, stronger civic engagement and politicians who unite us in the interest of our great nation rather than divide us in the interest of their partisan politics. We would do well to think back to immediately after 9/11 and remember the enormous sense of grief, shock, anger and then, magnificent resolve that most of us experienced.

It was then, after acknowledging that America stood for ideals and possessed a limitless potential worth preserving and fighting for, that I decided to join the military and play my small part in this country's quest for survival in the face of a multitude of external challenges. September 11 inspired me to become a sailor in the Navy, and not a conservative in the Republican Party. It provided us – and demanded from us – a moment of clear-headedness and rationality during which nothing was political and the nation was as united and invested in its own survival.

Today this is obviously and painfully not the case for a multitude of reasons: the failings of President Bush's diplomacy and the war in Iraq, nonexistent leadership by a Congress led at different times by each party and, perhaps most importantly, a lack of faith and trust of our highest office-holders. There are indeed more reasons why the country's course seems unknown and its compass dysfunctional, but this column isn't long enough to illuminate them.

So where do we go from here? There unfortunately does not appear to be a grand unifier (a Franklin Roosevelt or John F. Kennedy type) in the current crop of presidential candidates. Further, more so than not, they appear to be machine-generated robotic representations of watered-down ideals-turned-talking points. The leading Republican candidates – the newest of whom, Fred Thompson, was a disinterested senator who lacked an affinity for the hours needed to write worthwhile legislation – all stand firmly behind the troop surge and eagerly await the Petraeus report pending to Congress.

We would do well to think back to immediately after 9/11 and remember the enormous sense of grief, shock, anger and then, magnificent resolve that most of us experienced.

And to let you all in on a GOP secret, this unimpressive bunch will be joined by former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich at the end of this month. Many conservatives believe he has the intellect and political savvy to strengthen the Republican Party and, more importantly, to solidify the country in a way that President Bush was never able to accomplish.

Even more distressingly, the Democratic candidates have their political hopes married to the embarrassment of the President, i.e. defeat and withdrawal from Iraq. To varying degrees, this group supports socializing medicine, "talking" to rogue regimes from countries that despise us, and reducing our presence in Iraq. It may just be me, but none of these candidates inspire the same type of passion for change or hope for the future that former Democratic presidents Roosevelt and Kennedy did with such effectiveness and foresight.

So, six years after September 11, on the heels of what increasingly looks like an ineffective presidential administration, we are left to sort through mediocre candidates for the nation's highest office, one who will be charged with restoring some of our lost international credibility and forging durable relationships with increasingly consequential strategic military and economic partners in the Middle East and elsewhere.

Likewise, the new president will undoubtedly need to focus attention on reinvigorating some of the genuine patriotism and pride in this country which emerged so beautifully after September 11. Congress needs to restrict the seemingly weekly occurrence of a legislative sex scandal and focus on forging a sustainable and commendable future for the country it is tasked with leading.

College liberals, too, can play their part and acknowledge that President Bush isn't solely the embodiment of everything American, while embracing the ideals upon which the nation was founded and which inspired most of us to new levels of patriotism six years ago. Tomorrow is the perfect opportunity to put politics on the back burner and simply appreciate a country that, while having given us more than a few infuriatingly incompetent political leaders, has also bestowed upon us a breathtakingly wondrous degree of prosperity, freedom, liberty, and opportunity. If only one of the candidates could inspire this type of thinking.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Wasted wetlands: the vanishing Gulf Coast

As you sit in your Biology class, or sociology or theater class, at least one football field's worth of the Louisiana coastal wetlands disappears. But hey, you're sitting safe in your Massachusetts classroom. What do you care what happens 1500 miles to the south? You should care. What occurs on the coast of one of the most culturally rich cities of the United States doesn't only affect its occupants. It affects the entirety of America and its people. The vanishing swamplands of Louisiana have not only depleted a society of much of its fishing industry and robbed people of their homes; they were a large contributing factor to one of the most devastating natural disasters in United States history – Hurricane Katrina.

Stephanie McPherson

Between 1932 and 2005, the acreage of wetlands that has been eaten away by the Gulf of Mexico is equivalent to that of the entire state of Delaware. By 2050, it will have lost another 700 square miles. Why is this happening?

To understand that, it is important to understand how the wetlands were created. The Mississippi River, the central artery of the USA, begins in Minnesota and passes ten states during its journey to the Gulf of Mexico. As it flows, it collects sediments, which are eventually deposited along the Gulf Coast. These sediments form the wetlands.

Starting in the early 1900's, Americans tried their hand at controlling Mother Nature in their attempts to harness the Mississippi. The Gulf Intra-coastal Waterway was built to facilitate shipping. In many places, in order to build this canal, hard cement had to be packed into the soft marshes, weakening them. In 1927, there was a disastrous flood of the Mississippi, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers began to channel the river in order to prevent future floods.

But you can't take control of one of the most powerful bodies of water in the nation without consequences. The valuable sediment collected by the mighty river was deposited into the Gulf rather than onto the coast, leaving the already fragile wetlands in even more trouble. Oil companies were also taking advantage of new technologies which allowed them to dig deep into the swamplands, rather than searching offshore or more inland for their money. Louisiana and the Gulf Coast can thank these industrial factors for about forty percent of the lost wetlands.

Imagine – what would Massachusetts do if Cape Cod suddenly dropped into the Atlantic Ocean?

The land was being eaten away with next to nothing being done about it. Fifty million dollars per year was allocated for preserving the swamps, but that simply wasn't enough to make a difference. Imagine – what would Massachusetts do if Cape Cod suddenly dropped into the Atlantic Ocean? Thousands of homes would be destroyed, people's livelihoods would be ruined – it would be a disaster and an outrage. This is no different than the new Atlantis being created in the Gulf Coast. The wetlands are not just a beautiful coastline. People made their homes there. Everything they loved and knew was there. Fishing businesses have been lost. Homes have been lost. Wildlife that has no where else to go has been lost.

This sinking of America's coast, however, is not only about the human tragedy. If the wetlands were permitted to be built as nature had intended, Katrina wouldn't have hit as hard. Storm surges that caused the devastating flooding wouldn't have hit so hard. Every 2.7 miles of swampland that disappeared allowed the raging seas agitated by the hurricane to rise another foot. Waves could now tower twenty feet overhead before crashing back into the sea, taking with them wetlands, homes and people. Also, hurricanes gain their strength from tropical water, so the longer it takes the raging monster to strike, the more powerful it becomes. In losing the wetlands, Louisiana lost an important buffer against "the Big One," the one that would flood the below sea-level bowl of New Orleans.

People were aware of these dangers. Organizations were formed. Articles were written. Television specials were made; all to inform the public that New Orleans and the rest of the Gulf Coast was tempting Mother Nature, getting in her face and daring her to bring on her worst. But nothing was done to fix it. Eventually, be it by human hand or by the Mighty Mississippi itself, the river will be put back on course. Should it be on nature's terms, it will take millions of lives with it.

As you sat reading this article, the equivalent of nearly 20 tennis courts has been washed off the Gulf Coast. But hey, why should you care?

Stephanie McPherson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at smcpher@student.umass.edu.

No treaty for North Korea

The beginning of the Korean War was known for the massive amounts of land that traded through the hands of various armies. After 1951, however, this movement had stopped. From July of that year to the cease fire two years later, the war was characterized by an ugly, brutal stalemate caused by two iron wills unwilling to cede defeat – two years where hundreds of thousands of people died because of an inability to compromise. To this day, there is no formal peace treaty between North Korea and the forces that fought on the other side; it seems that both sides were hoping for a little more than the other was willing to give.

Ted Rogers

Recently, talk was given to the notion of actually signing an end to the war, ending the odd armistice. President Bush, at the Asia-Pacific summit, mentioned the possibility of signing a declaration finalizing the war as soon as North Korea totally dismantled its nuclear weapons program. A surprised South Korean President Roh Moo-hyun replied that he did not understand what Bush had said, for reasons still unknown at the time of press. It's a good possibility that Roh was angry because America alone did not fight the Korean war; rather it would be a coalition of American, UN and South Korean forces that would need to figure out the situation.

I too feel that Bush needs a solution much less simple than a "Nukes for Peace" deal. Firstly, the deal is not very practical. Promising better relations with North Korea just for dismantling their nuclear program gives little peace of mind; they already have the know-how to rebuild and perhaps better implement another program. Another point is that a peace treaty simply would not change Kim Jong-Il's well-known tendency to back out of promises. Finally, and most importantly, a peace treaty signed with North Korea just for solving one issue is plain morally reprehensible.

As the most powerful nation on Earth, and as a democracy, it is our duty to help ensure that life for all people in all countries improves.

Perhaps one of the few things that Bush has said that I take no issue with is when he labeled the North Korean government part of an "Axis of Evil." The North Korean government, under the cruel reign of Kim Jong-Il and his father Kim Il-sung, has abused human rights to a sickening degree and built an army whose gears have been lubricated by the blood of its own people. Kidnappings, state sponsored terrorism, concentration camps, persecution of religion and curtailing of free speech have all been documented activities of the North Korean government.

To say something I never would have thought would pass my lips, George Bush is being far too dovish on the issue. The dismantling of the nuclear program would be far more symbolic than anything else. As stated before, North Korea still would have the knowledge, and probably the materials, to restart the operation. Furthermore, the North Korean government may be unpredictable and wily, but it isn't stupid. Using nuclear bombs to settle a dispute would promptly set about the principle of Mutual Assured Destruction. So really, the bomb is not the thing we need to worry most about. What we need to worry about is our conscience.

Unlike the bargaining that took place more than fifty years ago, we as Americans find ourselves at a distinct advantage. China, once the ally of North Korea, is rapidly losing interest in propping up the regime when there is money to be made by trading with the US. Unlike in the fifties, there is not the spectra of the U.S.S.R lurking in the distance. Now, we can push for a little more before we declare the war over.

As the most powerful nation on Earth, and as a democracy, it is our duty to help ensure that life for all people in all countries improves, within reason.

This situation presents itself as an opportunity to help this happen. Assuming North Korea would want the normal relations that a peace treaty would bring, we can push for a little more than an assurance that North Korea would work on disassembling its nuclear armament. Before we can make a peace treaty with North Korea, we need to ensure that its citizens are finally treated with the respect to which all humans have the right. In addition, we need the assurance that the North Korean government will stay transparent enough so that we know human rights reforms are taking place.

If we are to make a peace treaty with North Korea, we should not just settle for a removal of a nuclear program. We should not settle just for symbolic purposes and our own dubious comfort; we should push for the chance to do the right thing.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black and chicken bake in cage

Comedian performs during First Week festivities

BY RYAN MCASKILL AND TERESA REILLY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The rants of a crazy man weren't subdued by the distressing heat Saturday night. Lewis Black was in full force with radical hand motions and zealous swearing that left the crowd, at times, stunned.

"I have the ability to shock college students...I feel f great tonight," said Black.

Black took the stage to a standing ovation in front of a sold out crowd of 3,000 packed into a sweltering Curry Hicks Cage. Paper fans were the only movement among the bleachers as many audience members were stuck to their seat.

Immediately Black told the overheating audience that there was nothing he could do about the heat. "Right now it feels like we are 15 feet from the sun. In 15 minutes we will be on the sun and in another 15 minutes the sun will be up our ass."

Even with the distracting temperature, Black let the subject rest and moved on. "That's the last time I'll talk about it until my eyes get blurry and I pass out."

The comedian then turned to his message of the night: "the anticipation for the moment is better then the moment itself because the moment is based in reality and reality is bullshit!"

The show was typical Black. Anyone who has seen his standup act before may have been disappointed as he used portions of his older material. Religion, politics, sex and the rest of the usual targets took hits with an interesting college spin.

The topic of sex is always a winner for students. Black spoke of losing his virginity, a topic that hit home for most in attendance. Most, however, didn't have a skipping Bob Dylan record in the background; in fact, most failed to even follow the "lay lady lay" that Black crooned.

Young politicians took a verbal beating from Black who called "all young Republicans... retarded." The crowd laughed along.

Politics tend to permit public ridicule, something Black excelled in. Seeing no end to the current squabbling of the two parties, Black decided on an independent candidate: Santa.

Since, Black claims, Christmas is so important to the American economy, why not have the "fat man" in charge? Knowing you can't elect a fictional character to the presidency, Black proposed an amendment to the Constitution that whoever wins, Democrat or Republican, must wear the Santa suit while giving speeches.

The current candidates for 2008 weren't free from ridicule. The mere mention of Mitt Romney's name led to a chorus of boos.

During Black's last two performances at UMass the crowd became vocal and this year was no different. He played off every outburst flawlessly and seemed to welcome the interaction.

Part way through his set a praying mantis attacked Black, causing him to exclaim "Spectacular!" At this point it is unconfirmed as to whether or not it is the same bug that interrupted comedian Bob Saget during last year's First Week show.

The heat remained a problem throughout the show. Black said, "we can now bake chicken in here."

While some of the jokes fell short, Black refused to explain. He started his political tirade by simply saying "Senator Larry Craig," which lead to an awkward reaction of boos and laughs.

"I was expecting a laugh there," Black commented. "I'm done with big punch lines people. The rest of the show is just this kind of shit."

Knowing that he had spent a solid hour depressing the audience, Black ended his set with an uplifting story that he was sure would make the crowd feel better. He pulled out a folded newspaper article and stated "This is the greatest opening line in the history of journalism."

Black then read, "[a] woman nearly bit off her husband's penis while he was making pancakes."

The joke did its job and the crowd erupted in the single greatest group reaction of the night.

Black continued reading every grizzly detail of the story and found that the only thing the audience as a whole agreed upon is that hot oil down the back is a bad thing.

With that, Black thanked the crowd and left the stage to another standing ovation.

At the base of all the night's humor, Black had a positive message for the college community. "Don't live in the moment and enjoy these four years. "The reason they call these the best four years of your life is because they f are!"

Ryan McAskill and Teresa Reilly can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com.

This past Saturday, comedian Lewis Black welcomed in the Class of 2011 with an hour of stand-up at Curry Hicks Cage as part of the First Week festivities at UMass. His routine included rants on topics such as virginity, religion and politics ranging from Mitt Romney to Santa Claus for President in 2008.

Lollapalooza cools down

Bands from all across the USA rock out in Chicago

BY ALEX HORNBECK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note: this is part two of a three-part series about the 2007 Lollapalooza Festival held in Chicago.

Still exhausted from day one of Lollapalooza, I arrived for day two a few hours late. Saturday found the city of Chicago overcast and breezy, a welcome relief after the brutal sun and stifling atmosphere of the day before. It wasn't tough to imagine the festival goers breathing a collective sigh of relief.

When I walked into Grant Park at four o'clock, the festival was already in full swing. The crowds were larger than those from the day before – perhaps a result of the more welcoming weather, or perhaps because it was the weekend proper. I dove in and made my way towards the AT&T Stage.

For a band still without a record label, it's impressive that I Lap Your Hands Say Yeah cannot only play opposite The Roots – a group always sure to draw a large crowd – but hold their own. The band kicked off their set with "Heavy Metal," a song from their self-titled debut album, and a crowd of about a thousand cheered them on.

Alec Ounsworth's voice was characteristically shaky, even more so than on the group's albums. Without the strength of his band's music behind him, it's a voice that may not be so successful. The rollicking pop that the group produces, however, matches perfectly Ounsworth's unique, almost child-like delivery.

I Lap Your Hands Say Yeah's set leaned heavily on songs from the debut, a move somewhat surprising considering their second album, "Some Loud Thunder," debuted earlier this year. The band had been on the road since April and recently returned from Japan to finish their tour in Chicago. Ounsworth seemed either shy, tired or both, and banter was kept to a minimum. He did note, in regard to the band's tour, "it's nice to finish here," and thanked the crowd for coming out.

After a somewhat lackluster rendition of "Yankee Go Home," the group segued directly into an energetic version of "Gimme Some Salt," prompting enthusiastic applause from the crowd, which seemed to respond most strongly to the band's older songs. I made my way over to the nearby MySpace stage to wait for The Hold Steady as Clap Your Hands finished off their set.

Earlier that day it had been reported that Brazil's Cansei de Ser Sexy, slated to play the festival at 5:00, had been unable to catch their flight into Chicago due to overbooking. This came as disappointing news since the group is known for its great live show. However, it did provide an easy solution to choosing between seeing them or The Hold Steady.

A half hour before the band was scheduled to begin a crowd of about two hundred was already gathered at the MySpace stage, most holding at least one beer in anticipation for the greatest bar band in Minneapolis (and probably the United States). Fans were visibly keyed up, many starting chants in eager anticipation. By the time The Hold Steady took the stage, the crowd had worked themselves into a slightly drunken frenzy and "Stuck Between Stations" was met with whoops and cheers.

While it wasn't the largest crowd of the festival, it was easily the most engaged, with half the audience or so singing along to every lyric. It was an impressive display of fan dedication – even more impressive was that the band seemed at least as excited to be there as the fans did.

Front man Craig Finn, donning a Minnesota Twins jersey, was even more red-faced than usual, likely from a combination of alcohol, heat, and excitement. A broad smile graced his face for the entire performance, and the banter between songs was charmingly drunk.

"This goes out to all the people who consider themselves not old but old-school," Finn blurted out before launching into "Cattle and the Creeping Things," off the group's second album "Separation Sunday." He later commented in a moment of reflection that the band had started just to meet up once a week to play together and drink – now they're opening for the Rolling Stones in Dublin.

The band finished off their set with "Killer Parties," a track from their debut album "Almost Killed Me." As they often do to close shows, the band let fans onstage to play along, including the guitarist of Illinois. It was a move that brought The Hold Steady and their fans even closer together and it finished out the set of the day.

An hour later, Spoon took the same stage to a larger crowd and foreboding skies. Rain intruded upon their set several times, though it didn't seem to affect the crowd, most of whom stood through the drizzle to hear songs from throughout the Texas band's career. From "Don't You Evah" and "Rhythm & Soul" off their new album "Ga Ga Ga Ga Ga" to older tunes "Quincy Punk Upside" and "Anything You Want," Spoon played with energy and efficiency, turning out rocker after rocker.

"Paper Tiger" was an oasis in the middle of their set, filled with waves of feedback and a sense of ominous minimalism. Later, "I Turn My Camera," the funkiest song the band has yet produced, got the crowd moving despite the weather. It was a triumphant set for a band that's only recently come into the public eye.

After Spoon, I made my way over to the Bud Light stage where Interpol, the night's co-headliner, was about to take the stage. A Chicago radio DJ announced the band shortly before 7:00, while Patti Smith was still performing at the nearby Playstation Stage.

Five minutes after seven, she was still playing, caught in a seemingly never-ending finale to her last song. While it's hard to criticize Smith, it did seem as if she overstayed her welcome, and grumblings from those waiting for Interpol grew louder and louder.

Soon enough the New York band arrived to eerie blue lights and ample fog. The first notes of "Pioneer to the Falls," the opening song off their new album "Our Love To Admire," rang across the festival grounds. While Interpol put on a great show, they're somewhat of an odd choice to headline a major festival. Their music is sparse and atmospheric, not something that necessarily appeals to the masses. Nonetheless, they attracted a large crowd, most of whom seemed to embrace the performance.

Interpol's more bombastic numbers received the most audience response. "Slow Hands," "Say Hello to the Angels," and "Mammoth" were appropriately loud, the songs' crescendos and climaxes effectively carried out by the band. Slower songs, though, were where the band shined their true talent. The haunting "Hands Away" seems hardly a song that could hold a large crowd, but Paul Banks' pained vocals and the soft murmuring of guitars were captivating.

A trio of songs from their debut album "Turn On The Bright Lights" made up the encore – "NYC," "Obstacle 1," and "Stella Was a Diver and She was Always Down" seemed a treat for the fans that have been with Interpol since the beginning, and though some of the crowd had dissapated, those still at the front as the performance up. The band's ethereal performance seemed a fitting way to end the cool, rainy night.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbeck@student.umass.edu.

Rain did not stop Britt Daniel and his band Spoon's set of full of rockin songs from all of their albums including their latest, "Ga Ga Ga Ga Ga."

The Hold Steads's frontman Craig Finn was clearly intoxicated as his band performed their set at this years Lollpalooza.

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET®
Only The Best...

SCORE BIG!
7 DAYS A WEEK

UNIVERSITY DRIVE
AMHERST, MA 253-0416
WE ACCEPT OCMP!

MAD MONDAY Available Monday Only!
Large Cheese Pizza
18 Inch
$7

2lb TUESDAY 2 lbs of Roasted Potatoes
FREE WITH PURCHASE OF A SuperBird Rotisserie Chicken
Available Tuesday Only!

PRIME TIME WEDNESDAY Available Wednesday Only!
Chefs Prime™ Pork Roast
20 oz Cooked Weight, Fully Cooked, Serves 3 to 4
$6

Take Out Thursday
Available Thursday Only!
Ready To Eat or Ready To Heat!
$7
Grandma's Chicken Pot Pie
9 Inch, Family Size

7 Days A Week $7
8 Piece Fried Chicken
2 Drumsticks, 2 Breasts Pieces, 2 Thighs & 2 Wings
We Only Use 100% Canola Oil No Trans Fats

FEED THE WHOLE TEAM!

kick back fridays
Available Friday Only!
Cheese P... 40 Pieces
$12

Serves 4 to 5, Ham, Turkey or Roast Beef with Lettuce, Tomato & Cheese, Made Fresh to Order
30 Inch Grinder
SUPER SUB
SATURDAY & SUNDAY
Serves 5 to 6!
$8
Available Saturday & Sunday Only!

WHAT A DEAL!

BIG Y RESERVES THE RIGHT TO CHANGE ITEMS AT ANY TIME WITHOUT NOTICE.

SEP 10 2007

Moore has big performance

FOOTBALL from page 10

er, as Relph marched the Raiders 72 yards down the field on four plays for the equalizer. Scott and Relph combined for 42 rushing yards on the first three plays before the junior quarterback put the exclamation point on the drive with a 30-yard touchdown pass to receiver Erik Burke.

The two teams alternated stalled drives until UMass cornerback Courtney Robinson took advantage of Relph throwing across his body in a crowded area, picking off the pass and returning it 20 yards to the Colgate 26-yard-line.

Wide receiver Rasheed Rancher dropped a bullet from Coen in the end zone on the next play – furthering the frustration of the Minuteman offense. But Coen converted on a third down play and ended the drive with a play-action touchdown pass to fullback Breyone Evans for the go-ahead score. The Raiders added a 47-yard field goal as time expired in the second quarter.

Whatever ailed its offense went away in the locker room at halftime, as UMass simply dominated the Raider defense in the second half. Lawrence set the tone for the offense in the third quarter, running for 55 yards during the first two UMass drives. The second drive ended with Coen's third touchdown pass – this time to Ian Jorgensen on a well-designed play that left the tight end wide open on the left side.

The newly-acquired 11-point cushion would swell to 18 just a minute later, when J.J. Moore scampered 58-yards down the field (virtually untouched) for his first-career punt return touchdown.

"After last week when he had two bad episodes, to respond with a touchdown is very special," Brown said of Moore's return. "Any time you get a special teams touchdown that's big."

Colgate trimmed the lead back to 11 on Burke's second touchdown reception of the afternoon, but Moore and the Minutemen capped an impressive second-half performance with the game's final score – Coen connected with Moore for his fourth touchdown pass of the day.

Charles Walker, Jason Hatchell and the rest of the Minuteman defense made the necessary adjustments and shut down Colgate's running game in the second half. Scott gained just 11 yards on the ground after accumulating 92 in the first half and the Colgate offense had 82 yards of total offense after having 230 in the first half. On the flip side, the UMass running back duo of Lawrence and Tony Nelson combined for 155 yards after halftime.

Coen finished the game with terrific numbers – throwing for 204 yards and four scores and an interception on 17-of-26 passing. Lawrence had his second-straight 100-yard effort, rushing for 122 yards. Burke had 142 yards and two scores on nine receptions, while Scott failed to cross the goal line on five touches inside the red zone. He finished with 103 yards.

GAME NOTES

Horne's and Evans's touchdowns were their first at UMass ... the Minutemen committed 13 penalties for 135 yards ... Moore's punt return touchdown was the first for UMass since 1996 ... UMass recorded four sacks ... Colgate gained 23 first downs, UMass had 20 ... Walker had 10 tackles, and forced and recovered a fumble in the red zone ... UMass had 10 tackles for a loss.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

Senior cornerback Courtney Robinson defends a Colgate pass attempt in Saturday's victory. He intercepted a pass in the second quarter.

Minutemen lack overall consistency, find enough offense to defeat Raiders illegal formation penalty backed UMass up again.

BIG PLAYS from page 10

On the next play, Coen found that something in former Syracuse wide receiver Jeremy Horne, who was sprinting across the middle of the field. Coen hit him in the chest with the ball and Horne scored to put UMass on top, 7-0.

Colgate running back Jordan Scott ran freely in the first half, and the Raiders drove right back against the Minutemen, going 71 yards in 4 plays with only 65 elapsed seconds.

The offense went back to sputtering in the second quarter, running four plays for a total of zero yards due to two penalties before punting on their first drive of the quarter. The next UMass possession produced seven yards on three plays.

With the score still tied at seven, Raider quarterback Alex Relph began to find his rhythm.

However, UMass managed to capitalize on his first mistake. On a second-and-10 play from the Colgate 44-yard line, Relph took the snap and rolled to his right. He found a receiver open in the middle of the field and threw across his body. Cornerback Courtney Robinson stepped in front of the open receiver for the interception on the 46-yard line and returned it 20 yards to the 26.

With a short field, UMass took the lead for good, 14-7, on a touchdown pass from Coen to fullback Breyone Evans – another former Syracuse transfer – two yards deep in the end zone.

Colgate added a field goal to make it 14-10 in the waning seconds of the half, but because of two opportune scores, the Minutemen left the field at halftime knowing they would return up four points on the road.

UMass woke up in the second half, and played like the 2006 Minutemen that were within an arm's reach of a national championship. They won 35-17, running away with the game in the final two quarters.

"Coach [Brown] has been stressing to us that we need to finish, because nobody can play with us for 60 minutes," senior wide receiver J.J. Moore said. "That's the bottom line. I think everybody on the team believes that. We just had to put it to the test today."

The situation for the Minutemen could have been much worse in the first half. The Maroon and White could have very well gone to the locker room down by 10, but it kept itself in the game with key plays when it counted the most. Staying close and even ahead proved crucial, as the Minutemen came back for the third quarter with renewed confidence, knowing they had played poorly and still held a lead.

"I thought we really did a nice job offensively in the second half because we certainly didn't do much [in the first half]," Brown said. "Although, we were opportunistic, so when we got a couple of turnovers, we certainly answered the bell there. We were much more consistent on offense in the second half."

To win consistently, teams have to find a way to win even when they're not playing at the highest level. UMass did just that on Saturday.

"We really didn't get much done, but when you get your two opportunities ... we had Courtney with the interception, and we had the fumble recovery ... you just take advantage of those scenarios," Brown said. "It's enough to keep you treading water going into the second half."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

UM gets win with OT goal

MEN'S SOCCER from page 10

from red-shirt junior Chris Brown gave UMass a 1-0 lead.

"From about 40 yards out, Chris Brown drove it down into the box and Bryan Hogan got to it," Simmons said. "He headed it from the right-hand side back to the left-hand side. He just jumped over everyone to get to it."

The goal was Hogan's first of the season; the assist went to Brown and was the first of his career.

The Catamounts dealt with the speed of UMass with their physicality. Referees handed out three yellow cards to UVM defenders and one to UMass's Kenny Cook. Cook and UVM forward Lee Stephane Kouadio got tangled up in UMass's zone in the 83rd minute. Some shoving followed, forcing referees to book both players.

Kouadio made his presence felt moments earlier as he tied the game in the 79th minute. Following a long goal kick from UVM goalkeeper Roger Scully, Kouadio received the ball and saw Simmons was out of the goal trying to prevent any type of through ball into an advanced position. Kouadio launched the ball from 40 yards out over Simmons' head and into the net to tie the game.

Regulation ended with the score tied and the game moved to overtime. UMass's first three games all went to overtime before the contest with UNH.

Three minutes into the overtime, junior Mike DeSantis maneuvered free in Vermont's zone. A UVM defender did all he could to strip the ball from DeSantis, but tripped him, forcing officials to award UMass a penalty kick.

Junior Doug Rappaport stepped to the line with the chance to give the Minutemen the lead. Rappaport didn't waste the opportunity, lining the ball past Scully, who dove to the right before Rappaport even kicked the ball.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport scored the game-winning goal against Vermont. He leads the Minutemen with two goals this season.

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
Paid Officials Needed for Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, Softball, Ice Hockey & Volleyball
Clinics: Football-Sept. 11, 12, 13 Soccer-Sept. 11, 12, 13, 14
Co-ed Softball-Sept. 17, 18 Field Hockey-Sept. 17
Ice Hockey-Sept. 18, 19, 20 Volleyball-Oct. 2, 3, 9, 10
Call for requirements, times and locations
Still Time To Enter: Flag Football, Soccer, Field Hockey, & Softball
More Info: 215 Boyden, 5-2693
On The Web: www.umass.edu/campusrec

Know the signs. Save a life.
Suicide is the second leading cause of death among college students. Know the warning signs and get help for your friend, your roommate or yourself.
If someone:
- threatens to hurt or kill themselves
- seeks ways to kill themselves, like pills or firearms
- talks or writes about death, dying or suicide
- is abusing substances
- is socially withdrawn

call Mental Health Services, 545-2337 weekdays, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m. After hours, call University Health Services, 577-5000.
If it's an emergency, call 911.
National Suicide Prevention Week is September 9 – 15, 2007
UMassAmherst
University Health Services
www.umass.edu/uhs/mentalhealth

The Office of Jewish Affairs
would like to wish all Jewish students
Happy New Year!
Shanah tovah!
We also extend a warm greeting to our Muslim brothers and sisters as you begin the month-long celebration of Ramadan...
Ramadan mubarak!
If you will be missing classes because of the holidays...
Whatever your religion or level of observance, the University's policy concerning days of religious observance guarantees that "any student [whether Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, Bahai, Christian, Buddhist, or any other religion] who is unable to attend classes or to participate in any examination, study or work requirement because of religious observance is to be provided with an opportunity to make up the examination, study or work requirement." However, it is the student's responsibility to notify your professor at least a week in advance.
Most professors are respectful of this policy, but if you do encounter a problem, you can call the department head, the Ombuds Office (545-0867), or the Office of Jewish Affairs (545-9642). We're happy to help.
May this be a sweet and peaceful year for us all!!
UMASS AMHERST For more information, visit www.umass.edu/jewish or call the Office of Jewish Affairs at 413.545.9642

Late goal enough for victory

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 10

on Tuesday at the University of Albany.

The two goals that led the Maroon and White to a victory Friday were not scored by team captains or seasoned veterans of the team, but rather a couple of newcomers – freshmen Therese Smith and Kelsey Anderson – who scored their first collegiate goals.

The first half was riddled with missed chances, however, as UMass took 11 shots in the half, not one of which found its mark.

Around nine minutes into the game forward Sydney Stoll had an opportunity to score her second goal of the season when she found herself in front of the net with a one-on-one with Iona's goalie – but the sophomore sent it too high.

A few minutes later, freshman Alyssa Visconti made a bid to record her first collegiate goal when she fired a shot on the right side of the goal box. The ball landed in the hands of Iona goalkeeper Suzanne Baldissard, before it squirted onto the ground in front of her. Senior captain Britt Canfield tried to poke the ball in, but Baldissard pounced on it, holding it tight against her body.

In the beginning of the 21st minute, junior captain Vanessa Patry tried to put digits on the scoreboard with a shot on goal. But the attempt was booted away by an Iona player.

With just over two minutes remaining in the first half, senior captain Jenny Roehrig lined up to take a corner kick. Freshman Ashley Hamel headed the kick away from the net and the rebound shot went wide left.

The halftime horn sounded and both teams walked off the field in a scoreless tie.

The Minutewomen could be seen during halftime sitting in one of the only shaded areas available at Rudd Field, trying to rest up and recharge their batteries for the second half.

UMass did not waste much time getting to work after the intermission, as Smith pocketed her first collegiate goal in the 48th minute – but it did not come without controversy.

Roehrig and an Iona defender began fighting for possession of the ball near the sideline on Iona's side. When the ball bounced out of bounds, the Iona player said it bounced off Roehrig, but the referee disagreed – much to the dismay and protest of Iona. It was a sign of things to come.

Roehrig re-bounded the ball to Stoll. Stoll took it around the corner, along the baseline and shoveled it off to the middle of the field, where Smith punched it into the net.

But Iona refused to go quietly and switched goalkeeper Baldissard for Krista Thorn. UMass followed suit and swapped red-shirt senior Kristin Walker out of net for sophomore Lauren Luckey.

In the 59th minute Iona got the ball into UMass's zone and began flailing away. The ball ricocheted around as if in a pinball machine. Then Liz Allen took a hard shot that bounced off Luckey and deposited the deflection into the net.

The tally tied the game at 1-1.

After a handful of missed shots by Stoll, Roehrig and sophomore Meghan Gould – who had spent much of the game on the bench after awkwardly twisting her knee in the first half – UMass popped another one in the net to take the lead.

At 81:20 sophomore Katie Ruggles brought the ball around the right side near the net and passed it over Canfield's head to Anderson, who beat Thorn for her first collegiate goal.

"I'm like in shock," said Anderson, who admitted that she never thought she would score a goal in college. "I knew it was going to go over Britt's head and I was like, 'Oh, I have to be ready for this.' It was a right-place/right-time type of thing."

Roehrig, a team captain, was pleased with how the newcomers stepped up when necessary and picked up some extra slack.

"They're not timid and they're not holding back, which is good," she said. "When you step on the field there's no class, there's no anything. There's just soccer players. So I think they adapted very well to that."

Rudy agreed.

"It means that we're going to spread it around. I think we're going to share the goals," he said. "We have to share it. We can't be one-dimensional – we've been that in [the past]."

But he said that every win is a team effort and that his whole team played well. He said that credit cannot be distributed to just a few individuals. Rudy added that all his players fought well, but – like always – there are some things to work on.

"It was nice to see us go in with all those corners and all those shots, but we didn't quite clean up our last ball," Rudy said. "We really have to focus at making our last pass and our shots on goal. I think we got our rewards for sticking with it [today]. We made a slight adjustment at halftime and what I like about this team is that it is ready to absorb and understand our adjustments."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Celebration 'wet' for coach

RUDY from page 10

Iona and UMass played to a 1-1 tie, until freshman defenseman Kelsey Anderson scored the game-winning goal in the 81st minute. After the goal Iona only managed two shots, both saved by sophomore Lauren Luckey.

When regulation ended all eyes were on Rudy as the team rushed to congratulate their coach. A couple of the players gathered around the team water bucket trying to soak the coach while he wasn't looking. After the Minutewomen did their normal post game routine of light jogging and a team huddle, they finally grabbed the water bucket and splashed Rudy who rushed away as fast as he could.

"Wet," Rudy said about his Gatorade shower. "It wasn't that bad, after one game up at Garber field – we used to play there – and the local newspaper had me in an orange bucket and they got [the photograph]."

Rudy earned his first victory on Sept. 12, 1981; Central Florida destroyed Miami, 20-0.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

BRIAN TIPTON/COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward Katie Ruggles throws the ball back into play. She assisted on the game-winning goal in the second half.

Offense stalls for Minutewomen in Vt.

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team dropped two games this weekend in the second annual Sheraton Catamount Classic in Burlington, Vt.

The Minutewomen (3-3) lost 3-1 to Vermont on Saturday before suffering a 1-0 overtime defeat at the hands of New Hampshire on Sunday.

UNH (3-3) forward Danielle Collins was a thorn in the side for the Maroon and White. Her hat trick proved to be all the scoring the Catamounts needed to prevail. Collins' five shots on goal were the only ones registered by Vermont (5-1), but her accuracy was enough to lift her team to victory.

Catamount Maegan Luce assisted on Collins' first two goals.

Collins and Luce are no strangers to the UMass squad. In last years 6-4 Vermont victory, the duo each had three goals. The second half of the game included two goals from Collins and one from Luce in a span of 6:36 that ended the Minutewomen's chances of scoring a victory. Both Catamount forwards were elected to the 2006 America East All-Conference First Team.

UMass outshot their opponents 8-5 but Cher King's goal in the 54th minute was the only Minutewoman tally of the morning. It cut the lead to 2-1, but Collins third goal in the 59th minute put the game out of reach for the Maroon and White.

UMass	1
UVM	3

UMass	0
UNH	1

King leads the team with five goals this year, and it was her fourth game in a row with at least one goal. She registered two shots in the game.

Katelyn Orlando, a junior forward from Manchester, Mass., led the team with three shots on goal, but Vermont goalkeeper Kristen Heavens was up to the challenge each time.

UMass goalkeeper Becky Letourneau started the game for the Minutewomen, but was forced to leave due to injury. While she recorded two saves in the 47 minutes in net, she also let two escape. Sophomore goalkeeper Sarah Williams replaced her counterpart and allowed a goal in her 23 minutes of action.

The Maroon and White pressured the Catamounts with three penalty corners, while Vermont just received one.

Next up for the Minutewomen was the New Hampshire Wildcats.

After playing 70 minutes of scoreless play, the Wildcats' Shauna Sellenger scored the lone goal of the game 5 minutes into overtime to give UNH a split on the weekend tournament. They lost their Saturday game to 14th ranked Virginia, 2-0.

The first half of the game belonged to the Minutewomen. They tested UNH goalkeeper Margaux Shute with five shots on goal, but the senior turned them all away. The shutout was Shute's first of the season.

While the Wildcats were unable to put any shots on goal in the first half, the Minutewomen shared the same problem for the second. Shots favored UNH 4-0 in the second half, but UM goalkeeper Sarah Williams was able to protect her goal successfully.

There was no lack of action in the extra frame. Though lasting just five minutes, Williams was forced to make one save while Shute made two.

The trend of the weekend for the Minutewomen was outshooting and gaining more penalty corners than its opponents. UMass won four penalty corners to UNH's one, and outshot their opponents 7-6. All the Maroon and White's penalty opportunities came in the first half.

Cher King's point streak was snapped at four games, but she did have a defensive save in the game.

Despite the two losses that dropped them to .500, UMass coach Justine Sowry came out of the weekend with optimism.

"I would take from the weekend's game that we persisted very well" she said. "We worked tirelessly and we pressured the opponent to a lot of turnovers in the midfield. Our work rate off the ball performance was outstanding."

As far as individual performances over the weekend, Sowry was particularly pleased with senior captain Erin O'Brien as well as Shea.

"Erin O'Brien provided a lot of leadership and her work rate was second to none. Mary Shea, playing in the midfield, both of those girls played every bit of the game and provided a lot of engine power for us to get through both games."

Even with the two defeats, the Minutewomen still are in better position than they were last year at this point in the season. Their current record of 3-3 compares favorably with last years 2-4 start.

The team has a chance to bounce back this Wednesday when they host Boston University in a night game.

It will be a tough task for the Minutewomen. The Terriers are ranked No. 18 in the country, but have dropped their last two games.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

UM runners have strong race

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams kicked off their seasons this weekend at the Dartmouth Invitational in Dartmouth, N.H., with solid individual performances by veterans and newer runners alike. The men's team finished second and the women's team took third place in their races.

The strong running of senior captain Christina Derosa earned her a second place individual finish and put the team into a tie for third place (out of four teams) with Keene State. Both teams had 69 total points, while host team Dartmouth finished in second place with 57 points.

Red-shirt freshman Shiyi Zan showed no signs of rust as she finished in sixth place overall and second on the team behind Derosa in her collegiate cross country debut. Zan spent last year recovering from a leg injury.

Also making their debut for the Minutewomen, freshman Lauren Stocker finished fourth on the team and 27th overall as she led all freshmen on the team with an average time of 7:11 per mile and 22:19.0 overall.

Senior captain Amber Sayer was the other Minutewoman placing in the top five on the team. Sayer finished third on the team and 18th overall with an average time of 7:01.9 per mile and 21:50.80 overall.

When the Minutewomen last participated in the Dartmouth Invitational, Sayer and Derosa were the first two Minutewomen to cross the finish line. Derosa finished fourth overall and first on the team with a time of 20:54.70, while Sayer finished in 16th place with a time of 22:20.40. Senior co-captain Taryn Trapp rounded out last year's top five runners on the team with a time of 22:39.10. Trapp has been sidelined thus far in the season with a stress fracture in her leg.

The Minutemen finished in second place in its race out of seven teams, bested only by Dartmouth.

Sophomore Andrew McCann led the way for the Minutemen, placing fifth overall with an overall time of 26:18.50. Junior captain Jesse Regnier placed second on the team and seventh overall. Sophomore Daniel Barry finished third on the team and ninth overall.

Nicolai Naranjo carried over his success from his freshman campaign into this year as he placed fourth on the team and 13th overall. In last year's Dartmouth Invitational, Naranjo led all Massachusetts runners by finishing in sixth place overall.

Senior Joe Czupryna capped off the top five Minutemen in the race with a 16th place overall finish.

The last time that the Minutemen took part in the Dartmouth Invitational, they finished second overall. In that particular race, Naranjo placed first on the team and sixth overall with a time of 26:24.10. Just behind Naranjo was now-senior Nils Fischer, placing seventh overall with a time of 26:30.20. Fischer and Naranjo were the only Minutemen to finish in the top ten of the race.

Fischer is not with the team this season because he is studying abroad in England.

Next Saturday, the teams will compete in their only home meet of the season. Both teams will host Maine and Vermont. The meet will begin at 11:30 a.m.

The last time that the two Massachusetts teams faced Maine head-to-head, the men's team took first place, while the women's team placed last.

Neither Massachusetts team faced Vermont in head-to-head competition last season.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

YANKEE CANDLE
a passion for fragrance™

At The Yankee Candle Company, Inc., we care about our employees' success. If you are ready to be recognized for your hard work, come begin a bright career with us!

Where bright careers begin.

Welcome Back Students!

Come to our Job Fair!

Full- & Part-time Positions!

Wednesday, September 12
10am - 2pm & 4pm - 7pm

Yankee Candle Fitness Facility next to Yankee Candle Village, South Deerfield, MA

If you are unable to attend, please apply in person Mon-Fri 8:30am-5:00pm at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA or online at: www.yankeecandle.com

EOE/AA

MOVING ON? POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Save 10% all your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
*Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY
3-on-3 Basketball (M/W/C).....10/22
Holiday Basketball (M/W).....10/29
2-Ball Soccer (C).....11/26
Spring Basketball(M/W/C).....12/10
MANDATORY CLINICS FOR NEW SPRING BASKETBALL OFFICIALS ARE SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 30 & 31 AT 7 P.M. MANDATORY CLINIC FOR RETURNEES IS SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 29 AT 6 P.M. CALL FOR REQUIREMENTS AND LOCATIONS.
On The Web: www.umass.edu/campusrec

RELAX?
FORGET IT!
PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
GET AVAILABLE
Full Fitness Facilities - Cybex Free Weights
43 Cardio Machines - Studio w/ 35 Classes
Cybex / Nautilus Circuit
Basketball court - Volly ball court
Indoor Tennis courts
Indoor Cycling / Yoga / Pilates
Full Sized Indoor Pool with Jacuzzi
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL
AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
Locally owned and operated
INFO - RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

5								9
	9	4		5	3		7
			2	4
4	2			5	8
	5						6
				7	4		2	3
				2	7
	8		1	3		9	4
2								1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Support crew
8 Not as much
10 Up for the job
14 Underwater scanner
15 Word of honor
16 Sketch
17 Make fun of 18 Marmaduke, e.g.
20 NFL scores
22 School period
23 Hindered
27 Actress Sandra
28 Farm enclosure
30 Traffic tie-ups
35 Before, poetically
36 Schnoz
38 Dream time
39 Jazz phrase
41 Branches
43 Vesuvian flow
44 Not active
46 Places
48 R/M part
49 Antenna
51 Harry and Norma
53 Distress signal
55 Countersign
56 Woodland heights?
61 Classifieds
62 Does certain caretaking
64 Consumed
68 Seniors' org.
69 U.S. border lake
70 Type of drum
71 QB Aikman
72 Ilk
73 Tarnish

DOWN
1 Mech+ plane
2 Little piggy
3 Gasleyer of "SNL"
4 Make secure
5 Fender and others
6 Yule wood
7 Pitcher parts
8 Charger
9 Disgraces
10 Finds the sum of
11 Annoying child
12 Daily Planet reporter
13 Large-mouth pitcher
19 High school years
21 Penn and Astin
23 Spain's place
24 Oil the sea
25 Give priority
26 Plummets
29 Leasing or Day
31 Each and every one
32 Grim figure
33 Projecting handles
34 Meager
37 One-tenth
40 Calendar abbr
42 Davis of "Thelma & Louise"
45 Re-let sample
47 Most melancholy
50 Sets free
52 Actress Sosu
54 V.P. Agnew
56 Be as it may
57 Laugh boisterously
58 New Greek coin
59 Catch a glimpse of 60 Move emotionally
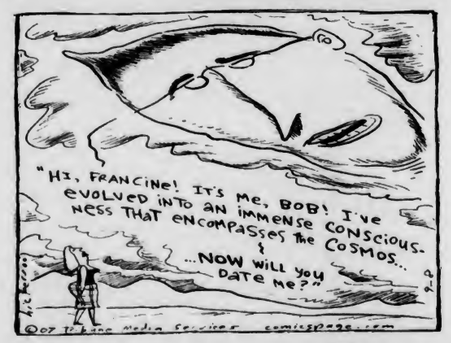
63 Herder
65 Mai __ cocktail
66 Sea eagle
67 Bottom line figure

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

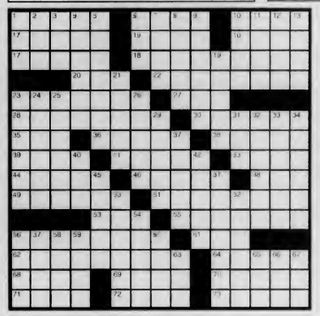
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Forgiveness is the scent left by a rose on the heel that crushes it."
-Unknown



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek



LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

UMass YOGA In Boyden 10
Mon/Wed
2:00-3:15 pm Power Yoga
4:30-4:45 pm Yoga Basics
Tues/Thurs
1:00-2:15 pm Yoga Basics
3:30-3:45 pm Intermediate
5:00-5:15 pm Yoga Basics
Fall 2007
Sign Up Now!
Semester Packages:
1 class per week $85
2 classes per week $150
Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 413-545-0022
umassyoga.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Do not try to fight the feelings you are having for the custodial staff in your building.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
From falafel to hummus, the chickpea is truly the fabric of our lives.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Search a record store for the long lost and underplayed classic "Mambo number 4.76."

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You will float above your problems like vicious allergies floating upon a breeze.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You will daydream of beautiful women smothered in guacamole.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Before the end of add/drop you will realize that spire is a codename for Satan.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You emit an aura of cool, paralled only by the great Bill Clinton.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The only way to be truly unique is to completely lack common sense. YOU WIN!

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your RA is a vampire. When they approach you throw garlic in their eyes.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Spending an extended period of time in the lotus position is harmful to you psyche.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The Hanes marketing campaign threatens to put used underwear on you. How icky.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Pray like a mantis upon a leaf. Now strike upon a feeble and naive freshman.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Now with more anti-oxidants than ever!

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X42dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250 \413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext 162

Delivery Drivers Wanted
Must have own car. Flexible schedule, earn up to $14hr. call Delivery Express. 413-549-0077

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply Dp Dough Downtown Amherst

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments

EMPLOYMENT

$10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Sperm Donor Wanted We are looking for a healthy, bright, athletic male college student to donate sperm. I will pay for pre-tests and compensate you $300 per donation. Serious responses only. Contact us at leighlonej@yahoo.com

FOR SALE

2005 Verucci SCOOTER 49cc New Battery and Tune-up. $900.00 or B.O. 413-423-3050 leave message

HOUSE FOR RENT

Shutesbury - Lake Wyola
4 bedroom, partially furnished. Lease 9/4-5/23/08. $1,100/mo. Plus utilities. (860)675-7557

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-

SERVICES

550-4900.
24 hour hotline.
Free Pregnancy test
233 N. Pleasant St.
Amherst
www.birthright.org

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992
27 Pray Street, Amherst
www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com.

SEP 10 2007

SEP

11

2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Diving to victory

UMass survives shaky first half, offense seals victory in second

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the second straight Saturday, 30 minutes of good football was all that the Massachusetts football team needed.

The No. 2 Minutemen struggled in the first half offensively, but came out firing after halftime to beat the Colgate Raiders, 35-17, on Saturday in Hamilton, N.Y. UMass quarterback Liam Coen (4 TD's) and wideout J.J. Moore (2 TD's) led the way for the Minutemen.

"We were much more consistent on offense in the second half," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Liam has a big day and Lawrence has a big day – and it's just a good solid win for us against a great program with a great tradition."

Colgate (1-1) dominated UMass (2-0) on all facets of offense in the first half, out-gaining the Minutemen on the ground 106-to-11 and in the air 124-to-79. But the Raiders had trouble pounding the ball into the end zone and committed key turnovers, leading to two UMass touchdowns and a 14-10 deficit at the half.

The opening drive for the Minutemen was indicative of their first-half struggles as Coen tripped and fell on the first play from scrimmage. A miscommunication on the third-down snap led to a fumble and a 13-yard loss.

The Raiders were much more cohesive on offense in the opening half – junior tailback Jordan Scott rushed for 92 yards and quarterback Alex Relph threw for 124 yards. But both Scott and Relph slowed down considerably in the second half, as the UMass defense tightened up and the Minuteman offense took control of the game.

UMass's second drive of the game didn't fair much better, but the Raiders handed the Minutemen a gift when Colgate punt returner Cody Williams fumbled the ball into the hands of Eric Dickson. Coen capitalized on the good field position, hitting red-shirt sophomore wide receiver Jeremy Horne on a 25-yard touchdown strike.

The lead didn't last long, howev-

See FOOTBALL on page 7

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Senior wide-receiver J.J. Moore tumbles into the end zone for one of his two touchdowns on Saturday against Colgate. Moore returned a punt 58-yards for a score in the third quarter to put the Minutemen 28-10. He also caught an 11-yard pass from Liam Coen in the final stanza.

Big plays propel UM to win

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

HAMILTON, N.Y. – For the second straight week, the Massachusetts football team played out of character and found a way to win. The Minutemen struggled offensively in the first half and Colgate running back Jordan Scott ran freely on the UMass defense.

And yet, UMass coach Don Brown walked into the visitor's locker room with a four-point lead.

Penalties continued to plague the Minutemen (2-0) in Hamilton, N.Y. The offensive line was flagged multiple times for holding and false starts.

The passing game was sluggish and running back Matt Lawrence was not breaking free from the Raider defense the way he did at home against Holy Cross.

"We really just needed to focus on execution," Brown said. "It certainly was a weird first half."

The Minutemen did all they could in the first half to give Colgate (1-1) an advantage and the lead – except on two possessions. When they found an opportunity to get something where it seemed they could find nothing, the Minutemen snatched it.

The first came following a fumble on a punt return by Raiders' Cody Williams. Late in the first quarter, UMass punter Brett Arnold sent a booming punt out of his own end zone, pushing Williams deeper into Colgate territory.

Williams caught it cleanly, ran backwards before going forward to avoid two tacklers and evaded a third before getting hit hard by linebacker Charles Walker. The impact separated Williams from the ball and UMass' Eric Dickson recovered the ball at the 39-yard line.

After an offsides call against Colgate jump-started the drive, Lawrence ran the ball three times for just nine yards. Lawrence then caught a six-yard pass from quarterback Liam Coen, but an

See BIG PLAYS on page 7

Minutemen split pair at Invitational

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following its second consecutive two-goal performance, the Massachusetts men's soccer team entered its match with New Hampshire on Sunday hoping to continue its offensive progression.

The Minutemen (2-2-0) ran into a stout Wildcat defense and horrible weather conditions before dropping a 2-0 decision to UNH in the final game of the Smith Barney Nike Soccer Classic in Burlington, Vt. UMass won its first game of the tournament, 2-1, over Vermont (1-3-0) on Friday.

Next weekend, the Minutemen end their longest road trip of the season with games at Siena on Friday and Harvard on Sunday.

Kyle Urso gave UNH (1-2-1) the lead in the eighth minute of the game, forcing the Minutemen to attack for the remainder of the game. Eventually, the Wildcats took advantage of the desperate Minutemen and added an insurance goal in the 68th minute.

Despite aggressively attacking for most of the game, UMass struggled to stretch UNH goalkeeper Colin O'Donnell with a season-low two shots on goal; neither of which qualified as a great chance.

A defensive breakdown by the Minutemen led to the game's first goal. UNH midfielder Dan Cripe advanced the ball into UMass's defensive third and beat a defender before crossing the ball across the box. Urso received the ball and fired a shot past UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons from 10 yards out.

"The first goal was a missed assignment," Simmons said. "[UNH]'s wide midfielder got behind our defender and just finished a play. I think that was a missed mark."

A poor reaction to a throw-in provided the Wildcats with another opportunity late in the game. UNH's Mike Davis threw the ball into the box where Mike McKee controlled the pass with his chest before finding Scott Rowling open. Rowling fired a shot from 15 yards out and beat Simmons to extend the lead to two with just over 20 minutes remaining.

Falling behind so early made it difficult for the Minutemen to maintain proper positioning defensively since the wide midfielders had to focus on aiding the forwards. This combined with the fatigue they inevitably felt from Friday's overtime thriller with UVM and the steady rainfall neutralized the athletic advantage UMass had over the slow-footed Wildcats.

UMass	2
UVM	1

UMass	2
UNH	2

"Friday was a very physical match and we were a little drained," Simmons said. "I don't know if it had a lot to do with [yesterday's] loss. The weather didn't help them much. They have a very direct style where they pump balls long. And it made the surface slicker which I thought would've helped us since we're the quicker team."

UNH's win is its third consecutive over UMass and brings the all-time series to 26-14-3 in favor of the Minutemen. UMass hasn't beaten its regional rival since 2004.

The Minutemen did end a different streak, however, in their win over the Vermont Catamounts. Prior to Friday's victory, the Minutemen hadn't beaten UVM since 1985, going 0-5-1 in the six games since.

Like UNH, the Minutemen jumped ahead with an early goal. Sophomore Bryan Hogan's header in the eighth minute off a long free kick

See MEN'S SOCCER on page 7

Maroon and White led by newcomers

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Rudd Field was home sweet home for the Massachusetts women's soccer team (2-0-1) as it locked up a 2-1 win in its home opener against Iona College on Friday.

Not only did the victory against the Gaels (0-3-0) give the Minutewomen's home record a good running start, but it also handed UMass coach Jim Rudy his 300th college win. He is only the ninth coach in NCAA history to reach the mark.

UMass	2
Iona	1

But after the traditional player-induced Gatorade shower, Rudy made it clear that milestones and personal statistics take a back seat in his mind.

"I'm glad it's over. I was trying to put that in a little box and just keep it to the side," he said. "I told [the players] the other day that the most important thing was them winning our home opener."

The Minutewomen's next game is set for 4 p.m.

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 8

TYLER STALLING/COLLEGIAN

Local product Therese Smith of Holyoke scored her first collegiate goal against Iona on Friday and is one of two first-year players to score goals for the Minutewomen this season.

Rudy earns 300th career win

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass coach Jim Rudy earned his 300th NCAA Division I victory, as the Massachusetts women's soccer team took down Iona College 2-1 in the home opener at Rudd Field Friday afternoon.

The Minutewomen stay unbeaten at 2-0-1 through the first three games of the season. For Rudy it was his 226th victory at UMass, he previously coached at Central Florida. He is just the ninth coach in NCAA history to eclipse the 300-victory mark. Rudy has been coaching Division I women's soccer for 27 seasons and this is his 20th season at UMass.

One of Rudy's biggest challenges was trying to keep the team focused on the opponent and not on his achievement. He felt the team might try to do too much on the field and take themselves out of their normal routine.

"I was trying to put that little box aside," Rudy said. "I told them the other day the important thing is them and if it comes that's great, we'll deal with it then, but don't do things just take care of business, we're not going to worry about the other stuff."

The Minutewomen however were focused they attacked the Iona defense by out-shooting them 25 to 10. Rudy wanted the team to convert more goals, but he was content with the result of the game.

"The quality of our shooting has to get better, but I'm pretty pleased with this group, we'll take a win," Rudy said. "As Jack Leaman used to say – legendary coach of Dr. J [Julius Erving] – I'm with you Jimmy, win or tie and that's the way I look at it, win or tie I'm happy."

The first goal of the game might not have happened if it wasn't for a misjudgment from the official. The play seemed small, but it gave UMass great position to score the game's first goal.

On the sideline toward Iona's goal the hall supposedly hit off senior midfielder Jenny Roehrig and went out of bounds. To the surprise of the Iona players, the referee called it in favor of UMass. With great position deep in Iona's territory, the pass went to sophomore midfielder Sydney Stoll and she moved toward the goal. She passed it off in front of the goal to a cutting freshman forward, Therese Smith. She connected for the score to break the 0-0 tie.

"It feels pretty cool, I mean everyone on the field is so good, it's really exciting to score my first goal because it's pretty hard to do, so I was lucky to be there," Smith said. "Sydney Stoll had a really good run off the flank and she crossed it and I knew it was going to come somewhere near me and it went through a bunch of people at the box. I was there and the goalie was off her line so I hit it in."

See RUDY on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass coach Jim Rudy celebrates with his team after recording the 300th victory of his career. The win was also Rudy's 226th as coach of the Minutewomen, with the remainder coming at Central Florida.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY ESTD. 1890

RAIN : HI: 76 LO: 57 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2007

UMass students take their business national

CampusLIVE creators Revamp UMass Site

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For one University of Massachusetts former student, not getting into the Isenberg School of Management fueled him to start his own national-based Web development company.

Jared Stenquist, the CEO of CampusLIVE, Inc. started work on his Website, then called Zoomasslinks.com, during his sophomore year in 2005 to help accommodate the growing need for a central online access point for students.

"I realized everything college students were looking for wasn't readily available for them on a Web page," Stenquist said.

To make the Web site known, Stenquist said he and some friends posted banners on campus. Despite these signs, he said there was mostly verbal advertising, estimating over 95 percent of site users come from word-of-mouth referrals.

"In 2006, I started to see the site was taking off. We had over half of UMass using it daily. I decided to spread out and try it at other schools as well."

When Stenquist started expanding to other New England universities, he got an unfavorable reaction, mostly about using the school names as part of the domain name. At this point he found a single "brand" to put different university sites under: CampusLIVE.

Currently, with nearly 75 percent of the UMass campus using the site, Stenquist said CampusLIVE will be expanding to 20 schools as far away as Florida, Arizona and Colorado.

"We're going to be expanding from those 20…after more success," he said.

Busy running CampusLIVE, Stenquist decided to disenroll at UMass to focus instead on developing and updating his business.

"I left UMass to start a Web development company…because I couldn't get into the business school. I'm hoping after this they will let me in."

The UMass students who created CampusLIVE are working on expanding sites to other colleges as far as Florida and the Southwest.

Currently based in Hadley, Stenquist owns the business with two other UMass students: vice president of Marketing Jeff Cahlidy, a graduate from ISOM, and Chief Technical Officer Boris Rezin, an enrolled senior.

Working full time, the CampusLIVE staff is planning to launch a new version of the site today.

"This new version really allows [students] to customize everything. It's really their site; it's not what we're deciding they should see."

The new version, which took over a year to complete, will keep all of the features CampusLIVE has become known for, while also adding listings and reviews for all area restaurants and an option to completely customize the page.

Even with the national expansion, Stenquist said the company's main focus is supporting college students.

"We're trying to give them the best possible site. We're trying to be transparent – not a giant company trying to get what they want from students."

'06 – '07 had highest rate of dorm fire deaths

BY NICK BUSH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The beginning of the school year brings an avalanche of warnings and cautions for both new and returning students: Do not drink too much; be careful walking alone at night; do not let your grades slip, etc.

However, students hardly ever give the topic of fire safety the thought it deserves.

After the 2006-2007 academic year became the most fatal ever for college campus fire deaths with 20 nationwide, there have been calls for increased fire safety measures.

In late August, the Consumer Product Safety Commission released a warning about the warning dangers of fires in college housing such as dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

According to National Fire Protection Association data, the estimated number of fires in campus housing has risen dramatically in recent years, from a low of 1,800 fires in 1998 to 3,300 fires in 2005. From 2000-2005 there were about 400 injuries and 39 deaths.

"Going to college marks an important milestone, and the CPSC doesn't want that to be marred by a potentially tragic fire," said acting CPSC chairman Nancy Nord.

"Students bring things from home to make dorm life more comfortable, including high-powered electronics and appliances. These items can make life easier but also more dangerous when used improperly or left unsupervised, particularly in small dorm rooms."

On August 21, the CPSC, U.S. Fire Administration, National Fire Protection Association and the University of Maryland's fire marshal urged students, parents, administrators and resident assistants to be aware of fire dangers in a joint press conference.

According to the CPSC, fires in college housing are most common when students are in their residences. And, while most of the fires are cooking-related (hot plates, microwaves, portable grills, etc.), the majority of fire deaths occur in the bedroom.

The CPSC and NFPA ultimately recommended six main college dorm fire safety tips:

First, students should cook in designated areas only and never leave cooking equipment unattended when in use. Cooking equipment causes 72 percent of dorm fires.

Secondly, most deaths and injuries occur in sleeping areas and are associated with smoking materials like tobacco products, candles and incense. Students should always extinguish flames before leaving the room or going to sleep.

Electrical products, portable heaters and lighting such as halogen lamps are the source of a large number of dorm fires.

Students are also recommended to keep combustibles away from heat sources and not to overload electrical outlets, extension cords and power strips.

Special care must be taken with holiday and seasonal decorations. Never use combustible materials in the building, and never block access to critical safety devices, such as fire extinguishers or exit doors.

The CPSC also told students to know their building evacuation plan in case something does go wrong and to refrain from ever tampering with or disabling smoke alarms.

According to online newsletter Campus Firewatch, a January 2000 fire at Seton Hall University in New Jersey

See FIRE on page 2

$2.1 million to research of exercise science

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A team of scientists at the University of Massachusetts have been awarded a four-year $2.1 million grant to study the long term effects of physical activity.

Patty Freedson, current chair of the Department of Kinesiology, is leading the project to design a device which will measure body motion, the characteristics of breathing and a sensor will determine whether the exercise is taking place indoors or outside, according to the University. The National Institute of Health (NIH) is funding the project as part of their Genes, Environment and Health initiative to study how genes, environmental exposure and lifestyle choices affect health.

According to Freedson, her previous ten years of research had concentrated around developing the

See HEALTH on page 2

MASSPIRG in favor of bill

BY LUCAS CORRIPIA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A new education act passed by Congress to help reduce the strain of paying for college has the support of the Massachusetts Student Public Interest Research Group.

On Friday, September 7, the College Cost Reduction and Access Act was passed by the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives. This act will provide additional aid to low-income students, as well as reduce the amount of debt students accumulate during school.

The act will now go to President Bush, who has already agreed to sign it into law.

UMass MASSPIRG Campus Organizer Christopher Burns, calls this act "an excellent first step in making higher education more affordable."

He commends the act on the increase in Pell Grant awards and the improved payment plan for low-income borrowers.

Though happy with the improvement, Burns insists that this is "just a first step" towards making higher education more accessible to everyone. SGA President Aaron Hufford also lauded the congressional act as a step in the right direction for higher education.

"The bipartisan votes for this legislation and the President's pledge to sign it into law are testament to the broad support for helping students and families pay for college," he said in a statement.

The most notable change from previous years is the increase in the amount of money awarded through Pell Grants. The minimum amount, which currently rests at $4,310, will increase by $400 for the next two years, $600 for the following two years, and $1,000 for every year afterward.

The new act also creates an income-based payment plan, which will allow low-income borrowers to make

See GRANTS on page 2

UM Architecture gets accredited

BY EDEN UNVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The architecture program at the University of Massachusetts has been officially accredited by the National Architecture Accrediting Board (NAAB). UMass is the first public institution in New England to receive this designation for an architecture program.

According to the UMass architecture and design website, NAAB is "the sole agency authorized to accredit U.S. professional degree programs in architecture." The website also comments on the difficulty that the accreditation process entails and, therefore, makes receiving this accreditation a very honorable distinction for the University.

"NAAB accreditation marks a significant achievement for our campus," says Joel W. Martin, dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts.

There are undergraduate and graduate programs available in the architecture and design program.

According to the UMass architecture and design website, the undergraduate program offers a Bachelor of Fine Arts in design degree and a minor in architectural studies degree while the graduate program offers a Master of Architecture degree and a Master of Science degree.

The website lists many different courses available, including classes in inhabitation, legacy, material, sustainability and terrain.

"Our program offers a collaborative, interdisciplinary education to aspiring architects," says Stephen Schreiber, director of the architecture design program.

This achievement has been a long time in the making, beginning in 1972 with the establishment of the architecture and design program.

The program was founded by Professor Emeritus Arnold Friedmann, according to the website. The process developed over the next few years, beginning as the UMass interior design architectural studies and became a program for both architecture and design. Finally, in 2002 the program became a candidate for NAAB accreditation.

On September 7, the architecture and design program hosted a reception, states the website, in honor of the accreditation. With accreditation awarded, many good things are expected for the future of this program.

"The city is going to survive; we are going to get through it. It's going to be very, very difficult time. I don't think we yet know the pain that we're going to feel when we find out who we lost, but the thing we have to focus on now is getting this city through this and surviving and being stronger for it."

– Rudolph Giuliani

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 6

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Scigien
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Dolichenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Scherr
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzwaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Joan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME A DAILY IN 1972. THE COLLEGIAN IS A MEMBER OF THE COLLEGE NEWS NETWORK. IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN BECAME THE COLLEGE SCARLET. IN 1914 AND 1921, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN MERGED WITH THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN. IN 1956, THE PAPER BECAME THE DAILY COLLEGIAN. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@daily-collegian.com

Device to Detect Body Motion

HEALTH from page 1

instruments to accurately capture how the human body reacts to physical activity.

"This project will move the field forward by incorporating several sensors into one small unit," she said. "With the addition of other sensors, we will likely be able to improve upon our ability to quantify physical activity dose for applications related to understanding how much activity is needed for specific health outcomes."

Freedson and her team of UMass researchers will be working with Response Applications LLC, a private firm based in Hanover, N.H. as well as a researcher from the University of Tennessee to develop the device.

According to the University, a partnership has been reached between the research team and Actigraph LLC, of Pensacola, FL. Once designed, constructed and tested in Freedson's UMass laboratory, the device will be manufactured by Actigraph.

The team is also developing statistical data processing methods that will combine the sensor output to determine the type of physical activity undertaken and the total amount of energy expended. By the end of the four-year grant, Freedson expects to have produced a working device.

The nation's medical research agency, NIH has allotted a total of $4M million in grants for the first round of the GEI.

Congress talks terror

BY EILEEN SULLIVAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

Weapons of mass destruction, small boats packed with explosives and Islamic radicalization are the greatest terrorist threats facing the country, top U.S. security officials said Monday on the eve of the sixth anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

The officials told Congress the country is much better prepared to face terror threats than it was then, but that terrorists' desire to attack the United States remains strong — an assertion that has yet to be fully accepted by the American public, according to a new poll.

"The enemy is not standing still. They are constantly revising their tactics and adapting their strategy and their capabilities," said Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff. "And if we stand still — or worse yet, if we retreat — we are going to be handing them an advantage that we dare not see them hold."

He said the threat of a USS Cole-type attack on U.S. ports — where a small boat packed with explosives detonates in a harbor — is one of his top concerns.

And while the department's goal is to keep nuclear weapons from entering the country, he said it also is focusing on how it would respond should a nuclear device get through and explode — particularly how to identify and track the nuclear materials. Chertoff also said the department is putting in place new screening regulations that would require providing information on flight crews and passengers before a private aircraft departs from overseas bound for the United States.

The radicalization of potential new terrorists, in the U.S. and abroad, is another growing concern, the intelligence officials said at the hearing on the nation's terrorism preparedness.

FBI Director Robert S. Mueller said there is already a problem with radicalization in the United States, and the Internet makes recruiting people to the radical cause much easier. He said working with state and local law enforcement and reaching out to Muslim and South Asian communities is critical to root out violent extremists in American communities.

The U.S. has disrupted several homegrown plots and has helped disrupt overseas plots, most recently last week when three Islamic terror suspects were arrested in Germany. Director of National Intelligence Mike McConnell said monitoring overseas conversations was key to catching the suspected German terrorists.

Ohio family wins $314 million

BY STEVE HERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — A retired auto worker and his two adult children claimed a $314 million Powerball jackpot Monday after waiting two weeks to step forward. "I know the world is going to turn upside down," said David W. Coterel, 65, of Riverside, Oh.

Coterel's daughter, Lynn Hiles, 46, said she has quit her job as a postal worker in Dayton, Oh. Her 42-year-old brother, David W. Coterel Jr., recently took a buyout from his job at an auto-parts plant.

Neither has any children, and their mother, Dorothy, died of cancer three years ago.

The family decided to take the cash option on the prize from the Aug. 25 drawing, meaning they will collect $145,985,099 before taxes. Hoosier Lottery executive director Kathryn Denborn said.

The elder Coterel, 65, who is retired from General Motors, bought the quick-pick ticket the afternoon of the drawing.

"I lost it," he said of learning he had the winning ticket. "I'm an emotional person, but I really lost it."

The winning ticket bearing the numbers 2, 8, 23, 29, 35 and Powerball 19 was bought at a Speedway convenience store in Richmond, along the Indiana-Ohio state line about 60 miles east of Indianapolis.

The store where the winning ticket was sold is about 3 miles on U.S. 40 from another Speedway store that sold the winning ticket for a $295.7 million Powerball jackpot to a group of 13 co-workers from a factory in suburban Columbus, Oh., in July 1998.

The 1998 jackpot was the largest of its kind to that point. Last month's jackpot is the fourth-largest in the 22-year history of the multistate Powerball game.

Powerball is played in 29 states, Washington, D.C., and the U.S. Virgin Islands. The record jackpot was $365 million won by eight workers at a Nebraska meatpacking plant in February 2006.

The Coterel family of Ohio is certainly smiling about their $314.3 million Powerball winnings.

Seton Hall Tragedy Cautions Students

FIRE from page 1

brought much-needed attention to the perils of college fires.

The fire began when a common area in a Seton Hall dorm caught fire after two students ignited a banner from a bulletin board. The fire spread silently and quickly to furniture, killing three students and injuring 58 more.

The incident led to tougher laws in New Jersey that mandate sprinkler systems in all dorms, fraternities and sororities.

Layers of old paint on dormitory walls in many cases contribute to their flammability.

The Boston Globe reported last month about a Massachusetts company that makes fire-resistant coatings, which is already being used on the UMass Lowell campus.

"Dormitories are repainted every year, and some of these dorms are 20 or 30 or 40 years old, so we've got paint that's built up and is a natural source of fuel for a fire," said Bob Pliskin, vice president of sales for Bradford Industries.

Pliskin went on to note that the company's PyroTarp paint can cover layers of old paint so they don't easily turn into fuel for a fire. UMass Lowell has used the paint on many of its new lab buildings and on renovations of older, timber-based buildings.

Loans to increase

GRANTS from page 1

more reasonable payments. Under this new agreement, borrowers will be paying 15 percent of their income if it is 150 percent above the poverty line. Interest rates will also be reduced for low and middle-class borrowers receiving Stafford loans.

According to Buford, "the bill trims excessive subsidies that benefit a handful of banks and directs them to millions of students and families who are working to pay for college."

The new act will also finance an increase in spending for education. Lenders will receive a smaller rate of return for offering loans and a slightly smaller reinsurance rate from the federal government. These new rates will not affect taxpayers.

First Week at the DCs, hope you enjoyed it. The Best is yet to come!
Live Well, Eat Smart

Guest Chef Series · Restaurant Nights · Fresh Local Produce · Alaska Wild & Natural Seafood Week · Lobster Night · Small Plate, Big Flavor

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Be A Local Hero Buy locally Grown
2007 Grand Prize Winner
YCMP
WIRELESS ACCESS

SEP 11 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

September 11: a personal reflection

Ed Cutting

The endless summer of 2001 was an era of innocence. The Soviet Union had imploded a decade earlier, and the American military had shifted into a social-service agency. Gas was cheap, the economy was good, and evil was no more.

We had time to be concerned about trivialities.

The nation was shocked to learn that, like many college students, the Bush daughters would have fake IDs and be drinking beer before their twenty-first birthdays. And then there was the ongoing saga of the missing Chandra Levy and the question of if Condit did it. Congressman Gary Condit (D-CA) finally admitted to having an affair with his attractive intern, but he continued to deny any responsibility for her disappearance.

This is what we were concerned about back in 2001. The previous year's election had been little more than a 'we good, you bad' spite fest as there really were no true national issues of debate. And like the clear blue skies that precede a hurricane, we had no idea of the storm on the horizon.

We lived in a very different world that sunny September morning.

On Tuesday, September 11th, I had work to do. Sure I had heard that a small private plane had hit the World Trade Center, but that sort of thing had happened before. Back in 1945, a B-25 had hit the fog-obscured Empire State building.

Besides, it was warm and somewhat humid in Amherst that morning, and I assumed that coastal fog might not have yet burnt off down in NYC.

I wasn't really concerned when I heard that a two-engine plane had hit the other tower as well. Something was up, but Matt Drudge would have the details that evening. I had work to do.

Chatter about the Pentagon got my attention. It was logically inconsistent because I thought this was happening in New York. And when I heard talk of a fire by the helipad of the Pentagon, the Pentagon in Washington, I didn't have work to do anymore.

It finally dawned on me that there was a reason why Rock-102 hadn't been playing music that morning. Or why the commercials that one tunes out had apparently been missing that morning.

"What was coming next?" I wondered. Was I physically safe where I sat, and what resources did I have within reach to facilitate my survival?

"We lived in a very different world that sunny September morning."

And what was coming next as this clearly was a whole lot more than even a few nuts blowing stuff up, like had happened in Oklahoma City a few years earlier. It was clear that this was not a good situation and starting to get scary.

When the first tower fell, the radio newscaster was openly skeptical of the reporters in the field. One reporter finally said, "All I can tell you is that the dust is starting to clear, and the tower isn't there." But like the newscaster, I hadn't seen the actual pictures of what was happening and didn't quite believe that the actual building had fallen – debris falling perhaps but not the actual building. Things like that don't happen...

Someone had set up a television in the lobby of the School of Management. There was an atmosphere that had never existed before or afterwards. The MBA students were actually conversing with the janitors; professors and students were talking as equals. It was a unique afternoon.

When it was us Americans versus an unknown and quite evil "them," partisanship briefly ended, and folks forgot about hanging and dangling chads.

It was also a case where bad information was worse than none. Initial reports were that Flight 93 had crashed near Philadelphia, and one young MBA student was desperately asking everyone she could find if they had heard anything more because her family lived in Philadelphia. Others were counting windows on the burning towers and trying to figure out if the people jumping to their deaths, many literally on fire, were their family or friends. The bodies have been edited out of the footage you see today, but the situation was so far beyond the comprehension of our 90's peacetime perspective that the networks were broadcasting raw feed in real time.

I distinctly remember young couples holding hands as they fell to their deaths.

I also remember the footage of the celebrations in Palestine and elsewhere. Not mentioned today is just how much of the Islamic world celebrated this atrocity, or that other countries that often don't like us offered to help. One African tribe offered to send 16 cows, a genuine gesture from a people whom we had helped during a past famine.

The other thing that needs to be remembered from that day is that many government officials wisely decided that petty protocols and most rules simply didn't apply anymore. A flotilla of private boats, none licensed for passenger transport, evacuated thousands to the Jersey Shore, and the Coast Guard ignored all the laws being broken. Private companies sent heavy equipment from construction sites throughout the city, and the NYPD ignored the fact that this stuff was being driven, quite illegally, right through downtown.

September 11th brought this country together, even here in Amherst.

Ed Cutting is a UMass graduate student. He can be reached at ed.cutting@yahoo.com.

Denying the obvious

Joshua H. Wilder

Who would have thought that so much controversy could be stirred up in Idaho? It isn't very often that the state graces the pages of this flagship daily; but when a story this twisted and ridiculous comes to a head, someone has to keep it relevant.

I am talking, of course, about the mushroom cloud of outrage surrounding Senator Larry Craig. This man, who in 2004 was considered a possible member of President Bush's cabinet, has followed the trend of many of his Republican colleagues this year – getting caught for lewd conduct.

The trouble all began in June when Craig was arrested in a Minneapolis, MN, airport men's room, a place police had been monitoring for sexual activity. According to police, Craig used a foot-tapping signal to signify his interest, touched the foot of an undercover officer in the next stall and then reached under the stall. Soon after that, he got to try on a pair of shiny handcuffs – whoops.

Interestingly enough, that same month Craig pleaded guilty to charges stemming from the incident without consulting a lawyer or telling his family about what happened. In an incredibly lame attempt to clear his name, Craig told reporters at a news conference that he regretted his decision to plead guilty, that police had misconstrued his actions, and that he was not gay.

It is a bit confusing to the casual observer to see Craig– a man who strongly favored a ban on same-sex marriage, was heavily against the right to choose, and a member of the Republican Party in one of the most conservative states– being caught taking part in the conduct he spent his political career denouncing.

Politicians have a way of making the unthinkable into reality, especially when it comes to republicans and evangelicals. Craig's name can now be added to an already sizeable list of people who talk about morals and values and then go against what they preach. People like Mark Foley and Ted Haggard are known for saying one thing and doing another.

Republicans may have a hard time taking this news. While yet another key figure in their party makes a mockery of their values and agenda, it must be getting easier for republicans to handle these sort of episodes, since they seem to be taking place more often.

It seemed like the outrage shared by republicans was legitimate but misplaced. The real problem with what "Politicians have a way of making the unthinkable into reality."

Craig did was that it was in a public place, an airport, and that he was messing with an undercover cop. Such acts should only take place in private areas – that is the cardinal rule, after all. Streets and buildings are for business transactions, and we can't turn downtown into Chippendales.

But tune into talk radio, or watch pundits on the nightly debate shows. What was their hot-button issue? The main focus was on the fact that Craig attempted a sexual act with a man, going against red state American values. Had a Massachusetts senator been caught at a gay bar in Provincetown, this story would be familiar and routine. But Idaho?

Let's face it. Politicians have affairs all the time. Kennedy had various mistresses over the years; we all remember what happened with Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinski. This is nothing new. Republicans, however, like to talk a big game. Sex is an evil, hedonistic activity reserved for those who have no sense of morals and values.

This is why the government spends our hard-earned tax dollars to fund abstinence-only initiatives in high schools, because after all, there are no better ways to funnel funds. It is all about being a family man, having family values and never crossing the line.

That is why it was particularly hilarious to see Craig bring his children out for the news conference; they acted as a visual prop. This idea was probably the brain child of the spinster in charge of his damage control public-relations unit. If people see him standing side by side with his wife and kids, they will realize that in order to have those kids the two of them had to have sex.

Then maybe if the public can believe he had kids they could also believe that this incident was just one big misunderstanding. Craig wasn't looking for sex; he just wanted to see what was over in the next stall.

Sorry Senator, but it doesn't work that way. You weren't the first person to get caught for this, and you won't be the last. What you did was embarrassing and lewd but not the worst thing to get caught for. What is despicable is that you think the American people are dumb enough to believe your story. We might not be producing as many engineers anymore, but even we can see right through this one.

What lesson can be learned from this? Perhaps those who talk a lot about family values and the sanctity of marriage are compensating for their own vices. Talk is cheap, especially from politicians.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

Lousy housing

Joe Meloni

I've come to grips with a few things since I started going to school here. As a journalism major I've accepted the invariably uncomfortable conditions in Hartlett. And as a School of Management drop-out, I've realized it's the only school at UMass with alumni who actually donate money.

Sadly enough, we've all also grown used to the fact that our administration has no idea exactly what is in the best interest of its students. With the latest changes to its housing policy, the administration hasn't done anything to change my feelings.

The purpose of higher education is to aid one's maturation process. Your professors challenge your mind to grow, and living away from your parents eventually sparks a sense of independence. But there's another aspect of one's personal development that these four years are responsible for.

The freedom of college life allows for greater social interaction. For the first time, people are exposed to individuals from different backgrounds. But thanks to the out-of-touch bozos who run this University, freshman now have less opportunity than ever to meet people different from themselves. It's difficult to expand your mind when everyone you live with, eat with, and party with comes from a town similar to the one you grew up in.

"I have no statistics to substantiate my claims. All I have is four years of experience in Southwest."

The administration decided to stick freshmen in dorms around campus once notorious for partying – a bizarre effort to cut off their supply of alcohol and parties. The president and deans of various (read: irrelevant) offices provided numerous reasons for their decision. By stuffing all first-year students into dorms away from evil upperclassmen, rich parents from Long Island might actually believe that UMass isn't the party school they thought it was. Why do you think the administration decided to build the North Apartments? They could've built more dormitories as ugly and uncomfortable as the rest of them, but they wanted to attract more Abercrombie and rid themselves of all that putrid Old Navy.

One of the things the administration failed to realize is that freshmen need to learn about UMass. I don't mean how to locate buildings or the Textbook Annex; I'm referring to the things that actually affect students on a daily basis. By banishing them into all-freshmen dorms, they'll probably never learn how to read the PVTA schedule. They'll never learn that Chemistry 100 is the easiest way to rid yourself of the painfully unnecessary physical science requirement. And even though Mr. Gargano doesn't – or chooses not to – realize, those who live in all-freshmen dorms do far greater damage than those who don't. The presence of upperclassmen allows younger students to see that you can drink without being an idiot. RAs aren't positive examples because they immediately become enemies given the authority they represent. Those who live in freshmen dorms do things like party on Tuesdays and play Halo until 4 a.m., mainly because they have no one there to advise against it.

I have no statistics to substantiate my claims. All I have is four years of experience in Southwest. I know that place as well as any one and I've seen everything there is to see. I've witnessed the riots after the Red Sox beat the Yankees in 2004 during my freshman year, and I saw the damage following our football team's loss in the 2006 national championship game upon arriving back to my room on the following morning. And from what I remember, it was residents of Pierpont and Moore spilling out into Southwest because they thought, as UMass students, they had some ridiculous responsibility to break things. Perhaps if they had a few more juniors and seniors around they would've given it a second thought.

Upperclassmen certainly aren't entirely innocent of such stupidity. Just check the police log every weekend. But the vast majority partake in all the festivities that make UMass great, and only a few do that which tarnishes its reputation.

The traits of UMass students that those in charge work so hard to change are the very things they cannot possibly fix. By doing all of this, they're merely making it even harder for freshmen to learn about all that UMass has to offer them.

Stop taking everything that the Princeton Review says seriously. More importantly, consider the concerns of those who actually go to school here. Actually no, the Princeton Review has listed UMass among the top 20 in a few other things in the recent past. Apparently, none of us ever study, and it's impossible to get anything done in Whitmore.

But that's not as important as keeping people from drinking, is it?

Joe Meloni is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Public health care? You're sick

Greg Collins

Michael Moore's recently-released documentary, "Sicko," offers a myopic perspective about America's health-care industry. Moore compares the privatized U.S. health care system to single-payer methods in Cuba and Europe where power is concentrated in central governments to provide health coverage to their citizens.

In portraying this system as the ideal foundation on which America should formulate its health care policy, he suggests that single-payer systems are the best way to ensure that people will be able to get health care in the most efficient way possible. The opposite is true, in fact; health care through private means enables people to obtain health coverage more quickly, at a lower cost and with better quality than individuals living under a government-dictated system.

This is because people use their own money more wisely than if it were controlled by a distant party, a principle economist Milton Friedman elucidated decades ago which has proven to be correct throughout the history of governmental welfare programs.

For instance, one common complaint about socialist health care systems in Canada and France is that people who need urgent care are less likely to receive it quickly than if health care were private. Contrary to the message conveyed in "Sicko," there are long waiting lines in Europe and Canada for people who are unable to obtain urgent care. This is because of government-mandated restrictions concerning which patients can see which physicians, the number of physicians employed and drugs that the government feels is not safe enough to expose to the market, among other factors.

These shortcomings are not personal attacks on countries like Canada or France. Yet they reflect the inherent constraints of government-controlled industries which restrict the decision-making processes of individuals to pursue health coverage the best way they see fit.

"People use their own money more wisely than if it were controlled by a distant party."

Imagine if the Food and Drug Administration, a branch of the federal government, prevented a drug developed overseas from being used by a pharmaceutical company or hospital to treat a patient whose particular medical condition could not have been alleviated by the current drugs on the market allowed by the FDA.

Even if the FDA did not exist, the drug still would have to be examined by the private pharmaceutical company or a doctor to ensure its safety. If they confirmed that the drug was safe enough, then the patient would have been able to take the medication, an opportunity he may not have had if the FDA intruded in this health-care provider to patient relationship.

This highlights one of the fundamental fallacies of those who support government programs. Just because the government does not provide something directly to individuals does not mean that they will not have access to it. On the contrary, not only will people have greater access to it, but the specific service or commodity will be more affordable. For instance, think about how food is allocated in the United States.

Few would doubt that food is a necessary staple for living, so it would be catastrophic if food prices were so high that few would be able to afford it. But there are countless grocery stores, restaurants, deli shops and chain stores, like the perpetually-vilified Wal-Mart, in which food prices are very low. This condition enables poor, middle class and rich people to buy the type and price of food in accordance with their own judgment concerning how much they can afford and how much they will eat, among other variables.

The reason why the federal government does not, and should not, guarantee that all households have fruits and vegetables is that people already have expanded access to these foods through private markets. The very people who liberal economists and sociologists identify as the "poor" are the same people who have far greater access to food and services than other "poor" people had decades ago.

Similarly, the fact that America does not have a complete, single-payer health care system does not mean that Americans will not be able to be healthy. Medical advances here are the most progressive than any place else in the world, which is why it is common for Canadians to come to the U.S. for medical care, even if it is less expensive in Canada.

In order for America to improve its health care system further, it should lower taxes used by the federal government for centrally planned programs and avoid bureaucratic insurance mandates.

Unfortunately, the thinking behind the policies supported by Moore and liberal politicians demeans the ability of individuals, whether they are rich or poor, black, white or brown, to make informed decisions concerning what health care plan is right for them. Only when government guarantees people this freedom will the ornament of liberty continue to shine brighter in America than in any other place in the world.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

SEP
11
2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Kanye and 50 square off

Rap star drops new album

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been two years since Kanye West's runaway success "Late Registration"; and ever since then, the cognoscenti have awaited a new product. There has been much ado about West's showdown with fellow rap titan 50 Cent, who releases his third album, "Curtis," today, making it the Super Bowl of rap.

Rap bloggers and illuminati had dreamt up many different track-listings for a third album since then, begging West to release songs like "Bittersweet," a powerful collaboration with John Mayer , which is now an iTunes bonus track for "Graduation."

It will be interesting to see who sells more; however, it will be irrelevant. Both 50 Cent and Kanye's CDs will probably be the best of the year as far as rap goes, and most rap fans will just get both at some point. While 50 Cent is a formidable opponent with several hot singles on the charts, Kanye's nearly obsessive devotion to his art and his combination of bravado and vulnerability (the latter of which 50 Cent lacks), make his work survive more listens and stands the test of time better than 50's.

"Graduation" is on par with West's two other juggernaut CDs, yet it contains some of his best and worst songs. Most listeners have astronomical expectations for the disc, which makes Kanye's job much harder than your average rapper's.

There are some disappointing moments on this CD, but there are also some pleasant surprises. Lyrically, Kanye is as clever and introspective as ever, if not more. While few tracks could be as instantly infectious as "Gold Digger" or as intricate as "Drive Slow," this is a disc that improves after a few listens.

Some will pick up the CD and be immediately confused. The cover art is just weird, showing his familiar mascot, the teddy bear, this time launched high above the world. This continues the theme for West recently, his sense of conquering the music industry and his rivals. Kanye has, in recent months, seemed extremely sensitive about media criticism and the epidemic of so-called "haters," a feeling that is reflected in Graduation's cranked intensity. Few people expected that someone who made five beats a day for three summers could get any more intense, but it's apparent that West is more determined than ever to silence critics. This is his attempt at erasing all doubt to his pre-eminence in both hip-hop and pop realms.

Many were also surprised by Graduation's two singles, "Can't Tell Me Nothin'" and "Stronger," both of which exemplify completely new ground for him. The former is a slow, gloomy organ-based track addressed specifically to his detractors in a style influenced by the slow flows of Southern rappers, particularly of the Atlanta stock. "Stronger" is his most adventurous song to date, switching between a driving dance-disco beat familiar to the techno-club scene and a more typically West ultra-syncopated rap beat. Somehow, the man makes it work, and it is perhaps the most complex backing track of any rap single of his career or any, experimenting with banging, synth-happy breakdowns, elliptical song patterns, and alternating backbeats. It's amazing that people can dance to it, but they can.

Other stand-out tracks include the up-coming single, "The Good Life," which features the pitch-corrector and computer-loving T-Pain in an energetic sing-along. It may be Kanye West's catchiest song and it feels like you're in a stadium when you hear it. Another of note is "Barry Bonds," with guest Lil' Wayne. The beat reminds the listener of the previous West track "Drive Slow," another of West's greatest achievements.

"Drunk and Hot Girls" bemoans the difficulty of getting drunk girls to bed (without getting puked on) and with resisting them. "We go through too many bulls just to mess with these drunk and hot girls," he realizes. Most will agree. This track demonstrates West's unique ability to create a mood: the song is practically a dirge, its tune something out of a funeral; you can feel his frustration listening to it.

But it's overshadowed by the one that follows it, "Flashing Lights," which may be the best song Kanye has ever released, powered by a Nate Dogg-like hook and even more synthesizers than "Stronger."

The version of "Homecoming" is a major disappointment, because the mix tape version of it is much better. Chris Martin, the falsetto-happy kind of pop singer than Yeezy seems to prefer, sings a different hook, apparently of his own creation. The beat sounds like a sped-up Coldplay song, which doesn't fit. The original version with John Legend is undoubtedly superior, but the masses will have to exchange Legend's soulfulness for Martin's laid-back crooning.

"Big Brother" explores the Louis Vuitton Don's mixed emotions toward Jay-Z, something that 50 Cent never would have the courage to do. Here 'Ye is unashamed to show his emotions to the world, his love for another man, in an industry that prides itself on hyper-masculinity and constant reminders of toughness. It seems that at least once every CD Kanye has an emotional song, (see "Family Business" or "Hey Mama") One can't help but wonder what Jay-Z thinks about so much man-on-man love on this record.

This ultimately leads us to the true significance of "Graduation." Rap's image now consists of spinning rims, simple and repetitive dance songs, glorified promiscuity and dissipation, and behind all of this, narcissism. West rises above all of these things on "Graduation," posturing himself again as the thinking man's MC, as emotionally conflicted and complicated, as cleverly funny at times and bitingly serious at others.

West graduates from typical rap tropes and mainstream juvenilia, from the low standards and IQ's of the pop charts, and while not the best rapper alive shows himself to be the maker of simply the best rap songs out there. Consequently it doesn't matter if 50 Cent outsells him and is more popular, Kanye is an artist in the truest sense of the word, and he has survived taking another gamble with "Graduation."

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstaffor at student.umass.edu

KANYE WEST GRADUATION
ROC-A-FELLA RECORDS
4/5

COURTESY KANYEWEST.COM

Kanye West's new album "Graduation" meets expectations of many rap fans and makes it obvious that he spends more time focusing on his music than other rappers focus on their own.

Hanson's career breaks decade mark

BY TERESA REILLY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"MmmBop" was released in 1997, and Hanson has been type cast ever since. Now, they've grown up as, the three brothers from Oklahoma have cut their hair, gone through puberty and even created their own record label over the past ten years.

In their first fully-independent release, "The Walk," Hanson maintains their pop status but with their own rock feel. This album finally portrays who Hanson truly is.

The record starts off with an African choir singing "Ngi Ne Themba" ("I Have Hope" in Zulu). The choir makes appearances throughout the album, most notably in "Great Divide," the first track and single. All proceeds from the single, if downloaded on iTunes, will go to an HIV center in Africa. The track is a powerful song that accurately depicts the message of breaking down discrimination and helping out our neighbors both locally and overseas.

Also available on iTunes is the podcast series "Taking the Walk" that follows Hanson through the making of this new album. It shows in depth footage of everything from the songwriting process to recording to the struggles of operating their own label.

The central theme of the album is summed up on the last track, "The Walk." Zac Hanson sings about getting across the tightrope of life, struggling against all odds while completely on your own, and of knowing you might fall but taking the risk anyway. The song is beautifully paced and has a great message.

Zac takes the lead on almost half the songs, which is something new for the band since Taylor Hanson usually holds the spot. "Go," Hanson's next single, is sung by Zac and speaks of a relationship gone awry. It holds the same pace as "The Walk" and follows along with the theme of life's lessons.

There are some more religiously motivated songs such as "Fire on the Mountain", which has many Biblical references. Some are upbeat songs about looking for a "Blue Sky" or songs dealing with a girl who can't stop making mistakes and gets into a rut in "Watch Over Me."

Perhaps the one thing musicians know best is music itself. "Been There Before" is a song about the power of rock 'n' roll but at the same time, is a pure rock song in and of itself. Every aspect of music that is written about in this song is played out within the cords.

Every Hanson album has to have that one song that die-hard fans, who have followed the band over the course of ten years, can pick out and know that these are the same guys. "Georgia" is that song. It is classic Hanson, with the fun lyrics and upbeat tempo that just makes you want to bop your head.

Hanson tends to have an upbeat feel in general with somewhat of a serious undertone. "MmmBop," for example, may not be entirely what you think it is. This record is the same way, full of life secrets and metaphors. Listen carefully.

Hanson is currently touring the United States in support of this release, which is available now in stores. Catch them September 21st in Hartford, CT.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly at student.umass.edu.

HANSON
THE WALK
3 CAR GARAGE RECORDS
4/5

Against Me! maintains stage energy

BY OLGA DESHCHENKO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There is a wide range of reasons why so many people cough up money to go to concerts. Reasons that stretch far ahead of the obvious. While some attend simply because of their love for the performer's lyrics and music, others fill up venues because certain artists tend to formulate a complete and worthy experience that leaves a lasting impression.

Few artists are able to connect with their audience beyond visible means to breed that communal feeling of solidarity and to remove all boundaries. Last Thursday, punk/rock band Against Me! successfully defended their membership in that select group of artists on the stage of Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton.

The night, however, did not kick off with a bang. Only about twenty people were interested in the entire length of David Dondero's set, who was the opener that evening. Tattooed and dressed in black, groups of Against Me! fans impatiently paced outside the venue. Most of them would not be caught dead listening to Dondero's music.

Dondero was an unlikely opener for Against Me!, a band that has been known to have a very specific fan base, one that is hungry for energetic and fast songs that are stuffed with a distaste for the political and unjust. Dondero's work, carefully progressive and deeply emotional, did little to impress the audience. Merely closing one's eyes immediately transported the emo/pop band Bright Eyes to the venue: the sounds of the two artists are indistinguishable.

By the time Dondero was covering "California Blues" by Jimmie Rodgers, more people trickled in, mostly fans of Matt and Kim, a band that was coming up next.

Luckily, the electric duo who invaded the stage following Dondero revived the night. As Matt and Kim walked on stage, the crowd began to cheer, hoping to hear something with a lively jolt. Matt announced that he just downed a Red Bull energy drink and put one of his hands up in the air, signaling Kim to start playing the drums. Matt and Kim's catchy beats transferred onto the audience as the crowd jumped up and down , clapping.

Kim beat the drums vigorously but did not take the smile off her face, even for a second. She looked as if there was nothing in the world she would rather be doing than playing for the crowd at that moment. The duo dedicated their single "Yeah Yea" to Against Me!, thanking the band for taking them along on the tour.

Like a new wave pop conductor, Matt signaled Kim when to begin and pause in her drum beating. Right before the second chorus of "Yeah Yea," Matt's keyboard jack got unplugged from the amplifier and he raised his hand, causing Kim to pause her drumming.

"Okay, hold on, this amp broke. You! You stay up there," he ordered a fan in the front, who climbed on top of someone's shoulders.

Within seconds, the amp was fixed and Matt raised his hand in the air.

"You still up?" He checked on the fan. "Okay, good."

Matt and Kim completed the song with just as much energy as they started it, not letting the small technical difficulty get in the way of their performance.

During their set, Matt referred to several locations in Northampton, praising it for being his "big city" escape while he was growing up in southern Vermont. The energy in the venue was overwhelming as Matt and Kim proved that a crowd can be fully energized merely with a set of drums and a

See AGAINST ME! on page 6

COURTESY KANYEWEST.COM

Against Me! fans were hesitant to arrive but were slow to leave after the band's set at the Pearl Street Night Club.

"Georgia," a classic Hanson tune, shows off Taylor Hanson's (above) vocals and wide range of musical ability.

Band allows fans onstage during last song keyboard. The duo played their set as if it was their last ever, giving it all they had.

AGAINST ME! from page 5

"This is the best show on tour yet!" Matt screamed out.

The crowd was just as pleased as the duo's keyboardist. As Matt and Kim got off the stage, the energy of the audience had nowhere to escape. It lurked in the venue until just about 9 p.m., when people began chanting: "Against Me! Against Me!" until the band finally walked out on stage and ripped into "New Wave;" undoubtedly rousing the dormant remainder in the audience.

It is fairly easy for a band like Against Me! to put out a great record but still fail to recreate that same sound at a venue. Luckily, the band defied the stereotypical trap of good albums and lousy live performances with an exceptionally well-delivered set. Against Me! played selections from several albums, making sure the audience got a taste of the brand new "Thrash Unreal" in all of its live version glory, but also remembering to reinforce old favorites such as "Sink, Florida, Sink" and "Miami."

Against Me! perfectly sustained the continuous elevation of liveliness and "oomph" by playing nonstop- no conversation, breaks or preaching about issues found in their lyrics. The crowd was certainly appreciative.

In the end, the band and their fans merged in unanimity, in the most literal sense. Thanks to the lack of metal barricades at the venue, dozens of Against Me! fans climbed up on stage during the last song. Several people sang and stood alongside the members of Against Me!, visibly paralyzed by pure exhilaration. Regardless of being in the middle of huddled fans, the band continued playing, as if in a living room full of good friends. Against Me's! signature sing-a-long fist pumping will linger at Pearl Street for quite some time.

Olga Deshchenko can be reached at odeschc at student.umass.edu

Against Me! performed material from various albums to give the audience a taste of every phase of the band's long history. The band played throughout the show, leaving no room for conversation or a break from dancing.

Interpol releases sexual album

COURTESY INTERPOLNYC.COM

Interpol signed to a major record company, leaving their indie roots behind for their new release "Our Love to Admire."

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Interpol is all about signature. They have a signature sound of gloom, a signature look of refinement, and a specific aura of confidence. On their new album, vocalist-guitarist Paul Banks, bassist-keyboardist Carlos Dengler, guitarist-vocalist Daniel Kessler and drummer Sam Fogarino use these signatures and take their band a step further. They employ more complicated arrangements while keeping their lyrics on track with their earlier songs.

This album was recorded from November 2006 to May 2007 in the band's home city, New York. Even though this is their first album on major-label Capitol Records, after departing from indie-label Matador, Interpol doesn't lose any of their indie charm.

The band experimented with complicated arrangements, including keyboards and violins. Each track is infested with Paul Bank's signature vocal style of emotionless emotion; dark melodies, strong bass lines and framing drum beats, just like on 2002's "Turn on the Bright Lights" and 2004's "Antics."

The album's opening track, "Pioneer to the Falls," is the perfect example of why Interpol is so great. It starts off with quiet notes, until Paul Bank's voice comes in. Then after the first verse, the other instruments blend in, but the guitar stays in the foreground. Instrumental solos break up each verse. "Girl, I know you tried. You fly straight into my heart...But here comes the falls." It's a quiet but strong opener.

The first five songs are fantastic; most noticeably "No I in Threesome," "The Scale" and "The Heinrich Maneuver" (the album's first single). The first single is noticeably catchy as Paul Banks sings "You keep it movin' to your soul's delight. Now I've tried the brakes...Today my heart swings."

The middle of the album is plagued with lyrical and musical repetition including "Rest My Chemistry," and "Mammoth." "Wrecking Ball" is typical in that it features a simile that extends throughout the whole song. "Who Do You Think" walks the line of being redundant but stays on the right side as it says "I only call them when I know I don't see them." But even in phrase reappearance, there is some Interpol head-bopping charm there. But it just takes about twenty listens or so to grasp it.

In the end, Interpol pulls it off successfully, more or less. The album is right on track with their previous two releases, but presents something new. Musically, it's a slightly more complicated record. Lyrically, the album is as sexually charged as always with metaphors and five-dollar words.

If you allowed Arcade Fire's "Neon Bible" to sit in your stereo for a while without formulating a final opinion on its value, this album will travel along a similar route. Overall, it's a grower. And once it does, it's something to admire.

Allie Roth can be reached at aroth a student.umass.edu

INTERPOL
OUR LOVE TO ADMIRE
CAPITAL RECORDS
3/5

Kanye's hot streak continues

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0060 90 AMHERST

ONLY IN AMHERST!
Rainbow Flags?
YES!
American Flags on 9/11?
NO!
Only is the republic of amherst.blogspot.com
OR
SEARCH: "Only in Amherst"

Know the signs. Save a life.

Suicide is the second leading cause of death among college students. Know the warning signs and get help for your friend, your roommate or yourself.

If someone:
- threatens to hurt or kill themselves
- seeks ways to kill themselves, like pills or firearms
- talks or writes about death, dying or suicide
- is abusing substances
- is socially withdrawn

call Mental Health Services, 545-2337 weekdays, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m. After hours, call University Health Services, 577-5000.

If it's an emergency, call 911.

National Suicide Prevention Week is September 9 – 15, 2007

UMassAmherst
University Health Services
www.umass.edu/uhs/mentalhealth

Arts & Living Writers' meeting
For anyone who is or wants to be an Arts & Living Writer
Thursday @ 7:30 p.m. in Collegian Newsroom
113 Campus Center Basement
e-mail Arts@dailycollegian.com for details

GW wins, Slack honored

SLU duo leads Billikens in defense of 2006 A-10 title

BY KATHERINE SARASOHN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

George Washington freshman forward, Kristen Slack, was named to the Soccer America Women's Team of the Week. Slack led the Colonials last week, scoring her first-career goal along with the first two assists of her career.

In her first game, she scored a goal in the 19th minute, which gave the Colonials (3-1-0) a 1-0 win over New Hampshire. Slack also assisted on both goals in the Colonial's 2-1 overtime win against Vermont.

A-10 Soccer

George Washington won the Vermont TD Banknorth Classic in Burlington, Vt.

TEAM TO BEAT

The league's head coaches selected Saint Louis as the preseason favorite to win the conference. The Billikens are two-time defending A-10 champions and hope to add their third consecutive in 2007.

The Billikens compiled a 15-4-2 overall record in 2006, including 7-2-0 in conference play while advancing to the second round of the NCAA tournament.

Julia Bradenberg and Lauren Olson lead the Billikens; Bradenberg was the 2006 A-10 Rookie of the Year.

Defending regular season champion, Charlotte was selected second behind Saint Louis. Dayton, Rhode Island and Massachusetts round out the Top 5. Fordham, the runner up in the 2006 Atlantic 10 championship game, has been picked to finish sixth.

The top six teams at the end of regular season play will advance to the single-elimination tournament.

The 2007 Atlantic 10 women's soccer championship will be held Nov. 8-11 at Charlotte's Transamerica Field.

DUQUESNE HIRES ZUNDEL

Dusquene hired new head coach in the offseason. Director of Athletics, Greg Amodio, named Tim Zundel head coach of the Dukes.

Zundel was the assistant head coach under James Walker for the past four years. He helped recruit freshmen classes for the 2006 and 2007 seasons that were rated in the Top 20 by Soccer Buzz Magazine in the mid-Atlantic region.

He began his coaching career at Sylvania (Ohio) Northview High School in 2000. During his three-year tenure, his teams won three consecutive Northern Lake League championships as well as advancing to the district regional finals each year. Zundel is a three-time NLL coach of the year. His teams ranked in the Top 10 in the state during the 2001 and 2002 seasons.

Zundel was also the assistant coach for Ohio North, an Olympic development program, in 2002 and 2003. He was a staff coach for Pacesetter Soccer Club from 2000 through 2002.

This Cleveland, Ohio, native is the fourth coach for Duquesne's women's soccer team, which began competing at the Division I level in 1995.

REED HONORED

Dayton senior goalie, Niki Reed, was honored by Soccer Buzz Magazine. She was named to the magazine's elite team of the week.

Reed opened the 2007 season with two shutouts, leading Dayton to a 2-0 start. Reed had 16 saves in the pair of shutout victories. She had 10 saves in the Flyer's 2-0 win over Cal Poly on Aug. 31. Reed followed up that performance with six saves in a 1-0 double-overtime win at Loyola-Marymount on Sept. 2.

These games marked the seventh and eighth career shutouts for this Fairfield, Ohio, native.

Katherine Sarasohn can be reached at ksarasohn@student.umass.edu.

AP changes poll rules after ASU win

FOOTBALL from page 8

fumble, recovered one and broke up two passes.

"Gian's a talented football player and really made a lot of plays for us a year ago, but the role Gian's taken in our defensive system has just been incredible," Hofstra coach Dave Cohen said. "You know just as far as getting checks and doing a better job with the off-the-field understanding of our package, our scheme and our system."

Barnes totaled 19 tackles, 10 solo, as the Dukes defense shutdown UNH quarterback Ricky Santos. UNH was shutdown in the second half, gaining 79 yards and scoring seven points.

"Justin has always had some off-field issues that bothered him from time to time, and we've got him focused now going into senior year," JMU coach Mickey Matthews said. "He's 6-foot-2, 220 pounds and can really run. He's a good player; there's never been a doubt about his ability to make plays."

ASU GETS CONSIDERATION

The Associated Press said last Thursday that NCAA Football Championship Sub-division schools are now eligible for its Top 25 poll.

This week Appalachian State received 19 votes, about 224 votes shy of No. 25 Texas A&M. Many AP writers expressed their interest to make the change because they feel it should be the best teams in the country no matter what division. However, USA Today poll will not change and will continue to only vote teams in the Football Bowl Subdivision, formally Division I-A.

NOT ALL CAN BE LIKE APP. STATE

Two CAA teams failed at the attempt to upset an FBS team. Maine (1-1) was blown out by Connecticut (2-0) 38-0 and Rhode Island (0-2) gave Army (1-1) a scare, losing 14-7 in overtime.

Rhode Island led 7-0 late in the first half on a 5-yard touchdown run by running back Tim Allen. Army tied the game on its opening drive in the second half on halfback Mike Viti's 2-yard run. On the first play in overtime, Black Knights quarterback Carson Williams threw a 25-yard touchdown pass to Justin Larson. Through two games William & Mary is averaging 47 points per game and Delaware is second with 45 points. Delaware true freshman running back Phillip Thaxton received CAA Rookie of the Week honors as he rushed for 177 on 12 carries ... W&M faced Virginia Military Institute for the 85th time in its long history, W&M easily won 63-16.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Tie with No. 8 SMU lifts SLU to No. 12

A-10 SOCCER from page 8

keepers played all 110 minutes of regulation, including two overtime periods.

The shutout was the 11th for Kuterbach in his four-year career and moves him into fifth place in Bucknell's history.

Senior midfielder Travis MacKenzie led the Dukes' offensive attack from the bench with three shots, including one of DU's three shots on goal.

The game can only be described as ugly for both sides, as the teams combined for 34 fouls and six yellow cards – three each. Duquesne committed twenty of these fouls, including six in the two overtime periods.

Both teams got more aggressive as the game went on, with four of the yellow cards handed out in the last overtime period, including one for each side at the close of the game.

The Dukes will join Richmond at the Nike Challenge Cup on Friday.

OTHER NEWS AND NOTES

Saint Louis jumped to No. 12 last week (from No. 22) with a tie against then-No. 8 Southern Methodist. However, the Billikens have struggled since then, managing only a 1-1 tie with unranked North Carolina State and losing to No. 2 Duke, 2-0 ... George Washington came back big against North Florida Friday, scoring four unanswered goals to win, 4-3, after falling behind, 3-0, in the first ten minutes of the game. Sophomore midfielder Luke Wildy scored the game-winning goal just over two minutes into the first overtime period ... After 86 minutes of a scoreless tie, St. Bonaventure and Siena both recorded goals in the final three minutes of regulation to fight to a 1-1, double-overtime tie ... Charlotte lost to tournament host College of Charleston 2-0 in the championship game of the school's namesake tournament. They had been riding a two-game winning streak prior to the loss and are now 3-3-0 ... Dayton (2-1-1) fouled 15 times en route to a 2-1 loss against Davidson, the Flyers' first loss of the season.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu.

YANKEE CANDLE®
a passion for fragrance™

At The Yankee Candle Company, Inc., we care about our employees' success. If you are ready to be recognized for your hard work, come begin a bright career with us!

Where bright careers begin.

Welcome Back Students!

Come to our Job Fair!

Full- & Part-time Positions!

Wednesday, September 12
10am - 2pm & 4pm - 7pm

Yankee Candle Fitness Facility next to Yankee Candle Village, South Deerfield, MA

If you are unable to attend, please apply in person Mon-Fri 8:30am-5:00pm at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA or online at: www.yankeecandle.com

EOE/AA

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
RT. 9, AMHERST

Rudy rests team for today's match

MINUTEWOMEN from page 8

we're under pressure from an opponent pushing or shoving or you're taking it on a run, but some of these are unforced errors.

"And those are things we have to clean up. And if players don't clean it up, we have to get players on the field that will."

Senior captain Jenny Roehrig said now – while maintaining an undefeated record – is not the time to take anything for granted.

"We can't take any team lightly at all," she said. "We're going to be fighting hard, like we have been for any team – just like we were playing [Connecticut] the next day."

Rudy said UMass dominated Iona ability-wise but had to play extra hard because of failure to finish offensively.

Though he said he didn't have much time to prepare his team for Albany, he hopes the laid back weekend will help the Minutewomen recover and step up to the Great Danes' challenge.

Albany's best goal scorer this season has been junior Diana Barrera, who scored three goals, as well as an assist.

According to Rudy, Barrera has been brought into games off the bench recently and has not started a game this year.

"We used to do that with [senior captain] Britt Canfield – bring her in and the other teams were used to slowness and possession, and then you bring in a counterattack player and she did some damage," he said. "So, we have to be aware of where [Barrera] is on the field."

One other Albany player Rudy picked out was Uju Ogbuawa. Though she has not tallied any points yet, the senior forward is an extremely well-rounded player, according to Rudy.

"She serves about a 40- or 50-yard ball. She's very athletic," he said. "She's the fittest she's ever been. Last year she wasn't very fit against us and she played as a central defender for them. But now she's in mid-field."

Freshman Teresa Boring, who has notched one goal and one assist so far, is another player Rudy says he needs to watch out for.

UMass's upperclassmen have been fairly quiet so far, but Rudy says he has a hunch that won't last much longer. He said opposing players need to watch out for Canfield – who led in scoring last year with seven goals and three assists – for her speed and junior captain Vanessa Patry – last year's runner-up in points, with four goals and three assists – because of her size and maneuvering skills.

Rudy, however, thinks of the Minutewomen as a team and not 20 individuals. He says no player is superior to anyone else on his squad.

"I think our strength is that we can come at you with a bunch of different people," he said. "This team has a sense of identity and pride and they want to get this cleaned up and I think they will."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Up-and-down offseason for UML

HOCKEY EAST from page 8

Board of Trustees began an evaluation process to determine the practicality and feasibility of funding two Division I hockey programs within the university system.

The Amherst program was not targeted for extinction because, unlike Lowell, it is considered the flagship campus and owns its arena. Though Lowell has a smaller hockey operating budget than the Amherst campus, its revenue is considerably less and has perpetually lower attendance figures.

However, a special hockey task force commissioned by the Board recommended that Lowell remain in the conference, provided the school restructured its lease deal with Tsongas Arena and the City of Lowell. On June 21, the Board of Trustees approved the recommendations and voted to allow Lowell to maintain its status quo through the 2007-08 season.

If having the fate of the program in question for the entire spring wasn't enough, Lowell coach Blaise MacDonald did not help his own cause with his summer behavior.

Less than two weeks later after the Trustees' decision, MacDonald was arrested for a DUI. The Lowell Sun reported on July 2 that the coach's blood-alcohol level was registered at both 0.23 and 0.25, or roughly three times above the legal limit.

MacDonald was allowed to keep his job, with only a brief suspension without pay in addition to community service as his punishment.

FLIGHT OF THE EAGLE

Schneider's departure for the NHL leaves a gaping hole in net for BC. Not only did the junior post a 2.15 goals-against average last season, he played nearly every minute of every game for the Eagles.

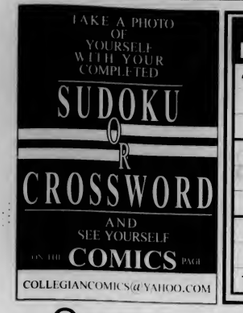
In fact, Schneider's supposed back-up, senior Joe Pearce, logged only 13 minutes between the pipes.

This means that the Eagles do not have a goalie on their roster who saw ice time last season. The team has more experience playing in front of an empty net (seven minutes) than with any of the goalies on its roster.

However, this certainly does not mean that BC coach Jerry York does not have young goal-tending talent on his squad. The Eagles return junior Adam Reasoner and welcome two freshmen, John Muse and Andrew Margolin.

Interestingly, York nabbed Muse late in the recruiting season, signing the goalie to a National Letter of Intent on July 20. Muse's decision to play for the Eagles came only 17 days after Schneider left to begin his pro career ... Boston College kicks off the 2007-08 Hockey East season on Oct. 12 against CCHA power Michigan.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.



INFORMAL MEETING TO BECOME A SENATOR AND GET INVOLVED IN YOUR AREA GOVERNMENT

Come see the experiences and opportunities the Student Government Association can offer you as an active Senator! Know what issues affect you and your fellow students/residents in your living area, whether on or off campus, and the issues facing the university on a day-to-day basis. Vote to make your voice heard!!

THE MEETING WILL BE ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2007 AT 5PM IN THE SGA OFFICE, 420 STUDENT UNION

FREE PIZZA AND WINGS

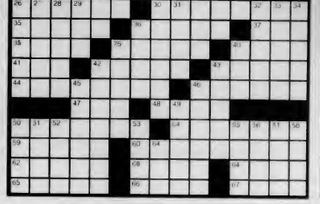
FOR MORE INFO, CONTACT THE SGA SPEAKER CARLA DOMINGUEZ AT SGA.SPEAKER@STUAF.UMASS.EDU

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

4			7	6				8
	6	8		2		5
			3			6	2
		9			8
	3						7
			1			9
	5	3			7
		6		1		7	8
1			5	9				6

ACROSS
1 Pound of poetry
5 On the peak of
9 Perplexed
14 In need
15 Writer Morrison
16 Of birth
17 Acquired dishonestly
19 Deep gorge
20 Unit of heat
21 Casual tops
23 Weapons
25 Currently popular
26 Modernize
30 Colarbone
35 Conflicting sounds
36 Small ornamental mat
37 Bagel topping, often
38 Anti-aircraft fire
39 Employ again
40 Small arrow
41 Writer Fleming
42 Acute
43 Tuck's title
44 Drill
46 Woman graduate
47 Irish Sea isle
48 Advantage
50 Rug cleaner
54 Say again
58 Erect
60 School visiting day
62 Without help
63 Nuisance
64 Spoken
65 Identified
66 Backtalk
67 Old sailors

DOWN
1 Heroic narration
2 "Naina" novelist
3 Dice throw
4 Jason's ship
5 Clothing
6 Venerated symbol
7 Single entity
8 Pub measure
9 Pizza tidbit
10 One of the Society Islands
11 Head the cast
12 Right on a map
13 Donations for the needy
18 Speak pompously
22 Stratified rock
24 Chastise severely
26 Not appropriate
27 Opposite in nature
28 Rivia or Rigg
29 Inquire
31 Speech defect
32 Demand as a right
33 Navigation system
34 More than usual
36 Rusk or Martin
39 Endangered Af-marsupial
40 Jolanne of "Red River"
42 Broke suddenly
43 Surface of the body
45 Unaffected
46 Go-betweens
49 Apply bandages to
50 Extend across
51 Wakiki dance
52 Minute quantity
53 Sorry feud that!
55 Short beep
56 Emanation
57 Russian ruler
58 Lampreys and moray's
61 Polpet veggie



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

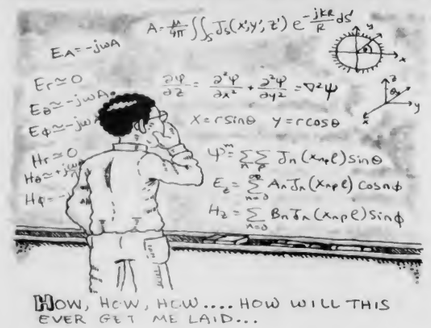
Crossword Hint

Fifty-one Down!

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It is amazing how complete is the delusion that beauty is goodness."
-Leo Tolstoy



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

LAST DITCH EFFORT BY JOHN KROES

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
It really is not cool to blast soft rock of any kind from your car stereo while driving.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Increase your street cred and your metabolism by snorting sugar off of a D.C. table.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Until the number zero was discovered no one could complain of owning nothing.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Flies will invade your room. You'll be forced to learn their ways and destroy them.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
There is no excuse for shaving part of your face but leaving that scary moustache.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Opening your textbooks and turning pages at random does not count as reading.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You don't need the caffeinated speed of Pura Vida because you are a pura cheetah.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Write a letter to your senator about what he or she does in the bathroom.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You'll find a buried treasure chest containing all the books you just spent $7,376 on.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Seek out your inner baboon and fling dung at people walking by your window.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The more raw fish you eat the more likely you are to die from bacterial infection.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You look so good driving your SUV that global warming is merely collateral damage.

If you do not submit comics, then techno music will haunt your dreams. It will be terrible.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply DP Dough Downtown, Amherst

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Sperm Donor Wanted
We are looking for a healthy, bright, athletic, male college student to donate sperm. I will pay for pre-tests and compensate you $300 per donation. Serious responses only. Contact us at leightonej@yahoo.com

STAGE HANDS WANTED AT FINE ARTS CENTER. $7.50 / HR. VARIABLE SCHEDULE – WEEK DAY

EMPLOYMENT

AVAILABILITY PREFERRED 9-NOON, 1PM-5. APPLICATIONS AT PRODUCTION SERVICES RM 146 F.A.C.

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing. STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+ Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

SEP 11 2007

SEP 12 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM takes on Great Danes in Albany

Canfield, Minutewomen look to extend unbeaten streak

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Friday's matchup will be a tough act to follow.

When the final whistle blew to end the game against Iona, the Massachusetts women's soccer team won, 2-1, and UMass coach Jim Rudy became the ninth coach in NCAA history to reach 300 wins. Two freshmen had compiled UMass's score by registering their first collegiate goals.

But Rudy and his team (2-0-1) are not even thinking about those things anymore. They have their sights set on today's game set to start at 4 p.m. at Albany (1-2-2).

"I think it's going to be a dogfight. Last year we dominated most of the game, but had to score in overtime to win it, [1-0]," Rudy said. "Albany kept it tight; [it] kept it close."

Overtime seems to be a recurring theme for the Great Danes, whose last three games have gone to an extra session.

They tied Manhattan, 1-1, on Sept. 5, defeated New Jersey Tech, 2-1, on Sept. 7 and tied Marist, 2-2, on Sept. 9.

Rudy said he gave his players Saturday off and held an hour-long practice Sunday to rest their bodies. He did, however, have them work on an area he felt had been absent the first few games – finishing off an offensive drive with a solid shot on goal.

He had his players practice handling the ball in pressure and shooting with direction and purpose. UMass took 25 shots on Friday, but only scored two goals.

"We're not precise enough," he said. "The passes just aren't quite good enough. They're off by six inches here, a yard there. And I can understand it when

See MINUTEWOMEN on page 6

KEITH P. WEISS/COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Britt Canfield and the Minutewomen travel to Albany, N.Y., today for a match with the Great Danes. UMass has a 3-0 record all-time against Albany including a 1-0 overtime win over the Great Danes in 2006.

UNH backup QB charged with murder

Hendricks arrested in connection with surfer's death

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

New Hampshire backup quarterback Hank Hendricks is being charged with murder in the death of a professional surfer in California according to the Associated Press.

Hendricks and four of his friends are accused of beating 24-year-old Emery Kauanui at his home on May 24. Kauanui died four days later from the injuries at University of California – San Diego Medical Center.

According to court records, an argument between Kauanui and Hendricks' friend Eric House, 20, started after House placed his arm around Kauanui's girlfriend at the La Jolla bar. Kauanui threw a beer at him, and both were thrown out of the bar.

Later that night, the five friends drove to Kauanui's home, and House fought Kauanui.

CAA Football

Kauanui knocked out House's front tooth and quit as he was losing the fight. Seth Cravens, 21, then took a cheap shot at Kauanui, punching him on the side of the head with his head bouncing off the pavement.

However, according to witnesses, Kauanui was knocked down by two or three men, who continually kicked him in the head and the face. When Kauanui got up, Cravens then allegedly punched him.

UNH had suspended Hendricks last weekend when it learned about the warrant for his arrest. Hendricks was to turn himself into authorities on Monday in California.

UNH football coach Sean McDonald spoke Monday about Hendricks' relationship with All-American senior quarterback Ricky Santos and dealing with this situation.

"Him and Hank have been side by side and they're good friends and we talked to Ricky a little bit about it, as everyone else in our football program. Obviously, there is a lot of shock and a lot of confusion about what happened and we're just hoping the best for Hank and so is Ricky," McDonald said during the Colonial Athletic Association teleconference. "I think we've dealt with it as a team, and I've dealt with it as a head coach. Ricky's handling it as the captain of the offense, and we're going out and doing what we have to do here."

Last season Hendricks played back up to Santos and was the holder on field goal attempts.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

Richmond running back Tim Hightower earned CAA Offensive Player of the Week honors. Hightower racked up 246 rushing yards and scored four touchdowns as the Spiders routed Northeastern, 49-14. The game temperature on the field surpassed 100 degrees; but that didn't stop him, as he only needed 19 carries, an average of 12.9 yards per carry. Hightower scored touchdowns from three yards, 90 yards, 67 yards and 12 yards. His four touchdowns in a single game tie him with six others for second in school history.

The Spiders offense exploded against the Huskies, running for 443 yards on the ground and totaling 642 yards in all.

"I thought our guys handled the heat really well, and we played really solid on defense. We found ways to make plays and get us off the field," Richmond coach Dave Clawson said. "Our offensive line played really well and Timmy Hightower really made some big runs. Timmy really showed an extra gear and made people miss and really pulled away and had some big time runs."

Hofstra linebacker Gian Villante and No. 10 James Madison linebacker Justin Barnes were named CAA co-Defensive Players of the Week. Both linebackers led their teams over ranked opponents. Hofstra upset No. 9 Furman 32-17 and JMU routed No. 5 UNH 41-24.

Villante recorded 12 tackles and held Furman All-American fullback Jerome Felton in check, giving up 85 yards rushing. He also forced a

See FOOTBALL on page 6

JOSEPH BLOOM-SETTARO/COLLEGIAN

Richmond running back Tim Hightower ran for 246 yards and four touchdowns in the Spiders' 49-14 win over Northeastern on Saturday. The Spiders improved to 1-1 on the season after losing to Vanderbilt in Week 1.

Quick, Schneider headline early exits

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though it has one of the shortest offseasons of any collegiate sport, there has been no shortage of action in Hockey East since the last puck dropped. Boston College lost its second-consecutive national championship game five months ago. But some of the league's best talent forwent their final years of eligibility in order to test the ice in the NHL during that time.

Hockey East

No position in the conference was hit harder than goaltender. After deliberating on his situation until early July, BC goalie Corey Schneider signed with the Vancouver Canucks. The junior was drafted in the first round of the 2004 NHL Entry Draft, managing to avoid the lure of professional hockey for his three seasons on campus.

Massachusetts goalie Jon Quick also left school for the prospect of playing in the NHL. The sophomore signed with the Los Angeles Kings on March 29, immediately after the end of the 2006-07 season. The Kings selected Quick in the third round of the 2005 draft.

Unlike Schneider, Quick received some professional experience last spring, playing several games for the Manchester Monarchs, LA's American Hockey League affiliate.

New Hampshire and Maine also surrendered two of league's top young forwards. Sophomore Trevor Smith signed with the New York Islanders after the Wildcats bowed out in the first round of the 2007 NCAA tournament.

Smith led the league in scoring for much of the first half and played a significant role in the team's torrid start. But as his production cooled off, so did the Wildcats on the ice. Regardless, Smith finished seventh in Hockey East scoring with 43 points (21 goals, 22 assists) in 39 total games played.

Though not as polished of a scoring threat as Smith, Maine forward Teddy Purcell matched Smith's offensive production. His 16 goals and 27 assists were also enough for the freshman to be named Hockey East Rookie of the Year.

Purcell signed with the LA Kings and joins HEA alumni Quick, Brian Boyle and Peter Harrold in the team's system.

Rounding out the Hockey East underclassmen signees is Vermont forward Torrey Mitchell. The junior signed with the San Jose Sharks and was drafted in the fourth round of the 2004 draft.

LOWELL'S STRUGGLES

It's been a trying offseason for the UMass Lowell River Hawks. Not only was the program a heartbeat away from extinction, but its coach was also arrested for drunk driving during the summer.

In March of 2007, the UMass

See HOCKEY EAST on page 6

Following Boston College's second Hockey East championship in three seasons, goaltender Corey Schneider signed with the Vancouver Canucks.

Altidor, Temple win Drexel Invitational

Richmond's Evans, Russell combine for game-winner

BY SAM EHRLICH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Even with injuries and bad luck, the Temple Owls still find ways to win with players coming from the strangest of places.

Junior Mackenson Altidor won defensive MVP honors as Temple defeated Howard, 3-0, to capture the Drexel Invitational Tournament crown.

A-10 Soccer

After transferring from Northern Oklahoma at the beginning of the season, the sweeper from the Bahamas made his presence known early, helping the Owls improve to 2-1-1 on the young season.

"Mackeson did a tremendous job of anchoring our defensive efforts this weekend," said Temple head coach David MacWilliams. "His play was even more valuable as we were down two defensive starters."

Senior goalkeeper Trevor Lyman also contributed with a shutout in his first action as an Owl, replacing starting keeper Tony Pratico, who missed Sunday's game with a groin injury.

Lyman had transferred from Saint Joseph's following the 2005 season. This was his first start since his freshman season at SJU in 2004. He made three saves on the day.

The Owl offense was led by two freshmen, Max Kinderwater and Greg Strompolos, who each marked a goal a piece for their first collegiate scores. Senior Mike Minai also added to the scoring for his first goal of the season.

Temple travels to Norfolk, Va., for the Old Dominion Tournament next weekend.

SOPHOMORE MAGIC FOR SPIDERS

Jordan Evans should score more often for Richmond.

The sophomore's second-career goal was also his second career game-winning goal, as his Spiders defeated Cornell, 1-0, on Sunday.

The goal was also the first career point for freshman Jake Russell. Russell got an assist after giving a throw in to Evans, who took it past two defenders and shot it past the Cornell keeper for the score.

Senior Eric Sciocchetti recorded his tenth career shutout for Richmond. He made four saves to record his first shutout of the season.

The shutout moved the fourth-year keeper into sole possession of seventh on his school's all-time list.

Richmond is now 2-2 on the season. They will next host the UR Nike Challenge Cup on Friday and Saturday at the Richmond University campus.

PENNSYLVANIA RIVALS BATTLE

In his first collegiate start, freshman goalkeeper Chris Torres notched a shutout to lead Duquesne to a scoreless tie in their home opener against Bucknell.

The Bison out-shot the Dukes, 20-15, but neither team could manage a goal against Torres and his counterpart, senior Joey Kutterbach.

Torres led the way with seven saves against Kutterbach's three. Both

See A-10 SOCCER on page 6

UMASS SET TO DO BATTLE WITH TERRIERS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 74 LO: 48 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2007

UMass fundraising comes up short

New study ranks University low in donation revenue

BY ANDY SMITH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts' fundraising performance has been less than spectacular, says a recent report by a non-profit education organization.

The revenue shortage has been largely attributed to deteriorating relationships with alumni, the University's lack of influence in Massachusetts politics, and the absence of a Division 1-A football team.

According to a study conducted by the Council for Aid to Education (CAE), the UMass campus ranked 33rd of 50 in total fundraising donations among universities of about 25,000 students. The CAE claimed UMass Amherst raised a total of $28.7 million in 2006 – well below the median of $48.4 million.

UMass may struggle most because it lacks pull in state politics. Unlike private schools like Boston College, who are notorious for churning out future Massachusetts politicians, UMass does not have that kind of influence, a Boston Globe article pointed out in August.

Having alumni in political positions brings about monetary advantages from the state and the lobbyists who support them. Unfortunately, no state legislative leaders are UMass alumni.

The Globe also identified the lack of a Division 1-A football program as a factor in the low fundraising total.

For UMass to become a Division 1-A program, a new stadium would first need to be built and a change in schedule would be required.

However, such a move would be expected to bring more high-profile football programs to the Amherst campus, which in turn would attract more fans and alumni to the games. Ticket sales would increase, and the thrill of playing for a Division 1 program would attract more prize recruits to the university. The overall product would become much more profitable for UMass.

Coupling the new stadium and new schedule together would certainly raise the revenue stream to well above $28.7 million, according to the Globe.

The percentage of alumni donating to UMass has also dropped every year since 2002.

However, the administration does see positive strides being made Jaymie Chernoff, the director of board relations for the University of Massachusetts Amherst Foundation, told the Boston Globe in August.

"When you're starting off, you

See FUNDRAISING on page 2

Deteriorating relationships with alumni, the lack of a Division 1-A football program and poor representation in the state legislature have been identified as factors in the declining level of private fundraising at the University of Massachusetts.

Students remember 9/11

A flag display on the front lawn of the Student Union was held by the Republican club yesterday in remembrance of the 2001 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon.

RIAA announces five new lawsuits against UM students

BY MEAGAN PATON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The recording industry will proceed with five lawsuits against University of Massachusetts students who declined to settle for illegally downloading and sharing copyrighted material, it announced last week.

After being subpoenaed by a federal district court, the UMass Office of Information and Technology (OIT) turned the names of the students over to the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA). Students caught sharing copyrighted materials were informed through pre-litigation letters last week that the RIAA intended to sue them and were given the option to resolve the claim at a discounted rate.

The names of those individuals facing RIAA lawsuits have not been released to the public.

"We contact (students) via their UMass student e-mail address and via whatever phone numbers we have on record for them," said John Dubach, Chief Information Officer at UMass. "We are actually under no legal obligation to do this. Some universities have opted not to do so, but we thought it was in the best interest of the students to do so. However, some students did not pick up the pre-litigation offer information, either because they were ignoring our efforts to communicate with them or we had incorrect contact information for them."

Those who don't choose to settle, like the five who are now facing the copyright infringement lawsuits brought against them, must go to court.

With the high costs of lawyers and court fees, most students settle because they don't want to risk losing, said Charles DiMare, director of Student Legal Services at UMass.

"Say the lawyer tells you there's a 50 percent chance you could win," DiMare said. "There's also a 50 percent chance you could lose $10,000 or $20,000. On top of that, it may take five or six years until a final decision is reached."

DiMare said about 130 students have received pre-litigation letters for copyright infringement at UMass in the last three years. SDS has defended about 50 of those students.

"We give free legal advice and counsel," DiMare said. "Ninety percent of students who come into this office are represented here and (most of those) settle."

Violators who have chosen to settle their cases outside of court usually pay $3,000 to $4,000 for the early settlement option, DiMare said.

Amanda Mitchell, a junior public health major, said she disagrees with the RIAA lawsuits and OIT's role in the conviction of copyright infringement violators and admits illegally downloading music.

"I believe it's prominent enough in our culture to download music," Mitchell said. "I don't think they're losing enough money, and I don't think the university should make it a policy to hand out records of students when they know it will get them in trouble."

Whenever there is a subpoena for copyright infringement issue, OIT is initially given a list of IP addresses that have violated the law. They must then link those addresses to the names of the violators and hand them over to the RIAA to avoid more legal action against the university, Dubach said.

"In the early days of these copyright cases, a couple of universities went to court to object," Dubach said. "There were a few changes made to the process based on that, but the objections did not ultimately stand."

The lawsuits are in continuation of a deference cam-

See RIAA on page 2

Campus, town of Amherst reach strategic agreement

Public services cooperation to increase

BY JENNIFER BERGEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts and the town of Amherst signed a five-year strategic partnership in August to strengthen ties between the communities.

The new partnership with the town of Amherst includes a connection to the town's fire and ambulance services, agreements on town schools and public utilities, and assistance regarding economic development activities.

"The Strategic Partnership Agreement formalizes the critical role of collaboration between the University and the town in areas of significance for both," said Amherst's town manager, Laurence Shaffer. "I appreciate the willingness of the University to expand its important relationship with Amherst."

The newly created link between the town and UMass will cost the school $325,000 for fire and ambulance services, but will allow UMass to wipe the slate clean by fully reimbursing the town, costing the taxpayers of Amherst nothing.

While economic advantages are clear for the town of Amherst, UMass students will also reap the benefits of this agreement, according to Community Relations Officer Martha Nelson.

She explained that the tone between the school and community will be more cooperative now the University has full support from the town for all of its major services, such as fire, ambulance, public utilities, and economic development activities.

"The town and the University will continue to seek opportunities to cooperate to meet the needs of an increasingly challenging environment," Shaffer said.

While UMass is to continue with its water conservation efforts, the town will explore further ways to prevent an increase in the cost of water and sewer services.

The agreement also includes a clause that allows pollution from Amherst's wastewater treatment plant to be put to good use. At no cost, UMass will be able to use liquid waste to generate steam on campus after it is put through a secondary filtering process.

The five-year plan is a two-year increase from the previous partnership agreement length. The longer space between negotiating periods allows for new issues to turn up and be discussed.

"This new agreement with Amherst is a comprehensive document capturing the key dimensions of our relationship with the town," said former chancellor John V. Lombardi, who was present throughout the negotiating process. "We are pleased to do our part to support essential services and welcome the town as a partner in our conservation efforts."

Jennifer Bergen can be reached at jbergen@student.umass.edu

UMPD still on lookout for campus burglary suspect

BY WILL MCGRONIGLE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A string of burglaries across the University of Massachusetts last week has yet to be solved by the police.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department is currently conducting an investigation for the case, which involved the theft of several handbags and wallets from Arnold House, Goodell Hall, and the Isenberg School of Management on Tuesday, Sept. 5 and Wednesday, Sept. 6.

All three of the burglaries were committed during daytime hours.

The suspect police are looking for is described as a white male, approximately 5 feet 9 inches tall, scruffy in appearance, wearing a windbreaker, baseball hat and blue jeans – a typical college student.

UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbold said the case has yet to be broken. With no video footage or suspects, the investigation appears to have stagnated. He did, however, say these acts are similar in timing to weekend larcenies in Machmer Hall, the Student Union, and the Whitmore Administration Building Cafe.

Wallets and handbags were stolen from three campus buildings last week, including the Isenberg School of Management.

Late Friday afternoon the UMPD sent out a public safety alert warning the campus of the crimes and encouraging anyone who had seen any suspicious activity on campus to contact University police.

The UMPD Detective Bureau also recommended that students and faculty secure all personal belongings while on campus, including cabling computers and laptops to furniture, and advised faculty and students to lock up all unoccupied offices or rooms.

Anyone with information regarding the burglaries is encouraged to contact the UMPD Detective Bureau at 413-545-0801.

Will McGroniglecan be reached at wmcgroni@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 7

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Dodchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cora Granmemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabers
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzaide
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Donations to UM decline

FUNDRAISING from page 1

are spending money to build relationships with alumni that haven't heard from the college in 20 years. It takes a while working with people before they are ready to make a large donation."

Bill Simmons, the senior vice president of a fundraising consulting firm which has been working with UMass officials in various capacities for the past five years, told the Globe, "Other programs have been at this a long time and have it down to a science. It's not surprising it hasn't jump-started overnight. Once alumni have become disconnected, it's practically impossible to get them back."

Officials within the university administration declined to comment, but they pointed to the fact that the UMass system's endowment has risen from $143 million in 2003 to $348 million this year, according to the August article in the Globe. The Globe story reported much of that total has been generated from the smaller UMass branches around the state of Massachusetts.

The CAE report also compared UMass to leading fundraising schools like the University of North Carolina, the highest fundraising university in the country in 2006.

On average, those schools raised $160 million in donations and spent an average of $23 million on fundraising. According to the CAE, UMass Amherst raised $33 million in donations and pledges while spending $7.5 million on fundraising.

Attempts to reach UMass President Jack Wilson and Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano for this article went unreturned.

Andy Smith can be reached at aysmith@student.umass.edu

RIAA launches new suits

RIAA from page 1

paign the RIAA launched earlier this year, specifically focusing on piracy at college campuses, said Steven Marks, Executive Vice President and General Council of RIAA.

"College students are some of today's biggest music fans, which is why the industry continues to invest resources to expand the legitimate online marketplace," Marks said. "Unfortunately, too many music fans are often lured by the offer of free, low-quality songs that can easily come bundled with damaging viruses and spyware from certain peer-to-peer sites."

Dubuch has one simple word of advice for anyone considering illegally downloading music on campus: "Don't."

Meagan Patton can be reached at mpatton@student.umass.edu

Mojo lost in sports rivalry

BY SEAN MURPHY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

To some Oklahoma football fans, there are things that just aren't done in the heart of Sooner Nation, and one of them is to walk into a bar wearing a Texas Longhorns T-shirt.

That's exactly what touched off a bloody skirmish that left a Texas-shirt-wearing fan nearly castrated and an Oklahoma fan facing aggravated assault charges that could put him in prison for up to five years.

The shocking case has set off a raging debate in this football-crazed region about the extreme passions behind a bitter rivalry. Some legal observers have even questioned whether this case could ever truly have an impartial jury.

"I've actually heard callers on talk radio say that this guy deserved what he got for wearing a Texas T-shirt into a bar in the middle of Sooner country," said Irven Box, an attorney in this city 20 miles from Oklahoma's campus in Norman.

According to police, 32-year-old Texas fan Brian Christopher Thomas walked into Henry Hudson's Pub on June 17 wearing a Longhorns T-shirt and quickly became the focus of football "trash talk" from another regular, 53-year-old Oklahoma fan Allen Michael Beckett.

Thomas told police that when he decided to leave and went to the bar to pay his tab, Beckett grabbed him in the crotch, pulled him to the ground and wouldn't let go, even as bar patrons tried to break it up. When the two men were separated, Thomas looked down and realized the extent of his injuries.

"He could see both of his testicles hanging on the outside of his body," said Thomas' attorney, Carl Hughes. "He was wearing a pair of white shorts, which made it that much worse."

It took more than 60 stitches to close the wound, and police interviewed Thomas at a nearby hospital emergency room.

Beckett's attorney, Billy Bock, concedes that his client commented about Thomas' shirt, but said it was just good-natured ribbing and that he apologized to Thomas when it appeared to upset the Texas fan. Later, Bock said Thomas approached his client at the bar and threatened him.

"My client is a little man, and this guy (Thomas) is 30 to 40 pounds bigger than him," Bock said.

"He's bigger, stronger, younger and probably faster, and he aggressively leaned in and touched my client and threatened to beat him up. ... My guy was defending himself and just took control of the situation."

Thomas' attorney disputes Beckett's version.

"That's total malarkey," Hughes said. "My client never said a word to him. He got up to pay and when he paid and left a tip, the guy grabbed him."

Beckett, a 53-year-old church deacon, federal auditor and former Army combat veteran, has pleaded not guilty. His next court appearance comes Oct. 4, two days before the Sooners and Horns tangle in their annual football game at the Cotton Bowl in Dallas.

Thomas, who once lived in Houston and became a Texas fan during the heyday of star running back Earl Campbell, is still recovering from his injuries but has returned to work as a meat cutter at a Sam's Club warehouse store.

Bush to announce troop withdrawals

BY MATTHEW LEE AND ANNE FLAHERTY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush will tell the nation Thursday evening that he plans to reduce the American troop presence in Iraq by as many as 30,000 by next summer but will condition those and further cuts on continued progress, The Associated Press has learned.

In a 15-minute address from the White House at 9 p.m. EDT, Bush will endorse the recommendations of his top general and top diplomat in Iraq, following their appearance at two days of hearings in Congress, administration officials said. The White House plans to issue a written status report on the troop buildup on Friday, they said.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because Bush's speech is not yet final. Bush was rehearsing and polishing his remarks even as the U.S. commander in Iraq, Gen. David Petraeus, and U.S. Ambassador Ryan Crocker were presenting their arguments for a second day on Capitol Hill.

In the speech, the president will say he understands Americans' deep concerns about U.S. involvement in Iraq and their desire to bring the troops home, they said.

Bush will say that, after hearing from Petraeus and Crocker, he has decided on a way forward that will reduce the U.S. military presence but not abandon Iraq to chaos, according to the officials.

The address will stake out a conciliatory tone toward Congress. But while mirroring Petraeus' strategy, Bush will place more conditions on reductions than his general did, insisting that conditions on the ground must warrant cuts and that now-unforeseen events could change the plan.

Petraeus recommended that a 2,000-member Marine unit return home this month without replacement. That would be followed in mid-December with the departure of an Army brigade numbering 3,500 to 4,000 soldiers. Under the general's plan, another four combat brigades would be withdrawn by July 2008.

That could leave the U.S. with as few as 130,000-135,000 troops in Iraq, down from about 168,000 now, although Petraeus was not precise about whether all the about 8,000 support troops sent with those extra combat forces would be withdrawn by July.

Petraeus said he foresaw even deeper troop cuts beyond July, but he recommended that Bush wait until at least March to decide when to go below 130,000 – and at what pace.

At the White House, Bush met with House and Senate lawmakers of both parties and he publicly pledged to consider their views. Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., said the president didn't talk about the nationwide address.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said Bush appears poised merely to bring the country back to where it was before the election that put Democrats in control of Congress – with 130,000 troops in Iraq.

"Please. It's an insult to the intelligence of the American people that that is a new direction in Iraq," she said. "We're as disappointed as the public is that the president has a tin ear to their opinion on this war."

In his speech, Bush will adopt Petraeus' call for more time to determine the pace and scale of future withdrawals and offer to report to Congress in March, one official said.

As Petraeus and Crocker have, Bush will acknowledge difficulties, and the fact that few of the benchmarks set by Congress to measure progress of the buildup have been met, the official said. Yet, he will stress that a precipitous U.S. withdrawal would be a catastrophe for Iraq and U.S. interests.

The president will discuss "bottom up" security improvements, notably in Anbar Province, which he visited on Labor Day and where Sunni leaders have allied themselves with U.S. forces to fight insurgents. And, he will note incremental progress on the political front despite unhelpful roles played by Iran and Syria, the official said.

Crocker was particularly keen on detailing diplomatic developments, including Saudi Arabia's move to open an embassy in Baghdad and a third conference of Iraqi neighbors to be hosted by Turkey in Istanbul at the end of October.

First Week at the DCs, hope you enjoyed it. The Best is yet to come!
Live Well, Eat Smart

Guest Chef Series · Restaurant Nights · Fresh Local Produce · Alaska Wild & Natural Seafood Week · Lobster Night · Small Plate, Big Flavor

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Be A Local Hero
2007 Grand Prize Winner
YCMP RESIDENTIAL
WIRELESS ACCESS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An open letter from an alumnus veteran

Dear Editor,

I would like to inform readers of The Collegian that our nation is not fighting the War on Terror with an "all voluntary force," as our military is commonly referred to in the media. On the contrary, the Department of Defense has implemented several policies to retain soldiers on a non-voluntary basis. I am personally familiar with these policies due to the fact that I have been ordered to serve involuntarily on two separate occasions.

I would like to share my experiences in order to help people better understand a few of the consequences of our nation's militaristic and aggressive strategy to prevent another 9/11. In this way, I hope that readers can decide for themselves if the current approach in Iraq is a sustainable strategy to protect America from terrorist threats.

My story is not unique for members of the Army and Marines that have served after 9/11. I signed a contract to serve eight years in the Army: four years on active duty and four years in the reserves. Like thousands of Soldiers affected by the Army's "Stop-Loss" policy, my active duty service was involuntarily extended by six months for a deployment to Afghanistan.

I understood the need to maintain cohesiveness within my unit to complete a difficult mission, and I served my year in Afghanistan proudly. I was honorably discharged and joined the Individual Readiness Reserve (IRR), which is an alternative for Soldiers that choose not to join the National Guard or Army Reserves.

Nearly one year later, I received orders for an 18-month involuntary mobilization in order to deploy to Iraq. Given the circumstances in my life, I chose to follow the Army's process to request exemption from the mobilization.

After receiving notice that my exemption was denied (with no explanation of the specific grounds on which it was denied), I followed the administrative process to appeal the decision. In the end, I was informed that my appeal was also denied and that my total service obligation would be extended by a minimum of seven months beyond my eight-year contractual agreement.

My story is not unique for members of the Army and Marines that have served after 9/11.

The authority for involuntary extension of duty is derived from a "Declaration of National Emergency by Reason of Certain Terrorist Attacks" within a Presidential Executive Order issued on September 14, 2001. Five years passed after this declaration before calls to increase the size of the Army were answered ("U.S. Not Winning War in Iraq," Washington Post, December 20, 2006), and additional stopgap measures were implemented in lieu of more troops.

Deployments have been extended from 12 months to 15 months, and many soldiers are serving their third tour in Iraq. Retirement has been postponed for soldiers that have decided not to continue after over 20 years of service. Meanwhile, recruiting standards have been lowered in a time that demands competency and professionalism in the military.

Do these sound like characteristics of an all-volunteer force, or a force capable of sustaining a presence in Iraq for an indefinite period of time?

While we debate the prudence of drawdowns and surges, the Army has announced an alarming increase in suicides. Divorce rates have climbed as spouses struggle to manage households and deal with the anxiety of 15 month-long separations during combat tours.

And when soldiers finally return to their families and decide to exercise their contractual right to exit the military, their sacrifices are rewarded with involuntary service extensions and additional deployments made legal through powers granted under a six-year-old declaration of emergency.

Please consider these facts while you listen to the upcoming debate in Congress. Take time to contemplate the impact on service members if Congress does not seek a change of course. Are our elected leaders unpatriotic if they admit that it's time to relieve the burden on our military? Are we really "supporting the troops" by continuing to fund the current strategy?

I acknowledge that the United States faces a difficult challenge in maintaining security at home and defending our interests abroad against the threat of terrorism. However, I disagree that we should continue to rely on the military to shoulder the burden. 160,000 soldiers and Marines with weapons patrolling the streets of Baghdad will not convince millions of Iraqis to live in peace, nor can they prevent terrorists across the world from finding other safe havens from which to operate.

The solution must be one that our nation and our allies can embrace, and one that we can sustain for many years. If you agree, please voice your opinion to your representatives in Congress. It's time to support the troops with more than patience and a fading yellow ribbon magnet on your car bumper.

James La Terza
U.S. Army Veteran
College of Engineering
Class of 2001

Mapping out stupidity

John Gruenenfelder

Tough questions call for tough answers, and when the biggest questions facing our day are being answered by the ill-prepared and the inarticulate, it is comforting to know there is no shortage of people waiting to point out, with shoot-to-kill accuracy, when our answers are incredibly stupid. That being said, if I had been up for Miss Teen USA, as Lauren Caitlin Upton most famously and recently was, I would've taken her question in stride.

Daniel Castro

"Recent polls have shown that a fifth of Americans cannot locate the U.S. on a world map. Why do you think this is?" Child's play. I would say that maybe when Americans living in the United States are asked to point out the United States on a map, one fifth of them think it's funny to point somewhere else.

I would say, "One fifth? One fifth? That's a pretty sizeable portion of the U.S. population, and I would like to call the legitimacy of that poll into question." I'd say, "Recent polls show that three-fifths of all statistics are made up completely on the spot, just to prove a point."

I would say that if 60 million Americans couldn't point out the U.S. on a map, not including the large portion of Americans who are under four years old, mentally handicapped, or physically handicapped with a condition such as blindness or amputated fingers that would prevent them from being able to really point out anything on a map – if that many people could slip through the cracks of our public school system, then we're gonna have to do a lot more than just place a greater emphasis on geography.

I'd say, "I personally believe that we should deport the fifth of the population who can't find the U.S. on a map, and have their re-entry depend on their ability to find their way back. That'll get the percentage closer to 100."

One fifth? That's a pretty sizeable portion of the U.S. population.

I'd say that if I were Miss Teen USA, it wouldn't really be my problem that a fifth of Americans cannot locate the U.S on a map, because really I would just be given a figurehead position in a meaningless pageant anyway. The opportunity to effect real social change only happens on the Miss America level – when, like 2007 winner Laura Nelson, you can use your looks as prison bait to catch internet predators on America's Most Wanted. I personally believe there is no better way to build up a future for our children then to keep our perverts off of them.

Mostly, though, I would say, "Maybe it's not as important where our country is, as much as where it's going." I'd say that the Miss Teen USA blunder has attracted more than 14 million visits to YouTube, the seventeen-year-old girl's stammered syntax parsed by correspondents on both the E! Channel and on CNN – because nothing says human interest story like failure on national TV.

I'd say it's nice to know that, yeah, sure, a fifth of Americans can't point out the U.S. on a map. But thanks to videos lifting our most trivial moments and underachieving citizens out of obscurity and into a world-wide network of scrutiny, we've ensured that a growing population of people from other countries can now know where to look to find the idiots on the map. Of course, what does international perception matter these days anyway?

Every time Lindsay Lohan or Paris Hilton gets into a car, or out of a car, or every time Britney Spears performs at the VMAs solely for our own sadistic pleasure, or anytime anyone makes a mistake on video, four-fifths of the population zeroes in on it, tears it apart, and leaves the scraps behind along with a little bit of that lingering inferiority complex. Because if that girl's answer was a car wreck, we're all rubbernecking, taking our focus off more important things to bask in the enjoyment of knowing we could've answered that question with grace and poise, and even maybe a little joke to show we're not dried up intellectuals.

I'd also say that, although I am no authority on the recent epidemic of map shortages plaguing our nation, there certainly is a staggering want for direction spreading across the country. So we've got leaders struggling to articulate their ideas beyond the too-pat bumper sticker slogans they think already stretch the limits of public understanding.

We also have our media celebrating the insubstantial and sensational while letting truly pertinent and eye-opening stories fall by the wayside. Likewise, there exists an overall sense that Americans have lost the ability to self-reflect, to self-interrogate, and to point their fingers at themselves on a world map.

All these things considered, it is becoming increasingly clear that if I were I Miss Teen USA, I would not have changed my answer. I would have changed the questions entirely.

Daniel Castro is a collegian columnist and can be reached at dcastro@student.umass.edu.

Where no man has gone in a while

An important anniversary in human history is nearly upon us, but most people are probably unaware of it. October 4 will mark the 50th anniversary of the launch of Sputnik, Earth's first artificial satellite, and the beginning of the Space Age. And just passed, on September 5, was the 30th anniversary of the launch of the Voyager 1 probe (Voyager 2 having been launched 16 days earlier).

It is quite amazing how rapidly humanity progressed into space. Just twelve years after Sputnik, Apollo 11 landed the first people on the Moon, and that event itself was just under 70 years since the first wood and cloth airplane took to the skies. These anniversaries are a good time to take stock of humanity's achievements (and setbacks) in space.

Not coincidentally, a new documentary, "In the Shadow of the Moon," opens at the Amherst Cinema in a couple of weeks. And come 2009 (Apollo 11's 40th anniversary), you can also expect a whole host of new documentaries on the subject. It is not often that many of the people involved in making true history are around to tell their tales personally.

The rovers and other probes provide a wealth of knowledge — and at a fraction of the cost of manned ventures. Yet it just isn't quite the same.

So, where are we now? Where actual people are concerned, not much further than we were 40 years ago. NASA has not made much progress in this area.

Fortunately, unmanned probes and rovers have made and continue to make astonishing progress. The two rovers on Mars, Spirit and Opportunity, have just weathered a severe sandstorm (planet-wide, at that) and are ready to get back to business, a mere 1,300 days into their 90-day original mission.

The rovers and other probes provide a wealth of knowledge – and at a fraction of the cost of manned ventures. Yet it just isn't quite the same. A probe can show us the surface of another world, but it can't describe the accomplishment. Not to get philosophical, but there are intangible ways in which a human walking on another planet is so much more significant than what we can get with a probe.

The Apollo Lunar Surface Journals provided by NASA are an excellent source for images, logs, and even some video clips of the sort of impact and description that only a person could provide. My favorite is one of the last actions ever taken by a person on the moon. Apollo 17 astronaut Jack Schmitt asked, "Let me throw the hammer? Please." And with Commander Gene Cernan's permission, and a request that he not hit the lander, the hammer went flying off into the distance.

Hammer throwing may be somewhat silly and unscientific, but it is also uniquely human. You've traveled a few hundred thousand miles, spent a few days on the moon, and taken lots of photos. What to do before you leave? Throw a hammer, of course – and for apparently no better reason than to watch it sail through the air. I hope I'm not alone in this feeling, but I find that a pretty good reason to travel to other worlds.

For the past 25 years NASA has been spinning its wheels with the shuttle and space station. They are not useless, but they have also not come close to living up to the original goals and promises. The goal for the near future has come, surprisingly, from the president. In a State of the Union speech a few years ago he proposed an initiative for a small lunar base. Afterwards, he and everybody else quickly forgot about this rhetoric. Everybody but NASA, that is.

Happy to have a purpose for manned spaceflight again, NASA has gone all-in on this initiative. The basic idea is that the moon would serve as a jumping-off point for exploration elsewhere in the solar system. Realistically, given how spaceflight currently works, just going directly to Mars makes more sense scientifically and economically. At this point, though, I'm just happy that somebody is planning to go somewhere in my lifetime.

Maybe people pay less attention to space exploration these days because it is old hat. There are hundreds of satellites flying overhead and the public can use them for checking the weather, communication, and navigation. The drive to go higher and further just isn't very prevalent today.

Hopefully, though, these recent and upcoming anniversaries will give people pause, time to think about where we, as a planet, have been and where we can and should be going in the future. Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, a famous Russian rocket scientist, put it best: "The Earth is the cradle of humanity, but mankind cannot stay in the cradle forever."

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at johng@astro.as.arizona.edu.

It's about time to redirect the rhetoric

Dan Nicastro

The state of affairs in Iraq varies depending on whom you ask. Ideologically opposed politicians can agree on one thing: the numbers coming out of Iraq support their side. Congressional war hawks and the Bush administration have recently presented statistics which show incidents of violence are on the decline.

However, opponents of the war point out numerous flaws with the data. Levels of violence still remain higher than those of 2004 or 2005. And, as senior military officials point out, violence in places such as Baghdad may be on the decline because Shiite militants have successfully driven out or killed Sunnis.

As has been true with the war itself, the data which measures progress in Iraq is so inconsistent and so flexible that it can be manipulated by both sides of the political spectrum. It's not as if this is a new development; the numbers measuring "progress" in Iraq have always been open to interpretation. What's interesting (and terrifying) is the Bush administration's successful push to turn what was political rhetoric into "truth."

At some point along the way, the Bush administration blurred the line between rhetoric and truth.

March of 2003 saw the Bush administration stuffing the American people with as much political rhetoric as it could possibly cram down our throats. There were several different justifications for our invasion: the presence of weapons of mass destruction; the stabilization of the Middle East; the liberation of the Iraqi people from an oppressive regime; the increased stability of a "post-Saddam" region.

These "talking points" have remained extremely consistent over the course of the last four years, a fact that can be seen nightly on the Daily Show. However, as progress in Iraq seemed to stand still and it became clear the war was not going well, public opinion began to shift. Political rhetoric brought us into the war and after things in Iraq went sour, the same political rhetoric perpetuated what has become a nightmare in Iraq.

This is not to condemn all political rhetoric. I'm a student of political science and I understand its usefulness. Rhetoric is a good way to win over the masses with quick, catchy phrases and ideas that could fit on a bumper sticker.

The problem with rhetoric, though, is that it represents the quick and dirty version of the truth, meaning it's unreliable. This has been illustrated very nicely by the Bush administration's push to war and the subsequent postwar rebuilding of Iraq.

At some point along the way, the Bush administration blurred the line between rhetoric and truth. The rhetoric used to build a case for war (which was built on supposition and interpretation) was now being held up as factual. All of a sudden, there was no question as to the existence of WMDs and al-Qaida was indelibly linked to Saddam. For the most part, the American people bought into this subtle shift from rhetoric to "fact" and started to believe the Bush administration's interpretation of what was happening in Iraq without question.

In the last year the American people and most media outlets have started to stray away from the Bush administration's "factual" claims and question our role in postwar Iraq. Rhetoric only works as a political tool when the public buys into it. The backlash against the handling of Iraq has severely weakened President Bush's legitimacy and has even redirected the trust of the American people.

The latest New York Times/CBS News poll indicates the American public trusts the military far more than any branch of government to successfully end the war in Iraq. The numbers weren't even close: five percent of respondents trusted the Bush administration, 21 percent trusted Congress and 66 percent trusted military leaders to end the war "successfully."

While it's all well and good that the American people have stopped accepting the Iraq war rhetoric as truth, it's our job as citizens to remain vigilant so that a situation like Iraq doesn't happen again. Rhetoric is definitely a useful political tool, but it can also be a dangerous and attractive alternative to the truth. It's much easier to blindly trust whatever the president says than to actually question his motives or his facts.

While I realize I'm a native New Englander (meaning I'm skeptical of everything I hear), I'm not advocating complete distrust of government. I'm just suggesting that not everything is as black and white as it seems, and it is our duty as citizens of a healthy democracy to examine and question our leaders, especially when we are heading into something as serious as war.

Political rhetoric will always remain prevalent and will be used by every president to try and justify their actions. Our task is to sort out what constitutes rhetoric and what constitutes truth. This job will start sooner rather than later. As President Bush recently said, "Iran's actions threaten the security of nations everywhere. And that is why the United States is rallying friends and allies around the world to isolate the regime. To impose economic sanctions. We will confront this danger before it is too late."

Sound familiar? Let's hope so.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

McKidd travels through time

'Journeyman' star lands a new job in NBC's latest series

By Luaine Lee
McClatchy Newspapers

Scottish actor Kevin McKidd is no stranger to time travel. He was eight years old when he thrust himself into the future at first sight of the film "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial."

"I went to see that movie with my dad, and it just hit me with such an emotional level, that movie as a kid... I think that was a big light bulb moment in my head," McKidd remembers. "I didn't know I'm from the wrong side of the tracks as far as that goes and nobody from Elgin has been an actor.

That was the beginning. All I thought then was, 'I want to be that kid who made friends with an alien.' That was the beginning of the journey and I never strayed from that."

McKidd visited the '30s for "Defovely," fought in the Crusades in "Kingdom of Heaven" and served as the powerful Roman solider, Vorenus, in HBO's "Rome."

So it's not surprising to find McKidd starring as a San Francisco reporter who finds himself transported to alternate times in NBC's new "Journeyman," premiering Sept. 24. In fact, McKidd says he relates to "Journeyman" and how decisions can send tremors through the future.

He was newly married and could not find an acting job.

"Journeyman" lead Kevin McKidd came close to accepting a job as a diamond cutter, almost missing his big chance to hit the big screen.

"I was working at this building site and the boss said, 'I could train you up and you could get this skilled job doing this thing called diamond cutting.' In buildings, which are made of huge slabs of concrete, you have these diamond cutting machines, which drill huge holes in the concrete through all the utility pipes and wires and stuff. He said, 'If you stick in with me for six months you'll be a fully trained diamond cutter, making $40,000 a year guaranteed.'

"I went home and was lying in bed that night. It was a real fork in the road. I was going to go and take the apprenticeship and my agent phoned. She hadn't phoned me in a month. And she said, 'You have an audition tomorrow morning.' ... I thought, 'I've got to choose now.'"

He chose the audition and, though he didn't get the role, he never veered again.

McKidd was in Romania, trussed up in Elizabethan finery, playing Mary, Queen of Scots' lover when he first heard producers were scouting the area for making "Rome." They'd not even begun casting, but a friend of his put together a short reel of McKidd's Elizabethan performance and he approached the producers about a role in the miniseries.

The rest, as time travelers say, is history. "As soon as 'Rome' finished, because the show did really well there was a lot of what they call 'heat' on me to do pilots," says McKidd, seated in a booth in hotel bar here.

"I was supposed to do something in Europe, a biopic on Dylan Thomas. It didn't happen. I said, 'I'm busy doing this stuff, thank you very much.'"

Producers insisted he read some of the pilots. "They were all good scripts but they were sort of generic cop dramas ... I said, 'I can't see myself doing this, especially after something like "Rome."' When I read 'Journeyman' I really liked it," he said. "I thought it was dif-

See MCKIDD on page 5

Actress Parker launches new clothing line

Reece Coppolino

While we've recently witnessed some celebrities using their name to cheat the judicial system, it seems they've been brutally frank over a few steps to enter into the fashion industry as well. Each season, we are introduced to a slew of uncalculated celebrity fashion lines from Jessica Simpson to Sean "P. Diddy" Combs. We are left questioning whether fame and fortune are legitimate factors in creating a fashion label.

Upcoming young designers with prior experience in the industry are increasingly seeing the spotlight veer off towards those who have spent most of their time on the big screen or in the recording studio, creating additional frustration in the highly competitive industry. Can we trust that these celebrity fashion designers possess an original sense of style, or should the credit be given to their personal stylist?

Although I have a hard time believing that J. Lo and Beyonce [illegible] shop for themselves, there's one celebrity fashion designer whose personal sense of style has been admired [illegible] off screen – fashion icon Sarah Jessica Parker. We saw her as Carrie [illegible] every week, continuously displaying a quirky yet intriguing fashion sense. Nowadays in reality, as a mother to the Big Apple, she still expresses [illegible] ous love for fashion on the red [illegible] and on the streets of Manhattan.

Sarah Jessica Parker's [illegible] new fashion line, BITTEN, [illegible] released to the public on June [illegible] it has certainly taken a fresh [illegible] on celebrity fashion lines. BITTEN is compiled of almost 11[illegible] sportswear and accessory [illegible] offered at $19.98 or less. Their [illegible] is driven around a unique [illegible] which states, "It is every [illegible] inalienable right to have a [illegible] together, stylish, confident [illegible] with money left over to live."

During a documentary BittenSJP.com, Parker [illegible] overwhelming excitement [illegible]

See BITTEN on page 5

The "Sex and the City" star's fresh clothing line is based on the motto that "Fashion is not a luxury."

Classic Nintendo gets an upgrade

'Metroid Prime 3: Corruption' takes gamers out of this world

By Justin Hoeger
McClatchy Newspapers

Many heroes have a dark side. But for Samus Aran, it's a bit worse.

Her dark side is literal, born from the bubbling remains of a terrible enemy, the creature called Metroid Prime. This Dark Samus later popped up on the planet Aether and caused trouble, but Samus defeated her in the end.

And now Dark Samus is back. She has new allies in the insectoid Space Pirates, who seek to conquer the Galactic Federation with the help of this evil doppelganger and the toxic but powerful substance Phazon.

As the other "Prime" games have done, "Metroid Prime 3: Corruption" adds its own spin to the "Metroid" formula. Where "Metroid Prime" perfectly translated the classic 2-D game play of "Super Metroid" into three dimensions, and "Metroid Prime 2: Echoes" took that foundation and added parallel worlds and a selection of beam weapons that burned through ammo, a first for the series, "Corruption" is more like the Game Boy Advance's "Metroid Fusion."

"Fusion" was set on a space station designed to mimic certain environments, so all the areas were similar in size and shape, and didn't flow together as organically as the mazes of other "Metroid" games. Similarly here, Samus visits several different worlds, each with its own look, feel and environment. Even some of the upgrades, like the enemy- and liquid-freezing Ice Missiles, are borrowed from "Fusion."

The game starts off with a bang, featuring an attack on a Federation world by the pirates and Dark Samus. They try to crash a Phazon-laced meteor into the planet and are stopped by Samus and a trio of other hunters, but not before Dark Samus manages to blast them a good one.

Once she's recovered, Samus learns that her body is now producing Phazon on its own, with no apparent ill effects. Federation scientists fit her with an experimental weapon system that runs on Phazon, which puts her into a state called Hypermode in which she's invulnerable and her shots are more powerful – strong enough to defeat some massive foes that can't be hurt by anything else.

This power comes at a price, though. Activating Hypermode drains one of Samus' energy tanks completely, leaving her weaker when she exits this state. What's more, sometimes she'll enter a sort of overload mode where she'll need to fire rapidly to vent excess Phazon, or die. It's a powerful weapon but one that requires some careful management – and she'll need it (and other weapons and devices, new and old) to defeat Dark Samus and foil the pirates' plot.

A lot of this is pretty much par for the course in a "Metroid" game, but this is the first series entry on the Wii, and thus the first to use the Wii Remote. This could have been a disaster. First person games so far on the Wii have been a mixed bag, to put it generously.

But "Corruption" nails it. Using the remote and the Nunchuk attachment together feels perfectly natural, with the remote controlling Samus' gun arm, jumping and navigation chores, and the Nunchuk handling movement, target locking and our hero's odd transformation into a metal sphere for rolling through narrow vents and passages. The remote also controls Samus' visors, including a new one that lets her call her spaceship for bombing runs and other tasks.

The exact settings may take a little tweaking for some players to find their preference, but once a player gets the hang of it, the game moves and feels just like it should. Aiming and shooting are smooth as can be, and this game relies far less on the lock-on feature than the previous two.

Even better, the game makes heavy use of Samus' grapple beam, which lets the player attach a stream of energy to an object or foe and then yank it with the Nunchuk.

"Corruption's" graphics can't stand up to those of "BioShock," "The Darkness" and other shooters on current systems. But the visual design here makes up for that. The worlds Samus visits and the foes she faces look terrific, never mind their exact polygon counts. From the ruins and jungles of Bryyo to the graceful sky city of Elysia, each area has a distinct look and feel.

Nintendo's "Metroid Prime 3: Corruption" does not fall short as it enters the world of the Wii gaming system. For the first time in the Metroid series, the hero Samus Aran's shooting and jumping is controlled via the Wii Remote.

New movie exposes extreme journalism

By Robert W. Butler
McClatchy Newspapers

An inspired-by-fact thriller shot through with absurdist moments, "The Hunting Party" is a close cousin to David O. Russell's Desert Storm satire "Three Kings."

That's keeping pretty good company.

This latest effort from writer/director Richard Shepard ("Matador") stars Richard Gere as a desperate, burned-out TV war correspondent and Terrence Howard as one of his oldest friends, a combat cameraman who always comes back with the money shot.

As we learn in the opening flashback sequence narrated by Duck (Howard), Gere's Simon Hunt is a journalism legend for both the right and wrong reasons. Fearless and perhaps a bit crazy ("Being close to death is completely addictive," Duck reports), he routinely risked his neck (and Duck's) to be in the heat of the action in hot spots all over the globe.

But the atrocities he witnessed in the Bosnian war pushed Simon over the edge. After an on-air meltdown he found himself begging freelance gigs for Portuguese television. Then he dropped off the map.

Now many years later, Duck has returned to Sarajevo, accompanying the network's anchorman (James Brolin) to a special ceremony. A grizzled and slightly manic Simon appears out of nowhere, assuring his old colleague that he knows the whereabouts of "the Fox," a Serbian war criminal on whose head the U.S. has placed a $5 million reward.

Simon's plan is to drive a rented Mercedes into Serb territory and try to score an interview with the Fox.

Sounds to Duck like a wild goose chase, but he owes his old bud. And he decides to bring along Benjamin (Jesse Eisenberg), the fresh-from-college son of a network vice-president. The kid could use some journalistic seasoning.

He'll get a lot more than that as the three newsmen elude a hostile populace, run into Serb death squads, encounter a conspiracy-crazed UN peacekeeper (Mark Ivanir) and a black-market beauty (Diane Kruger). Along the way they will be mistaken for a CIA hit squad.

Oh, and Simon's companions will find that he doesn't just want to interview the Fox. He wants to kill him.

The movie also makes a case that the U.S. and U.N. cut a deal with the Serb butchers not to make too big an effort to find them. After all, it takes three reporters all of two days to meet the Fox face to face.

All this is presented in a straightforward, realistic manner. The flashbacks to the era of ethnic cleansing are brutal and disturbing.

THE HUNTING PARTY
DIRECTED BY RICHARD SHEPARD
STARRING RICHARD GERE
B +

See GERE on page 5

Meat Puppets reunion has rocky start

By Len Righi
The Morning Call (Allentown, Pa.)

One of the more heartening bits of music news in 2006 was that Curt Kirkwood would be working with his long-estranged bassist-younger brother Cris on a new Meat Puppets CD for the first time since 1995's "No Joke!"

The rough 'n' rowdy "Rise to Your Knees" arrived in mid-July, its 14 songs culled from material Curt Kirkwood had stockpiled over the years. If not quite in the league of such influential alt-rock albums as "Meat Puppets II," "Up On the Sun" and "Too High to Die," "Rise to Your Knees" still has its share of memorably Meat-y moments.

The Meat Puppets are now on the road, nightly showcasing three or four songs from the new album as well as older material during what Curt Kirkwood calls "a dive down the rabbit hole of the past."

And though 48-year-old Kirkwood seems happy to be playing again with his 46-year-old sibling, he is brutally frank when he says during a phone interview that he would have made "Rise to Your Knees" even if Cris had not gained control of the heroin and crack addiction that split the band apart 12 years ago.

"I wasn't waiting for it," he says while checking into a motel in Boonville, N.Y., the day before the Meat Puppets are to perform at the eighth annual moe.down jam band festival in nearby Turin.

"I didn't realize ahead of time that the band would become a viable thing. I'm wasn't even sure it would be a three-piece. All I knew was that I wanted to make a Stratocaster record. A while back I was playing a Strat (guitar) at a friend's house in North Carolina and I thought, 'I could make a rock record with one of these.' ... I was going to do it one way or another."

His claim is credible. After all, in 2000, five years after parting company with his brother and original drummer Derrick Bostrom, he cut a Meat Puppets album, the underappreciated "Golden Lies," with three other musicians: guitarist Kyle Ellison, drummer Shandon Sahm and former Bob Mould bassist Andrew Duplantis.

"I never really broke up the band," maintains Kirwood, between side conversations with check-in clerks and photographer Joseph Cultice, a regular contributor to Vogue and Entertainment Weekly who is shooting a documentary about the Pups. "I just told (Cris) that I wasn't going to play with him until he cleaned up. It took him a long time."

"And," he adds, "over the years I was the one who retained the intellectual validity of the band."

Kirkwood's comments are brief and cursory while recollecting the mid-2006 reconciliation with his brother during a meeting at a mutual friend's house in Tempe, Ariz.

His musician son, Elmo, informed him that Cris, who recently had spent 18 months in jail for assaulting a security guard at a Phoenix post office, had straightened out his life.

"So I called him and we got together and started doing a little rehearsing in Phoenix," says Kirkwood. "Then we quickly set it up so we could get together (with drummer Ted Marcus) in a studio in Austin to record... That much hasn't changed. Cris is still a quick learner, good at laying down tracks."

Reportedly, Cris was set to start work at a Salvation Army warehouse when Curt proposed re-forming the band.

For the most part, "Rise to Your Knees" skips the sunlit country and Southern boogie facets of the Meat Puppets' sound, favoring instead the punkier, trippier inclinations.

As for lyrics, Kirkwood chuckles, "I go out of my way to make sure people can't understand (them). ... My songs are like Impressionist paintings to a certain degree."

However, he is forthcoming about the reggae-rhythmed "Enemy Love Song," which Kirwood characterizes as "Blondie ska," no doubt referring to the new wave band's 1980 hit "The Tide Is High."

"It started out about a friend of mine. His wife left him and he was living in his car and I thought it was kinda funny. He wore a lot cologne. He wasn't obnoxious, just a tool. ... I haven't seen him in years."

And while some "Rise" songs are edged with an uncharacteristic cynicism, "Spit" is both confident and hopeful. "That's more a look at the present," Kirwood says. "You're always told, 'Don't spit in the wind.' But most memories are made by spitting in the wind. Creating memories causes everything to go forward."

The newly reunited Meat Puppets are currently on tour, playing a selection of new material and reintroducing old favorites.

McKidd finds self in new character

After starring in the unsuccessful show "Rome" on HBO, Scottish actor McKidd finally found his place on NBC's fall line up.

MCKIDD from page 4

ferent and interesting and really imaginative and cleverly written. That's all you can go by. If you go to the writing hopefully you won't lose your integrity because you're doing it for the right reasons."

McKidd's dad was a plumber, his mom a secretary at a hotel. Both his grandfather and great-grandfather were farmers. Without really realizing it, his grandfather on his mother's side inspired him to act.

"He was called Geordie. He was a farmer and loved to drink whisky and wore a cloth cap and was a hero. He had hands like shovels and could tell amazing stories. We used to go to the local pub in Elgin and listen to his songs. He knew all these northeast ballads and would sing these to the whole pub when he'd had a few whiskies. And you could hear a pin drop in these pubs. He had this magnetism. One moment he'd have the whole place laughing their heads off by some little anecdote he could breathe life into, and the next he'd tell some story about hardships. They had really hard lives, these guys."

"He told one story where it was so cold, he had to milk the cows at four in the morning, and his boots were frozen to the ground. Because there was no heat in the house he had to put his feet into his boots and wait until his feet thawed his boots so he could go to work. He'd have people crying. When he passed away I think that's when I really became a man. I think I knew I had to carry on for him because he was a brilliant actor."

The father of a son, 7 and a daughter, 5, McKidd fell for his wife, Jane, at first sight. "I met her at a Christmas party. I was doing a show with Diana Rigg in the West End and Toby Stephens. I didn't even want to go because they were all snooty English, posh actors. I didn't like them very much. I liked Toby and Diana, but it was too West-Endy for me. I went and met this girl there who I'd seen earlier. She worked in the box office at the theater across the road. I met this girl, and got to talk to her. I had one Coca-Cola ... It sounds so corny. My wife would kill me if she knew I told you, but I knew right then I was going to marry her. I literally walked on air back to my car. I remember it was a cold, crisp winter's night in King's Cross. Two weeks later I asked her to marry me. She didn't hesitate."

Student Special
4 MONTHS
$149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
RT. AMHERST

Gere continues hot streak with new movie

GERE from page 4

But every now and then something so bizarre occurs that "The Hunting Party" veers into the comically surreal. Incredibly, these things were actually experienced by the real-life journalists on whose misadventures the movie is based.

Be sure to stick around for the final credits. Over a Serb-language version of "I Fought the Law" the filmmakers give us quick breakdown of what things in the film are factual and which were tinkered with for dramatic purposes (there were originally four American journalists, not three; the black market informer was a man, not a woman.)

The performances are solid (with his exemplary work in last spring's "The Hoax," Gere seems to he on an Oscar roll), the setting's authentic (it was filmed in the former Yugoslavia) and the film's vein of bleak humor refreshing. You'll leave the film laughing and maybe angry.

Gere gives a phenomenal performance in the film "The Hunting Game" as an overstressed and jaded war journalist.

Chique fashion made cheap

Parker says that the clothing she designed is affordable because she understands the struggle of young women to express themselves on a tight budget. The stylish pieces are flying off the shelves.

BITTEN from page 4

orate with national discount clothing chain Steve and Barry's.

"I thought it was extraordinary. I just didn't understand how a company exists with their philosophy," she said. "It didn't seem doable because we are so ingrained to think that you can't get quality and have it be affordable. It was a completely new way of thinking. I love this philosophy."

She explains that the label name, BITTEN, was created to describe her initial feeling after she was introduced to the company's mission.

Parker spoke of her childhood in a family of 10 and living on a small budget. She admitted to being the sibling who always received the dated hand-me-downs. Sarah claims to identify with and understand young women who lack access to the items that help express themselves. She wanted her line to support fashion sense in women of any budget. "Fashion is not a luxury, it's right," declares BITTEN's motto.

Glamour Magazine interviewed Parker about the line and how it deviates from fellow celebrity fashion lines. She explained that, compared to L.A.M.B. by Gwen Stefani, BITTEN isn't as groundbreaking and trendy. She openly steered away from that high-fashion direction because she felt that those styles didn't depict the everyday woman. While working with Steve and Barry's during the design process, "We thought so much about shape and size and age; nobody should feel left out of this clothing line," she told Glamour.

BITTEN is currently sold exclusively at Steve and Barry's, conveniently located right inside the Hampshire Mall on Route 9. Last week, I visited the store to check out the sales of the new line. The local store offers three large sections packed full of BITTEN pieces, from wool jackets to cashmere sweaters to handbags.

While keeping in mind the unbelievably affordable prices, I was quite surprised by the use of various quality fabrics and the overall versatility of the pieces. There was immediate evidence of an incredible turn-on with numerous empty hangers and missing sizes. Steve and Barry's representatives claim that the demand for the BITTEN collection has been "so overwhelming" that they haven't been able to offer online shopping yet.

While the shopaholic Carrie Bradshaw would argue, "I like my money right where I can see it, hanging in my closet," a bitten Sarah Jessica Parker could convince her that there would certainly be some much appreciated leftover cash if only she chose Steve and Barry's over Barnes 'n. Pay a visit to our local Steve and Barry's if you dare to get BITTEN.

Reece Coppolino can be reached at rcoppolo@student.umass.edu

INFORMAL MEETING TO BECOME A SENATOR AND GET INVOLVED IN YOUR AREA GOVERNMENT

Come see the experiences and opportunities the Student Government Association can offer you as an active Senator! Know what issues affect you and your fellow students/residents in your living area, whether on or off campus, and the issues facing the university on a day-to-day basis. Vote to make your voice heard!!

THE MEETING WILL BE ON WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2007 AT 5PM IN THE SGA OFFICE, 420 STUDENT UNION

FREE PIZZA AND WINGS

FOR MORE INFO, CONTACT THE SGA SPEAKER CARLA DOMINGUEZ AT SGA.SPEAKER@STUAF.UMASS.EDU

iStudy
iWant
iGet
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

SEP 12 2007

BU in town to take on Minutewomen

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

cal, BU has faced the tougher competition. The Terriers' losses have come at the hand of ranked teams, while the UMass defeats are against unranked opponents.

Coach Justine Sowry believes her team will have to play one of their best games to defeat BU.

"BU is a quality opposition with a talented senior class, and we're going to have to play our best and come out strong against them," she said.

The Minutewomen do hold home-field advantage. They have yet to lose either of their home games this season, and the Terriers have split their two road games.

Cher King figures to play an instrumental role in the Minutewoman offense. The sophomore midfielder has been responsible for half of the team's goals this season, and had a four-game scoring streak before it was snapped this past Sunday against New Hampshire.

BU will counter with two productive offensive players of its own. Senior midfielder Pam Spuehler leads the team with three goals and four assists, and also carries an efficient .429 shot percentage. Spuehler's awards include earning the Most Outstanding Player of the America East Championship last year.

Sarah Schute leads the attack for the Terrier forwards. The senior terrorized defenses with fourteen goals last year. Schute has two assists, and her three goals leave her tied for the team lead with Spuehler.

Sowry acknowledged these two players are going to be difficult to cope with, but she's more focused on her team's planning.

"What we're really trying to do is focus on our game plan and style of play," she said. "In looking at the bigger picture, we're really focusing on what we're trying to do."

However, the coach did admit that changes will need to be made once BU presents its attacking scheme.

"We will have to make some adjustments because they go from one system to another so we'll have to make adjustments on the fly," Sowry said.

Penalty corners can be important in a low-scoring game, and the Minutewomen have done a good job recently of giving themselves those opportunities. They have won more penalty corners than their opponents in the previous two games.

On the other side of the field, the Terriers have dominated penalty corners during the first half this season, but have struggled mightily in the second half. Their 16-9 advantage in the first half compares favorably to their opponents 20-8 penalty corner advantage in the second.

Sowry realizes that these opportunities close to the net could be the key to her team's success tomorrow.

"On the attacking side, we're having to pay more attention to penalty corner execution and getting a shot on goal to start with," Sowry said. "On the flip side, try to decrease the amount of penalty corners that we actually give up as well. It's a big part of the game and we need to be a lot slicker executing our attacking but preventing the opposition."

The Minutewomen won't need any motivation for this game – BU has won the last five meetings between the schools, including last year's 2-0 victory in Boston. UMass holds all-time head-to-head advantage, 14-13-2.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Owls upset No. 20 Orange

Temple, La Salle, St. Joe's all record wins as A-10 play nears

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Temple Owls handed the No. 20 Syracuse Orange their first loss of the season Sunday, winning 1-0 on the road.

It was Temple's first win over a nationally-ranked team since 2002, when the Owls defeated No. 16 Delaware. The Owls are now 4-2 this season.

The first goal was scored in the 53rd minute by senior middle Alli Lokey. The Orange challenged the Owls' offense with 11 saves, but Lokey scored on one of five penalty corners in the game.

Junior goalkeeper Erin Hanshue recorded her first shutout this year with three saves. Hanshue now has 26 saves on the season.

"Erin really stepped up and played an amazing game," Temple coach Amanda Jenney said on the Owls' team website.

They will play their second game on the road today against another nationally ranked opponent, sixth-ranked Penn State.

LA SALLE RESPONDS AFTER SHUTOUT

The La Salle Explorers responded to their first shutout loss of the season against Lock Haven Saturday by shutting out Robert Morris the next day, 4-0.

The difference for La Salle was the number of scoring opportunities at the goal. The Explorers shot twice in the game against Lock Haven, compared to their 19 shots in Sunday's win.

A-10 Field Hockey

The Explorers were first to strike as sophomore Whitney Madron scored her first goal of the season. Madron's goal was the only score during the first half.

Sophomore forward and midfielder Colleen Lechner took over in the second half, leading the Explorers with two goals in under a minute. Lechner completed the hat trick with less than 14 minutes left in the game, scoring her third goal of the half on three attempts.

Lechner now has four goals on the season.

Senior goalkeeper Ellen Axelson saved six shots in her second shutout of the season to help the Explorers improve their record to 4-3.

The Explorers' next game will be on the road Thursday night against Bucknell at 6 p.m.

ST. JOE'S EARNS FIRST WIN

The Saint Joseph's Hawks won their first home game of the season Sept. 5 against Penn 2-1.

Their only win for the season comes after losses to Hofstra and Fairfield.

Two of the team's forwards, senior Theresa Barbati and junior Marisa Pizzi, scored a goal for the Hawks, while senior goalkeeper Rebecca Cunfer helped out on the defensive end with 10 saves.

Barbati scored the Hawks' first goal within the first seven minutes of the game after receiving a pass from freshman midfielder Jen Wrublesky.

However, the thrill of their first win was short-lived, as the Hawks (1-3) lost their second 1-0 game of the season to 11th-ranked James Madison Sunday. The Hawks have another chance to better their record tonight against Drexel at 7 p.m.

Player of the Week

Rhode Island senior goalkeeper M.J. Britt is the A-10 Player of the Week after allowing one goal this past weekend.

Britt has 11 saves this week, giving her a total of 21 for the season. She is second in Division I with a save percentage of .913 and has a perfect, 4-0 record.

She earned her second Player of the Week honor after posting two shutouts Sept. 2 and Sept. 7. Britt is last year's A-10 Player of the Year.

Rookie of the Week

La Salle freshman midfielder Beth Carey is the A-10 Rookie of the Week. Carey leads all A-10 freshmen with six points. This is her third straight week winning the award, the first player to do so since 2001.

Other news and notes

Rhode Island remains undefeated after beating Siena, 3-1. Midfielders senior Jen Cetenich and sophomore Jill Powers each were credited with a goal and assist. Senior goalkeeper M.J. Britt had six saves in the win … West Chester lost to No. 2 North Carolina, 9-0, on day two of the Vonnie Gross Classic. Although sophomore goalkeeper Joelle Zarefoss set a career high 13 saves, she still allowed goals from eight different Tarheels … Richmond lost their fifth game on Sunday to Miami (Ohio), 5-1. They are now on a five-game losing streak. Sophomore forward Megan Thompson scored the only goal of the game, her first for the season.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

Arnold impressive in replacing Koegel yards rushing on 43 carries, a 3.3-yard average. The Minutemen have only allowed nine rushing first downs thus far.

FOOTBALL from page 8

PUNTING AROUND

One question mark entering the 2007 season was who would start at punter for the Minutemen, and could that person realistically replace perhaps the best punter in team history, Christian Koegel.

Brown answered that question before the season, announcing that junior Brett Arnold beat out red-shirt junior Ryan Logan for the starting job.

Arnold, a transfer from Lackawanna Junior College, is proving that was a wise decision. The 6-foot, 180-pound punter hasn't made everyone completely forget about Koegel, but if he continues at his current pace, it's only a matter of time before he will.

Arnold improved on his solid opening-game performance against Holy Cross (44.3-yard average on six punts) with five booming punts against Colgate – including three that traveled further than 50 yards.

Arnold has a 47.4 average on 11 punts this season, including two exceeding 60 yards (65 and 68) and four downed inside the 20. The special teams coverage has also been solid, as Arnold has a net punt average of 41.2.

NEWS AND NOTES

UMass has played two games without star tight end Brad Listorti, who remains out with a back injury. Listorti had 38 receptions for 604 yards and three touchdowns last season. Backup Ian Jorgensen – who had two touchdowns in the playoffs in 2006 – has helped pick up the slack for the offense, as he caught his first-career regular season touchdown against the Raiders on Saturday.

Quarterback Liam Coen certainly misses Listorti, but has already thrown six touchdown passes. He's hooked up with five different receivers in the end zone. J.J. Moore is the only player with multiple TD receptions and also leads the team with 203 receiving yards.

J.J. Moore's 58-yard punt return for a touchdown against Colgate was the first for UMass since 1996. Kory Blackwell was the last Minuteman to turn the trick, doing so against Connecticut on a 67-yard scamper.

Place-kicker Chris Koepplin had a record-setting season in 2006 for the Minutemen. He tied the single-season record for most field goals made (16) and set the mark for most points in a season (99). Despite the stellar season, Koepplin entered training camp in a battle with Armando Cukoi for kickoff duties.

Koepplin eventually won the job, and has shown vast improvements with his distances on kickoffs. His average has increased by five yards (64.8 from 59.8) and he already has two touchbacks in 11 attempts.

The Minutemen have already accumulated nine sacks and 15 tackles for a loss in two games. David Harris (three sacks and four tackles for a loss) leads the team in both categories.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Late goals giving UMass headaches thing we focus on in practice. We have some guys that can just fly in the box and we look for them; we just haven't found them yet.

M. SOCCER from page 8

"There is some luck involved and we haven't had any. But we just need to be better," he continued.

EXIT SANDMAN

After dominating a weak Maine team but still losing in the season opener, the Minutemen have entered the second half of two games with leads only to allow the opposition back into the game.

Against Dartmouth, goalkeeper Zack Simmons appeared to have bailed his teammates out with a crucial save after they allowed Craig Henderson a clean attempt on goal. But the UMass defense failed to clear the ball and Henderson tapped the rebound in to tie the score. A late tally from Prince Ofosu gave the Minutemen a win.

A late goal by Vermont also wasted an early UMass lead. Obviously, it's impractical to demand a shutout against every opponent, but consistently losing late leads can kill a team. The Rappaport penalty kick saved the team from drawing a game it easily should've won.

"When we have a lead we tend to sit back and try to conserve the lead," Rappaport said. "Unfortunately, we haven't been able to hold them. We kind of get into a defensive shell and don't press forward. We just absorb the other teams attack and then they can send their outside backs forward."

The Minutemen know they cannot consistently rely on late goals … Simmons entered 2007 needing two shutouts to break the all-time school record. After four games in 2006, he held three opponents scoreless, but hasn't shut any out yet in 2007 … Cook has started 43 consecutive games since becoming a mainstay in the center backfield in 2005.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Chance for Rudy's 301st rained out over 173 minutes. She maintains a save percentage of .947, a goals-against average of 0.36, and has blocked 18 shots.

W. SOCCER from page 8

Luckey has seen almost 37 minutes in goal. She has made five saves for a percentage of .833 and Rudy says she will be seeing more action as the season goes on.

Senior goalkeeper Melissa Jubinville has not yet seen the field.

MOVING ON…

When asked if he was happy to move on from the consequential media hype of his run up to the 300-win mark, Rudy gave a simple answer – yes.

"It was too much focus on me and not enough on the team. And the team is where it's at," he said.

After obtaining win number 299 against Maine in the season opener, Rudy was denied the heralded 300th when the Minutewomen tied Providence College, and was forced to listen to a barrage of questions about how it would feel to be the ninth coach in NCAA history to record 300 career victories.

Rudy is just happy it's over so he can coach his squad with just the normal amount of pressure and attention received by a college coach. Yesterday's chance for No. 301 was washed away with the rain, but he will have another this Sunday at Rudd Field

BUT PROBABLY STAYING PUT

With the 300 wins and 27 years of coaching under his belt, Rudy says he is not sure when he'll hang up his whistle, but doesn't think it will be anytime soon.

"This is what I know. This is what I do," said Rudy, who has been coaching since graduating from Rollins College in 1972. "We'll see. UMass was a great move for me, leaving Central Florida. It's been a good run. I'm not a big moving kind of person. The WUSA came calling one year and there's been other Division I schools that have come calling, but I'm still here."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

YANKEE CANDLE®
a passion for fragrance™

At The Yankee Candle Company, Inc., we care about our employees' success. If you are ready to be recognized for your hard work, come begin a bright career with us!

Where bright careers begin.

Welcome Back Students!

Come to our Job Fair!

Full- & Part-time Positions!

Wednesday, September 12
10am - 2pm & 4pm - 7pm

Yankee Candle Fitness Facility next to Yankee Candle Village, South Deerfield, MA

If you are unable to attend, please apply in person Mon-Fri 8:30am-5:00pm at: 102 Christian Lane, Whately, MA or online at: www.yankeecandle.com

EOE/AA

Awards are limited to $2,000 per applicant group per academic year

Does Your Group Need Money?

The UMass Amherst Alumni Association helps RSOs and other student organizations fund projects that will improve and enhance student life.

Deadline for the first grant review is Friday, September 14!

Visit UMassAlumni.com for an application and grant guidelines today or call the Alumni Association at 545-2317.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/28/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
♦ KARAOKE ♦
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14TH, 2007:
LEAVING LONEON BAND
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15TH, 2007:
DJ
♦ STUDENT BAND WANTED ♦
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O's!
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-8788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT/SUN
TAKE TO GUARTABLE APTS

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

3			4	2		7
		8	9					3
2						1
			7	6		4
9			2		4			6
		2			9	3
		3						1
1					7	6
	6		3	8				4

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Melos only affairs
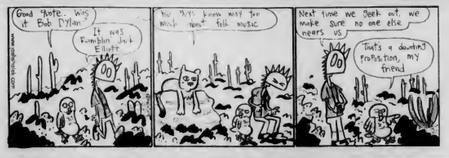
6 Male abbr.
10 Engrossed
14 Poster star
15 Not taken in by
16 Ms. Fitzgerald
17 Kind of circle or city
18 Last-ender
19 Scale drawing
20 Mocks in fun
22 Wading clumsily
24 Mall happening
26 Main courses
27 Coll. sports grp.
30 Ominous
32 Notable lime
33 Onion, for one
35 Razes
40 Become swollen
42 Trucker's perch
43 Georgia fruit
44 Allure
47 Regal address
48 Narrow inlet
49 Lascivious look
51 Grog ingredient
52 In opposition to
56 Sesame, for one
58 Use
60 Risk takers
64 Pro (in proportion)
65 Hammer's target
67 Golfer's gouge
68 Roman poet
69 Norway's largest city
70 Weasel out of
71 Manuscript enc.
72 Footprint
73 Freshen up

DOWN
1 Polish companion?
2 Fork part
3 Dancer Pavlova
4 Try to answer
5 Distribute widely
6 "The Simpsons" bar-keep
7 Aardvark snacks
8 Overused
9 Mustard in Clue
10 Says in a different way
11 Former Yankee pitcher Reynolds
12 Flat surface
13 Sharp-tastics
21 Lost traction
23 Landing area
25 Put up
27 Swedish pop group
28 Religious sect
29 Coagulate
31 Modern memo
34 Bulwark
36 Haulboys
37 Samson's pride
38 Hosiery shade
39 Son of Noah
41 Tarmac
45 Gambling houses
46 Requisite
50 Elementary school feat
52 60s hairdos
53 Pear-shaped fruit
54 Nonconformists
55 Skoal or prost!
57 Take the car
59 Sudan's river
61 Novelist Conner
62 Commuted
63 Goulash or stroganoff
66 Cut short



Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 90 AMHERST

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm a nut, but not just a nut."

-Bill Murray

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

LAST DITCH EFFORT BY JOHN KROES

THE QUIGMANS BY BUDDY HICKERSON

"Maybe if we change the name."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your fly is down. Repeat: everyone can see your junkpiece.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You'll lose your arm hair at an alarming rate. You're very furry, so this is good.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Kidney beans are actually the kidneys of a hodge-podge of tiny rodents.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Go on hunger strike until "Hey There Delilah" is no longer played on the radio.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
No matter how cool your car is, it looks stupid on the back of a tow truck.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Act like a watering can and moisturize the seeds of kindness amongst your friends.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You stand out among a crowd like a hot girl at a sci-fi convention.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Get smoochies by pretending to faint in front of mad fly hotties and getting CPR.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You are a vain pothead. Your existence is nothing more than smoke and mirrors.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Despite the reptilian splendor of their name, Crocs are a lame fashion tragedy.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You're too self centered. Read somebody else's horoscope for once in your life.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Steal all of the clocks in the Morrill science building and make necklaces out of them.

Submit comics and get rich!

Note: These two actions are in no way connected.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

UMass YOGA In Boyden 10
Mon Wed
Tues Thurs
Fall 2007
Sign Up Now!
Semester Packages:
1 class per week $85
2 classes per week $150
Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 413
umassyoga.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply DP Dough Downtown, Amherst

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Sperm Donor Wanted
We are looking for a healthy, bright, athletic, male college student to donate sperm. I will pay for pre-tests and compensate you $300 per donation. Serious responses only. Contact us at leightonej@yahoo.com

STAGE HANDS WANTED AT FINE ARTS CENTER. $7.50 / HR. VARIABLE SCHEDULE – WEEK DAY

EMPLOYMENT

AVAILABILITY PREFERRED 9-NOON, 1PM-5. APPLICATIONS AT PRODUCTION SERVICES RM 146 F.A.C.

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing. STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 6+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008! Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free! Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Lodge Reservations 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

SEP 12 2007

SEP

13

2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Terriers back in town

Minutewomen look to end struggles vs. BU

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massacusetts field hockey team will try to get back on track and snap its two game losing streak when it hosts Boston University tonight at Garber Field at 6 p.m.

The Minutewomen (3-3) are coming off a tough weekend that saw them drop games to Vermont and New Hampshire.

Though still ranked 20th in the country, the Terriers (3-2) are coming off a two-game losing streak of their own. After beginning the season with three straight victories, BU hit a road bump with losses to Michigan State and Boston College.

A shootout at Garber Field will be unlikely, with both teams boasting strong defenses and goaltending. The Maroon and White have allowed just five goals in its six games, while the Terriers defense has allowed seven goals in five games.

The Minutewomen have used two goalies all year, and both have had degrees of success. Sarah Williams has a higher save percentage and a 2-1 record, whereas Becky Letourneau is 1-2.

Kim Kastuk has started four of five games for BU this year, and owns a 3-1 record. The goalkeeper's success has already won her an America East Rookie of the Week award.

While the team's records are nearly identi-

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Forward Erin Parker and the Minutewomen will try to snap a five-game losing streak against the Terriers today. The junior has two assists on the season.

Transfer, walk-on join UMass squad

When it's all said and done, the roster of the Massachusetts basketball team may resemble that of a football team more than anything else. In the past two days, UMass coach Travis Ford added Wake Forest transfer Anthony Gurley and freshman Tyrell Lynch. The team's roster now sits at 18 players, with 17 of them eligible for the 2007-08 season.

After spending one season with the Demon Deacons, Gurley, a 6'3" shooting guard, made the decision to transfer closer to home. He starred at Newton North High School and played in nearly 15 minutes per game for Wake Forest last season. He averaged 6.4 points and shot 31 percent from 3-point range.

The Massachusetts native scored a career-high 24 points on Feb. 21 against Georgia Tech and led his team in scoring four times last year.

Numerous media sources reported on Monday that Gurley had made the decision to transfer but he was still considering schools, including Northeastern. UMass school officials have not yet made an announcement.

Lynch, a 6'9" forward from Niagara Falls, N.Y., was supposed to enroll at Auburn this fall. He will walk onto the team this fall and will be eligible for a scholarship next season. Lynch will not be required to sit out a year under NCAA regulations since he is officially joining the Minutemen as a freshman.

The forward's academic status was uncertain at Auburn due to strict Southeastern Conference standards. However, the question regarding his eligibility stems from the prep school he attended and not his academic performance.

Lynch joins the Minutemen as the seventh first-year athlete on the roster, while Gurley is the seventh player to transfer from Division I teams under Ford's tenure.

The additions bring the total number of guards to 10, with only junior Chris Lowe having any significant experience at point guard.

-Michael King

Douglas Rappaport scored a pair of goals – including a game-winner – last weekend. The junior put away Vermont with a penalty kick in overtime.

Flags flying, but UM winning

Plenty of penalties again at Colgate, but team is improving

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

With two games in the books, the Massachusetts football team is a perfect 2-0. If the Minutemen hope to stay that way, they'll have to put it together for four quarters – something they weren't able to do against either Holy Cross or Colgate.

UMass Football

They'll also have to cut down on the penalties. The Maroon and White have been flagged for 13 penalties in each game this season for a total of 266 yards. On the flip side, UMass opponents have only been called for 12 penalties totaling 91 yards.

In Saturday's 35-17 victory over Colgate, the Minutemen were whistled for six different penalties – including six for holding and three for pass interference. They were penalized three times on two separate drives, once resulting in an almost-impossible first-and-28 situation for the offense in the second quarter.

The other drive came in the third quarter, as the Minuteman defense was penalized for 40 yards on three penalties (facemask, roughing the passer and pass interference). The Raiders failed to take advantage, fumbling the ball into the hands of linebacker Charles Walker on a third-and-goal at the 1-yard-line.

The penalties have been a major issue, but have yet to cost the Minutemen any games. If they continue to commit 13 penalties per game, that may change.

OFF TO A RUNNING START

The Maroon and White have dominated its opponents on the ground in more ways than one.

Colgate star running back Jordan Scott was completely shut down in the second half by the Minuteman defense – gaining just 11 yards on 13 carries after exploding for 92 yards in the first half. UMass starting tailback Matt Lawrence enjoyed another big day, rushing for 122 yards following his 153-yard performance in the opener.

Scott failed to cross the goal line despite having five touches inside the 5-yard line. His fumble in the third quarter all but ended any hope of a Raider comeback.

UMass coach Don Brown is not worried about the number of penalties his team has committed, as most can be blamed on aggression, not mental errors.

"We did a good job of pressuring them and fitting our gaps," UMass coach Don Brown said after Saturday's game. "There were no seams for him to go, and it was nice to see our guys rise up and get that stop."

Backup UMass tailback Tony Nelson picked up where Lawrence left off in the second half, rushing for 67 yards after halftime. The duo has already amassed 400 rushing yards on just 58 carries – good for a 6.9 average. The starting running backs for Colgate (Scott) and Holy Cross (Terrance Glass) combined for 141

See FOOTBALL on page 6

Rappaport honored for game-winner

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

After scoring the game-winning goal in the Massachusetts men's soccer team's 2-1 overtime win at Vermont on Saturday, red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport won his first career UMass/Dinn Brothers Athlete of the Week Award. The goal came on a penalty kick three minutes into overtime.

He also scored a goal in UMass's 2-1 win at Dartmouth on Sept. 3. After missing all of last season with an ankle injury, Rappaport has started all four games at the left back spot for the Minutemen (2-2-0).

UMass Soccer

"It was nice [to get the award] and it's been nice, as a team, to start out well," he said. "I probably only have four or five shots. The goal against Dartmouth was kind of a freak thing. I just took a touch and it happened to be a nice strike and it went in."

Strong defensive play highlighted the 2006 season, and the addition of Rappaport stabilized the left side of UMass's backfield, especially since the Minutemen chose to focus most of their preseason training on offense.

The experience he brings along with his dynamic left leg is a great addition to an already deep UMass defensive unit. Against UVM, a younger player may have wilted under the pressure of a great scoring chance at such a crucial juncture in the game.

"On penalty kicks, you kind of just have to pick a spot and hope the goalie reacts wrong," he said. "The Vermont goalie reacted early, so I just hit it down the middle, a little to the left."

BACKING INTO A CORNER

In 2006, the Minutemen failed to convert a single corner kick into a goal, wasting all 93 opportunities. Nothing has changed after four games in 2007, the Minutemen have 19 chances so far and zero goals on those chances. It has even proved a struggle for them to force a shot on goal.

The height UMass possesses – nine players stand at least 6-foot-1 – gives them a multitude of targets on corners. Hogan (6-foot-2) and senior center back Kenny Cook (6-foot-5) are the main targets, but haven't converted yet.

Hogan proved how dangerous he can be in the air against Vermont. A long Chris Brown free kick sailed into the box and Hogan got above the Catamount defenders and headed the ball past UVM goalkeeper Roger Scully.

"That's the thing we work on more than anything in practice, scoring on set pieces," Rappaport said. "We've scored on a few free kicks, but the corners are definitely some-

See M. SOCCER on page 6

Trip to Albany washed out by rain

Rudy moving on with renewed focus after capturing 300th win

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team will have to wait until next year to face Albany, as yesterday's away game against the Great Danes was cancelled due to rain.

Albany called off the game because of poor field conditions and it will not be made up. Rain has been pouring down in New York's capital since Saturday evening and forecasts expect that trend to continue.

UMass Soccer

UMass (2-0-1) has not squared off against Albany (1-2-2) since Sept. 10, 2006, when it went to overtime, beating the Great Danes, 1-0. The lone goal was scored less than two minutes into the extra frame by senior captain Nadia Villarroel, who was lost to graduation. Two assists were accredited on the play, to then-junior forward Britt Canfield and sophomore forward Vanessa Patry – both of whom are now team captains.

The Minutewomen's next matchup is a home game against Hartford set for Sunday at 1 p.m.

NEW KIDS ON THE BLOCK

Something that has impressed UMass coach Jim Rudy this season has been the performance of his first-year players.

Freshman Ashley Hamel was one of the first Minutewomen to record a tick on the season's stat sheet when she assisted a goal by Canfield in a 1-1 tie to Providence College on Sept. 2.

In the Maroon and White's last game, a 2-1 win over Iona, the UMass goals were contributed by freshmen Therese Smith and Kelsey Anderson, respectively.

Rudy says he and the rest of his team have great faith in this year's freshmen, but that he suspects the upperclassmen – most notably Canfield, Patry and sophomore Sydney Stoll – will soon step up and provide more offense.

WALLS OF DEFENSE

Rudy has also been pleased with the work of his two main goalkeepers, red-shirt senior Kristin Walker and sophomore Lauren Luckey. Each goalie has given up one goal this season.

Walker, Rudy's starter for the last three seasons, has seen the majority of time between the posts so far, having punched in just Forward Britt Canfield leads the Maroon and White in points with three on a goal and an assist (tying teammate Sydney Stoll). The senior also leads the team in shots (10) and shots on goal (4).

See W. SOCCER on page 6

UMASS SET TO HOST TIGERS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 75 LO: 52 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2007

Durfee Conservatory damaged as tree crashes through ceiling

No injuries but major roof damage results

By Jackie Hai
Collegian Staff

A large tree fell down outside Durfee Conservatory at approximately 3:45 p.m. yesterday, one of its branches smashing through the roof of the greenhouse. Since the impact was not direct, the building sustained no serious structural damage, only several broken glass panes where the branch struck. Not as fortunate was a pair of trash and recycling cans on the sidewalk, crushed by the massive tree trunk and reduced to bent and twisted metal.

Sarah Gire, a student employee at Durfee, was inside the greenhouse and directly underneath the spot where the branch hit. She was sitting at a workbench in House Five, the easternmost wing, when she heard a popping noise.

"I looked up, and I saw the shadow of the tree falling," said Gire. "I got up and there was glass shattering everywhere, and I ran out the door. I screamed at the top of my lungs."

One of those flying shards of glass nicked Gire on the thumb. Luckily, she sustained no other injuries from the incident and nobody else was around to get hurt.

Michael Formosi, director of the Durfee Conservatory, says that the tree falling was completely out of the blue.

"It always looked like a healthy tree," he said. "You wouldn't have suspected that it would come down."

Formosi isn't sure sure what toppled the green giant. He says it had always grown with a natural slant toward the north, leaning out over the parking lot. But the tree fell eastward instead, parallel to the greenhouse. Though there was a westerly wind blowing yesterday, it wasn't particularly strong, clocking in somewhere between 8 and 11 mph in the afternoon. In comparison, gale force winds are generally at least 32 mph.

John, a Physical Plant employee, speculated that rot and old age contributed to the tree's fall. The base of the trunk now cracked, open and exposed – had in fact been mostly hollow.

Employees from the Physical Plant cleared away the tree later yesterday evening and will replace the broken glass panes. Business goes on as usual at the Durfee Conservatory.

"We're just lucky that no one got hurt," says Gire.

"Very lucky," Formosi agreed.

Jackie Hai can be reached at jhai at student.umass.edu

Several panes of the Durfee Conservatory's roof were shattered leaving the floor littered with sharp glass.

Capital plan set at 2.9 billion for '08

System doubles capital spending

By Hilary Sullivan
Collegian Staff

On Sept. 5, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees gave approval to a five-year, $2.9 billion capital plan, which will run from 2008.

The money will be used to complete renovations and maintenance repairs that so far have piled up at the University's five campuses: Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and UMass Medical. President Jack M. Wilson hopes the money can be used to make the University a better school for students and faculty.

"We are putting forward a very ambitious capital plan," said Wilson.

He added that over the next five years, the plan would almost double the level of capital spending and activity that the University system has undertaken in previous years dating back to 2000.

"This plan is ambitious because our goals for the University of Massachusetts are very ambitious, as we seek to make UMass one of the finest public universities in the nation," said Wilson.

"Our students and our state deserve nothing less."

Also attending the meeting were the top finance officials in the state – Governor Deval Patrick's secretary of administration and finance, Leslie Kirwan, and Assistant Secretary Jay Gonzalez.

The Patrick administration has repeatedly said that it is dedicated to making public higher education in Massachusetts better.

"Public institutions of higher education must have high-quality instructional, research and residential facilities to offer students a world-class college education and produce a talented workforce for Massachusetts," stated a release from the governor's office in early August.

"State funding through the capital budget helps finance construction and maintenance of these facilities, while keeping the price of college affordable for students," said the release.

In recent history, there have been improvements and acquisitions on all five campuses to update them. As the flagship campus, UMass Amherst recently completed the North Apartments in fall 2005, the Marriott Center for Hospitality

See PLAN on page 2

UMass fraternity shoots hoops for worthy cause

By Hannah Nelson
Collegian Staff

It was not quite 4 p.m. yet, but music was already traveling from the Southwest horseshoe up past the dining commons.

Members of the largest fraternity on campus, Sigma Phi Epsilon, could be seen tying down banners and sipping Rockstar energy drinks as students in maroon were shooting hoops in the basketball court.

The fraternity was holding a 3-on-3 basketball tournament fundraiser for the YouthAids organization.

UMass is only one of many campuses with a Sig Ep chapter that will be holding similar events this fall nationwide to raise money for the YouthAids organization.

"This is the third year we've done this," said Matt O'Connor, the chapter president of Sigma Phi Epsilon. "We're trying to do better than last year."

Registration for teams started at 12 p.m., and by the time the event started in the evening, the brothers were still taking sign-ups.

At starting time they had about 20 teams of five players.

But the event doesn't end after the games are over.

"At 9 p.m. We The Living, a band from the Midwest, will be playing a concert at our house to promote their Northeast tour as well as continue our YouthAids campaign," Mike Harris said.

The four-member band has been making stops at colleges along the way and is singing off their LP with their first album due out later this fall.

"The band actually contacted us and are playing for free," Randy Adam said, having organized the after-tournament concert at the fraternity's house on Olympia Drive.

As if the band's involvement wasn't enough to get excited about, the basketball tournament had a big-name sponsor behind it.

Energy drink company Rockstar was also up for a chance to help the brothers support the cause, not to mention keeping participants and onlookers alike going strong through the evening's festivities.

As part of Sigma Phi Epsilon's national effort to promote awareness for YouthAids, other chapters will be holding similar events.

Some will hold sporting events like the basketball tournament and others like the University of California Berkeley's pumpkin sales in past years.

YouthAids, a sub-organization of Population Services International, uses media, pop culture, music, theatre and sport to stop the spread of HIV/AIDS and reach 600 million young people, according to their Web site.

The YouthAids organization has been working globally since the '70s to promote HIV/AIDS education and awareness.

Yet today, it is actively providing potent tools. The saving information in over 60 nations.

Sigma Phi Epsilon currently has the largest undergraduate fraternity membership in the country, and is a community large enough to bring in serious money.

Sig Ep was asking for a small donation from those who came out to watch or $5 for an event T-shirt. The fraternity expects to [illegible] $2,000. Those participating in the event received a free T-shirt and the satisfaction that they had some fun for a worthy cause.

Hannah Nelson can be reached at [illegible]@student.umass.edu

Orchard Hill flooding fills bowl, dorms left without water for hours

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

According to student sources, several buildings in Orchard Hill had their water shut off in an effort to fix a break in a water main, which caused major flooding in the residential area's common "bowl" area.

Grayson, Webster, Field and Dickinson were among the buildings affected, according to student reports.

"Emergency maintenance said the water will be down for at least two hours because of a water main break – they're jogging the water on and off trying to figure out where it's leaking from," said Nicholas Mangsen, a senior resident assistant living in Dickinson.

The bowl was approximately 60 percent filled with water, a spectacle that inspired many residents to take pictures and personally investigate.

Nathaniel Goodhue, a freshman living in Webster, described the scene as desolate, with the area's most recognizable feature filling quickly with water and a cone designating the break.

To spread word to students, maintenance called the cluster office and instructed them to call all the RAs to ensure residents knew about the lack of water.

"There are flyers going up right now that say the water will be down for at least a couple hours while maintenance repairs a water main break in the area," said Mangsen at 9 p.m.

At the time of publication, the maintenance and operation division of housing services could not be reached for comment.

Eli Rosenswaike contributed to this report. Will McGuinness is at collegian-editor. He can be reached at [illegible]@gmail.com Maintenance workers dig for the root of last night's Orchard Hill flood. Officials believe it was caused by a break in a water main.

Alpha Tau Gamma chapter returns

Popular frat is back on campus

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

After two years of absence, the Stockbridge fraternity, Alpha Tau Gamma, will be returning to the University of Massachusetts campus this fall.

The fraternity was suspended for three years in July 2005 for fire and safety violations, which included broken doors, blocked exits and illegal cooking. The Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity was also suspended due to similar violations.

"The ATG Corporation submitted an appeal to the administration and to the Stockbridge School of Agriculture/NRI, to have permission to restart their organization a year early," said UMass Head of Fraternities and Sororities Michael Wiseman. "Sigma Alpha Mu has not submitted such an appeal to the administration."

He also highlighted the difficulty ATG may have had restarting its program as a Stockbridge fraternity.

"The Stockbridge program is a two-year program, and the ATG Corporation was afraid that a three-year absence from campus would make it very difficult to restart their undergraduate chapter."

See FRAT on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 8
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stiggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Dvihchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael Kang
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Team Trish

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER IS TO ALSO LAY, BECAME THE COLLEGE SEWAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN PRODUCED FULLY JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING, RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MESSAGES BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nicholas Belanger

SEP 13 2007

Plan to be voted on

PLAN from page 1

Management and the renovated Berkshire Dining Commons.

The Boston campus added a new waterfront campus center, and at Dartmouth, new dorms and a new 22,000 square-foot research building. UMass Lowell made several renovations, and the medical school purchased a Shrewsbury facility.

The funding is going to come from several areas. Forty-one percent will come from University funds and borrowing. Thirty-eight percent will be from the state; 16 percent will be undesignated; and the final 5 percent will come from private fundraising and federal funding. Fifty-six percent of the capital plan will be used to perform maintenance and renovations for existing buildings. About $1.2 billion of the plan will be used for building new academic and research buildings, student housing and student recreational buildings across the University system's campuses.

The capital plan will be reviewed by the full Board of Trustees on Sept. 19 at a meeting in Lowell.

Hilary Sullivan can be reached at hsullivn a student.umass.edu.

ATG is reinstated

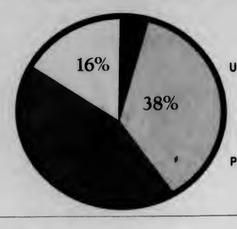
FRAT from page 1

When asked what part, if any, a recent donation ATG made to the Stockbridge school played in the decision to let ATG return early, Wiseman, himself not a Stockbridge employee, had no comment, "since the donation was to the Stockbridge School."

ATG Inc., owner of both suspended fraternities, also owned the entire Frat Row property until selling it to the University for $2.5 million. Upon the completion of the sale, ATG Inc immediately donated $500,000 back to the Stockbridge School, with the remaining funds paying off the company's debts. Jim Mulcahy, the treasurer of the company, drove to UMass headquarters in Boston and hand-delivered the check.

The Stockbridge School plans to use the donation for an endowed professorship.

With Frat Row now existing solely as a patch of grass and a slew of memories, the ATG fraternity will have to look at other options when they come back, says Wiseman.



"We have many chapters who operate without a fraternity/sorority house, and ATG knows that might be the option they will have to consider," he said. "The ATG Corporation has expressed an interest in looking at other housing models."

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale a student.umass.edu.

The weight of the falling tree's massive trunk crushed the trash containers nearby.

Allocation of $2.9 billion

Princeton professor released from Iranian detainment

Instructor happy to be back in States

BY DANIELLA ROSEMAN
THE DAILY PRINCETONIAN

PRINCETON, N.J. — Former Princeton lecturer Haleh Esfandiari was allowed to leave Iran and reunite with her family in the United States last week after eight months of detainment in Iran, including four months of solitary confinement in the country's notorious Evin prison.

"I'm really disappointed that this happened to me," Esfandiari, who taught Persian language and literature at the University from 1980 to 1994, said at a press conference yesterday. "I don't bear any grudges ... of course there were moments where I was very angry, but I'm back home. I'm back with my family. I'm back at work."

Esfandiari's ordeal began in December when she was visiting her mother in Tehran. While going to the airport to return to the United States, where she has lived for more than 25 years, Esfandiari was robbed at knife-point by three men who stole both her Iranian and American passports.

When she applied for a replacement passport, Esfandiari found herself in the clutches of Iran's Ministry of Intelligence, which interrogated her repeatedly. She was then arrested in May and accused of endangering Iranian national security.

The interrogations continued in prison and focused on the operations of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, a Washington think tank where she is director of the Middle East Program.

"I tried to convince them that, you know, the Wilson Center is a transparent institution," she said at the press conference. "Whatever we did is on our Web site ... you could easily find out about the meetings by reading our Web site."

Esfandiari was finally issued a new passport on Sept. 1 after being released from Evin prison on a bail of three billion rials — the equivalent of $320,000 — posted Aug. 21. On Sept. 2 she left Iran for Vienna, Austria, and finally returned to her home in Potomac, Md., on Sept. 6.

During the press conference, Esfandiari insisted that the interrogation sessions she endured, where questions and answers were exchanged in writing, were cordial. Since she did not interact with other prisoners, she said she could not describe their treatment, but she herself was treated with "the utmost respect" and was never mentally or physically mistreated.

Though she was held in isolation in a "relatively large room" with windows, Esfandiari said she was eventually allowed access to newspapers and television. She was also allowed to call her mother, though their conversation was limited. She kept a daily routine of rigorous exercise to keep herself mentally and physically healthy.

Now that she is home again, Esfandiari said she plans to continue her work at the Wilson Center, though she may not initially participate in as many meetings about Iran as she once did. She declined to speculate as to whether she will soon return to the country, though she did say she advocates diplomatic interaction between Iran and the West.

"I always have and will advocate talks between governments, be it the Iranian government and the United States or any other government," she said. "I think governments should talk to each other."

Esfandiari's imprisonment provoked widespread calls for her release, including efforts by former students and colleagues at the University. In June, the Near Eastern studies department cosponsored a vigil for Esfandiari and three other Iranian-American civilians detained in Iran.

Four of Esfandiari's former students — Cherrie Daniels '91, Parinaz Vahabzadeh '93, Erin Logan '93 and Jonathan Katz GS '90 — wrote a letter to Iran's Ayatollah Khamenei, which appealed to the religious leader on a humanitarian basis, Daniels said.

The document was signed by 36 of Esfandiari's former students, two of whom delivered it by hand to the Iranian committee to the United Nations.

President Tilghman also sent a letter to the Iranian ambassador to the United Nations on Esfandiari's behalf.

Esfandiari is "the kind of person Iran should be honoring," Daniels said, noting that her former professor "never once said a negative word about Iran." She added that Esfandiari's classes examined Iranian history, Persian culture and folk tales — "nothing political."

Near Eastern Studies professor Andras Hamori said efforts to help Esfandiari were multi-pronged. "We joined Amnesty International, the Woodrow Wilson Center, and some others in calling attention to Dr. Esfandiari's plight," he said in an email, "and made known that, like these other organizations and institutions, we protested against her imprisonment."

Continuous appeals were made by Wilson Center president Lee Hamilton, members of the U.S. government, the website www.freehaleh.org and even a number of "Free Haleh" groups on www.facebook.com.

Though Esfandiari's arrest might seem puzzling, Wilson School and Near Eastern studies professor Robert Finn GS '78, a former U.S. ambassador to Afghanistan, said he believes Tehran had a reason for its actions. The Iranian government goes to the trouble of arresting seemingly apolitical individuals like Esfandiari, he said, because it fears free speech and a plurality of opinions.

"It's a program of social intimidation," he said. "I think they were really afraid that her work was leading towards some kind of 'soft' revolution."

Shortly after Esfandiari's release, another Iranian American held by Iran, radio host Parnaz Azima, also regained her passport. Finn said he is not sure why Iran released them. "I think they decided they made their point," he said. "I don't think they were expecting such a strong reaction from so many."

Finn, who said he is planning to invite Esfandiari to speak at Princeton, said he fears tactics like her arrest and eventual release have made their mark. "They did have their effect," he said. "This kind of intimidation works."

Though happy to be released, Esfandiari said she feels "a great sense of disappointment" that the Iranian government did not appreciate her work. "It's as if all your efforts all these years were ... misunderstood."

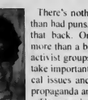
Meet UMass Pastry Chefs...
Let them make a crepe for you!

Wednesday September 12 AT WORCESTER DC
Thursday September 13 AT FRANKLIN DC
Friday September 14 AT HAMPSHIRE DC
5–9 pm

DINING SERVICES
UMass/Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

2007 Grand Prize Winner

Be A Local Hero
Buy Locally Grown



SAMPLE THE FOLLOWING:
Fresh Multi Berry Sauce (local)
Fresh Peach Sauce (local)
Nutella
Crepe Suzette
Bananas
Chocolate Chips
Cherries
Whipped Cream

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0005
90 AMHERST

Welcome Back Students!
Delivery:
413.549.0077
413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Panda East
FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
Featuring:
• Vegetarian Options
• Lunch Specials
• Sushi Bar
• "Light and Healthy" entrees
~Elegant, Relaxing and Upscale~
We Bring China Town to You!
Monday - Thursday: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm - 10:00pm
Visit us at: www.pandaeastamherst.com
103 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Move over, Moveon.org

S.P. Sullivan

There's nothing I hate more than bad puns. Actually, I take that back. One thing I hate more than a bad pun is liberal activist groups – the kind that take important social or political issues and turn them into propaganda and spin.

The organization that comes to mind is MoveOn.org – the group that right wing jackasses like Bill O'Reilly blame for any negative press they get, and usually get away with it. Why do they get away with it? Because MoveOn.org does some pretty jackass-y stuff, too. And a couple of jackasses make for more than just a Democratic convention.

MoveOn.org recently ran an ad in The New York Times titled "General Petreaus or General Betray Us?" accusing Petreaus, a U.S. Army general, of fudging the facts about Iraq. And although the ad raises important questions about the war, its tastelessness has the effect of delegitimizing its cause. Its purpose is self-defeating.

Frank James of the Baltimore Sun had the following to say about the ad: "The problem for MoveOn.org is that the ad will strike many Americans as extreme and likely turn a lot of people off to its larger message."

I disagree with James in one respect. The aforementioned isn't the problem "for" MoveOn.org – it's the problem with MoveOn.org.

I take issue with liberal activists and all other nut jobs on the left, especially, because I'm a pretty left-leaning individual. So there's nothing more frustrating than seeing issues I care about – the war in Iraq, health care reform, protections of civil liberties, gay and minority rights – muddled up by a bunch of tactless firebrands. Right-wing zealots amuse me; left-wing zealots leave me red-faced and cringing.

I can't take what MoveOn has to say about the war and General Petraeus at face value; most Americans can't.

And of course, those are your two options these days: the red team or the blue team. The late Kurt Vonnegut left us with some wisdom on the matter. In his last book, "A Man Without a Country," he wrote, "Even crazier, though, is modern American politics, where, thanks to TV and for the convenience of TV, you can only be one of two kinds of human beings, either a liberal or a conservative."

So, since I'm certainly no conservative (I hate golf and can't even balance a checkbook), I suppose I'm, by default, a liberal. Gross.

The MoveOn.org ad actually brought forth some shocking things about the war in Iraq, things many people would not have known otherwise. According to the advertisement, death tolls in Iraq have been distorted the Pentagon by means of convoluted criteria by which certain "deaths" don't count as deaths. Says the ad, "For example, deaths by car bombs don't count. The Washington Post reported that assassinations only count if you're shot in the back of the head."

But thanks to its dirty reputation for demagoguery, I can't take what MoveOn.org has to say about the war and General Petraeus at face value; most Americans can't.

Still yet, "activist" groups dominate the political discourse in this country. Hyperbole abounds, and it's causing disenfranchisement. There are no Hitlers in the legislative, judicial, or even the executive branch. Big Brother is not watching (though the NSA is listening to your phone calls, just to be safe). Abortion is not murder. U.S. soldiers are not terrorists. Democrats don't hate America. And finally, George Bush is not an idiot – he's just a lot dumber than a president should be. I'm sure he'd make a perfectly passable middle-management type.

There is no political unity in the United States, nor has there been for a long time – the past six years, however, have been most striking. Bush, before he was The Decider, was a self-touted Uniter – unfortunately he's only been able to unite people from both political parties against him. But the Democrats and Republicans in the Senate haven't done anything to help the matter either, and organizations like MoveOn.org just widen the rift between left and right, leaving many Americans to fall into the disenfranchisement gap.

I can't even address the issue of whether or not General Petraeus has, in fact, betrayed us. Because I only get 850 words and the question on the tip of everyone's tongue isn't "did he betray us?" It's "can you believe what MoveOn.org printed in the New York Times?" Or even, "They couldn't think of a better pun than that?"

So MoveOn.org performs a disservice to the discourse. Sure, their Web site will get more hits (I had to go there to research this column) and maybe increase ad revenue. But the so-called "General Betray Us" isn't going to suffer any more than he would because of the ad, if anything. MoveOn.org has justified the right wing activist groups to come to his defense. Petreaus will be a martyr for the they-hate-us-for-our-freedom zealots and the stay-the-course apologists.

And as a de facto liberal, this makes me pretty angry, and I'm not sure if I'll be able to move on. Pun intended.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at spsulliva a student.umass.edu.

Mitt Romney, court jester

Nick Milano

After taking control of Salt Lake City to save the 2002 Winter Olympics, Mitt Romney took Massachusetts by storm. His campaign for governor successfully pressed the theory that the state needed a Republican to counter the absolute power of Democrats on Beacon Hill. Over his four years in power, he checked the liberal tendencies of the Democratic leaders, his leadership was vital in revitalizing the state's economy and he turned the wild spending habits of the Legislature into a surplus. Romney displayed crucial leadership in the aftermath of the death of a woman in one of the new Big Dig tunnels by seizing control of the investigation and repair of the tunnel's failing cement ceiling. He truly was able to work across partisan divides to assure the passage of a form of universal healthcare.

By the sound of it, Romney was a very effective governor, but despite all the positives, he has burned his bridges with veiled and direct criticisms of Massachusetts and has alarmingly altered his stances on many social issues ranging from abortion to gun control. As a result, he traded in a carefully coiffed presidential image and became a court jester merely trying to curry favor with conservative Republicans.

Like his three male predecessors, Romney came into office with his eyes clearly set on a higher office. Both William Weld and Paul Celluci left the governorship when appointed ambassadors while Michael Dukakis won the Democratic nomination for president in 1988. In contrast to Dukakis, who lost much momentum after the Democratic National Convention by spending time governing Massachusetts, Romney has been campaigning for over two years. In the first six months of 2006, he spent 81 days traveling on 45 visits to 20 other states. But this alone does not ruin his presidential chances.

His political opportunism will be the death knell of his campaign for the nation's highest office. For the first three years of his time in office, Mitt Romney did not address the problem of the Big Dig. Though the spiraling costs occurred under the watch of previous administrations, Romney's feeble attempts to take more control of the project were blocked. It was not until a fateful July morning when Milena Del Valle was killed by a huge concrete slab of collapsed ceiling. Romney exhibited remarkable leadership and poise. He mastered the engineering lexicon. He explained the finer points of the complicated issue in simple terms everyone could understand. His success only raises one question: Where was this Mitt Romney the past three years?

Romney's political opportunism will be the death knell of his campaign for the nation's highest office.

Another example of his opportunism has been his attempts to move to the right on social issues. In the waning months of his term, he authorized the Massachusetts State Police to arrest any illegal immigrants they came across. He tried to take this harsh stance even though cities like Cambridge and Somerville operated as sanctuary cities for illegal immigrants under his watch. One of Deval Patrick's first moves as governor was to shut down the state police's authority before they had even began to apply it. Also, before relinquishing the governorship to Patrick, Romney made nearly $400 million in emergency budget cuts. He claimed they were necessary to balance the budget, but Patrick restored the cuts which included cuts in healthcare for the poor and salaries for human services workers.

Perhaps the most glaring opportunism comes from the newly mandated health insurance law. Romney vetoed a $295 fine on businesses that do not offer health insurance. It is a central part of the program: it would raise some $45 million annually to be used to fund services.

It would entice businesses to offer health insurance and it was almost a crucial deal breaker in the House and Senate's compromise. In short, his veto could have wreaked havoc on the whole program; yet, on the campaign trail he criticizes the Democrats for overriding it and credits himself for protecting the interests of the business community.

Mitt Romney should be the ideal candidate for the presidency. He was called one of the most beautiful people in the country. He has a long history of business success. He inherited a mess when he went to the Winter Olympics, but came out with a $100 million dollar surplus. In four years under his watch, the Massachusetts unemployment rate dropped 0.7 percentage points and over 5,000 new for profit corporations were created. He reined in a budget gone wild, helping to create a surplus by the time he left office. But his political opportunism reeks. He ran for governor of Massachusetts as a moderate, but during his run for president he has "evolved" into a strict conservative. With a history of pursuing headlines and kowtowing the changing political winds, how can he be projected as a steadfast leader?

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano a student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NO DEBATE ABOUT JEWISH HOLIDAYS

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to an article in the Sept. 6 Collegian: "Students differ on observing Jewish holiday."

While it is gratifying to see the Jewish holidays receive such prominent coverage (on page 1), the article contained several errors of fact and perception which I would like to correct.

1. There are indeed differences between various Jewish denominations. Orthodox Jews observe two days of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, while Reform Jews observe only one day (Thursday, Sept. 13). No one, however, observes a three-day holiday as suggested by your article.

2. As your article indicates, there are also differences between individual Jewish students concerning the choices they make about how much class time to miss for the holidays. You are unfortunately correct that some students who would otherwise observe the holidays feel constrained to attend class (or an exam) out of fear of falling behind.

Although University policy and Massachusetts state law both guarantee all students that they will not be penalized for missing class due to any religious observance, the reality is sometimes not so friendly, especially for students from minority religions (e.g. Jews, Muslims, Hindus, Sikhs, Baha'i). That is one reason why the Office of Jewish Affairs was created 12 years ago; and we will gladly assist any student, of any religious background, who is denied their right to observe their religious holidays or is penalized in any way for doing so.

3. So in response to the author's question: "If one major religion, like Judaism, has their holidays observed, should every religion get the same recognition?" The answer is: Yes! That is precisely the policy here at UMass Amherst. Jewish students have the same rights as all other students, and vice versa.

4. Finally, it is misleading to describe any of these denominational or individual differences as a "debate" as the headline on page 4 suggests ("Jewish New Year stirs campus debate"). Regardless of our different beliefs and religious practices, we will all greet each other, as our new year begins, with a respectful wish for a sweet year, shanah tovah!

Larry Goldbaum, Director
Office of Jewish Affairs
UMass Amherst

WHERE TO DRAW THE LINE?

Dear Editor,

In response to Monday's article "Once again, that good old debate," I would like to ask Michael Dennis, that if we grant gays the "right to marry," what's preventing us from advocating incest or adulters? Where will we draw the line? Granting equality to "those who deserve it" is a subjective demand and his own opinion of a "step in the right direction."

Jen Fill
UMass student

NOT QUITE FAMILY VALUES

Dear Editor,

Poor Senator Craig of Idaho. As a result of a little misunderstood socializing in a restroom at the Minneapolis Airport, he pleads guilty to a misdemeanor and his fellow Republicans hang him out to dry. One might think that these Republican champions of family values could show a little understanding – there is absolutely no evidence that Craig's intentions were honorable and that he was going to ask the guy to marry him.

Sam Osborne
West Branch, IA

Silly, silly white people

Ben Duffy

I have to get something off my chest. I think it's finally time to admit that I'm deeply racist. I'm just now coming to terms with the fact that I have an enduring hatred for an entire race burning in my soul.

So here goes. I hate white people. That may sound funny coming from me, a white guy. Actually, I'm one of the whitest people on earth. I can't dance and I'm lacking in the "soul" department. I can't jump either.

When I say that I hate white people, I don't mean to condone discrimination against an entire race. We already have that – it's called affirmative action. It's unconstitutional and morally indefensible. What I mean is that white people annoy me to no end.

Have you ever noticed that it's always whites who think that they are characters from a fantasy world? I'm talking about white people who believe that they are Jedi knights, ninjas, vampires, vampire-slayers, cats, druids, etc. I have no patience for these (almost always white) people. I just want to slap them and tell them that they are not ninjas (or vampires), and never will be. They are only dumb college freshmen, nothing more.

The only people who annoy me more than the fantasy-world characters are the Goths. Is there anything stupider than some emaciated 19-year-old male wearing black lipstick, complaining that he's "so depressed?" Oh geez, go be depressed by yourself.

I hate the way whites talk. There are two particular words that white people use that are like fingernails on the chalkboard. One of them is "random", as in "Oh my gawd, I was walking across campus yesterday, and I just ran into this random guy, and he randomly asked me if I was in his psych class, and oh my gawd, I was thinking to myself – that's so random!" The word "random" has a meaning that is entirely appropriate for some contexts, but it does not belong in every sentence. The other annoying word is "sooooooo" as in "I am sooooooo not getting out of bed this morning." Occasionally, the two words can be combined, if indeed something is "sooooooo random."

Another thing that bothers me about white speech is that many whites seem to have learned how to talk from watching too many bad sitcoms like "Seinfeld." For example they might speak five sentences in a row containing the same word, just because they think the word is funny. It's quite annoying when a white person says, "That's the last bobka. They got the last bobka." I know. They're going in first with the last bobka. "That was our bobka." "You can't beat a bobka. "These are the same people who snicker about the fact that "Seinfeld" is a show about nothing!" and try to make dramatic entrances just like Kramer. (Or at least they used to do the trademark Kramer impression until Michael Richards's Kramer's racist outburst last year. But hey, Michael Richards hates black people, too. I hate white people.)

And what about those sweatpants white emo dorks? I'm talking about the skinny idiots who wear their skintight jeans with studded belts, perm their hair, wear Chuck Taylor sneakers with some kind of flair to them (i.e. they think it's still flames on the side), smoke Newport Special Kings cigarettes and ride around on 10-speed bicycles. Occasionally, you will see these particularly annoying white people riding a unicycle.

The ultimate form of white person thinks that he has to develop a quirk so that he can stand out from the crowd. I'm serious. I'm wearing pink, Chuck Taylors, have curly-permed hair on my head, and I ride a unicycle. Well, I don't, but his poorly contrived quirk scheme makes him look unique when in fact it only makes him look like every other geek with a perm. He genuinely believes that his whole persona projects individuality, when in fact it just reeks of insecurity.

The ultimate perfect hipster-nerd is really just a subspecies of a larger group of annoying white people that I like to refer to as SWLs (silly white liberals). Yasir Rao of Another Insight and you will find SWLs in abundance. SWLs generally have levels of intelligence that I envy, but they would have you believe. They are constantly read high-brow publications in order to show off and that people will think that they are smart.

SWLs pretend to care about something. I recently saw a "Darfur, Yesterday," or just America is genocide" bumper sticker. Chances are an SWL owns a car that is completely covered by plastered with bumper stickers. They're the ones that they pride themselves on the fact that their sticker don't fit on bumper stickers.

[illegible] and I have clearly segregated, just so all of my white friends can [illegible] off together. We should [illegible] on the back of the bus, but [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible] off that much. Seriously, I [illegible] pressed to be white.

[illegible] Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at [illegible]@umass.edu.

This annoying white person thinks that he has to develop a quirk so that he can stand out from the crowd.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!
RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!
(550 WORD LIMIT)
Send letters to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Musician plays for hungry diners

Levasseur woos Berkshire DC

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It's hard to gauge a crowd reaction when a large percentage of the audience is busy nibbling on watermelon slices, but Nashville's up-and-coming campus crooner Jason Levasseur paid no mind to the distractions associated with performing in the notoriously-delectable Berkshire Dining Commons last night in an RLA-sponsored First Week performance.

Armed with charming wit and a Takamine acoustic guitar, Levasseur won over the initially unenthusiastic crowd of over 100 hungry Southwest students converged in front of the soda station during one of the first northeast stops on his upcoming five month nationwide tour of intimate college venues.

The Wake Forest grad was full of smiles, surprises and a cleverly crafted mix of multi-genre-spanning cover songs randomly inserted into his own material. After opening with fan favorites like the radio power protest "Driver is the DJ," Levasseur transitioned smoothly into a cover of the Beatles classic "With a Little Help from My Friends."

By 6 p.m., the Berkshire crowd began to grow larger and looser as Levasseur never hesitated to interact with the mainly stoic students. Motioning to the coveted round booths underneath the flatscreen television monitors at the rear of the room, he announced, "[I]'d like to dedicate this song to the people in the cheap seats. But next time, y'know, maybe camp out for tickets beforehand," motioning to the lonely, unoccupied rows of tables directly in front of the stage.

Levasseur went on to indulge diners in an unpredictable medley of covers featuring memorably quirky cameos from artists Ja Rule, Jessica Simpson, Avril Lavigne, Paula Abdul, Blackstreet, TLC, Mario and the obvious crowd favorite, Lil' Jon and the Eastside Boyz.

When Levasseur launched into the lyrics of the aforementioned artists' 2003 hip-hop smash, "Get Low," one Southwest stud donning a baseball cap began to sing along with the line "to the wall" loudly. This prompted a smile and a nod from the charismatic Levasseur, who repeatedly thanked the crowd for letting him "play in [their] cafeteria."

"This is my special night in Amherst," he acknowledged. "I assure you this is totally normal. And to those of you who are accustomed to a quiet, peaceful dinner without some guy singing by the soda, I assure you this is a special event."

The mischievously humorous medley was book-ended by Levasseur's laid-back ballad, "The Steps of Saint Patrick's," which had a few students swaying ever-so slightly to the reflective lyrics. "When you chased away your dreams in the crazy dance/ Makes you think/ You'll be alright now/ but love will come down only on you/ Tonight."

Decked out in the typical undergrad attire of cropped brunette hair, subtle sideburns, broken-in jeans and a tangerine t-shirt, Levasseur blended seamlessly with his audience, and melded his Nashville twang into the set, concluding each song with a heartfelt "Thanks y'all," at one point raising a UMass Dining Commons plastic glass to his patrons and adding, "Cheers."

See BERKSHIRE on page 5

KEITH TOWLING/COLLEGIAN

Jason Levasseur joked along with his audiance at Berkshire, going as far as telling them to poke him on Facebook and he would poke back.

Guitars and comedy: the perfect match

Comedian Lynch to play Northampton

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Standup comedy comes in many varieties. You have the ranting style of Lewis Black, the methodical style of Jerry Seinfeld and the off-the-wall style of Dane Cook. Most comedians fall under some form of those. Then there are the comics that fall into categories all by themselves. Steven Lynch is one of those comics.

Lynch will be performing at the Calvin Theater in Northampton tomorrow night at 8 p.m.

Armed with a guitar and a mic, Lynch has become successful in the standup world by sticking with what he knows best. Using "This is Spinal Tap" as his ultimate inspiration, he combined what he loved.

His entire set is a combination of original and hilarious songs. Lynch's unique repertoire features hard rock inspired tracks like "Hermaphrodity" and "Alter Boy" or the slower, more tender "Lullaby: The Divorce Song" or "Special Olympics."

With lyrics like, "If I could be a superhero, I would, Justice Guy. Making sure women get what they deserve, especially women who lie," from his ever popular song "Superhero." Lynch is a blend of singer-songwriters like Paul Simon and Joni Mitchell and foul-mouthed comedians like Bob Saget.

Topics of the great musical acts of our time like sex, religion, love and friendship are all lampooned by Lynch.

While most of his songs begin innocently enough, they all end in unexpected, often vulgar ways.

He has toured nationally, as an opening act, with the likes of Lewis Black, Jay Mohr and Jeff Foxworthy. He came into his own in 2000 with his "Comedy Central Presents" special, which has become one of the most popular in the long-running series. In New York on Aug. 23, he filmed a new installment of the series set to air in February of next year.

His two live albums

STEPHEN LYNCH

CALVIN THEATER

SEPTEMBER 14

8 P.M.

$25-$35

See LYNCH on page 5

Three-day festival comes to grand finale

Final day of Lollapalooza delivers headliners Pearl Jam

BY ALEX HORNBECK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note: this is part three of a three-part series about the 2007 Lollapalooza Festival held in Chicago.

Day three of Lollapalooza began as day one did: blisteringly hot and getting ever hotter. By 3 p.m. the grounds of Grant Park were already filled with hordes of people downing beer in excitement for Pearl Jam, the evening's headliner. Eddie Veder's arrival was still five hours away and an entire afternoon of other performances were still to come.

I wandered over to the PlayStation stage, where Apostle of Hustle was taking the stage. A project of Broken Social Scene guitarist Andrew Whiteman, the trio plays Latin-tinged rock, inspired by Whiteman's time spent in Cuba. The entire band, with drummer Dean Stone and guitarist Julian Brown, are excellent musicians and their comfort playing with each other is evident.

Up "National Anthem of Nowhere," the title track of their 2007 album, Whiteman and Brown improvised off each other for an extended period, a move that may be unwise amongst other, less talented rock bands. It was clear that the musicians were entirely comfortable with their instruments, however, and the pair's intertwining melodies were a highlight of the set.

Three songs into the set, Whiteman set the stage for the band's next song, "Fast Pony for Victor Jara," with a story. He asked the crowd to imagine a pony express rider, facing the Nebraska sunset, with a bag of marijuana on one side of his pony and a bag of MDMA on the other. He feeds some to the horse, since he's an "equal opportunity rider," and with the "bloody severed heads" of George W. Bush and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper in each hand, rides into the horizon. "Do you guys have that image in your heads?" asked Whiteman with a smile on his face. It was the most interesting piece of banter in a festival dominated with relatively silent performers.

I left Apostle of Hustle halfway through their performance to see Iggy and the Stooges, a band one is almost obligated to see when presented with the opportunity. Somewhat worried that the band would gravitate towards songs from their sub-par new album "The Weirdness," the Stooges, joined by the great Mike Watt on bass, kicked things off with a group of older songs. Only one song off "The Weirdness" was performed the whole set.

"Loose" and "Down on the Street," the first two tracks off the band's album "Fun House," kicked things off. While the music was good, the real entertainment was in watching Pop, Sixty years old as of March, he performed, as always, shirtless, and while his skin "looks like putty," as one concertgoer put it to me, he appears in admirable physical shape. Jumping around the stage, laying atop a stack of amps and thrusting his crotch into the air, dropping f-bombs in every sentence, Pop remains a punk, and is it ever a compelling show.

"And now we're gonna do a song about a year that had a magic number," Pop half-whispered into the microphone before the band launched into their third song, "1969." Followed by "I Wanna Be Your Dog" ("I wanna do a fk in' animal song!") and "TV Eye" (during which Pop kicked one of the cameras filming the group), these were a trio of truly classic songs and the Stooges miraculously delivered on them, over 35 years after the songs' debuts. As such, "My Idea of Fun," the next song and one of the weakest of "The Weirdness," came as somewhat of a let-down. I began my trek back to the MySpace Stage.

When I arrived the band known on paper as !!! but pronounced as "Chk Chk Chk," was setting up. Led by singer Nic Offer, the ever-fluctuating band (comprised of 8 members that evening) took the stage to thunderous applause from a relatively small but visibly pumped crowd.

The band jumped straight into "Myth Takes," the opening track from the March album of the same name. Loud and intense, the band plays remarkably well together even with so many people. Offer, dressed in notably high black shorts and a blue polo shirt, shimmied and shook his way unfashionably but completely enthusiastically across the stage. Segueing directly into "All My Heroes Are Weirdos," the next track off the album, the band kicked the energy level up a notch, a tough achievement considering the crowd was already dancing harder than any crowd thus far.

"Pardon My Freedom," the band's next song off their 2004 album "Louden Up Now," found Offer working into a frenzy over the vulgar, political lyrics. It was hardly necessary to move at all in order to dance — nearly the entire crowd was jumping in unison, seeming to carry people into the air whether they liked it or not.

Offer left the stage on several occasions during the set, jumping off and walking all the way around before emerging again from the back of the stage. His sporadic exits seemed to thrill the crowd, who built up energy during his absence and let it all out at his return. It was clear Offer was having a great time, too – he appropriately mooned the camera during "Must Be the Moon," a move that caused the cameraman to turn away quickly.

Vocalist John Pugh had recently left the band while on tour. Taking his place was Shannon Funchness, a New York City singer who nicely filled his shoes. As the only female member of !!!, her full voice acted as a nice contrast to Offer's occasionally strained yells. Offer and Funchness have amazing stage presence separately; together it's even better. It was an excellent combination and one that the band may want to consider for the long-term.

Near the end of the set, Offer commented that he'd seen Lollapalooza during the festival's first year. "I hope we can be to you what Nine Inch Nails [who had headlined the first year] was to us," he said with a smile on his face. The band closed with "Intensify," an excellent song off their self-titled debut. It was the most enjoyable show of the day, if not of the festival.

I made my way towards the Bud Light Stage where Modest Mouse was mid-set. On my way there, however, I heard Isaac Brock belting out the chorus to "Fire It Up," a dismal song of the group's mostly dismal new album, "We Were Dead Before The Ship Even Sank." I realized I was standing next to the Mindfield Stage, a venue used mostly for the playing of PlayStation games during the day, but which was turned over to DJs at night. Chicago DJ duo Flosstradamus was onstage as I walked over, the small crowd in front of them dancing furiously.

Two giant screens at either side of the stage displayed John Candy's

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page 5

Even at age 60, punk rocker Iggy Pop is still as lively as ever. During his set, Pop performed shirtless, jumped around and rolled on top of amps.

Eco-friendly music festival gears up

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Echo-Project has just made music festivals even crunchier. In addition to an eclectic line-up, camping and desirable location, this festival is going through great lengths to encourage environmental awareness and greening up the Chattahoochee River, just south of Atlanta, Ga.

"Greening experts are trying to make the entire event carbon neutral," said Nicolas Bouckaert, festival promoter and owner of Rivertown Entertainment, LLC, adding that the 350-acre venue belongs to his father. "We want to keep it as clean as possible."

Rivers Alive, just one of the greening partners for the event, have set up three separate river clean-ups to occur during the festival. Bouckaert said that the river is especially dirty because it runs through Atlanta before reaching the site.

Neal Turley is the co-owner and operator of Sustainable Waves, a national provider of mobile solar powered sound and staging. He says that they are focusing on three main environmental concerns at the festival in addition to recycling initiatives, carbon emissions and power consumption.

"Generation of energy, waste management and habitat restoration," Turley said adding that the state of the river is critical. "We're hoping to drive 2,000 people to volunteer to clean the river . . . 758 people have volunteered so far."

Sustainable Waves is a national provider of mobile solar powered sound and staging that will run one of the stages at the festival.

"Our sound systems are custom built to be as energy efficient as possible," Turley said, adding that they are going to be using three types of energy to run the festival : biodiesel, hydrogen and solar. The main stage is going to be run on biodiesel while a side stage will be run on solar energy that will even run the lighting.

Although they are using renewable and solar energy for a majority of the event, it is inevitable that some electricity will be necessary.

"We're going to be calculating the carbon count during the festival," Turley said adding that they plan to buy energy credits to offset what they emit.

According to Turley, the festival is in an experimental phase and someday they want to run it solely on solar power and by burning compost. They hope that

See ECHO on page 5

The Flaming Lips just are one of the many bands that will be performing at the Echo-Project festival in October.

'Superheros' and 'Lullabys'

LYNCH from page 4

"Superhero" and "The Craig Machine" as well as his live DVD "Live at the El Rey," have become fan favorites. He is also a favorite guest of syndicated radio shows like "Opie and Anthony."

Considering himself to be a musician before a comic, the musical talent of Lynch if undeniable. There is more to him then just being a funny man with a guitar – he can actually sing.

In April 2006 his musical ability landed him the leading role in the Broadway adaptation of the 1998 Adam Sandler movie "The Wedding Singer." Lynch's run as Robbie Hart lasted from April 26 through December 31 of 2006. He earned nation recognition as a Broadway performer with nominations for Drama League and Drama Desk awards as well as a "Best Performance by a Leading Actor in a Musical," Tony Award.

Since the end of his Broadway run, Lynch has hit the road again. Due to his unique combination of comedy and music, he books theaters and night clubs, avoiding the comedy club atmosphere.

Tickets for Stephen Lynch's comedy show range from $25 to $35 and can be bought online at nbotickets.com or at the Northampton Box Office.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil at student.umass.edu

Comedian Stephen Lynch is a unique mixture of singer-songwriters like Paul Simon and foul-mouthed comedians like Bob Saget.

Small stages steal headlining thunder

LOLLAPALOOZA from page 4

character from the 1987 film "Planes, Trains, and Automobiles," playing an imaginary keyboard on the dashboard of a car in tandem with the music. I was immediately intrigued.

The set was as equally enjoyable on the dance floor as on the nearby bleacher seats. Chicago video team Thunder Horse had control of the video screens and matched up clip after clip of 80s and 90s video footage, synchronized with Flosstradamus' steady barrage of mashed-up hits from the past three decades. From Baby Muppets to the 1994 MTV Spring Break Jams on Thunder Horse's end, from Jay-Z's "Big Pimpin'" to Daft Punk's "Aerodynamic" courtesy of Flosstradamus, it was as much a visual art show as a dance party, and it was wildly successful.

Chicago MC Kid Sister, the younger sister of Flosstradamus DJ J2K, soon took the stage, still backed by the DJs and Thunder Horse.

Also appearing was Grand Finale, a kids dance troupe who almost stole the show. Speeding through her singles, including the XXX Change-produced "Control" and the A-Trak number "Pro Nails," the end came too soon as the performance was forced to stop at 8 p.m., when Pearl Jam was starting, half a mile away. I can't imagine the sound from the Mindfield Stage could've traveled that far and I, along with the rest of the crowd, was disappointed by the premature ending.

Walking toward Eddie Vedder and the nearly 200,000 person crowd there to see him and his band, I realized that I had no interest in sticking around. I'd heard my fair share of Pearl Jam albums and was unimpressed.

After spending the last hour and a half with Flosstradamus and Kid Sister in a crowd of about 100, standing with thousands upon thousands seemed unappealing, especially in the evening heat. After walking through a crowd where literally everyone sang along with Pearl Jam's first song, "Why Go," I decided to call it quits.

I left the festival after an exhausting but ultimately rewarding three days. Would it have been worth the ticket price of $190? That's a pretty steep cost, especially for a college student, but after witnessing at least one amazing performance each of the three days (Daft Punk, The Hold Steady, and !!!) and many other very good ones, my answer just might be yes.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbeck at student.umass.edu

An estimated 200,000 fans crowded around the main stage to hear Lollapalooza's headlining act, Pearl Jam, in Chicago.

Food and free music

BERKSHIRE from page 4

The ad-libbing continued throughout the backstretch of Levasseur's one-hour set, as he made an impromptu dedication of the song "Roll On" to a lucky lady eating just to the left of the makeshift stage.

"I wrote this for a girl from Amherst," he said, wooing listeners with emphatic lyrics reeking of unrequited love: "Roll on, roll on/ Sad to see you're gone/ Don't be gone so long/ And if you go/ Then you must roll on."

By 6:30 p.m., Berkshire was overcrowded, but Levasseur didn't seem fazed, ending his UMass experience with the original tracks "What is This?" and "Pour the Wine." He described the latter as, "A song about rookie," smirking before adding, "I mean friendship."

A teeth-gritting guitar solo and covered spikes of "Little Drummer Boy," "I'm Like a Bird," and "Love the One You're With," the singer/songwriter pointed to the ceiling and threw his guitar pick into the crowd, perhaps hoping it didn't land in someone's previously untouched stir-fry. But he had one final statement for UMass: "I'm gonna run backstage now to the soda machines."

Along with multiple iPod shuffle-esque medleys of those random songs I imagine lives off of, Levasseur's set could be best described as a blend of heart and humor. Prior to a cover of the Oasis classic, "Wonderwall," he encouraged the ladies and lords of Amherst to stalk him online: "You can find me on MySpace and Facebook. You can poke me. I'll poke you back."

During a post-performance interview, the singer commented further on the MySpace mayhem in a discussion about how he'd informed the crowd he'd be staying overnight at the Campus Center hotel that evening.

When asked if sketchy Facebook invitations for the evening were likely, Levasseur responded, "Yeah, I won't answer those until like Friday." Luckily, he'll be in Henniker, N.H., by then, performing at New England College as part of the ongoing 10-show Northeast leg of his Fall 2007 tour.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hjgalvin at student.umass.edu

Hungry students in the Berkshire Dinning Common were treated to a free concert courtesy of RLA's First Week at UMass festivities.

All natural energy used to power concert stage

ECHO from page 4

the crowd will use compostable products along with the environmentally friendly napkins and utensils they provide.

"We can burn the compost and use the hydrogen gas to power the event," he said. "We have permits on the property to do this for the next 10 years. It's not a one-time thing that's [meant] to change the world."

He went on to say that they hope to look back on their efforts and see a difference.

At the festival, there will be a demonstration on how to build a solar panel and people will be permitted to help assemble it.

"People can get hands on experience putting the wire to the metal," Turley said. "We're trying to give people the opportunity to wire a system and see how it works."

The Echo-Project is held Oct. 12-14. Realizing that the trip may be lengthy for some, they are offering "Green Tickets." Tickets are traditionally $155 but if you upgrade to a "Green Ticket" for only $4 more, you purchase 500-kilowatt hours of renewable energy, which offsets the environmental impact of about 682 pounds of CO2 emissions.

Say someone decides to drive their 2000 Honda Accord down to Atlanta for the festival. By driving the 1046 miles, your car emits 35 metric tons of CO2 into the atmosphere, or 771 pounds. Buy upgrading to a "Green Ticket," one offsets the greater portion of the trip, more if carpooling. Besides the long hours behind the wheel, it would almost be like not driving at all.

The line-up includes Phil Lesh and Friends, The Flaming Lips and The Killers as headliners along with other popular DJs like Bassnectar and RJD2. In addition, jam bands like Moe., Umphrey's Mcgee, The Disco Biscuits and Perpetual Groove will be performing along with Les Claypool, Michael Franti and Spearhead, The Roots, Stephen Marley, Medeski Martin and Wood and the Benevento-Russo Duo.

"We've gotten a great response from the bands and they all seem to be really excited about this," Bouckaert said.

"I wanted to do something big and bring a lot of people together," Bouckaert said. "I have access to the land because my parents invest in [it]. I wanted to do something that I really loved and am passionate about. What better way to spend a fall weekend than at a beautiful place listening to good music." At the end of the day it's all about having a good time."

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodisett at student.umass.edu

The Killers will be one of the headlining acts of the first-ever completely eco-friendly music festival. Every aspect of the concert will focus on helping the environment and preserving nature.

Arts & Living Writers' meeting
Tonight
7:30 p.m.
in Collegian Newsroom
113 Campus Center Basement
e-mail Arts@dailycollegian.com for details

iStudy
iWant
iGet

MOVING ON?
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's website only POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
'Pops' from "The Wayans Brothers" show is Back!
THIS SATURDAY!
From the movies "Little Man" & "Friday"
JOHN WITHERSPOON
OCT. 20TH Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" BILL BELLAMY
OCT. 6TH From HBO's "Tourgasm" & Comedy Central ROBERT KELLY
OCT. 27TH From the movies "Norbit" "Date Movie" & "Dave Chappelle" EDDIE GRIFFIN
NOV. 3RD From "The Howard Stern Show" ROBERT SCHIMMEL
DEC. 1ST Host of BET's "S.O.B." D.L. HUGHLEY

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0000 RT. 9 AMHERST

RELAX?
FORGET IT!
PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
(FEE AVAILABLE)
Full Fitness Facilities · Cybex Free Weights · 430 cardio Machines · Studio w/ 35 Classes · Cybex · Nautilus circuit · Basketball court · Volleyball court · Indoor Tennis courts · Indoor Cycling Track · 20 Lanes · Full Sized Indoor Pool
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL
AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
locally owned and operated
INFO · RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

SEP
13
2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Musician plays for hungry diners

Levasseur woos Berkshire DC

By Thad J. Galvin
Collegian Correspondent

It's hard to gauge a crowd reaction when a large percentage of the audience is busy nibbling on watermelon slices, but Nashville's up-and-coming campus crooner Jason Levasseur paid no mind to the distractions associated with performing in the notoriously-delectable Berkshire Dining Commons last night in an RLA-sponsored First Week performance.

Armed with charming wit and a fakanime acoustic guitar, Levasseur won over the initially unenthusiastic crowd of over 100 hungry Southwest students converged in front of the soda station during one of the first northeast stops on his upcoming five month nationwide tour of intimate college venues.

The Wake Forest grad was full of smiles, surprises and a cleverly crafted mix of multi-genre-spanning cover songs, randomly inserted into his own material. After opening with fan favorites like the radio power protest "Driver is the DJ," Levasseur transitioned smoothly into a cover of the Beatles classic "With a Little Help from My Friends."

By 6 p.m., the Berkshire crowd began to grow larger and looser as Levasseur never hesitated to interact with the mainly stoic students. Motioning to the coveted round booths underneath the flatscreen television monitors at the rear of the room, he announced, "[I]'d like to dedicate this song to the people in the cheap seats. But next time, y'know, maybe camp out for tickets beforehand," motioning to the lonely, unoccupied rows of tables directly in front of the stage.

Levasseur went on to indulge diners in an unpredictable medley of covers featuring memorably quirky cameos from artists Ja Rule, Jessica Simpson, Avril Lavigne, Paula Abdul, Blackstreet, TLC, Mario and the obvious crowd favorite, Lil' Jon and the Eastside Boyz.

When Levasseur launched into the lyrics of the aforementioned artists' 2003 hip-hop smash, "Get Low," one Southwest stud donning a baseball cap began to sing along with the line "to the wall" loudly. This prompted a smile and a nod from the charismatic Levasseur, who repeatedly thanked the crowd for letting him "play in [their] cafeteria."

"This is my special night in Amherst," he acknowledged. "I assure you this is totally normal. And to those of you who are accustomed to a quiet, peaceful dinner without some guy singing by the soda, I assure you this is a special event."

The mischievously humorous medley was book-ended by Levasseur's laid-back ballad, "The Steps of Saint Patrick's," which had a few students swaying ever-so slightly to the reflective lyrics. "When you chased away your dreams in the crazy dance/ Makes you think. You'll be alright now/ but love will come down only on you/ tonight."

Decked out in the typical undergrad attire of cropped brunette hair, subtle sideburns, broken-in jeans and a tangerine t-shirt, Levasseur blended seamlessly with his audience, and melded his Nashville twang into the set, concluding each song with a heartfelt "Thanks y'all," at one point raising a UMass Dining Commons plastic glass to his patrons and adding, "Cheers."

See BERKSHIRE on page 5

KEITH TURNING/COLLEGIAN

Jason Levasseur joked along with his audiance at Berkshire, going as far as telling them to poke him on Facebook and he would poke back.

Guitars and comedy: the perfect match

Comedian Lynch to play Northampton

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

Standup comedy comes in many varieties. You have the ranting style of Lewis Black, the methodical style of Jerry Seinfeld and the off-the-wall style of Dane Cook. Most comedians fall under some form of those. Then there are the comics that fall into categories all by themselves. Steven Lynch is one of those comics.

Lynch will be performing at the Calvin Theater in Northampton tomorrow night at 8 p.m.

Armed with a guitar and a mic, Lynch has become successful in the standup world by sticking with what he knows best. Using "This is Spinal Tap" as his ultimate inspiration, he combined what he loved.

His entire set is a combination of original and hilarious songs. Lynch's unique repertoire features hard rock inspired tracks like "Hermaphrodity" and "Alter Boy" or the slower, more tender "Lullaby: The Divorce Song" or "Special Olympics."

With lyrics like, "If I could be a superhero, I would, Justice Guy. Making sure women get what they deserve, especially women who lie," from his ever popular song "Superhero," Lynch is a blend of singer-songwriters like Paul Simon and Joni Mitchell and foul-mouthed comedians like Bob Saget.

Topics of the great musical acts of our time like sex, religion, love and friendship are all lampooned by Lynch.

While most of his songs begin innocently enough, they all end in unexpected, often vulgar ways.

He has toured nationally, as an opening act, with the likes of Lewis Black, Jay Mohr and Jeff Foxworthy. He came into his own in 2000 with his "Comedy Central Presents" special, which has become one of the most popular in the long-running series. In New York on Aug. 23, he filmed a new installment of the series set to air in February of next year.

His two live albums

Stephen Lynch

Calvin Theater

September 14

8 p.m.

$25-$35

See LYNCH on page 5

Three-day festival comes to grand finale

Final day of Lollapalooza delivers headliners Pearl Jam

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: this is part three of a three-part series about the 2007 Lollapalooza Festival held in Chicago

Day three of Lollapalooza began as day one did: blisteringly hot and getting ever hotter. By 3 p.m. the grounds of Grant Park were already filled with hordes of people downing beer in excitement for Pearl Jam, the evening's headliner. Eddie Veder's arrival was still five hours away and an entire afternoon of other performances were still to come.

I wandered over to the PlayStation stage, where Apostle of Hustle was taking the stage. A project of Broken Social Scene guitarist Andrew Whiteman, the trio plays Latin-tinged rock, inspired by Whiteman's time spent in Cuba. The entire band, with drummer Dean Stone and guitarist Julian Brown, are excellent musicians and their comfort playing with each other is evident.

On "National Anthem of Nowhere," the title track of their 2007 album, Whiteman and Brown improvised off each other for an extended period, a move that may be unwise amongst other, less talented rock bands. It was clear that the musicians were entirely comfortable with their instruments, however, and the pair's intertwining melodies were a highlight of the set.

Three songs into the set, Whiteman set the stage for the band's next song, "Just Pony for Victor Jara," with a story. He asked the crowd to imagine a pony express rider, facing the Nebraska sunset, with a bag of marijuana on one side of his pony and a bag of MDMA on the other. He feeds some to the horse, since he's an "equal opportunity rider," and with the "bloody severed heads" of George W. Bush and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper in each hand, rides into the horizon. "Do you guys have that image in your heads?" asked Whiteman with a smile on his face. It was the most interesting piece of banter in a festival dominated with relatively silent performers.

I left Apostle of Hustle halfway through their performance to see Iggy and the Stooges, a band one is almost obligated to see when presented with the opportunity. Somewhat worried that the band would gravitate towards songs from their sub-par new album "The Weirdness," the Stooges, joined by the great Mike Watt on bass, kicked things off with a group of older songs. Only one song off "The Weirdness" was performed the whole set.

"Loose" and "Down on the Street," the first two tracks off the band's album "Fun House," kicked things off. While the music was good, the real entertainment was in watching Pop, 61sty years old as of March, he performed, as always, shirtless, and while his skin "looks like putty," as one concertgoer put it to me, he appears in admirable physical shape. Jumping around the stage, laying atop a stack of amps and thrusting his crotch into the air, dropping f-bombs in every sentence, Pop remains a punk, and is it ever a compelling show.

"And now we're gonna do a song about a year that had a magic number," Pop half-whispered into the microphone before the band launched into their third song, "1969." Followed by "I Wanna Be Your Dog" ("I wanna do a fin' animal song!") and "TV Eye" (during which Pop kicked one of the cameras filming the group), these were a trio of truly classic songs and the Stooges miraculously delivered on them, over 35 years after the songs' debuts. As such, "My Idea of Fun," the next song and one of the weakest of "The Weirdness," came as somewhat of a let-down. I began my trek back to the MySpace Stage.

When I arrived the band known on paper as !!! but pronounced as "Chk Chk Chk," was setting up. Led by singer Nic Offer, the ever-fluctuating band (comprised of 8 members that evening) took the stage to thunderous applause from a relatively small but visibly pumped crowd.

The band jumped straight into "Myth Takes," the opening track from the March album of the same name. Loud and intense, the band plays remarkably well together even with so many people. Offer, dressed in notably high-black shorts and a blue polo shirt, shimmied and shook his way unfashionably but completely enthusiastically across the stage. Segueing directly into "All My Heroes Are Weirdos," the next track off the album, the band kicked the energy level up a notch, a tough achievement considering the crowd was already dancing harder than any crowd thus far.

"Pardon My Freedom," the band's next song off their 2004 album "Louden Up Now," found Offer working into a frenzy over the vulgar, political lyrics. It was hardly necessary to move at all in order to dance – nearly the entire crowd was jumping in unison, seeming to carry people into the air whether they liked it or not.

Offer left the stage on several occasions during the set, jumping off and walking all the way around before emerging again from the back of the stage. His sporadic exits seemed to thrill the crowd, who built up energy during his absence and let it all out at his return. It was clear Offer was having a great time, too – he appropriately mooned the camera during "Must Be the Moon," a move that caused the cameraman to turn away quickly.

Vocalist John Pugh had recently left the band while on tour. Taking his place was Shannon Funcheness, a New York City singer who nicely filled his shoes. As the only female member of !!!, her full voice acted as a nice contrast to Offer's occasionally strained yells. Offer and Funcheness have amazing stage presence separately; together it's even better. It was an excellent combination and one that the band may want to consider for the long-term.

Near the end of the set, Offer commented that he'd seen Lollapalooza during the festival's first year. "I hope we can be to you what Nine Inch Nails [who had headlined the first year] was to us," he said with a smile on his face. The band closed with "Intensify," an excellent song off their self-titled debut. It was the most enjoyable show of the day, if not of the festival.

I made my way towards the Bud Light Stage where Modest Mouse was mid-set. On my way there, however, I heard Isaac Brock belting out the chorus to "Fire It Up," a dismal song of the group's mostly dismal new album, "We Were Dead Before The Ship Even Sank." I realized I was standing next to the Mindfield Stage, a venue used mostly for the playing of PlayStation games during the day, but which was turned over to DJs at night. Chicago DJ duo Flosstradamus was onstage as I walked over, the small crowd in front of them dancing furiously.

Two giant screens at either side of the stage displayed John Candy's

Even at age 60, punk rocker Iggy Pop is still as lively as ever. During his set, Pop performed shirtless, jumped around and rolled on top of amps.

See LOLLAPALOOZA on page 5

Eco-friendly music festival gears up

By Lauren Modisette
Collegian Staff

The Echo-Project has just made music festivals even crunchier. In addition to an eclectic line-up, camping and desirable location, this festival is going through great lengths to encourage environmental awareness and greening up the Chattahoochee River, just south of Atlanta, Ga.

"Greening experts are trying to make the entire event carbon neutral," said Nicolas Bouckaert, festival promoter and owner of Rivertown Entertainment, LLC, adding that the 350-acre venue belongs to his father. "We want to keep it as clean as possible."

Rivers Alive, just one of the greening partners for the event, have set up three separate river clean-ups to occur during the festival. Bouckaert said that the river is especially dirty because it runs through Atlanta before reaching the site.

Neal Turley is the co-owner and operator of Sustainable Waves, a national provider of mobile solar powered sound and staging. He says that they are focusing on three main environmental concerns at the festival in addition to recycling initiatives, carbon emissions and power consumption.

"Generation of energy, waste management and habitat restoration," Turley said adding that the state of the river is critical. "We're hoping to drive 2,000 people to volunteer to clean the river ... 750 people have volunteered so far."

Sustainable Waves is a national provider of mobile solar powered sound and staging that will run one of the stages at the festival.

"Our sound systems are custom built to be as energy efficient as possible," Turley said, adding that they are going to be using three types of energy to run the festival: biodiesel, hydrogen and solar. The main stage is going to be run on biodiesel while a side stage will be run on solar energy that will even run the lighting.

Although they are using renewable and solar energy for a majority of the event, it is inevitable that some electricity will be necessary.

"We're going to be calculating the carbon count during the festival," Turley said adding that they plan to buy energy credits to offset what they emit.

According to Turley, the festival is in an experimental phase and someday they want to run it solely on solar power and by burning compost. They hope that

The Flaming Lips just are one of the many bands that will be performing at the Echo-Project festival in October.

See ECHO on page 5

'Superheros' and 'Lullabys'

LYNCH from page 4

"Superhero" and "The Craig Machine" as well as his five DVD "Live at the El Rey," have become fan favorites. He is also a favorite guest of syndicated radio shows like "Opie and Anthony."

Considering himself to be a musician before a comic, the musical talent of Lynch if undeniable. There is more to him then just being a funny man with a guitar – he can actually sing.

In April 2006 his musical ability landed him the leading role in the Broadway adaptation of the 1998 Adam Sandler movie "The Wedding Singer." Lynch's run as Robbie Hart lasted from April 26 through December 31 of 2006. He earned nation recognition as a Broadway performer with nominations for Drama League and Drama Desk awards as well as a "Best Performance by a Leading Actor in a Musical," Tony Award.

Since the end of his Broadway run, Lynch has hit the road again. Due to his unique combination of comedy and music, he books theaters and night clubs, avoiding the comedy club atmosphere.

Tickets for Stephen Lynch's comedy show range from $25 to $35 and can be bought online at nbotickets.com or at the Northampton Box Office.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@student.umass.edu

Comedian Stephen Lynch is a unique mixture of singer-songwriters like Paul Simon and foul-mouthed comedians like Bob Saget.

Small stages steal headlining thunder

LOLLAPALOOZA from page 4

character from the 1987 film "Planes, Trains, and Automobiles," playing an imaginary keyboard on the dashboard of a car in tandem with the music. I was immediately intrigued.

The set was as equally enjoyable on the dance floor as on the nearby bleacher seats. Chicago video team Thunder Horse had control of the video screens and matched up clip after clip of '80s and '90s video footage, synchronized with Flosstradamus' steady barrage of mashed-up hits from the past three decades. From Baby Muppets to the 1994 MTV Spring Break Jams on Thunder Horse's end, from Jay-Z's "Big Pimpin'" to Daft Punk's "Aerodynamic" courtesy of Flosstradamus, it was as much a visual art show as a dance party, and it was wildly successful.

Chicago MC Kid Sister, the younger sister of Flosstradamus DJ J2K, soon took the stage, still backed by the DJs and Thunder Horse.

Also appearing was Grand Finale, a kids' dance troupe who almost stole the show. Speeding through her singles, including the XXX change-produced "Control" and the A-Trak number "Pro Nails," the end came too soon as the performative was forced to stop at 8 p.m., when Pearl Jam was starting, half a mile away. I can't imagine the sound from the Mindfield Stage could've traveled that far and I, along with the rest of the crowd, was disappointed by the premature ending.

Walking toward Eddie Vedder and the nearly 200,000 person crowd there to see him and his band, I realized that I had no interest in sticking around. I'd heard my fair share of Pearl Jam albums and was unimpressed.

After spending the last hour and a half with Flosstradamus and Kid Sister in a crowd of about 100, standing with thousands upon thousands seemed unappealing, especially in the evening heat. After walking through a crowd where literally everyone sang along with Pearl Jam's first song, "Why Go," I decided to call it quits.

I left the festival after an exhausting but ultimately rewarding three days. Would it have been worth the ticket price of $190? That's a pretty steep cost, especially for a college student, but after witnessing at least one amazing performance each of the three days (Daft Punk, The Hold Steady, and !!!) and many other very good ones, my answer just might be yes.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu

An estimated 200,000 fans crowded around the main stage to hear Lollapalooza's headlining act, Pearl Jam, in Chicago.

Food and free music

BERKSHIRE from page 4

The ad-libbing continued throughout the backstretch of Levasseur's one-hour set, as he made an impromptu dedication of the song "Roll On" to a lucky lady eating just to the left of the makeshift stage.

"I wrote this for a girl from Amherst," he said, wooing listeners with emphatic lyrics reeking of unrequited love: "Roll on, roll on/ Sad to see you're gone/ Don't be gone so long/ And if you go/ Then you must roll on."

By 6:30 p.m., Berkshire was overcrowded, but Levasseur didn't seem fazed, ending his UMass experience with the original tracks "What is This?" and "Pour the Wine." He described the latter as, "A song about rookie," smirking before adding, "I mean friendship."

A teeth-gritting guitar solo and covered splices of "I Little Drummer Boy," "I'm Like a Bird," and "I Love the One You're With," the singer/songwriter pointed to the ceiling and threw his guitar pick into the crowd, perhaps hoping it didn't land in someone's previously untouched stir-fry. But he had one final statement for UMass: "I'm gonna run backstage now to the soda machines."

Along with multiple iPod shuffle-esque medleys of those random songs Limewire lives off of, Levasseur's set could be best described as a blend of heart and humor. Prior to a cover of the Oasis classic, "Wonderwall," he encouraged the ladies and lords of Amherst to stalk him online: "You can find me on MySpace and Facebook. You can poke me. I'll poke you back."

During a post-performance interview, the singer commented further on the MySpace mayhem in a discussion about how he'd informed the crowd he'd be staying overnight at the Campus Center hotel that evening.

When asked if sketchy Facebook invitations for the evening were likely, Levasseur responded, "Yeah, I won't answer those until like Friday." Luckily, he'll be in Henniker, N.H., by then, performing at New England College as part of the ongoing 10-show Northeast leg of his Fall 2007 tour.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

Hungry students in the Berkshire Dinning Common were treated to a free concert courtesy of RLA's First Week at UMass festivities.

All natural energy used to power concert stage

ECHO from page 4

the crowd will use compostable products along with the environmentally friendly napkins and utensils they provide.

"We can burn the compost and use the hydrogen gas to power the event," he said. "We have permits on the property to do this for the next 10 years. It's not a one-time thing that's [meant] to change the world."

He went on to say that they hope to look back on their efforts and see a difference.

At the festival, there will be a demonstration on how to build a solar panel and people will be permitted to help assemble it.

"People can get hands on experience putting the wire to the metal," Turley said. "We're trying to give people the opportunity to wire a system and see how it works."

The Echo-Project is held Oct. 12-14. Realizing that the trip may be lengthy for some, they are offering "Green Tickets." Tickets are traditionally $155 but if you upgrade to a "Green Ticket" for only $4 more, you purchase 500-kilowatt hours of renewable energy, which offsets the environmental impact of about 682 pounds of CO_2 emissions.

Say someone decides to drive their 2000 Honda Accord down to Atlanta for the festival. By driving the 1046 miles, your car emits 35 metric tons of CO_2 into the atmosphere, or 771 pounds. Buy upgrading to a "Green Ticket," one offsets the greater portion of the trip, more if carpooling. Besides the long hours behind the wheel, it would almost be like not driving at all.

The line-up includes Phil Lesh and Friends, The Flaming Lips and The Killers as headliners along with other popular DJs like Bassnectar and RJD2. In addition, jam bands like Moe., Umphrey's Mcgee, The Disco Biscuits and Perpetual Groove will be performing along with Les Claypool, Michael Franti and Spearhead, The Roots, Stephen Marley, Medeski Martin and Wood and the Benevento-Russo Duo.

"We've gotten a great response from the bands and they all seem to be really excited about this," Bouckaert said.

"I wanted to do something big and bring a lot of people together," Bouckaert said. "I have access to the land because my parents invest in [it]. I wanted to do something that I really loved and am passionate about. What better way to spend a fall weekend than at a beautiful place listening to good music." At the end of the day it's all about having a good time."

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodisett@student.umass.edu

The Killers will be one of the headlining acts of the first-ever completely eco-friendly music festival. Every aspect of the concert will focus on helping the environment and preserving nature.

Arts & Living Writers' meeting
Tonight
7:30 p.m.
in Collegian Newsroom
113 Campus Center Basement
e-mail Arts@dailycollegian.com for details

iStudy
iWant
iGet

MOVING ON? POTTER'S
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's mini-trucks only
Auto & Truck Rental
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
'Pops' from "The Wayans Brothers" show is Back!
THIS SATURDAY!
From the movies "Little Man" & "Friday"
JOHN WITHERSPOON
OCT. 20TH Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" BILL BELLAMY
OCT. 27TH From the movies "Norbit," "Dan Meets A Dysin Bigelow" EDDIE GRIFFIN
NOV. 3RD From "The Howard Stern Show" ROBERT SCHIMMEL
OCT. 6TH From HBO's "Tourgasm" & Comedy Central ROBERT KELLY
DEC. 1ST Host of BET's "SOB" D.L. HUGHLEY

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0900 RT. 9, AMHERST

RELAX? FORGET IT! PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
Full Fitness Facilities • Cybex Free Weights • 40 Cardio Machines • Studio w/ 35 Classes • Cybex Nautilus Circuit • Basketball Court • Volleyball Court • Indoor Tennis Court • Indoor Cycling • Yoga • Pilates • Full Sized Indoor Pool • Locally owned and operated
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
INFO-RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

UM hopes for repeat of '06

Penalty corners the difference in Garber Field match

...HOCKEY from page 8

...(Lowson) Schaefer-led Towson ... and ended up shutting out ... offense that was led by hack- ... Caitrin Goldbeck, who played ... scoring (14-of-23, 101 yards ... interception), but could not ... the scoring threat Towson ... with Schaefer on the field.

"I have not seen Schaefer in ... year it could prove dif- ... prepare for the Tigers, but ... now, the UMass defense are ... lines can handle whatever ... throws their way.

"We're expecting a big passing ... defensive captain and line- ... Jason Hatchell said. "We've ... seen a team like this before ... Holy Cross. They played a lot of ... the wide receivers, so we ... what to look for."

"We're just going to stick to our ... and play hard," fellow ... Hughes Walker added. "We ... expect just like we would for any ... team. [Schaefer] is a good ... player though. We would've ... to have played against him ..."

In three games this season, ... has completed 50 of 80 ... for 513 yards and five ... touchdowns, but has also thrown ... interceptions and has been ... three times.

The Minutemen have sacked ... quarterbacks nine times ... this season and will look to ... on that trend in an effort to ... damage the Towson passing game. ... Robinson's interception ... Colgate is the only one for ... UMass this season.

Coen has been even more effec- ... than Schaefer thus far, with ... a passer rating of 158.25. He has ... not thrown nearly as many passes ... as Schaefer (36-of-58), but has ... comparable yardage (476) and has ... thrown six touchdowns to just a ... pair of picks – both of which were ... tipped balls.

With such heavily armed pass- ... attacks, another blowout in this ... series is unlikely, but a shootout ... may just take place at McGuirk ... Saturday.

"It's definitely going to be a ... different [game]. They've got their ... quarterback back," Walker said. ... "They're going to be able to do a ... couple different things offensively. ... He's really the catalyst for their ... offense."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at Jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Walker, Hatchell lead tackling duties

LINEBACKERS from page 8

Byrd had four takedowns last weekend against Colgate, helping shutdown star running back Jordan Scott in the second half. But the main culprits in stuffing Scott at the line of scrimmage were the usual suspects – Hatchell and Walker.

Walker paced the Minuteman defense in that contest with 10 tackles, and added a big fumble recovery after Hatchell helped safety Jeromy Miles knock the ball loose on a Scott carry at the UMass 1-yard line.

The Raiders, trailing 28-10 at that time, couldn't recover from the turnover as the Minutemen took the game, 35-17.

"We just kind of manned up at the goal line," Hatchell said. "[Walker] did a great job out there. Week in and week out he always does well. He just filled his lane and stepped up and made the play."

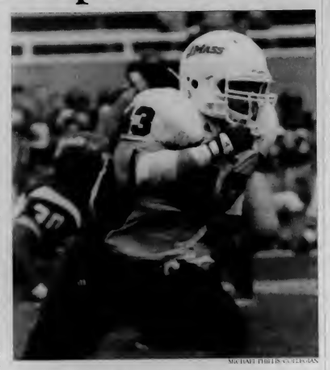
Hatchell left Hamilton, N.Y., with six tackles, a rare outing in which he failed to lead the team. He's held at least a share for the team-lead in tackles in 17 of his last 28 games.

The 6-foot, 240 pound linebacker from Mullica Hill, N.J., is rated the second-best linebacker in the FCS by The Sports Network and is gunning to become the second UMass linebacker to lead the team in tackles for three-consecutive seasons since 1978. He's off to a good start with 16 in two games, but trails his teammate in the middle by one.

The 6-foot-1, 230 pound Walker shares the single-game school record for most tackles with 23 (against Delaware in 2004) and was an Atlantic 10 Second-Team performer last year.

Hatchell's 134 tackles ranked second in the A-10 last season, trailing only Akeem Jordan of James Madison by six. The UMass duo combined for 265 tackles – 44 more than any other pair of teammates in the conference.

Along with being team captains, Hatchell and Walker have additional responsibilities this season – predominantly trying to maintain a defense that has consistently ranked atop the CAA.



That job hasn't been made any easier with the loss of 2006 defensive playmakers James Ihedigbo, Brandon Smith, John Hatchell, Brad Anderson and Tracy Belton.

Along with defensive end David Burris, safety Jeromy Miles and cornerback Courtney Robinson – Hatchell and Walker are the two most responsible to fill that void.

Brown was hesitant when asked where he would rank the pair of linebackers to others in the country, but there are no two he'd rather have to help lead his defense this season.

"I think that remains to be seen as we move forward," he said. "But let's just put it this way, I wouldn't trade them for anyone in the country."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

One of the leaders of the UMass defense, senior Jason Hatchell is second on the team with 16 tackles from the linebacker position.

Junior forward Erin Parker hits a penalty corner attempt toward the BU net in last night's 2-0 loss at Garber Field. The Terriers had better luck on penalty corners than the Minutewomen (0-of-4), scoring on 2-of-7 opportunities.

Offensive struggles continue

SHUTOUT from page 8

...scored was against Harvard. Last year's leading goal scorer Lauren Gillespie, who scored 13 goals last year, has been dealing with some injury issues and has been coming off the bench this year.

The opponents the Minutewomen have faced recently are much tougher than the games they opened the season against.

Vermont was 5-0 going into that game and BU was ranked No. 20 in the nation, that might account for the skid, and hopefully for UMass the experience of playing against talented defenses will lead to improvements in the long run.

The team will not practice tomorrow because Sowry wants to give the team a rest after a grueling stretch of three games in five days. When the team gets back to work, it will have to figure out a way to cure its offensive woes.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
Special Back to School Shows!
SEPTEMBER 15TH AND 22ND!
TICKETS ONLY $3.00!
INCLUDES FREE CRAP KIT!
DRESS IN YOUR BEST SCHOOL OUTFIT!
Flower Theaters
(413) 533-FILM

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
OPEN EVERY DAY UNTIL IIPM!
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750 ml bottles of varietal wines
Beer
Miller & Bud Light $16.99*
Coors & Busch Light $13.99*
Corona Light $12.99*
Heineken $11.99*
Sam Adams $11.99*
Newcastle Pale Ale $11.99*
Guinness Red $10.99*
Kilkenny $9.99*
Shipyard Lager $8.99*
Blue Moon Pomegranate Wheat $6.69*
Liquor
Hennessey Cognac VS $28.99
Bombay Sapphire Gin $26.99
Grey Goose Vodka $26.99
Tanqueray Gin $25.99
Sailor Jerry Rum $22.99
Crown Royal Canadian Whisky $22.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey $21.99
Jim Beam Black Bourbon $19.99
Jose Cuervo Flavors $18.99
Stolichnaya Vodka 80° $18.99
Jagermeister $16.99
Sobieski Polish Vodka $16.99
Denaka Vodka $14.99
Ron Rico Vanilla Rum $11.99
Myer's Platinum Rum $8.99
Early Times Bourbon $8.99
PROMOS
Thursday Sept 13th Naraagansett Tasting 6-8 p.m.
Friday Sept 14th Landshark Lager 5-7 p.m. & BacardiMojito
FOUR SEASONS 584-8174
584-8174 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Natural. Gentle. Safe. Effective.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's Student Insurance, Blue Cross GIC, Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street Amherst, MA (near Bertucci's)
549-1500

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0090 80, AMHERST

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		3		7	2
5	6		8
4		7	5				1
	8				1
7	3						8	6
			2				3
	9				3	4		1
					8		6	5
			1	4		8

ACROSS
1 T-bone or porterhouse
6 Charges
10 Passport stamp
14 Speed
15 Bar in a car
16 Circle parts
17 Plentifully
18 Pinball goal
19 Run wild
20 Aired again
21 Express
23 No-seats-available letters
24 Place to do time
26 Lazy talk
28 Mach+ plane
29 Faucets
32 Protective coating
34 Frequenter
36 Perry Mason story
37 Dull pains
40 Is able
41 Added shading
42 Commits perjury
43 Small sofas
45 Walked proudly
47 Thailand, once
48 Dine
51 Alpine songs
53 Saskatchewan capital
55 Upston follower
56 Henley and Daniel
59 Coral creations
60 McKellen and McShane
62 Neat-o
63 Map in a map
64 Swiss painter
65 Writer Morrison
66 Book datum
67 Lohengrin's love
68 Snow coaster
69 "The Shadowy Waters" poet

DOWN
1 Notes raised in submission
2 Subdivers
3 ___ de corps
4 Collection of maps
5 Main idea as
6 Rocker Domino
7 Turnoff a turnpike
8 Logan and Fitzgerald
9 Pioneer
10 Alt. spelling
11 Dubliner
12 "Mean Streets" director
13 Concerning
22 Very long period
25 Pester continuously
27 Tex-Mex menu items
30 Purplish brown
31 Louvers
33 Shown the way
34 Make lawn repairs
35 Non-pro
37 Kalina and Hosen
38 Municipal center
39 Female leads
41 Foolhardiness
43 Picks
44 Sense organ
46 Coming-out gal
48 Tijuana snooze
49 Insincere
50 Smooth, creamy masses
52 Seat at a bar
54 Bottle dweller?
55 Freshwater fish
57 Make a point
58 Skidded
61 Neptune's realm

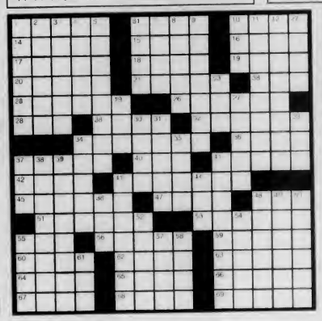
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
1413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Make the most of yourself, for that is all there is of you."
-Ralph Waldo Emerson

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek



LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"I can't really find words to formulate a sentence right now, but you should check out my blog."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The flies buzzing around campus are really tiny alien ships researching our civilization.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Live in your bed for the next week and live off of bugs that happen to fly or crawl by.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are the illegitimate father of a capricorn.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Get sweet tattoos of every character from Fantasia on your upper thighs.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your destiny is currently dancing around a pole in a bar in Asbury Park, New Jersey.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your significant other will give you trouble. Give them a diuretic.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The pants you're wearing today look great on you. Wait, you wear those every day!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Tom Cruise: creepy guy; incredible actor.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Summer is fading before our very eyes. Get binoculars and wear shorts until November.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Build a throne and a small city from Legos. You are the ruler of all polymers.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Tell girls you have huge muscles then show them your oversized shellfish collection.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your momma's goin on a date with an aries and she's gonna have a damn good time.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun.-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Happy 19th Birthday Sadie. Always Love, Mom & Dad

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply DP Dough Downtown, Amherst

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

STAGE HANDS WANTED AT FINE ARTS CENTER. $7.50 / HR. VARIABLE SCHEDULE – WEEK

EMPLOYMENT

DAY AVAILABILITY PREFERRED 9-NOON, 1PM-5. APPLICATIONS AT PRODUCTION SERVICES RM 146 F.A.C.

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Get The Collegian Daily Online DailyCollegian.com

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Collegian Marketplace. Reach 20,000 UMass students daily. 545-3500

TAG SALE

Tag Sale.
Furniture. Furniture. Furniture. Rugs.
93 Fearing Street
Saturday the 15th and Sunday the 16th 9-5

Please Recycle this paper when you are done Thank You

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

www.DailyCollegian.com
The #1 online source for UMass News.

SEP 13 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM begins CAA play

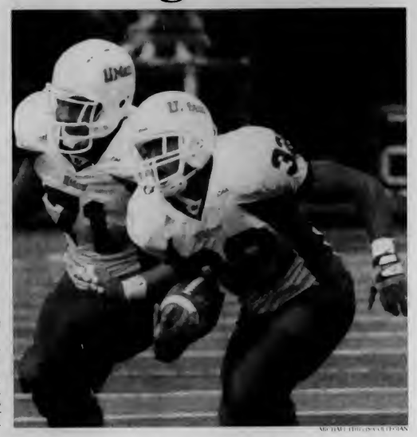
Towson looks to avenge '06 blowout

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To watch your team fall to a conference rival – especially by a score like 35-0 – when there's nothing you can do to help, is one of the most difficult experiences any athlete can endure.

That's what Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer experienced last season, when he came down with the mumps the day the Tigers were slated to host the Massachusetts football team – the eventual national runner-up.

Schaefer was so sick he had to pull himself out of the starting lineup. The junior then watched his teammates get blown out by the Minutemen, who scored five touchdowns on the Tigers and held the vaunted Towson offense to just 167 yards on the day.



Towson was ranked No. 22 in the nation at the time, but failed to make the postseason – losing two more games to conference opponents William & Mary and James Madison.

Saturday, the two teams will meet again, and Schaefer is expected to be healthy and on the field for the 12 p.m. kickoff at McGuirk Stadium.

Last year's matchup took place in Towson, Md., as did all four of the Tigers' losses in 2006 – they went 5-0 on the road last season.

With this year's meeting happening in Amherst – a place the Minutemen have not lost since Oct. 29, 2005 against New Hampshire – something has to give between a UMass team that has a knack for defending its home turf and the group of road warriors it will face on Saturday.

See FOOTBALL on page 6

Red-shirt senior running back Matt Lawrence and the Minutemen take on Towson this Saturday at McGuirk Stadium to begin CAA play for both teams.

Linebacking corps heart of Brown's defense in 2007

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If you're fortunate enough to run past the defensive line of the Massachusetts football team, you're at the mercy of linebackers Jason Hatchell and Charles Walker.

And that's rarely a good thing for an opposing running back.

The prolific duo patrol the middle of the field for UMass coach Don Brown and anchor a defensive unit that lost several key players to graduation following its run to the national championship game in 2006.

"They are guys who have played a lot of football for us, and have a great understanding of what we're trying to get done," Brown said. "They're both excellent athletes. Charles is like a strong safety playing middle linebacker and Jason is one of the strongest players in our conference."

If the Minutemen hope to reach a similar plateau this season, they'll need the pair of senior co-captain linebackers to help lead a younger, yet experienced, defensive core in 2007.

It's something that Brown is confident they will be able to do.

"They are very team-oriented," he said. "They bring that divine package and veteran presence along with excellent athleticism. The only thing that [teammates] can draw from those guys are very, very positive."

The third starting linebacker, George Byrd, is one testament to that fact.

"It's real good," Byrd said about playing alongside the defensive captains. "I don't have to worry about much. They fill all the gaps, and they help me with my technique a lot. The coaches aren't worried about me as much, so I can play football how I want to.

"I look up to them. Everyone else on the team looks up to them," he added.

Byrd has excelled to begin the season – accumulating 10 tackles, one sack, one tackle for a loss and two pass deflections in the pair of UMass victories. He recorded 32 tackles all of last season in 12 games, including three starts.

"Well they certainly give him a role model to look at and guys to emulate on how they go about doing their business and preparation," Brown said, referring to the impact that his defensive captains have on Byrd and the other linebackers.

See LINEBACKERS on page 6

Senior forward Kara Murphy and the Minutewomen failed to score against the BU defense Wednesday night, falling 2-0.

No answer for BU defense

UMass drops sixth-straight decision to No. 20 Terriers

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

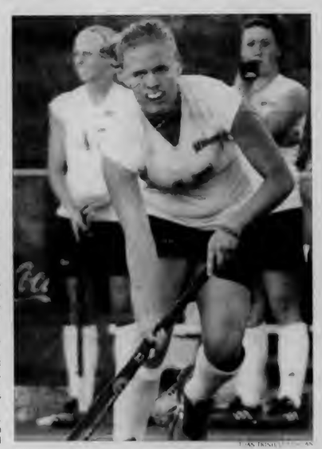
The Massachusetts field hockey team suffered a tough 2-0 loss to Boston University on Garber Field on Wednesday night.

Coming into the game, BU (4-2) was ranked No. 20 in the STX/NFHCA poll and it's also coming off consecutive losses.

The first half of the game was a defensive struggle, as both teams are notorious for showing great first-half defense. Each team has only let in one first half goal so far this season. This game was no different.

Starting goalkeeper Becky Letourneau made three saves on five shots for the Minutewomen (3-4). Most of the play was in the middle of field for the first part of the half, but UMass pressured offensively toward the end of the half. It had three penalty corner shots and six shots total but none of them tested BU goalkeeper Ananda Smith.

However, BU picked up its offense in the second half. The Terriers forced a penalty corner opportunity one minute and 15 seconds into the half. BU took advantage of five penalty corners in the second half. The first goal came during the 55th minute when senior captain Pam Spuehler put the ball in the back of the cage off a Letourneau save to give the Terriers a 1-0 lead.



Almost two and a half minutes later, BU had another penalty corner opportunity and sophomore Gabby Hajjar scored off an assist by junior Holly Wiles. BU managed to survive a late attack by the Minutewomen to hang on to the win and the shutout. The victory was the first of Smith's career.

UMass	0
BU	2

With the loss, Letourneau's record falls to 1-3 on the season. Though it was a hard fought game for the Minutewomen, UMass Coach Justin Sowry focused on the positive points of the game.

"We nullified their attack completely, but also created a bunch of opportunities – and

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

A focused Cher King stares down the ball during last night's game. The sophomore midfielder registered three shots in the match.

Lack of production an issue for offense

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Sept. 2, the Massachusetts field hockey team was on a three-game winning streak and after consecutive 1-0 victories, pummeled Harvard 5-0. It seemed like the offense was about to turn the corner, but instead it regressed scoring one goal total in its last three games. Not surprisingly, the scoring problems have coincided with the Minutewomen's current three-game losing streak.

UMass lost to Vermont (3-1), New Hampshire (1-0) and, most recently, Boston University (2-0). The offense got colder every game after the Harvard victory, suffering consecutive shutout losses, including Wednesday night's game against BU where the team failed to record a single shot on goal.

A major problem for the Maroon and White has been its second half performance. It had five shots on goal in the first half against UNH and four penalty corners, but had no shots on goal or penalty corners in the second half. Against BU, the Minutewomen held a 6-2 advantage in shot attempts and a 3-2 advantage in penalty corners at halftime, but in the second half they were out-shot 10-1 and allowed five penalty corners, two of which resulted in goals, while getting one opportunity of their own.

UMass coach Justine Sowry was very pleased about the first half, but wants to see fewer errors in the second half.

"We started to get a little bit fatigued, and our forwards needed to help on defense," Sowry said. "As the game goes on and we get fatigued, every now and then we'll make some poor decisions."

Sowry continued to talk about how the team needed to improve its overall decision making, but noted how the only way to get more work on that would be playing more games.

Converting penalty corners into quality chances has been a major Achilles heel for the forwards. Twice the Minutewomen failed to get a clean shot off during a penalty corner against BU. The team's inability to convert penalties is partly responsible for its .103 shooting percentage. The team had 22 penalty corners so far this season, but has not scored a single goal off of one.

"A couple of the shots that went wide were corners we failed to properly executed, at practice we are going to up the tempo and putting a lot of pressure on the forwards," Sowry said. It's just repetition, repetition, and practice under pressure."

UMass had difficulty clearing the ball into the Terriers' defensive zone. Too often, the Minutewomen would start up on the attack then just mishandle a pass and turn the ball over. It's impossible to score if one can't get the ball into the offensive circle.

The leading goal scorer for UMass has been Cher King, she has scored five of the eight total goals the Minutewomen have this season. The only game in which someone besides Cher King has

See SHUTOUT on page 6

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport scored the game-winning goal in the Massachusetts men's soccer team's 2-1 win over Vermont on Saturday. His goal came on a penalty kick in the 94th minute and gave the Maroon and White a 2-1 victory. The victory was the first for the Minutemen over the Catamounts since 1985.

Rappaport also scored UMass's first goal in a 2-1 win at Dartmouth on Sept. 3. Since returning to the Minutemen after a year recovering from an ankle injury, Rappaport has started all four games at the left back position this season.

The goal against Dartmouth drew awe from his teammates and coaches as he whistled the ball past the Big Green goalkeeper from about 40 yards out. This display made him the only choice when referees awarded UMass a penalty kick against the Catamounts when Mark DeSantis was tripped in the box in overtime.

The goals were the first two of his career and currently are enough for the team lead; in his first year at UMass he collected no points and handed out two assists as a sophomore in 2006.

He played most from the midfield spot prior to this season, but with the depth UMass boasts in the middle, UMass coach Sam Koch moved him to the left back position.

For his performance, he also won the UMass Dinn Brothers Athlete of the week award, which he shared with the football team's Charles Walker.

Rappaport and the Minutemen's next action comes at Siena on Friday and at No. 15 Harvard on Sunday.

RUNNER-UP

Red-shirt junior Liam Coen threw four touchdown passes, including two in the second half, in UMass's 35-17 victory over Colgate on Saturday.

The Minutemen began the third quarter with a 14-10 lead after an unremarkable first half. After throwing an interception to end the first drive of the half, Coen found tight end Ian Jorgensen in the end zone for a 15-yard touchdown pass, extending UMass's lead to 21-10.

On top of the four touchdown passes, Coen threw for 284 yards on 17-of-26 passing. He ended the final scoring drive of the afternoon with an 11-yard strike to J.J. Moore.

His outstanding day moved him to second in school history in passing yards and third in touchdown passes.

The Minutemen take on Towson this weekend. last season against the Tigers, Coen threw for 303 yards and tied a UMass single-game record with five touchdown passes.

SEP 14 2007

MENS SOCCER ON THE HOMESTRETCH PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 79 LO: 59 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 2007

Amherst residents spot bear

BY JENNIFER BERGEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A black bear was spotted wandering the streets of Amherst Monday afternoon.

Police on duty, including University of Massachusetts officers, spent over an hour tracking down the 150-200 pound male bear starting on Lincoln Avenue and North Prospect Street.

Environmental police and Animal Welfare Officer Carol A. Hepburn were involved, as well as the Public Works Department, who assisted the search by blocking off both Amity Street and Sunset Avenue in an effort to keep downtown and Southwest Residential Area safe. At approximately 3:30 p.m., police were able to tranquilize the bear and transport him to a more rural area.

According to the police on the scene, the bear began its journey through the streets of Amherst on Lincoln Avenue and North Prospect. It then proceeded to Hallock, McLellan, and Amity streets, while neighborhood bird feeders.

"He laid down and proceeded to eat all of the food out of that bird feeder. He thought he was in his environment," said officer Hepburn. "The bird feeders are an open invitation, but they were a blessing in disguise because they kept him there until the environmental police got there."

Jennifer Bergen can be reached at jbergen@student.umass.edu

Orchard Hill bowl filled with mud

Break in main causes damage to Hill's center

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Orchard Hill Residential Area at the University of Massachusetts has been undergoing work to replace the steam lines, and it hasn't been pretty.

A water main underneath the Orchard Hill "bowl" broke some time Wednesday afternoon, with bubbling water being reported around 6:30 p.m. Two hours later, the entire residential area lost water pressure and several buildings had their water shut off.

Dickinson, Field, Grayson and Webster were the buildings most affected from the break, while the bowl was filled with 60 percent of water at the time.

As part of the construction and incorporation of the new central heating plant currently being constructed on campus, the bowl has suffered the most, turning it from a dirt pit into a mud pit.

The cause of the break is unknown, but the maintenance staff was notified and began searching for the location of the break, so it could be fixed immediately.

Water pressure returned to the Orchard Hill dorms several hours later, though the water was "a little brown and gross," according to a resident.

Despite brief hopes by students, it looks like an Orchard Hill pond is not in the cards right now.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

The Orchard Hill "bowl" turned into a puddle after the residential area suffered a water main break Wednesday afternoon. 60 percent of the bowl was filled with water as a result of the break.

UMass campus under renovation and repair

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The expansiveness of the repairs and new additions on the University of Massachusetts campus are far more spread than most students might know, with more than $270 million in projects this past summer.

The three most visible changes this fall semester are the new Studio Arts Building, Integrated Sciences Building and the Central Heating Plant. These three buildings alone account for $253 million in spending by the University.

The Studio Arts Building, under construction at the south end of North Pleasant Street, will be a centralized place for the numerous art facilities that were previously scattered in other buildings across campus. The building is also the closest to completion with Jim Cahill, director of facilities and campus planning, expecting its completion by the end of the fall semester.

The New Integrated Sciences Building, going up between the Worcester Dining Commons and Morrill Science Center, will be a 185,000-square-foot research and teaching facility due for completion in the spring of 2009, according to Cahill.

The Central Heating Plant, the building west of the Mullins Center, is expected to begin operation in March 2008.

All the fences and orange cones will not be cleared out anytime soon though, with over $50 million slated for upcoming construction projects, such as a new recreation center to be announced for construction across from the Mullins Center, where sites are already fenced off. The facilities currently there, an equipment repair shop, and grounds department facility, will be moved off campus.

In addition to the new buildings, the work this summer was also focused on improvements to existing buildings on campus costing about $20 million. The money was spent on everything from new floors in Herter Hall to a new roof on Morrill.

Lederle Graduate Research Tower and Herter also received new lighting, seating and advanced audio-visual equipment, and a campus-wide upgrade of the fire alarm system is also in progress. New alarms were put in Washington and McNamara residential halls, and Cance, Moore, and Pierpont halls received new sprinklers. Accessibility to Hasbrouck Lab was also improved with the installation of a new ramp, handrails, and entrances.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

The site of the new art building, located on North Pleasant Street, was built during the summer and is expected to be complete by the end of the year.

Dr. Lynn Margulis, professor of Geosciences at UMass, posted a statement on her Web site giving the government the blame for 9/11.

UMass professor questions 9/11 attack

Geosciences doctor suggests government's involvement

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a statement made to the Web site patriotsquestion911.com, University of Massachusetts Geosciences professor Lynn Margulis called for a new investigation of the Sept. 11 attacks.

"I suggest that those of us aware and concerned demand that the glaringly erroneous official account of 9/11 be dismissed as a fraud and a new, thorough, and impartial investigation be undertaken," she wrote in her post made in August, which is also available at truthcuft.com

Margulis claims in her statement that the U.S. government's involvement in the hijackings and subsequent crashes of the four planes six years ago parallels that of the Nazi party in the burning of the Reichstag building in 1933, with similar motives: the expanding of power and justification of foreign war.

"Whoever is responsible for bringing to grisly fruition this new false-flag operation, which has been used to justify the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq as well as unprecedented assaults on research, education, and civil liberties, must be perversely proud of their efficient handiwork," wrote Margulis. "Certainly, 19 young Arab men and a man in a cave 7,000 miles away, no matter the level of their anger, could not have masterminded and carried out 9/11 the most effective television commercial in the history of Western civilization."

Professor Margulis began to believe the government played a part in 9/11 after reading the works of David Ray Griffin, a theologian and one of the chief proponents of 9/11 conspiracy theories. She specifically mentioned "The New Pearl Harbor" and "The 9/11 Commission Report: Omissions and Distortions."

"The New Pearl Harbor" presents and discusses evidence that Griffin claims proves the Bush administration's complicity in the destruction of the World Trade Center and the damaging of the Pentagon. "The 9/11 Commission Report: Omissions and Distortions" focuses on the 571 page report released by the 9/11 Commission released in July of 2004 and what Griffin sees as inconsistencies. Griffin says he uses his training in logic to analyze conspiracy theories, finding many of those claiming government involvement in 9/11 to have some weight to them.

"The 9/11 truth movement, as it's often referred to, has come under heavy fire from many, including MIT professor Thomas Eagar.

"These people [in the 9/11 truth movement] use the reverse scientific method ... they determine what happened, throw out all the data that doesn't fit their conclusion, and then hail their findings as the only possible conclusion," he said in a comment to the Deseret Morning News.

Professor Margulis holds numerous scientific awards and

See 9/11 CONSPIRACY on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 9

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Stajgis
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Deshchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reith
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, WHEN WORDS WERE FREE. ALSO LATE, BECAUSE THE COLLEGE SIGNS IN. 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN. IN 1914 AND THE BI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1968. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Eating less meat may slow climate change

Study finds that eating less red meat may help environment

BY MARIA CHENG
ASSOCIATED PRESS

In a special energy and health series of the medical journal The Lancet, experts said people should eat fewer steaks and hamburgers.

Reducing global red meat consumption by 10 percent, they said, would cut the gases emitted by cows, sheep and goats that contribute to global warming.

"We are at a significant tipping point," said Geri Brewster, a nutritionist at Northern Westchester Hospital in New York, who was not connected to the study.

"If people knew that they were threatening the environment by eating more meat, they might think twice before ordering a burger," Brewster said.

Other ways of reducing greenhouse gases from farming practices, like feeding animals higher-quality grains, would only have a limited impact on cutting emissions. Gases from animals destined for dinner plates account for nearly a quarter of all emissions worldwide.

"That leaves reducing demand for meat as the only real option," said Dr. John Powles, a public health expert at Cambridge University, one of the study's authors.

The amount of meat eaten varies considerably worldwide. In developed countries, people typically eat about 224 grams per day. But in Africa, most people only get about 31 grams a day.

With demand for meat increasing worldwide, experts worry that this increased livestock production will mean more gases like methane and nitrous oxide heating up the atmosphere.

In China, for instance, people are eating double the amount of meat they used to a decade ago.

Powles said that if the global average were 90 grams per day, that would prevent the levels of gases from speeding up climate change.

Eating less red meat would also improve health in general. Powles and his co-authors estimate that reducing meat consumption would reduce the numbers of people with heart disease and cancer. One study has estimated that the risk of colorectal cancer drops by about a third for every 100 grams of red meat that is cut out of your diet.

"As a society, we are overconsuming protein," Brewster said. "If we ate less red meat, it would also help stop the obesity epidemic."

Experts said that it would probably take decades to wane the public off of its meat-eating tendency.

"We need to better understand the implications of our diet," said Dr. Maria Neira, director of director of the World Health Organization's department of public health and the environment.

"It is an interesting theory that needs to be further examined," she said. "But eating less meat could definitely be one way to reduce gas emissions and climate change."

ASSOCIATED PRESS

A study done in The Lancet, a medical journal, says that a universal red meat consumption reduction of 10 percent would cut the gases that contribute to global warming.

Margulis calls to re-investigate 9/11 attacks; blames government titles, including the National Medal of Science, and served as president of Sigma Xa, a scientific association, from 2005-2006. Her topics of expertise include microbial evolution and cell biology. She has published several books on her research.

9/11 CONSPIRACY from page 1

Professor Margulis declined to comment, stating that she tries to stay away from politics, and has done so for the last 40 years. Her statement can be found at the following website: http://www.patriotsquestion911.com/professors.html#Margulis.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale a student.umass.edu

Bush to gradually pull troops

President orders home several soldiers in Iraq

BY TERRENCE HUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - Rejecting calls to leave Iraq, President Bush on Thursday ordered gradual U.S. troop reductions from their highest level of the war and said more forces can come home as progress is made. At the same time, he said Iraq needs "an enduring relationship with America."

In remarks prepared for a prime-time address from the Oval Office, Bush presented his strategy for reducing U.S. forces. "The principle guiding my decisions on troop levels in Iraq is: return on success. The more successful we are, the more American troops can return home."

With no dramatic change in course, Bush's decision sets the stage for a fiery political debate in Congress and on the 2008 presidential campaign trail. Democrats said Bush's approach was unacceptable.

Sen. Jack Reed of Rhode Island, a former Army Ranger who delivered the Democratic response, said that "once again, the president failed to provide either a plan to successfully end the war or a convincing rationale to continue it."

Reed said Democrats would work to "profoundly change our military involvement in Iraq."

Bush approved the recommendations of Gen. David Petraeus, the top U.S. commander in Iraq, to withdraw five combat brigades – or about 20,000 troops — and an undetermined number of support troops by July. The reductions represented only a slight hastening of the originally scheduled end of the troop increase announced in January.

The White House said 5,700 troops would be home by Christmas.

Bush's speech was the latest turning point in a 4 1/2-year-old war marred by miscalculations, surprises and setbacks.

Almost since the fall of Baghdad, in April 2003, U.S. commanders and administration officials in Washington mistakenly believed they were on track to winding down U.S. involvement and handing off to the Iraqis. Instead, the insurgency intervened and the reality of a country in chaos conspired to deepen the U.S. commitment.

Bush said the U.S. engagement will stretch beyond his presidency, requiring military, financial and political support from Washington. He said Iraqi leaders "have asked for an enduring relationship with America.

"And we are ready to begin building that relationship in a way that protects our interests in the region and requires many fewer American troops."

Bush said his strategy — leaving about 130,000 U.S. soldiers in Iraq to continue fighting — bridges the desires of people who want to bring troops home and those who believe that success in Iraq is essential to U.S. security.

"The way forward I have described tonight makes it possible, for the first time in years, for people who have been on opposite sides of this difficult debate to come together," Bush said.

That appeared unlikely, however, based on the reaction of Democratic leaders who want deadlines for withdrawals.

"The American people long ago lost faith in the president's leadership of the war in Iraq because his rhetoric has never matched the reality on the ground," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif. "The choice is between a Democratic plan for responsible redeployment and the president's plan for an endless war in Iraq."

Majority Democrats in Congress are unable to muster enough votes to force an end to the war. So they are hoping to win Republican support with legislation to limit the mission of U.S. forces to training Iraq's military and police, protecting U.S. assets and fighting terrorists.

Addressing America's frustration with the protracted war, the president said, "Some say the gains we are making in Iraq come too late. They are mistaken. It is never too late to deal a blow to al-Qaida. It is never too late to advance freedom. And it is never too late to support our troops in a fight they can win."

"Whatever political party you belong to, whatever your position on Iraq, we should be able to agree that America has a vital interest in preventing chaos and providing hope in the Middle East," the president said.

He added, "Let us come together on a policy of strength in the Middle East."

Bush acknowledged that Iraq's government has failed to meet goals for political reconciliation and security. A new assessment to be released Friday by the White House will underscore that point.

The latest conclusions mirror those in the most recent report, from July, the White House said. The first report said the Iraqi government was achieving spotty progress, with satisfactory gains toward eight benchmarks, unsatisfactory marks on eight more and mixed results on the rest.

"Yet Iraq's national leaders are getting some things done," Bush contended. He said the Baghdad government has passed a budget and is sharing oil revenues among the provinces even though legislation has not been approved. Changes that have begun to take hold in the provinces must be followed in Baghdad, he said.

Bush's claims of security progress were jarred by the assassination of a Sunni sheik who revolted against al-Qaida and fought alongside Americans.

Abdul-Sattar Abu Risha, the most prominent figure in a U.S.-backed revolt of Sunni sheiks against al-Qaida in Iraq, was killed Thursday by a bomb detonating the danger faced by people who cooperate with coalition forces.

People in the United States overwhelmingly disapprove of Bush's handling of the war, which has claimed the lives of more than 3,700 U.S. troops and cost about a half trillion dollars. His approval rating — both for his handling of Iraq and for his overall performance — stood at 33 percent in an Associated Press-Ipsos poll released Thursday.

About 168,000 U.S. troops are in Iraq now. Bush's order is expected to bring that number to around 132,000 — about where it was when Bush announced a major buildup on Jan. 10.

Want to write for news?

E-mail:
news@dailycollegian.com

SEP 14 2007

Meet UMass Pastry Chefs...
Let them make a crepe for you!

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
2007 Grand Prize Winner
Be A Local Hero

Wednesday September 12 AT WORCESTER DC
Thursday September 13 AT FRANKLIN DC
Friday September 14 AT HAMPSHIRE DC
5–9 pm

SAMPLE THE FOLLOWING:
Fresh Multi Berry Sauce (local)
Fresh Peach Sauce (local)
Nutella
Crepe Suzette
Bananas
Chocolate Chips
Cherries
Whipped Cream

www.mikesmaze.com
413-665-8331
Weekends & Holidays 11am-5pm now thru Oct
MikesMaze presents LOUIS! live in corn with Food Fun & MUSIC!

Student Special
4 MONTHS $149
exp. 9/30/07
No other discounts
www.amherstathletic.com
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
256-0000
RT. AMHERST

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." – Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cut aid to Saudi Arabia

Matt Hoffman

The New York Times reported that the Bush administration is planning to ask Congress for $20 billion to supply Saudi Arabia and Gulf countries with advanced weaponry over the next 10 years.

When I hear these plans, I have to ask myself: Where is the logic?

Saudi Arabia is one of the world's worst abusers of human rights. It is one of six places in the world where I, as a gay person, will be murdered by government authorities simply for being born.

The United States' goal in boosting Sunni regimes in the Middle East is to check the growing power of Iran.

The Iranian threat is real. Iran has called for the destruction of the United States and Israel, as well as turning the Middle East into a Shi'ite-dominated, Arab-less region. For example, Iran has been deporting tens of thousands of Arabs from their homes in the al-Ahawaz district of northwestern Iran.

Like Saudi Arabia, Iran has no respect for liberal values. Numerous human rights watchdogs reported that a gay couple – two teenagers aged 17 and 18 - were hanged on July 19, 2005, by the Iranian government. The other four countries in the world that implement the death penalty for homosexual behavior are also Muslim Middle Eastern countries.

Essentially, the Muslim Middle East is led by those who want to take over the world with their strict interpretation of Shariah law. And we're about to give billions of dollars to one of these countries? Don't we realize that aiding a country that denies basic rights to women, secular Muslims, non-Muslims, and homosexuals is antithetical to our values?

Essentially, the Muslim Middle East is led by those who want to take over the world with their strict interpretation of Shari'a law.

The United States has had to contemplate helping the lesser of two evils before. In the 1980s, the U.S. supplied Islamic jihadists with weapons to fight the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. But we forgot that Islamists don't just dislike Soviets: they dislike all non-Muslims, as well as Muslims who don't follow the whole of Shariah law. Our aid to those jihadists in the 1980s ended up being used to kill thousands of Americans on Sept. 11, 2001.

If we want to support liberal, moderate groups in the Middle East, why aren't we giving more support to the Kurds? Kurds have already proven capable of governing themselves. Kurdistan is a role model to the region. Instead of decrying the West as the worst thing to happen to the world, the Kurds embrace capitalism and promote tolerance of people of all religions, and therefore are flourishing despite the Arab oppression they encounter.

At least the United States made one good decision in deciding to give aid to Israel. Israel is a good steward of human rights in a region of the world that is dominated by hate. It is the only Middle Eastern country rated as "entirely free" by Freedom House, an organization founded by Eleanor Roosevelt.

Yet, all of the good things the U.S. does could be offset by the fact that we are about to give almost $20 billion to a country in which 89 percent of Americans are outlawed from becoming citizens. That's right. It is illegal for anyone of Jewish or Christian heritage, or any other non-Islamic faith, to become a citizen of Saudi Arabia. That's apartheid!

Some parts of Saudi Arabia boast highways that are solely for Muslim use. That is, for Muslims lucky enough to be male. (Women are prohibited from driving a car in Saudi Arabia.) Indeed, in March 2006 three French tourists were murdered for being on the "wrong side" of the highway. Saudi Arabia doesn't respect human values. Why should we respect them?

As a Jew, I resent the threat Saudi Arabia poses to Israel. Saudi Arabia has invaded Israel in the past, and has held fund-raisers to send suicide bombers into Israeli cities. As an American, I resent the threat Saudi Arabia poses to us, having learned from the fact that 15 Saudi hijackers killed thousands of Americans on 9/11. As a gay man, I resent the support of a regime that is one of only six governments in the entire world that murders gay people.

Don't we – as humans, as Americans - want to send the message that we support liberal values?

Matt Hoffman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mjhoffma@student.umass.edu

Misplaced discrimination

Teresa Franco

The aftermath of Sept. 11th has brightened the good and bad hues of American socialization. The good is that Americans have come together and risen from the ashes the attacks left. The bad is that there is still a trail of ugly discrimination present toward Muslims today.

A few weeks ago, a few Muslim men were going through the metal detectors in an airport and were asked to remove their turbans, the religious head dress worn by Muslim men, to be checked for weapons. The head dress is a long cloth-like material that has been soaked in water and is worn by men of the Sakhi faith. The purpose of the turban is for Muslim men to hide their long uncut hair they wear to represent their commitment to their faith.

It's understandable with the sixth anniversary of the Sept. 11th attacks the security in airports becomes extra-tight. But to ask a man of Islamic descent to remove this sacred garment around his head is the equivalent of asking a Jewish man to remove his yarmulke, or a devout Christian to take off a cross necklace. To these men, to be forced into allowing security guards paw at something that is dear to them is a punch to the gut for the entire faith. The request to remove the turban crossed the line of personal rights. It was a deliberate segregation of a specific religious group, not to mention the public shame and humiliation that the men felt when they were asked to remove this representation of their religion.

Too much energy is wasted on the paranoia of specific religious groups.

As Americans, yes, we must be on the lookout for danger, but too much energy is wasted on the paranoia of specific religious groups. The amount of effort it takes to search through turbans without reason could be used for something more beneficial to society. It is only hurting our country more by making these false assumptions.

While it is physically possible for a weapon to be hidden in the space of a turban, it is highly unlikely a Muslim devout enough to wear the head dress would stash a violent device in a piece of clothing that is a representation of his religion. Another aspect to take into consideration is the men from the Sept. 11th attacks were not dressed in religious clothing. It would be thought that someone who is plotting an attack would dress in a way that would not draw attention.

It is a surprise that more than a half a decade has passed and the same skepticism of Muslims after the attacks still exists. What's most bothersome is these men were not exhibiting any suspicious behavior that would justify searching them head to toe. It's heart-wrenching to know what these men planned to be an ordinary flight turned into a battle for their dignity.

What needs to be kept in mind is the attacks were planned by individuals from the Muslim community, not the entire faith itself. The thoughts of the attackers were not a representation of an entire faith. The same goes for every religion and nationality. Is every German a Nazi? No. Is every Italian a member of the Mafia? No. Nazi and Mafia members represent only a slice of the ethnic groups they are a part of.

If we take an outside look at the United States, we'd be able to pluck out people who are U.S. citizens who have evil intentions. Again, though, these are only a small portion of the population.

I suggest the originators of the turban-searching policy re-evaluate their new rule. It's a very narrow-minded approach to keep our country safe. The policy appears to have been established without looking at the situation from different angles. I'm pretty sure there are plenty of other methods that would keep airports secure.

The more we make fabricated assumptions about specific groups, the more anger and confusion will be created. It is possible to ease up on interrogating groups we presume as a threat without evidence, but still keep a safe guard up. We need to be more open and look at situations from all different views before we rush into making a decision that encroaches on someone's personal beliefs.

Teresa Franco is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at tfranco a student.umass.edu

A guide for decoding cliches

Brad Leibowitz

Yahoo.com recently ran a question posed by a user concerning what the meaning of a "dog day afternoon" actually is. The asker knew that Al Pacino had starred in a film with the same title, but also knew that the phrase itself had nothing to do with it. So, she inquired and she found her answer.

As for me, this made me wonder about certain phrases we all say which I did not know the origin of or what they exactly meant. As such, I thought I would take this time to do just that.

"Lucky penny." This is one you hear all the time. "Say, there's a penny on the ground, go and pick it up and you will have a lucky day."

The penny has a long history, one which didn't become lucky until the 1800s. The American penny is derived from the British pence, or one-hundredth of the British pound sterling. Prior to 1971, the pence was 1/240 of the British pound sterling and prior to 1707, it was one-twelfth of a South African shilling.

As for the lucky nature of the penny, that didn't come about until after the death of Abraham Lincoln and the minting of the American penny in 1909. The piece was originally called the "Lincoln cent." Being that Abe's face is emblazoned on the coin, it gained its lucky denomination due to Lincoln's nickname of Lucky Lincoln.

"Cold shoulder." This is one that everyone has gotten at least once. Commonly it is used today when your partner doesn't want to engage in sexual activity with you, and all that you can see, when that person rolls over in bed is his or her shoulder, i.e., giving the cold shoulder. However, the phrase, in its origin, has nothing to do with sex.

Meaning the, "cold shoulder," is a phrase which applied to visitors to a house who weren't welcomed. If you were welcomed into a house, the host would serve you a nice hot meal. Conversely, if you weren't welcomed into the house, the host would offer you a "cold shoulder of mutton."

The first reference to this phrase in print appears in Sir Walter Scott's, "The Antiquary" in 1816: "The Countless dislikes didna gang farther at first then just showing o' the cauld shoother." Both 'cauld' and 'shoother' are Scottish dialect respectively meaning 'cold' and 'shoulder.'

"By the skin of your teeth." This one is kind of obscure. At first glance, the phrase makes no sense. With the exception of Jeffrey Dahmer, no one has skin on their teeth. By this fact, it could be that the saying is a reference to the act of cannibalism. Maybe we should ask Captain Jack Sparrow?

With the exception of Jeffrey Dahmer, no one has skin on their teeth.

However, the phrase which means, "a close call," actually comes from an old English proverb which referred to hunting. The story goes that a group of Englishmen were hunting a bear. One of the men got too close to the bear which enabled the bear to bite the man. The man's skin ended up on the bears teeth, making the first saying, "by the skin on his teeth." However, over time, being that the hunter didn't die, "his" was replaced with "your."

"The pot calling the kettle black." This is one of my favorites. The phrase first appears in the first modern novel, "Don Quixote" as, "the pot calls the kettle black." The phrase is derived from the days in cooking when pots and kettles were placed over open fires. As they heated they accumulated a great deal of soot on their exteriors making them indistinguishable from one another.

Therefore, it was to indicate that there was no difference between the pot and the kettle. As it is today, there is no difference between an accuser and the accused.

If you are wondering, "dog day afternoon" refers to the appearance of Sirius (the "Dog Star") in the summer sky. The Romans used the "Dog Star", which appears most brightly in the sky from July 3 to Aug. 11, as an indicator that the hottest days of the year were upon them. Thus, the phrase means "a very hot day."

"Auld Lang Syne." It is an appropriate phrase to end on because it has been a common phrase between the Scots for longer than anyone knows. However, the phrase was made famous and put into worldwide use before it began being sung on New Year's Eve.

It was made famous by Robert Burns somewhere between the years of 1759 and 1796 when he penned the now-famous poem; the phrase further harkens back to another Scottish Poet by the name of Robert Ayton who penned a very similar poem between 1570 and 1638. It is commonly used today as a way to say goodbye to the year passing into history, the phrase itself means "old long since" or "old long ago." It is where we get our current fairy tale beginnings of "Once upon a time."

Yet, in the end, for centuries the phrase has simply been a way of saying "goodbye." So, Auld Lang Syne.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bleibowi a student.umass.edu.

Guilty until proven innocent

S.P. Sullivan

Erasmo Palacios wasn't looking for oral sex from a prostitute. Indeed, it would've been a pretty bad idea considering the Chicago resident's wife was in the passenger seat and his 21-year-old daughter was a scant 20 feet away exchanging her coffee for a hot chocolate.

The man's wife, Rocio, was the one who noticed the faux prostitute, an undercover police officer, and mistook her for a woman in distress. The couple signaled the woman to their car, and upon being lewdly propositioned for an exchange of oral sex for cash, the couple laughed.

That would've made for a great story at parties.

But apparently the undercover agent took the laughter as some sort of code for "why yes, I would like some oral sex." Mr. Palacios was promptly arrested by a swarm of police officers as his daughter emerged from the coffee shop, understandably shocked at what was going on.

Eight hours and $4,700 dollars in towing and impoundment fees later, Palacios, who had no previous criminal record, was set free. He's suing the department for damages and will probably win.

But in light of this incident, and the recent controversy around Dateline NBC's "To Catch a Predator," attention has been drawn to the use of entrapment by law enforcement (and ratings-hungry vigilantes).

The issue strikes a resonant chord here on campus, where Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Michael Gargano raised eyebrows just last year with a new sweeping policy involving police presence on campus. Uniformed and plainclothes officers began patrolling dorms, and several students were arrested for possession of marijuana after being approached by plainclothes officers.

The policy has since been curbed (although not entirely abandoned) due to the legal ambiguity of police presence in dormitories. But what all of these incidences, both national and on campus, bring to the discourse is that dirty little word in law enforcement: entrapment.

Entrapment is legally construed as, "The inducement, by law enforcement officers or their agents, of another person to commit a crime for the purposes of bringing charges for the commission of that artificially-provoked crime." And although police officers can often duck behind the semantics of state or local statutes, more often than not they're encouraging private citizens to commit illegal acts they might not have otherwise committed.

It doesn't take a hardcore civil libertarian to be irked by these practices.

There are plenty of people committing crimes every day, entirely of their own volition; we don't need police officers or undercover agents of Dateline NBC to go instigating them.

It doesn't take a hardcore civil libertarian to be irked by these practices, which resemble what science fiction author Philip K. Dick referred to as "pre-crime," the practice of arresting criminals before they get the chance to strike.

Perhaps more often than not these practices are entrapping individuals who would've broken the law on their own anyway. But what about the Erasmo Palacios who get caught up in some overzealous undercover policing?

These policies reflect a slow but consistent erosion of the once uber-American obsession with liberty. As a society we've become so fixated on protection that we've justified the "pre-emptive" war, let's get the bad guys before the bad guys get us. The problem with that logic is that you can't always tell who the bad guys are, or whether they're just all talk anyway. We've also allowed our law enforcement agents to go out instigating crimes, often without the desired results.

Have the plainclothes officers on campus busted any power-players in the campus drug trade? No. They've taken down your sporadic stoner, causing a decent chunk of the population in Central Residential Area to collectively cringe.

This isn't a Patrick Henry call-to-arms; common sense ought to tell us that yes, it would be ideal to prevent crimes from happening. But you can't good prospective criminals into committing them under the audience of law enforcement; innocent private citizens get lost in the shuffle.

The case of Erasmo Palacios isn't paranoura to undercover law enforcement, I'm sure. It's a ridiculous incidence—a caricature of entrapment. But caricatures accentuate the flaws of their subjects and bring to light the sort of absurdity that might otherwise be overlooked.

The scariest thing about Palacios' case is that he's just a regular guy, not the seedy (yet not necessarily guilty) characters usually brought in from prostitution stings. What happened to him could've happened to anyone in Chicago that day, or anywhere, for that matter. And as a private citizen, I'd like law enforcement agents to know that I appreciate them protecting us from sex-offenders and other lawbreakers. But you shouldn't have to protect us from ourselves.

And please, at least wait for me to commit a crime before you throw the cuffs on.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at editorial a student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

I hope the UMass campus shares my disappointment in your paper for running Ben Duffy's September 13 opinion piece, "Silly, silly white people."

While Duffy's inexcusable content ("I sometimes wish for a return to segregation, just so all of you white folks could be cordoned off together") is boorish and self-loathing, I am equally disappointed in his dismal writing skills. Yes, the Collegian ought to be ashamed of running an article so pointedly racist and full of unrepentant cultural stereotypes. But an even worse affront to the reader is the paper's willingness to print such sophomoric text.

Without delving into the author's racial insecurities, perhaps the author opted for shock value because he's so insecure about his writing style – and rightfully so. His only way to make a reader engage the entire opinion piece is to make points so outrageous and divisive that s/he wants to see this fool make a greater ass of himself with each sentence.

Judging by Duffy's cheeky grin in his picture, he thought he was producing a comic text, a droll article to make white folks laugh at themselves. Maybe he thought non-whites would laugh at Duffy's people along with him. Sadly, though, Duffy himself is the punchline of his own lame joke.

Duffy's article sounds as though it had been transcribed from a conversation overheard at a dining commons. I imagine him trying to entertain his buddies loudly with this racist affront, while those around him roll their eyes, and the folks one table over consider telling him to close his trap. His friends should have silenced him first, however, just as the Collegian ought to have scrapped this article before it left the newsroom.

But vitriolic content aside, your paper, arguably the finest college daily in New England, ought to have higher standards of journalism. And a point for Duffy in future writings: if you're going to rant about race, at least make it poignant … or funny.

Steve Houchois
UMass student

SEP 14 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Adams finds sober sound

After a year away from the road musician returns to Noho

By Dave Master
Collegian Staff

Ryan Adams headlines the Calvin Theatre this Sunday, Sept. 16, in promotion of his new album, "Easy Tiger."

"I invented alterative country music! I'm Ryan fing Adams!" he says. David Ryan Adams, 32, is a singer-songwriter from Jacksonville, North Carolina who thinks he's a big deal. Just check out his MySpace page.

Well Mr. Adams is a big deal, having musical legends such as Sir Elton John take him under their wing. Adams played on stage with Sir Elton on CMT's Crossroads TV show, causing a giddy Ryan to almost pee his pants. They performed "My Sweet Carolina," a song he previously recorded for 2000's "Heartbreaker" as a duet with Emmylou Harris.

He previously played with the band Whiskeytown in the '90s, but after three studio releases, it soon disbanded.

"Heartbreaker" was Adams big break into a solo career. "Come Pick me Up" was Adams first hit and probably the track solely responsible for his wide critical success as a singer-songwriter.

In 2005, Adams released three albums within a six-month span, causing critics to believe that he has "lost his authenticity" as a musical artist. Adams disagrees, saying "This is what I do. If I didn't work as much, people would say that I don't work enough." One of the three albums of 2005, "Cold Roses," may be his best work yet.

"29," a part of the trilogy of 2005, was a lament with each track dedicated to each year of his 20s.

Adams took last year off from recording. As his career went idle, fans anxiously awaited his next move.

He finally released "Easy Tiger" this past June, his ninth studio album in seven years. Its track listing features songs previously recorded and unreleased

See ADAMS on page 5

COURTESY RYANADAMSONLINE.COM

Ryan Adams will hit the stage at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton this Sunday. He will be promoting "Easy Tiger," his seventh studio album in seven years.

Gunn better than the competition

By Carrie Laven
Daily Californian

Let's face it: while the designers are talented, and Heidi Klum stunningly beautiful, voice-of-reason Tim Gunn is everyone's favorite personality on Bravo's "Project Runway."

With his perfect posture, starched suits and impeccable grey hair, Gunn is a silver fox that makes gay men swoon and straight women wish they could be half as sophisticated as he is. Now viewers can snatch up a bit of that sophistication by watching Bravo's new series, "Tim Gunn's Guide to Style." But beware: Like Gunn, the show never dresses down. Basically, "Tim Gunn's Guide to Style" is a flagrant knock-off TLC's "What Not to Wear," minus the bitchiness of that show's hosts, Clinton Kelly and Stacy London. Gunn's show follows the same dynamic of a gay man and a fashionable woman teaching style-inept frumpsters how to dress, but it does so without all of the yelling of "shut ... up ..." at each other while dramatically slam-dunking clothes into trash cans.

Instead, the quiet, chicly bobbed ex-model Veronica Webb serves as Gunn's sidekick; a woman who borders on boring but produces enough finger-snapping "uh-huh, sister-friend!" comments to save her from putting viewers to sleep. Together, the tasteful Gunn and classy Webb elevate the show to a level of gallery-strolling, champagne brunch-ishness that will make viewers feel refined just by watching. They're Clinton and Stacy for the high society crowd.

So far, Bravo has aired two episodes of the eight-episode series, the first of which followed Karen, a

See GUNN on page 5

COURTESY BRAVO.COM

"Tim Gunn's Guide to Style" vaguely resembles the show "What Not to Wear" as fashion expert Gunn revolutionizes women's wardrobes.

Douglas goes crazy again

Actor goes to the brink of sanity in 'King of California'

By Joe Neumaier
New York Daily News

For a guy who spent years hitting the hot button on pop culture, Michael Douglas sounds, at 62, like he'd be just fine sitting back and watching the wheels go round.

"At this point in your career and life, you're looking for challenges, different sorts of things otherwise you stay home with your lovely wife and children, and that would be that," Douglas jokes. "Like, 'And he was never heard from again. ...' It's come close to that. My priorities have changed since I fell in love and started a new family seven or eight years ago. I never anticipated that. Comparatively, I haven't done that much."

Of course, Douglas has too hungry a mind and serious a career to chuck it all for a hermitic life with his wife, Catherine Zeta-Jones, and their children Dylan, 7, and Carys, 4 (the couple have homes in Bermuda, Manhattan and Canada). And he was clearly enthused about diving into playing a crazy, shaggy and ragged guy named Charlie in "King of California."

The low-budget indie film features Douglas, in full Manson-esque beard ("Catherine said, 'It's great to wake up next to the Unabomber'"), as the unhinged dad of Miranda (Evan Rachel Wood), a teenager who's grown up fast since her old man's mind went south. When Charlie thinks he has located ancient bullion, Miranda watches as he digs the booty up through the concrete floor of a Costco.

"The fun thing about playing crazy is it gives you a license to do anything," says Douglas. "You can go from tragedy to comedy, and the audience is with you. It was a fast shoot, so we were flying without a net basically while filming. You had to trust your instincts which is basically what got you there in the first place."

Douglas got into acting thanks to his dad, film legend Kirk Douglas. Born in New Jersey, Michael was raised on the upper West Side and in Westport, Conn., by his mother, Diana, after his parents divorced when he was 7. He attended the University of California, Santa Barbara, to study theater, and nabbed a co-starring role with Karl Malden on TV's "The Streets of San Francisco" in 1972.

Then he bought the rights for "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" from his dad (Kirk turned Ken Kesey's novel into a Broadway play in the 60s, playing mental institution troublemaker Randle McMurphy). Milos Forman's Oscar-winning 1975 film got Douglas an award as a producer (he still counts that career move as the biggest surprise of his life), and he shepherded several of his next movies, including 1979's "The China Syndrome" and 1984's "Romancing the Stone."

But it was overcoming his inherent nice-guy quality ironically, the trait he thought would set him apart from ultra-tough guy Kirk that made Douglas a star in two 1987 films: In "Fatal Attraction," he was an adulterer, and in "Wall Street," he was Gordon Gekko, lizard king of corporate raiders. Douglas won Best Actor for the latter, and his "Greed Is Good" speech became an 80s-montage staple. Buzzed-about films like "The War of the Roses," "Basic Instinct," "Falling Down," "Disclosure" and "The Game" followed and "Kirk's nice son" found his niche.

"Bad guys are great. You can eat up the scenery, and people love villains because you get to do all the things that society inhibits people from behaving like," Douglas says. "I've been fortunate, because playing these characters who you don't inherently like or are pleasant, you have the chance to win the audience over.

"Gordon Gekko was so repressed, all the scariness was banked," Douglas says. "That sense that there could be an eruption rather than just erupting is more exciting. The tension came from something maybe exploding with this guy."

Douglas has tackled softer characters lately ("Wonder Boys," "It Runs in the Family"). But between film projects and doing volunteer work for the United Nations, he looks at his dad who survived a tragic helicopter crash and a massive stroke and, at 90, has just published his third book of memoirs and his kids to keep things in perspective.

"With all of Kirk's accomplishments and his movie career, I think I'm most proud of him in how he's conducting this third act in his life," says Douglas.

"Not many people are fortunate enough to have their dad around at 90, much less a guy as active as he is. It's scary how strong he is.

"And the biggest lesson I've learned from my kids is, 'Work on your lower back,'" he smiles.

"They're having a bit of a hard time understanding that their father's 62. When I'm chasing them around and can't catch them, they think I'm kidding. But I can't get my 7-year-old."

Born in New Jersey and raised on the upper West Side, Douglas credits his passion for acting to his father, Kirk Douglas. Michael Douglas plays a crazy man named Charlie, who believes he knows where gold treasure is buried, in the low-budget indie flick "King of California."

Country singer Gill branches out

By Marijke Rowland
McClatchy Newspapers

When Vince Gill stepped into the recording studio two summers ago, his intention was to put out a standard country album.

It would be something similar to the 20-plus albums he has released since 1982, with a dozen or so carefully crafted country tunes. But instead of stopping at 12, he just kept playing. And instead of sticking to country, he went all over the musical map.

A year later, the now-50-year-old star emerged from the studio with his latest release "These Days," a four-disc, 43-song, genre-crossing project. Released last October, the album is split into four parts: "Some Things Never Get Old," "The Country & Western Record," "Little Brother The Acoustic Record," "The Reason Why The Groovin' Record" and "Workin' on a Big Chill The Rockin' Record."

The album includes guest appearances from Gill's wife, Amy Grant, as well as fellow musicians Sheryl Crow, Diana Krall, Bonnie Raitt, Gretchen Wilson, Lee Ann Womack, Trisha Yearwood and Emmylou Harris, among others. The ambitious endeavor has earned rave reviews from the New York Times, People, USA Today, NPR's "Day to Day" and more.

"It was so much fun being able to spend that much time being creative; it was a real gift at my age," Gill said on a break back home in Nashville during his summer tour. "(The album) is really a neat opportunity for people to blur the lines a little bit."

Vince Gill: The Friends & Family Tour is a reflection of the new CD. It's a three-and-a-half-hour, free-flowing exercise in country, jazz, bluegrass and rock.

"What has been fun about this tour is that nobody opens for anybody; we all take the stage and sing four or five things and then Del (McCoury) comes out and then Amy comes out," he said. "It just kind of meanders through all this different music and it makes for a real interesting night. You get some real traditional bluegrass, contemporary Christian, rock 'n' roll and even a little jazz. It's a fun night for us musically, we get to cover so much ground."

That kind of musical smorgasbord requires a small traveling army. Each show features some 25 musicians 17 in Gill's band alone. Gill's 25-year-old daughter, Jennifer Gill, from his first marriage, also performs, making the tour a true family affair.

Both the behemoth tour and album are against-the-grain moves for a star as big and accomplished as Gill. With 18 Grammy awards and more than 22 million albums sold, the singer/songwriter's high-concept release flies in the face of an increasingly single- and digital-oriented industry.

"It's going so far against the grain, it's laughable," he said. "Nobody is doing this. I wasn't setting out to prove something. I wasn't setting out to go against the grain. But I don't think that anything great has ever been the result of someone being a follower, a copier. I thought, why not now? In hindsight, looking back, had I just made a 10- or 11-song record, it may have gone largely unnoticed. The curiosity of this record is its success."

Gill said the album initially grew out of his weariness of having to pick only a few songs out of large batch of new originals for each album.

"The rest would go in a desk drawer and you may never hear them again or see them again," he said. "I told myself I wanted to experiment and see how these songs turned out as a record instead. So I just stayed in a studio. I looked up a month or two later and had recorded 30 songs."

He then realized the songs fit into different categories some moody ballads here, some hardcore country there. He took the tracks to his record company, MCA, and instead of making him whittle them down, label representatives encouraged him to record even

See COUNTRY on page 5

Alt. country found

ADAMS from page 4

– songs that die-hard Adam's fans have surely commandeered from the Internet – and a handful of new ones, such as rock anthem "Halloween Head" and bluegrass ditty "Pearls on a String."

This long-awaited LP – well, long in terms of Adams – falls short of his previous work and anticipations, despite his duet with singer-songwriter Sheryl Crow, "Two." This album just meows instead of roars, like its title insinuates. Out of its 13 tracks, two were already recorded and never released. Adams made a big creative decision to change the title of "Hey There, Mrs. Lovely", written in 2001, to "These Girls." "Off Broadway" was also recorded but never released.

Aside from his obsessive studio work, Adams has earned himself the title of a wreck-loose on stage. During his 2005 tour, Adams fell off stage, broke his wrist and was unable to finish the set. Fans were not happy. He later admitted that he was heavily reliant on alcohol during that tour and was willing to change.

Alcohol wasn't the only problem Adams had.

He has allegedly admitted to being a user of heroine mixed with cocaine, as stated in the lyrics of his song "29." But this song was by no means a confession. During the time in which Adams abused alcohol and took drugs, he had a beard. Upon his early tour dates of "Easy Tiger", Adams has played an entire show wearing a hooded sweatshirt with his back to the audience. Adams admitted to Rolling Stone in June that he was insecure about exposing his massive razor burn due to shaving his beard.

Ironically, he is not insecure about exposing as many songs as possible. This past year, Adams continued in his self-indulgence by recording some 18 albums-worth of nonsensical rap songs under such pseudonyms as "The Sh*t" and "DJ Reggie". None of these albums were released, however.

Despite his eccentric qualities, Adams may be the next important songwriter for this generation, following Neil Young, Bob Dylan, and Bruce Springsteen. Maybe the simplicity of "Easy Tiger" is a sign of maturity. Its starkness provokes the spirit of Springsteen's "The Ghost of Tom Joad".

Maybe he is starting to take himself less seriously. Maybe not. Dylan never stopped taking himself seriously. And surely, he didn't invent alternative country music. That was Neil Young, you know, the guy who Adams sounds like all the time? But Ryan Adams is still very talented. Expect a performance on Sunday that no other artist than Ryan Adams himself can give.

Dave Master can be reached at dmaster@student.umass.edu.

RYAN ADAMS/MYSPACE.COM

Songwriter and singer Ryan Adams, who claims to have invented alternative country music, and he has shared the stage with Elton John on CMT's "Crossroads."

Gunn dictates style

GUNN from page 4

tired old streetwalker, ahem, soccer mom, who was too scantily clad for the PTA. The second episode profiled Rebecca, a jeans-and-T-shirt girl who hadn't worn a dress in years. Gunn and his co-host passed the contestants through the hands of hair and make-up artists -- as well as a "life stylist" -- and transformed them into polished women who wouldn't be mistaken for men or ladies of the night anymore. The concept is simple, and the process has been seen before on reality and talk shows alike.

But while the producers' attempts to distinguish Gunn's show from "What Not to Wear" are few, the differences do pay off – literally. Gunn uses his numerous high-fashion connections – Coach, Tiffany, etc. – to hook up his contestants with luxurious swag that we little people can only dream of. He also ushers his contestants to famed fashion houses (Bill Blass and Catherine Malandrino in the first episodes), where they get to pick their "perfect outfit." Fashionistas will love this part of the show, and the loads of free stuff are enough to make anyone want to throw on a pair of holey sweatpants and make an audition tape.

The show is also more of a personal growth experience than "What Not to Wear," as Gunn asks his contestants to examine why they make the fashion choices that they do and emphasizes personal style. Instead of ripping beloved clothing from their clutches, Gunn lets them choose what they want to throw away. And rather than scrunching up his face at their choices, Gunn keeps his famous composure and gracefully asks, "Do you feel that these are at a level of fashion that's adequate for where we're going with you?" The lack of verbal bashing may make the show a bit dull for some, but others will find the freedom the contestants are given intriguing. Overall, Gunn's new show will not disappoint fans and fashionistas, but it may not have enough pizzazz for average viewers. Gunn and Webb aren't boisterous or flashy, because they couldn't be – they might mess up their hair or wrinkle their clothes. But that's why the show works. Gunn's series is the Bergdorf Goodman to "What Not to Wear's" Macy's: more refined and understated, with more serious fashion.

Gill to enter Country Music Hall of Fame in October

COUNTRY from page 4

more and add bluegrass to the mix.

"I just think that all of that music is inside of me," Gill said. "More than me saying I want to be a pop artist and a blues artist, that music is just also inside of me and this is an opportunity for me to let it out."

In October, Gill will be inducted into the Country Music Hall of Fame along with Mel Tillis and Ralph Emery. He said he really isn't sure what he'll do come the new year.

Vince Gill's latest album includes collaborators such as Amy Grant, Sheryl Crow, Diana Krall, Trish Yearwood and Emmylou Harris.

The Source

Game Night and Saturday Night Life at the Newman Center

The Newman Center will welcome students in to watch the Red Sox vs. Yankees game on their 110" high definition stereo TV and provide free food for the event. There will also be board games, ping-pong tables, foosball tales and movies. The game starts at 4:00 p.m.

Saturday, Sept. 15, 2007 3 p.m. – 1 a.m.
Newman Center

Estela Olevsky: Faculty Piano Recital

The Fine Arts Center will be filled with the sounds of legendary classical music composers such as Haydn, Beethoven and Charles Ives as faculty member Estela Olevsky performs at the piano recital this weekend. All the proceeds go to support the music department's Piano Area.

Sunday, Sept. 16, 2007 4 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall
Fine Arts Center
Admission: $3 UMass Amherst students; $5 other students, seniors and children; $10 general public

Perils of Minimalism: The War on Terror and Constitutional Claims of Guantanamo Prisoners

"The Perils of Minimalism: The War on Terror and the Constitutional Claims of Guantanamo Prisoners" is the next lecture in the Dean Alfange, Jr. Lecture Series on Constitutional Law. It will be given by Owen M. Fiss, who is a Sterling Professor of Law at Yale Law School. Educated at Dartmouth, Oxford and Harvard, Professor Fiss has also served in the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice and taught at the University of Chicago. He has written several books and directs extensive programs in Latin American and the Middle East at Yale Law School.

Monday, Sept. 17, 2007, 4 p.m.
Student Union, Cape Cod Lounge
Free Admission

From the White House to UMass

The former Executive Chef to the White House, Walter Scheib, will prepare favorite foods of the First Families. Signature food entrees from the Clinton and Bush families will be cooked and some fascinating stories will be revealed. During a "Private Briefing" in the Berkshire Room, Chef Scheib will share anecdotes from his 11 years at the White House from his perspective and the time he spent at the kitchen.

Wednesday, Sept. 19, 2007, 5 p.m. – 9 p.m.
Berkshire Dining Commons
Southwest Residential Area

Compiled by Olga Deshchenko, Collegian Staff

Check us out online

www.DailyCollegian.com

Crimson will prove to be big challenge

M. SOCCER from page 8

against New Hampshire. We talked about our positioning off the ball and getting better support. We also need to put ourselves in better passing position. Against UNH, we had a tendency to panic a little bit and turn the ball over when we didn't need to."

Despite the inconsistency, the Minutemen are more than capable of escaping their trip to Loudonville, N.Y., with a victory. UMass is 12-0-2 all time against Siena.

Sophomore forward Bryan Hogan scored his first goal of the season for the Minutemen against Vermont last Friday and scored the lone UMass goal in its 1-0 defeat of Siena last season.

Sunday's matchup with Harvard, however, may prove slightly more challenging; the Crimson (4-0-0) enter the weekend ranked No. 15 in the NSCAA/adidas poll.

Two of Harvard's four games have come against teams UMass has played. The Crimson defeated Maine, 1-0, at home and Vermont, 2-0, on the road.

Junior Michael Fucito leads the talented Crimson offense with eight points on three goals and two assists. But the firepower doesn't end there, as five other Harvard players have scored so far this season.

Sophomore forward Andre Akpan ranks among the nation's most talented collegiate players. Not only was he a Preseason NSCAA All-American, but he has experience playing for the Under-20 United States National Team. He spent this past summer playing in the FIFA U-20 World Cup. The U.S. team advanced to the quarterfinals before losing to Austria.

The Minutemen are 3-13-3 all-time against the Crimson with their last win coming in 1985. In fact, not one current member of the Minutemen was born the last time UMass beat Harvard.

While the thought of a victory certainly excites Koch, he refuses to acknowledge Sunday's game until tomorrow's ends. The Minutemen cannot afford a letdown against a team like Siena.

"We don't even think about [Harvard] until after we play [Siena]," Koch said. "We have a game on Friday and it's the most important thing for us to focus on. The coaching staff has looked at Harvard, but we're not going to think about it until after we play Siena."

Joe Melioni can be reached at jmelioni@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen must adjust to surface

SURFACE from page 8

Rappaport said. "The ball just doesn't travel as fast on the long grass. For us that's a disadvantage, but I think we'll be able to move the ball well, even on the long grass."

The Maroon and White defeated the Saints last year in Amherst, 1-0, but UMass coach Sam Koch knows that Siena poses a more difficult challenge on its surface.

"It's something we need to be aware of that they can do," Koch said. "Any team that plays at home is going to try to make sure they do whatever they can to get the edge. Whether or not it's something they do or are going to do, I'm not sure. We just have to be focused and ready to play our game."

The NCAA does not have regulations about the length of grass, only requiring that the field's width must be between 65 and 80 yards, while the length must fall between 110 and 120 yards.

The most common surface is 120 yards long and 75 yards wide, which is the size of both Rudd Field and Siena Field in Loudonville, N.Y.

Another challenge awaits the Minutemen on Sunday, as the team completes its road trip with a match against Harvard. Unlike the Siena game, the challenge here will be the players on the field and not the playing conditions.

The Crimson are ranked No. 15 in this week's NSCAA/adidas poll and field a much stronger team than Siena. But Harvard plays its home games at a venue very similar to Rudd Field, so the Minutemen should feel some familiarity.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Offensive woes lead to losses

Formidable opponents giving UMass attack problems

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

After a hot start to the season, the Massachusetts field hockey team has hit a rough stretch of games. UMass dropped three straight games over the past week, but look to get back on the right track.

All three losses were hard-fought and against very tough and skilled opponents.

UMass Field Hockey

The first match was against an undefeated Vermont team, where the Minutewomen lost, 3-1. A day later they took New Hampshire into overtime where they lost a heartbreaker, 1-0. Boston University came to Amherst on Wednesday and UMass held the Terriers scoreless for most of the game until BU put two late goals on the board for a 2-0 victory.

First-half play

UMass has played smartly in the first half of each of the three games. Over the three-game span, UMass goalkeeping allowed one goal in those three games, scored by Danielle Collins of Vermont. The goal came with less than four minutes left in the first half.

Against No. 20 BU, the Minutewomen kept the pressure on the Terriers and were able to keep them from capitalizing on multiple penalty corner opportunities.

Second-half troubles

The three losses were the result of costly mental mistakes that came late in the games. UMass coach Justine Sowry attributed the losses not to the poor play of her team, but rather to the key players who stepped up for the opposing teams.

"They had the ball for a good chunk of the game and I think number four, (Pam) Speuhler, controlled the tempo," she said. "When they maintained as much possession as they did, it's hard to get rhythm when we have the ball."

Sowry also mentioned that she wants the team to work on its decision-making on the field. The two BU goals were scored off of penalty corners that were the result of UMass turnovers deep in its own zone.

Scoring drought

The Minutewomen scored at will during the first few games of the season. They put up seven goals through their first four games of the year. Since their 5-0 win over Harvard, they haven't been able to find the back of the cage. The only goal over the past three games was scored by Cher King, and it came in the 3-1 loss against Vermont in the opener of the Catamount Classic.

In Wednesday's game against BU, UMass out-shot the Terriers six to two. So far this season the team has out-shot its opponents 78-55, with a little more than half of those shots coming in the first half of the game. Despite not scoring in the New Hampshire game, King led the team with four shots and UMass put 14 shots against the Wildcats.

Still a tight race

Though the Maroon and White dropped three straight, both goaltenders each made their claim as to who deserves the full-time starting job.

Senior Becky Letourneau made five saves against BU and two saves against Vermont before leaving the game with an injury.

Sarah Williams has continued her solid play, despite allowing the game-winner in overtime against New Hampshire and allowing Vermont's third goal. She still touts an impressive goals-against average of 0.59.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu.

Rachael Mervine is the only senior forward on the Minutewomen. She hasn't registered a point this season after recording 16 in 2006.

JUSTIN MCGRAIL/COLLEGIAN

First home meet on tap for UM

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams will host their first home meet on Saturday. Coming off second- and third-place finishes last weekend, both teams have high hopes for the upcoming race.

The men's team will compete against Colgate, Connecticut, Maine and Vermont, while the women's team will race Maine and Vermont.

This meet will have deeper competition compared to last week at the Dartmouth Invitational, according to UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. Maine and Vermont compete in this meet most regularly and are usually tough opponents for the Minutemen. Colgate and Connecticut will also bring strong competition for the men's team.

"I think if we run well, and I have every reason to believe we will, we will finish towards the top," O'Brien said.

There is one thing the Minutemen are lacking in their first home race of the season and that is home-course advantage. The course was built last year and they have yet to run on it competitively.

"The team is very young, so it is difficult to jump from high school to college, the distance is much longer," O'Brien said. "I have split the team; all of the people who ran last week won't run this week. This allows everyone to get two races in during September. It also allows our freshmen to get one more week of training under their belt."

O'Brien expects track runners junior Peter Fortunato and sophomore Sonny Gamble to compete well in the race, although they have no cross country experience.

"The freshmen are fairly talented and pretty deep," O'Brien said. "Any of the five or six freshmen will run near the top. I've only had two weeks to see them run so I can't make a guess who will finish at the top. I'm excited to see them run because I think any of them can be a front runner."

The women will compete against Maine and Vermont on Saturday. This is Maine's first competition of the season and Vermont has had one other meet in August, according to the UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere.

When it comes to the cross country course at UMass, LaFreniere describes it as a "great spectator course, one of the best in the Northeast." The course has a significant number of up hills and a good number of down hills. The first section of the race is around a hay field and the footing is a challenge.

"We have an extremely strong top three," LaFreniere said. "(Freshman) Lauren Stocker is also running very, very well. We need to try and keep her close to number three."

LaFreniere explained that in last week's race at Dartmouth, the course was extremely hard and very long, but the issue with the Minutewomen was the gaps between their runners. LaFreniere is hoping freshman Gina Perno will step up and close the gap between her and Stocker on Saturday.

"We really need numbers four, five, six and seven to close the gap, we had too big of a gap last week," LaFreniere said.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore backup goalkeeper Lauren Luckey logged 37 minutes in her first-career collegiate victory on September 7 against Albany.

BRIAN THOMKINS/COLLEGIAN

Minutewomen host Hawks at Rudd

W. SOCCER from page 8

a lot quieter and I think sometimes information doesn't get passed on enough," Rudy said. "I am fairly happy with [the defense]. They do a good job and the keepers are solid, they get it done."

Last season, Hartford won the America East Championship over Maine to earn a berth in the NCAA Tournament. The Hawks lost in the opening round to Rutgers, 2-0. They return a large junior class along with four seniors. Senior Meagan Riemer leads the team in scoring with three points after three games. Last season Riemer was named America East Striker of the Year and the America East Championship Most Outstanding Player.

The Minutewomen played at Hartford last year, sneaking out a 1-0 victory. Senior forward Britt Canfield scored the game's lone goal and Walker notched three saves. The Minutewomen are 9-5-2 all time against the Hawks.

This week the Minutewomen received some national recognition when they were ranked No. 8 in the NSCAA/adidas Northeast Ranking and No. 11 in the Soccer Buzz Northeast Ranking.

Even though Nunes is from Connecticut, she is glad the team isn't traveling to Hartford. Hartford plays on turf while the Minutewomen are used to playing on grass.

"I love our field, anybody can say it, they will come to UMass and it's probably one of the nicest fields you'll play on. I really don't believe in playing soccer on turf," Nunes said. "I hate it. Balls take awkward bounces and I don't think it's a game that's meant to be played on turf. When you play on nice cut grass the ball still plays quickly, but it's more natural."

In her first game coming off her MCL injury, the grass should prove to be a softer surface to play on, meaning it is less likely she will re-aggravate the injury.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

New WORLD Theater
FALL 2007 SEASON

Womb-Words: Thirsting by Lenelle Moise
Wednesday, Sept.19 and Thursday, Sept. 20, 2007
8 pm, Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, Smith College
Mixing a brew full of womanist Vodou jazz, queer theory, hip-hop, and movement, Womb-Words: Thirsting is an interactive evening of poetic storytelling delivered from the gut slam-style! Join Haitian-American solo artist Lenelle Moise as she re-conceives memory and boldly speaks out about childhood, masculinities, sexualities, AIDS, cultural hybridity, and reclaiming f-words.

Somali Community Festival
Saturday, Oct. 27, 2007, 4-8 pm
Panache Banquet Hall, 827 State Street, Springfield, MA
Enjoy Somali music, dancing, and a sneak preview of performances to come!! Learn about the Walasa!! Somali Women's Collective, meet participants, enjoy great food, and buy hand-made crafts to support the community!

Mestiza Power
Thursday, Nov. 29 and Friday, Nov. 30, 2007
8pm, Bowker Auditorium
Mestiza Power is a poetic, powerfully performed and beautifully-directed new work from Yucatán, Mexico. Written and directed by Concepción León Mora and performed by Sa'as Tun, Mestiza Power reveals the dignity and struggles of contemporary Mayan women.

Visit our website for ticket prices and venue updates. For tickets call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511

Visit our website for updates! www.newworldtheater.org
FINE ARTS CENTER

Remember when you felt like this?
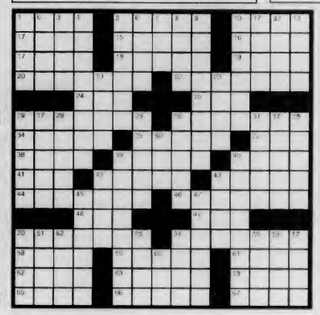
Find it again...
UMASS
Haigis Mall bus stop•10:00 am
Amherst College
Converse Hall bus stop
10:20 am
for the FREE
Sunday shuttle
to Dwight Chapel
Dwight Chapel

SEP 14 2007

amherst cinema
FRI 9/14-THU 9/20
STUDENT SPECIAL
Present this ad at the Box Office with your Student ID and receive a movie ticket for ONLY $5.00
SOME RESTRICTIONS APPLY
EXPIRES SEPTEMBER 20, 2007
ONE COUPON PER PERSON
NO END IN SIGHT ★★★★ Roger Ebert
Digital Projection
2:30 4:45 7:00 9:15
DEATH AT A FUNERAL
1:30 3:30 5:30 7:30 9:30
Paprika
2:00 6:00 9:45
Once
4:00 8:00
28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc



2		3	8	7	9
				5			9
1			4	2				7
		1				6	8
				1
	2	4			1
4				9	2			6
	9			8
			6	3	1	5		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Mixed smoothly
5 Snatches up
10 Crew
14 Rails rider
15 Scoundrel
16 Meet event
17 Black-hearted
18 Soap follower
19 Greek god of war
20 Regardless of
22 U.S. Capitol feature
24 On a roll
25 Mr. Turkey
26 Out-of-sporter
30 Books of maps
34 Sie ol the action
35 Label
37 Height of fashion?
38 Chips off the old block
39 Wild card
40 Filly's mom
41 Bring to conclusion
42 Thin cookie
43 Jeopardy
44 Alt. go!
46 Satchmo's horn
48 Part of WWW
49 Cable channel
50 Liberty
54 Throw into confusion
58 Dappled bay
59 Betray
61 Mad speck
62 River beneath the Brooklyn Bridge
63 Poetic Muse
64 Ruler of Olympus
65 Low card
66 Adlai's 1956 state-mate
67 Before, before

DOWN
1 Get rid of
2 Hold dear
3 Sacred Egyptian bird
4 Agile marine cetaceans
5 Small cave
6 Heavy cord
7 Birthday count
8 Jefferson's VP
9 Pacific marine mammal
10 Emotional shock
11 Mend
12 Got a top grade on 13 Small sleep: plateau
21 Smidgen
23 Spilled the beans
26 Florist props
27 Humorous incongruity
28 Transmits
29 Housetops
30 On one's toes
31 Clearly detailed
32 Supernatural
33 Silvery fish
36 White House nickname
39 Big celebration
40 Learn by heart
42 Dandelion e.g.
43 Bars in Belgravia
45 Andrew Jackson's bill
47 Mastiff, mammals
50 Guitar ridge
51 Bellow
52 Sushi oft
53 Roman 19A
54 Fuss (over)
55 Operator
56 In addition
57 Dry run
60 Make lace

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

UMass YOGA
In Boyden 10
Mon/Wed
6:00-7:15 pm Power Yoga
7:30-8:45 pm Yoga Basics
Tues/Thurs
5:30-7:15 pm Yoga Basics
7:30-8:45 pm Intermediate
9:00-9:15 pm Yoga Basics
Fall 2007
Sign Up Now!
Semester Packages:
1 class per week $85
2 classes per week $150
Campus Recreation
Boyden 215 413-545-0022
umassyoga.com

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"There is no blue without yellow and without orange."
-Vincent Van Gogh

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Find a sweet purple tanktop at salvation army. Note: all purple tanktops are sweet.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Start refering to money as "lettuce" but do not eat it or your heart will probably stop.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The connection between pornography and exercise videos is unmistakable.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Behold, the power of italics. Use this to your advantage and the world is yours.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your salvation lies in learning how to ride a unicycle while juggling prosthetic limbs.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Quick look up! Ah shucks, you just missed your soul mate. Better luck next time.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
This weekend you will be a scavenging seagull perpetually prowling for treats.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Any man scratching his nose with his upper arm is really checking out his stink-pit.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Next time it's raining, lie down and let your dimples fill up and turn into puddles.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Pierce your lip and be a fishing rod to the ring. Tell people that you're a catch.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It is terrible to waste food but it's god-awful to vomit everywhere because you over-ate.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Make salami the official meat of this weekend.

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
STEPHEN LYNCH
CALVIN Theatre and Performing Arts Center
Tonight, September 14th 8:00 PM
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Pottery Class
Tuesday evenings 6:30-9:00pm. Sept. 18 - Nov. 6 for 8 weeks. Bring home self-created finished pieces, taught by Joy Friedman at the Leverett crafts and arts. To register call 413-548-9673. Email: Joyozuki@crocker.com Class fee: $250 - includes all materials

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S
5 spd, white, CD, sun-roof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE
4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Exp line cook, part-time, nights and weekends, great training program and starting wage. Apply at Eastside Grill, 19 Strong Ave., N'ton or email info@eastsidegrill.com

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply DP Dough Downtown, Amherst

Rent us your Ears!
Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

STAGE HANDS WANTED AT FINE ARTS CENTER. $7.50 / HR. VARIABLE SCHEDULE – WEEK DAY AVAILABILITY PREFERRED 9-NOON, 1PM-5. APPLICATIONS AT PRODUCTION SERVICES RM 146 F.A.C.

EMPLOYMENT

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com. Contact us through site.

SERVICES

Artisan Editing, an academic editing service, solely focusing on the dissertation/thesis. Contact, artisanediting@aol.com for information and rates.

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TAG SALE

Furniture, Furniture, Furniture, Rugs. 93 Fearing Street Saturday the 15th and Sunday the 16th 9-5

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

Collegian Marketplace. Reach 20,000 UMass students daily. 545-3500

SEP 17 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rudd on horizon

UMass to conclude six-game road trip vs. Siena and Harvard

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team's six-game road trip comes to an end this weekend. The Minutemen head to Siena today for a game with the Saints before a matchup with No. 15 Harvard on Sunday in Cambridge.

After the first four games of the 2007 regular season, the Minutemen (2-2-0) don't know exactly where they stand as a team. At times, they've demonstrated the dangerous offense they hoped to boast after struggling last season. But still haven't found anything resembling consistency on attack.

UMass enters today's game with Siena also looking for that same consistency on the defensive side of the ball. In three of their four games thus far, the Minutemen played sound defense for most of the game only to fall victim to a counterattack or a hard-luck goal. Against Maine, the Minutemen dominated possession only to allow a goal in overtime when the Black Bears quickly turned around a UMass scoring chance. A similar circumstance gave Dartmouth a tie late in the second match of the season.

Preventing teams from reversing the field on his team is something UMass coach Sam Koch preached in the team's workouts this week. Siena (0-2-1) plays a very aggressive defensive style and doesn't focus too much on forcing its offensive will on opponents. This bears a strong resemblance to the strategy Maine employed against the Minutemen.

UMass is a more gifted team than Siena, but the Saints are not going to let the Minutemen walk all over them. In their most recent game, the Saints forced a draw with another Atlantic 10 team in St. Bonaventure. Leading scorer Ross Cardinell saved the Saints with a 20-yard strike in the 90th minute.

Cardinell stands as the only consistent offensive threat for the Saints. His goal was the only tally of the year for Siena; Buffalo shut them out and Villanova scored an own goal in its 2-1 defeat of Siena.

Preventing the counterattack is something Koch preached to his team during this week's workouts, but it was not the only thing.

"We've got to do a better job of playing the whole goal, every game," Koch said. "We didn't do that

See M. SOCCER on page 6

Junior midfielder Tony Bassett and the Minutemen conclude their six-game road trip this weekend with games against Siena and Harvard. UMass is 2-2 so far this season.

UM hits road again, surface will be a factor

Koch, Minutemen still yet to play home game in 2007

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

In every sport, home-field advantage gives a team a boost over its competition. In addition to the elimination of travel, the home team can perform in front of its fans in the familiarity of its own facility.

Though it may not seem that way right now, Rudd Field is the home venue for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. The Minutemen have not played a regular season game in Amherst this season, as they are in the midst of a six-game road trip to begin 2007.

But the team still appreciates the value of playing matches at home.

"It's nice not having to drive three, four hours to a game and getting your legs stiff," junior midfielder Doug Rappaport said. "It's definitely nice before the game being in your own locker room."

As far as the field itself is concerned, the team doesn't spend much time on Rudd unless they are preparing for an eminent home game. With this current road trip, the team hasn't spent much time on its own surface.

"I think we've only practiced on Rudd once over the past two, three weeks," Rappaport said. "During the week of a home game, we usually practice on Rudd Field two or three times."

Instead, the team conducts most of its practices on the lower Boyden fields – across the street from their usual home.

But for UMass, one of the least noticeable advantages to playing at home is the familiarity with the turf. In a sport where judging the ball's bounce off the playing surface is crucial to a team's success, details like grass length become important.

The team's ability to adapt to a unique surface will be tested today as UM faces Siena on the road. In past years, the length of the grass on the team's field has been longer than what the Minutemen typically experience.

Rappaport believes this field condition would hurt the Minutemen by allowing the Saints to play a slower game – a factor that favors their style of play.

"It slows everything down and you obviously can't play as fast,"

See SURFACE on page 6

On this date in UMass History

On Sept. 15, 1973 – the date of tomorrow's football game against Towson – the Massachusetts football team defeated Villanova, 21-20, in its first-ever meeting with the Wildcats. The victory marked the 300th of the program's history. That Minuteman squad was led by quarterback Peil Pennington.

Current UMass quarterback Liam Coen moved into third place on the career touchdown passes list Saturday against Delaware, adding four more scores to his career total, now at 42. The man he passed on his way to third all-time at UMass is ... Pennington, who threw 38 touchdowns from 1971-1973.

Rudy in search of No. 301

After lengthy layoff, Nunes and Co. take on Hartford

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

After a washout in Albany, the Massachusetts women's soccer team will host Hartford on Sunday. The Minutewomen have not played since last Friday's historic victory over Iona in which UMass coach Jim Rudy earned his 300th win.

Hartford (0-1-2) has not finished a game by the end of regulation this season. In three games so far, each has gone to overtime or double overtime. The Hawks are coming off a 1-0 loss to Cornell. Before the Hawks come to UMass (2-0-1) they will travel to Providence on Friday.

The cancellation might have been a blessing for the team, as it will get midfielder Christina Nunes back in limited action. Rudy said she was not ready for the game against Albany, but she will come off the bench this Sunday. Nunes will likely play about 15-20 minutes.

"I will probably go into the midfield because coach does not really like to switch up our backs that much," Nunes said. "It's a pretty tough position, and you're always running."

Nunes injured her medial collateral ligament during the preseason and is ready to come back after three weeks of recovery. In the first exhibition game against Siena, Nunes went in for a hard slide tackle and sprained her MCL.

"I've been training since Sunday. I'm trying to get back into things, trying to get fit again," Nunes said.

After practice she had a large ice pack wrapped around her leg and will have to wear a brace during the game. The brace is not as large as senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker's brace – Walker tore her ACL last season – but Nunes has more mobility in hers. She said she's getting used to wearing a brace, as she has been practicing with it for the past three weeks.

"It's part of me now, I just have to live with it," she said.

It will be almost 10 days between games for the Minutewomen. However they remember what mistakes they need to clear up in the next game. Rudy would like the Maroon and White to convert on more goals.

"I'd like us to get on the end of a lot more of our final passes, whether they'd be a through ball or a cross or a flank," Rudy said. "If you get there, you want to arrive and get something finished and all that good work for not eventually grinds you down."

On the defensive side of the ball, Rudy has been satisfied with the performance so far. The goalkeeper duo of Walker and sophomore Lauren Luckey have combined for a .920 save percentage and are letting up less than a goal per game. With the loss of senior Tina Rodriguez to injury and graduate Stephanie Barrett, the defense is less vocal than Rudy would want it to be.

"We're a little faster, but we're

See W. SOCCER on page 6

Vanessa Patry and the Minutewomen play their first game in 10 days on Sunday against Hartford at Rudd Field.

Minutewomen look to end struggles

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team will try and snap its three-game losing streak today when it travels to Loudonville, N.Y., to face Siena at 1 p.m.

After beginning the season 3-1, the Minutewomen (3-4) have lost close games to Vermont, New Hampshire, and Boston University.

If there's a time for the Maroon and White to rebound, it's against Siena (11-3). After finishing 2-12 last season, the woeful Saints are winless in their three games this season. The losses include blow-outs at the hands of Holy Cross (7-1) and Villanova (10-0).

This matchup will be the first time Siena plays on its home turf, while the Minutewomen's only victory on the road came against Harvard back on Sept. 2.

There is some history between these two teams. UMass defeated Siena, 4-0, in Amherst last year behind current senior captain Erin O'Brien's hat trick. The loss dropped Siena to 0-6.

Siena had six of its players named to the 2006-07 Northeast Conference Academic Honor Roll, the highlight of a forgettable season. In an attempt to improve the program, the Saints hired UMass alumnus Bill Davidson. The results have been less than stellar thus far, but Davidson is bound to want his team to win the first home game of the season against his alma mater.

Senior forward Tracy Baldwin's resume last year included five goals and two game-winners, but has yet to find the back of the net this season. In fact, the Saints have only seen goals from Hannah LeStrange and Kristin McGorty in 2007.

Though their first two games of the season were completely out of reach, the Saints did show improvement in their most recent showdown against Rhode Island. The Rams are 4-1 on the season, but Siena was able to put up a fight behind Renee Clavette's strong goalkeeping. The junior, who also plays softball, made 11 saves in the 3-1 loss.

The Minutewomen should have better luck penetrating the Siena defense than they have against their recent opponents. The Saints have allowed 20 goals this season, and this could provide a good opportunity for the Maroon and White to break out of its recent scoring drought.

Cher King looks to lead UMass in the right direction. The sophomore midfielder leads the team with five goals on the season, but no Minutewoman has been able to beat the opposition's goalkeeper the past two games.

UMass coach Justine Sowry has been stressing all year that the team must focus on converting its opportunities in the circle. The offense has scored only one goal in the last three games since exploding for five against Harvard.

They also have to do a better job on penalty corners. Against RI, they gave up seven opportunities, while winning four. The Minutewomen have yet to convert a penalty corner into a goal in 2007, but the Saints have given up an astonishing 35 penalty corners in just three games this year.

The UMass defense has been successful all year – never allowing more than three goals in a game and averaging just one goal against per contest. The team has yet to win a game this year when allowing a goal.

The Maroon and White goalkeeping has been fairly consistent all season. Becky Letourneau has started four of the seven games, and despite her 1-3 record, she holds a save percentage of .700 on the season.

Sophomore forward Christine Rodgers and the Minutewomen have dropped three consecutive decisions, including two shutouts.

Sophomore Sarah Williams, who started 15 games for former coach Patty Shea last season, has started three games this season. She holds a 2-1 record with an .867 save percentage.

The Minutewomen begin conference play in less than a month, and the offense will need to hit its stride in the next few weeks if the team hopes to advance deep into the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

UMASS DODGES TIGERS' POUNCE PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 71 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2007

UMass updates tailgating policy

By Eden Unver
Collegian Staff

As of Aug. 17, the University of Massachusetts tailgating policy has been updated. According to the UMass Athletics Web site, the policy entails eight rules and regulations including limitations on the tailgating duration periods and what is acceptable and unacceptable at a University event.

The Web site outlines the first three hours before the game and 90 minutes after the game as the only acceptable times to tailgate. During the game, no tailgating is permitted, and any fan outside the stadium at the beginning of the game will be asked to leave.

The policy also specifies that there are to be no drinking games or kegs while tailgating, and that drinks can only be in cans or cups. Additionally, everyone is asked to be clean and respectful.

According to UMass athletic director John McCutcheon, the increase in tailgating by UMass fans in general may have been caused by the success of the football team in recent years. This is one factor leading to the need for a change in past tailgating policies.

Also, McCutcheon explains, the reason for these new policy changes has partly stemmed from the UMass vs. University of New Hampshire quarterfinal playoff game in December 2006. McCutcheon notes such problems as "excessive drinking and poor decision making," which he attributes, in part, to the length of the game.

The game ended in a win for the UMass Minutemen with a score of 24-17, propelling the team on its way to the NCAA Semifinals. According to the UMass athletics Web site, the crowd was the ninth largest in UMass history. It was a sold out game of 17,000 fans.

McCutcheon would like to stress, however, that "99 percent of the time our fans are tremendous."

The athletic department chose to take the new policy changes as a preemptive step to avoid future incidences. UMass has always had guidelines about tailgating, explains McCutcheon, but the athletic department is being "proactive in setting up these guidelines."

More UMass students are becoming aware of the new policy as the school year begins. The University is attempting to inform students about this policy in a vari-

See TAILGATING on page 2

The University of Massachusetts's decision to update its tailgating policy also coincides with the start of the 2007-08 football season: when tailgating before a game is popular to both students and family.

Massachusetts wide receiver Rasheed Rancher runs into the end zone after a spectacular 35-yard touchdown reception from quarterback Liam Coen in the second quarter. The Minutemen upended the Towson Tigers, 36-13, on Saturday in front of 8,218 fans at McGuirk Stadium. See page 10 for more coverage.

APD to host child safety day

By Sruthi Valluru
Collegian Staff Reporter

The Amherst Police Department will host a Child Safety Day to warn parents and communities about the large number of child abductions in the United States.

The event will be hosted on Sept. 22 by APD, in partnership with the Amherst Fire Department, UPS Store and The Molly Bish Foundation, and will be held at the UPS Store from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Child Safety Day is an annual feature in Amherst and has been organized by APD for many years.

Attending families will receive a series of safety tips and training free of charge.

"Keeping children safe is a priority and concern for the Amherst Police Department," said Lt. Jennifer Gundersen, one of the leaders of the project.

While Child Safety Day has been in place since before Molly Bish's abduction from Warren, Mass. in June 2000, the tragedy added even more importance to the event.

"That incident was close to home," Gundersen explained. "It's the worst thing that could happen to a family."

Attending parents at Child Safety Day will receive a Child Identification Kit, which includes a photograph of the child and the child's fingerprints. Free child passenger safety seat inspections are also part of the day's agenda.

In previous years, approximately 150 people have attended, but Gundersen expects more this year.

"Parents are very appreciative of the service and the information they are able to get from the event because it means a lot, child safety," she said. "We're just doing our part to help them."

Sruthi Valluru is a Collegian correspondent. She can be reached at svalluru@student.umass.edu.

UM professor and graduate students develop ceramic films

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

A cheap and efficient way of making ceramic films has earned a patent for a team of chemists at the University of Massachusetts.

Professor Patricia Iannconi and her team of two graduate students, Michael Pilcher and Scott Jorns, developed a process that results in defect-free ceramic films, the smoothest and most continuous ever reported from polymer precursors.

Using new polymers called polysilynes, Iannconi and her team were able to create a ceramic that can be easily shaped into usable commercial products. The polymer-based ceramic is more flexible than the traditionally used silicon carbide.

Iannconi synthesized the ceramic using a silicon backbone with carbon-based side chains. Heated under an inert gas, like argon, the carbon atoms from the side chain react with the silicon backbone, resulting in a hard and solid ceramic film.

While using polymers instead of silicon in the ceramic making process has been studied by researchers for several decades, no working method suitable for electronic uses had been developed. Iannconi's newly patented process, based on the research done on polymer precursors, is extremely efficient. The method allows for no loss in material as the end product contains exactly the same quantity of ingredients as used in the beginning.

The industrial polymer ceramic films are used in semiconductors, industrial abrasives and diamond substitutes. Iannconi's method is the only technique that produces ceramic with an identical chemical composition to silicon carbide.

Iannconi's current research is emphasizing the synthesis of inorganic backbone network properties with optical or electronic properties, surface imaging of monolayers of ceramic surfaces, synthesis analogues of biomineralization and designing tailored organometallic catalysts for the polymerization of electron-deficient olefins for new polymers and copolymers, according to the Web site of the department of chemistry.

Derrick Perkins is a Collegian staff member. He can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

UMass chemistry professor Patricia Iannconi and her team of two graduate students created ceramic films using polysilynes.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
130 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 • Fax 413-545-3693 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief: Nicholas Reisinger
Managing Editor: Kara Hunter
Business Manager: Dan Ester
Production Manager: Chris Martin
Night Supervisor: Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager: Kari Bender
Art & Layout Editor: Tom McCall
Copy Editor: Adam Scaglia
Editorial Editor: Sean Sullivan
News Editor: Dennis Perkins
Sports Editor: Jeremy Rice
Arts Beyond Campus Editor: Eric Ironwood
Assistant Operations: Linda Wallace
Assistant Advertising: Emily Nichols
Asst. Arts & Layout: Ilya Dmokhovsky
Asst. Arts & Layout: Brian McDonald
Asst. Arts & Layout: Serena Reilly
Asst. Editorial: Justin Martinez
Asst. Editorial: Melissa Hoerner
Assistant News: Will McKeithen
Assistant News: Holly Wagner
Assistant Sports: Michael King
Assistant Sports: Joe Mirsky
Assistant Sports: Eli Rosenzweig
Web Editor: James Hair
Photo Editor: Evan Trenda

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is a student-managed, student-produced daily newspaper at the University of Massachusetts. Founded in 1890, the Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the fall and spring semesters, except during vacations and examination periods. The Collegian is published Tuesday through Saturday during the summer. Subscriptions are $150 per semester. Postage paid at Amherst, MA 01004. USPS 324-320.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

O.J. Simpson faces charges for stealing own memorabilia

By Ryan Nakashima

LAS VEGAS — O.J. Simpson was arrested Tuesday and faces multiple felony charges in an alleged armed robbery of collectibles stolen during the former football great's controversial acquittal trial.

Simpson and his associate, Clarence "C.J." Stewart, were arrested shortly after 1 p.m. Tuesday, Metropolitan Police Department Sheriff Doug Gillespie said.

Prosecutors were planning to charge Simpson with two counts of robbery, multiple counts of kidnapping, one count of burglary with a deadly weapon, two counts of assault with a deadly weapon and one count of conspiracy, District Attorney David Roger said.

A collector was the most serious charge, however, with one of a deadly weapon carrying a sentence of three to 15 years for each count, he said.

"He is facing a lot of time," Roger said.

Simpson was being held at Las Vegas police offices pending the arrival of his lawyer, who was expected later Tuesday, Dillon said.

"He was very cooperative there were no issues," Dillon said.

At least one other person has been arrested and police said Sunday that as many as six people could be arrested in connection with the alleged armed robbery that occurred in a room inside the Palace Station casino-hotel on Thursday.

Simpson and his associate and other people with him were removing items that belonged to him. Simpson had said there were no guns involved and that he went to the room at the casino only to get stolen memorabilia that included his Hall of Fame certificate and a picture of the running back with J. Edgar Hoover.

Simpson's lawyer, Yale Galanter, told the Associated Press on Saturday that he did not call the police to help reclaim the items because he has found the police unresponsive to him ever since his ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and her friend, Ron Goldman, were killed in 1994.

"The police since my trouble have not worked out for me," he said, noting that whenever he has called the police, "It just becomes a story about O.J."

O.J. Simpson was arrested yesterday for attempting to steal his own athletic memorabilia. Simpson faces multiple felony charges.

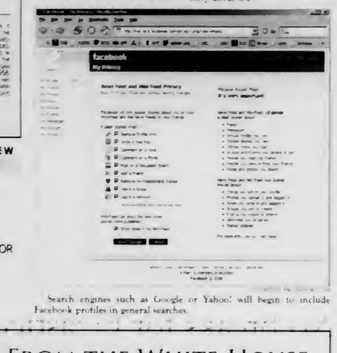
The Heisman Trophy winner, ex-NFL star and actor once made Miami and has been a tabloid staple since his glove-and Goldman were killed in 1994. Simpson was acquitted of murder charges but a jury later held him liable for the killings in a wrongful-death lawsuit.

Police said that firearms and other evidence were seized at a private residence early Sunday.

Walter Alexander, 46, of Arizona, was arrested Saturday night on two counts each of robbery with a deadly weapon, conspiracy to commit robbery and burglary with a deadly weapon.

He was released without bail on Saturday night, Dillon said.

Besides the two firearms, police said they seized items of sports memorabilia early Sunday morning, including some photographs of Joe DiMaggio.



"It was evidence of a crime that was committed," Norton said.

And I believe we recovered some clothing that the individuals were wearing in the commission of the robbery."

Simpson said another house guest from Ricco called him several weeks ago to say some collectors were selling some of his items. Riccio set up a meeting with collectors under the guise that he had a private collector interested in buying Simpson's items.

Simpson said he was accompanied by several men he met at a wedding cocktail party, and they took the collectibles.

Alfred Beardsley, one of the sports memorabilia collectors involved in the alleged robbery, has said he wants the case dropped and that he's "on O.J.'s side."

Search engines such as Google or Yahoo! will begin to include Facebook profiles in general searches.

Search engines now include Facebook usernames and profiles

By C.J. Lemaster

MISSISSIPPI STATE, Miss. — Popular student networking site Facebook implemented a new feature recently that would potentially allow anyone to view member names and profile photos without actually having a Facebook account.

Furthermore, these limited public profiles will also begin appearing on popular search engines like Google and Yahoo! as early as next week.

Before the change, one could only view profiles if he or she had an account, and even then the information shown was very limited.

This latest change comes exactly one year after employees greeted the highly controversial News Feed feature, which tracks every user's profile changes and wall posts.

Site engineer Phil Fung said the quantity of information presented in the new search feature shouldn't be an issue.

"The public search listing contains less information than someone could find right after signing up anyway, so we're not exposing any new information," Fung said in a blog post on the site.

Mississippi State University stimulator science major Andy Lindeman said Facebook users shouldn't complain about the new feature if they already have a profile.

"If you're on Facebook, you're putting yourself out there," Lindeman said. "It's an easy option to turn off."

Similar public relations major Meghan McGuire agrees. "The Web site's terms of use says they can do anything they want to with the information you put up there," McGuire said.

Many users will sign up fast to read the fine print and as a result would have inadvertently agreed to those policies without actually participating.

In the official terms of use, it states: "By posting User Content to any part of the Site, you automatically grant ... to the Company an irrevocable, perpetual, non-exclusive, transferable, fully paid, worldwide license (with the right to sublicense) to use, copy, publicly perform, publicly display, reformat, translate, excerpt (in whole or in part) and distribute such User Content for any purpose on or in connection with the Site or the promotion thereof, to prepare derivative works of, or incorporate into other works, such User Content, and to grant and authorize sublicenses of the foregoing."

Though the News Feed and public profile listings can be disabled based on the user's privacy settings, some students are troubled that the information could be available to non-Facebook users.

"As long as it's just my name and my photo, it doesn't really bother me," biomedical engineering major Leigh Booth said. "If they could just search and actually see my [full] profile, I wouldn't be as comfortable with that."

Though some students have expressed concerns, the feature seems to be embraced much more easily than the News Feed feature, where one Facebook group titled "Students Against News Feed" gained more than 750,000 members.

So far, only a handful of groups have banded together to protest the new feature, the largest of which, "Do Not Reveal Any Info to the Public (Official Facebook Petition)," has more than 300 members.

Fung said users can easily restrict access simply by accessing the Search Privacy page within the Web site.

"You will only appear in searches outside Facebook when your search settings are set to 'Everyone,'" he said.

UMass athletics changes tailgating for safety of public

TAILGATING from page 1

ets out ways.

"I read about them in an e-mail I got," said UMass senior Scott Grantmemann, "and they had signs posted at [Saturday's] game."

There were many police officers stationed at Saturday's football game and they were enforcing the new policy as students tailgated despite the rain.

"We definitely saw a lot of police officers, but they were really friendly and respected us and we respected them," said Grantmemann.

Not all students, however, are as pleased with the new policy.

"The tradition of UMass football revolves around tailgating and, as a student, I feel as if this tradition should not be limited," said UMass student Kyle Bernier. "The entire UMass population should support their team by participating in this awesome event."

According to McCutcheon, the athletic department hopes the new policy change will help to create a safer environment in which to tailgate in the new season ahead.

Eden Univer can be reached at eunivier@student.umass.edu.

Visit us online @ www.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.com

RELAX?
FORGET IT
PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
Full Fitness Facilities • Cybex • Free Weights • Cardio Machines • Studio • Pilates • Cyber Cycling • Basketball
Indoor Tennis courts • Indoor Cycling • Yoga • Pilates • Full sized indoor turf with lacrosse goals
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL
AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
Locally owned and operated
INFO RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

Pant trend may result in prison

By Matthew Verbenitz
Associated Press

It's a fashion that started in prison, and now the saggy pants craze has come full circle — low-slung street strutting in some cities may soon mean runners with the law, including a stint in jail.

Proposals to ban saggy pants are starting to ride up in several places. At the extreme end, wearing pants low enough to show boxers or bare buttocks in one small Louisiana town means six months in jail and a $500 fine. A crackdown also is being pushed in Atlanta. And in Detroit, getting caught with your pants down may soon result in not only a fine, but a city worker assessing where your life is headed.

"Are they employed? Do they have a high school diploma? It's a wonderful way to redirect at that point," said Trenton Councilwoman Annette Lartigue, who is drafting a law to outlaw saggy pants. "The message is clear. We don't want to see your backside."

The bare-your-britches fashion is believed to have started in prisons, where inmates aren't given belts with their baggy uniform pants to prevent hangings and beatings. By the late 80s, the trend had made it to gangster rap videos, then went on to skateboarders in the suburbs and high school hallways.

"For young people, it's a form of rebellion and identity," Adrian "Yaya A.D." Harris, 43, a founding member of the Bronx's legendary rap group Cold Crush Brothers. "The young people think it's fashionable. They don't think it's negative."

But for those who want to stop them see it as an indecent, sloppy trend that is a bad influence on children.

"It has the potential to catch on with elementary school kids, and we want to stop it before it gets there," said C. Virginia Fields, an Atlanta councilman. "Teachers have raised questions about what a distraction it is."

SEP 17 2007

FROM THE WHITE HOUSE TO UMASS
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007
5 – 9 PM · BERKSHIRE DC
AMERICA'S FORMER EXECUTIVE CHEF TO THE WHITE HOUSE, WALTER SCHEIB, WILL VISIT UMASS TO PREPARE FAVORITE FOOD OF THE FIRST FAMILIES.
FIRST COURSE
Corn and Scallop Chowder (Bush Family)
Sweet Potato Soup with Curried Cream (Clinton Clinton)
SECOND COURSE
Fiesta Jalapeno Lemon BBQ Chicken (West Luzo BBQ)
Salmon over Sauteed Pears with Acorn Squash Sauce
STATE DINNER
B.B.Q Baby Back Ribs with Tex Cracker Dipping Sauce (Bill Clinton)
Penne Pasta Salad with Broccoli, Tomatoes and Lemon Dressing (Bush Twins)
DESSERT
Quinoa Smith, Cranberry and Goat cheese Tart (Holidae Favorite)
Pear and Ginger Bread (White House Favorite)

"PRIVATE BRIEFING" IN THE BERKSHIRE ROOM FROM 7:00 - 7:45 PM
WALTER SCHEIB WILL SHARE ANECDOTES FROM HIS ELEVEN YEARS AT THE WHITE HOUSE FROM A UNIQUE VANTAGE POINT: THE KITCHEN.
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC $11.00 CASH AND FREE TO STUDENTS ON MEAL PLAN
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
2003 Iron Chef Winner

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" – Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Your first First Week

Hannah Nelson

There are a lot of things that can go wrong during your first week on campus. You name it, and it's happened to someone at some time. But I am not just talking about buying the wrong sized sheets or oversleeping. I'm going to go out on a limb here by making some blanket statements about the most common things I was privy to watch – including some of which I am sorry to admit my guilt.

A rule most commonly known as Murphy's Law states that what can go wrong will go wrong. When you apply this principle to a freshman's first week on their college campus, you've got a pretty convincing argument for its theory.

Let's start with move-in day. You're excited, and you've got 20 minutes to unload all your stuff onto the lawn. You find yourself wondering if you really needed that extra winter coat now rather than later, as it is 80 degrees out. Long story short, you're suddenly looking at your personal belongings strewn across the perfectly sun-illuminated sidewalk on Sunset Avenue: not the most private place in the world. Apparently you didn't tape that box up well enough, because your life is now on display for all of your future neighbors to see. If you are really lucky, then you are stationed conveniently close to a nice bit of dog feces.

Dining Commons – those two words can strike fear into any seasoned klutz. Slippery trays match with a ready audience. Scene: lunch. You have a salad on your tray. You are hungry. You are in the process of getting pasta. The tray slips for no apparent reason. Salad dressing is flung across the front of my, er, your favorite pants and scattered on the floor with a loud clatter. Red faced, you are forced to steady your tray and search frantically for napkins. A kind stranger offers his help and says it's his good deed for the day, because he doesn't plan on there being another. You just thank God he hadn't saved some kid from a burning building that morning.

Now, if you are the sort of person who is always organized and goes over plans again and again in your head and the word "fake" might as well be a curse, then this story is for you. The fact that you wrote down your schedule wrong was something that normally would have been akin to the apocalypse. But you find yourself instead sitting outside Bartlett Hall at 8 Friday morning laughing at an empty quad.

Do not take the bus during your first week as a freshman. You will read the schedule wrong and you will end up in Orchard Hill instead of at Target.

When it comes to textbooks, there's the smallest chance that your total will be under $100. The rest of you basically need to take out another loan, pronto. On top of your mini-bankruptcy, you buy a damaged book for full price due to your impatience to exit the crowded Textbook Annex. But hey, it was only $16. Or perhaps you bought the wrong textbook and now have to make the journey back to the Annex. Better yet, you have dropped a class or two and have to go through the whole thing over again.

That reminds me: do not take the bus during your first week as a freshman. You will read the schedule wrong and you will end up in Orchard Hill instead of at Target.

Another popular habit is forgetfulness regarding keys. The easy way to avoid this is to just clip them to your belt loop. Then you will be the one whose job it is to let people into their hallways who have otherwise been stuck loitering around the security desk in the middle of the day. (Though I honestly don't know how that's going to help them if they can't get into their room either.)

Now for the biggest blunder of all: the UCard. You learn quite quickly that without it you might as well have sold your soul, because that thing is your livelihood. The UCard is your food, your shelter, and your secure form of identification. Lose the UCard and you've pretty much ensured yourself one heck of a day.

Then there are the small things, like forgetting your towel every time you go to take a shower. Those habits will be sticking around for a while, it is just part of dorm living. But the anomalies of first week are just too poignant to ever live down. They are what you would call defining moments. Just hope that one didn't include a garden rake, a puddle and a jumpsuit.

Disclaimer: I reserve the right to at anytime deny the personal relativity of any of the aforementioned events.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

'Man-flicks' tasteless, low

Katy Bruck

When the trailer for "Superbad" was first shown in theaters, the same sleeper-type that buzzed around "The Forty Year Old Virgin" and "Knocked Up" immediately began to surround it. Judd Apatow, the producer of all three movies, has become notorious for his honest, unselfconscious comedies that capture the complexities of human sexual interactions. Sex is awkward and stilted and often funny, and though this is hardly a new idea, Apatow and his troupe of bumblers (see Seth Rogan, who co-wrote this film and starred as the affable, sloppy stoner Ben Stone in "Knocked Up") have brought the genre from its heyday in the '70s into the new millennium.

Needless to say, I had high expectations for "Superbad." Though fore-warned by the booty-shaking high school girls in the trailer that the film may end up being what a friend of mine coined a "man flick," I felt I was prepared. There were certainly large swaths of testosterone running through Apatow's previous two movies, but I was still able to enjoy and relate to the humor. After all, I loved "Fast Times at Ridgemont High," and that movie was totally raunchy.

Suddenly I found myself trapped in a movie that encompassed some of my worst conceptions of the male species.

"Superbad," however, was way more Porky's than "Fast Times." Suddenly, I found myself trapped in a movie that encompassed some of my worst conceptions of the male species – slovenly schemes to score and some of the most foul language I've ever heard outside of late night cable television. Some of Seth's questionable linguistic choices detracted from what, for me, were the funnier parts. In fact, I think the only scene in the movie at which more girls than guys were laughing was the bit when Seth, the potty-mouthed (and I hate to say, dominant) protagonist is dancing with a relatively attractive and apparently very drunk female. After a few minutes of awkward grinding and flailing, the girl departs, and a few seconds later Seth realizes he has menstrual blood on his pants. While I was laughing uproariously at the terrible irony of it all, my male companions were cringing and averting their eyes.

It's easy to see the theme of the humor in this movie. Whereas "Knocked Up" and "The Forty Year Old Virgin" were explorations of how adult men and women try and compensate for their inherent differences (often unsuccessfully), Superbad was, to use the words of one reviewer, "a loving ode to the penis." Now, don't get me wrong – I understand that this movie was not in the least meant to attract or cater to a female audience. That much is clear in the baffled and sometimes belligerent reactions the movie gets from women. Unfortunately, even the raunchy trailers didn't convince us that the sweetness in Apatow's last two comedy blockbusters would be overshadowed by the staunch male reality in "Superbad."

Thinking about it a little more deeply, however, I realize that perhaps a female audience was sort of hoodwinked into enjoying Apatow's other films. The idea that any human being can live for 40 years with as limited a sexual objective as Andy in "FYOV" is, though perhaps sweetly appealing to some women, pretty much universally unrealistic. And as for Ben Stone in "Knocked Up," he represents the ever-elusive ideal of a guy that "fixes himself," morphing from irresponsible if good-natured recreational drug user to willing father. While neither of these situations are so outrageous that it's impossible that they could even happen, they're certainly not the norm, which is what makes them funny. But both these adult male characters are endearing because they are not just vehicles for their genitalia, and this, of course, is appealing to a female audience. The high school boys of "Superbad" (particularly Seth), however, are just that – a little less fleshed out, a little more naive, and in this film, definitively vehicular in nature.

Oddly, until very recently, I thought for sure that Superbad really was a caricature of adolescent male behavior, and there was no way that my male friends in high school talked like this when I wasn't around. But, after spending a good many hours as the only girl among a group of five guys, I find that I am a little deluded in this fact. Watching a friend of mine, who I know to be a sweet, funny, genuinely good person, lean out a car window and scream "I wanna see some boobies!" made me realize that sexual compulsions don't necessarily make the man. I'm sure the guy I'm talking about will one day be a well-balanced human being, but for the time being, I'm resigned to laughing awkwardly at endless jokes revolving around the human anatomy and completely ludicrous stories of sexual malfeasance. I can appreciate their humor when I'm around to witness it, so maybe if I go back and watch "Superbad" and superimpose the faces of my friends, who I know outside of the context of one night of drunken chaos, it will offend my feminine sensibilities less, and remind me more of how difficult and bittersweet growing up and into yourself can be.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

Vindication for veterans

Brad DeFlumeri

My, how things have changed. In May I used this space to openly question whether or not the school was doing enough to support veterans' and empower veterans. My conclusion – that the school was, in fact, not doing enough for veterans was based on my conversations with numerous former servicemen who seemed to share a similar story of dissatisfaction and disenchantment with the bureaucratic atrocity known as the Veterans Assistance office, run by Eileen Stewart, assistant dean of students. After writing the article and receiving a multitude of e-mails from UMass alumni who are also veterans, I knew the problem was even more pervasive and institutionalized than I had first discovered.

The general sense was strikingly clear among veterans and professors concerned with the treatment of veterans on campus: Dean Stewart – and her unwillingness to go to bat for veterans and empower them as a vocal and viable force on campus in the same way minority groups have been empowered – was unmistakably part of the problem of veterans being disenfranchised and not part of the solution. Indeed, the consensus went, Dean Stewart regularly admits to the fact she is so overburdened with her myriad of other tasks, responsibilities and assignments that she cannot give adequate attention to the increasingly important cause of supporting veterans, with which she is charged. The question then became: why won't she remove herself from the position and allow for a full-time professional fully and specifically devoted to servicing veterans to take over the job which she is too busy to properly do?

Dean Stewart regularly admits to the fact she is so overburdened with her myriad of other tasks that she cannot give adequate attention to the cause of supporting veterans.

Well, there is no need to wonder aloud anymore about the direction this issue or Eileen Stewart's job titles will take. Thanks to the impressive resilience and tireless efforts of Veterans and Service Members Association Vice President Jon Zagami – who, along with the recently graduated Jon Schnauber, founded VASMA three years ago – there will soon be established a specific Center for Student Development-run office devoted to veterans support. In all likelihood, this office will be housed in the Student Union – the ideal place for the assembly of like-minded and similarly inclined students to gather and exchange ideas, stories and opinions, and to make friends. Ironically, this is the same place where the Student Government Association rules with an iron fist and has for so long fought tooth and nail to not allow veterans' issues to become a real priority or topic of conversation at the University.

Thankfully, this new office will be run by a full-time professional entirely devoted to the job of supporting veterans and to that job only. As a veteran on campus who knows the alienation and disenfranchisement that former servicemen routinely experience – and that the school has for so long tacitly endorsed by failing to make reach and reconciliation by the University was inspired by the devotion and commitment of a student-leader, an army reservist who was so fed up with the bureaucratic hassle that veterans inevitably face at UMass that he couldn't take it anymore and wouldn't take no for an answer. Jon Zagami is not being paid nearly six figures by the University, yet his managed to cultivate and arouse the mobilization of veterans and reinvigorate the understanding that the school has a compelling obligation to take care of its American heroes in at least the same way that it takes care of its minority groups and other numerically unimposing groups. Dishearteningly, it was Dean Stewart who, for so long, made so much money and carried the title of veterans liaison while simultaneously being widely viewed as the reason that veterans could not be more of a political force on campus. To Zagami's credit, this will no longer be the case, and veterans will now have a singular place in which they can learn about benefits, socialize and feel included by the community. And there is an entire generation of returning servicemen who may now choose to attend the state's finest public institution of higher education because the diligence of one relentless student appears to have won out over the territorial nature of yet another disinterested administrator.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

No breaks for breastfeeding

Thomas Sitzer

One would think that in today's America, a mother would be accommodated and cared for as much as all of our mothers loved and cared for us. But Sophie Currier was refused a 30-minute break from a nine-hour exam to breastfeed her child by the National Board of Medical Examiners, proctors to the MD-PhD licensing routine.

Currier is mother of a 22-month-old son and four-month-old daughter. This being her second testing, she feels the pressure to advance her career and raise her children in a healthy environment.

She also finds the 45-minute break already allotted to test takers to be substandard for her child's needs. "I can get away with pumping about every three hours," she said. Even Dr. Alison Stuebe of Brigham and Women's Hospital says, "Forty-five minutes is insufficient time for a nursing mother of a four-month-old to eat, drink, use the restroom and to fully and properly express breast milk using an electric pump two times over the course of eight hours."

But NBME spokeswoman Dr. Ruth Hoppe claims there have been no previous complaints from women feeding or pumping during the designated recesses. Interestingly, she went on to explain that more breaks time will "alter the performance of the examination." As far as I understood, the performance being tested was that of Currier, whose success is being threatened by the requirements of decency in motherhood. Surely the added pressure of a hungry baby in the back of her mind affects her performance on the examination.

Ironically, the Harvard Center for Cancer Prevention published an online article not only promoting the benefits of breastfeeding, but suggesting that it prevents cancer as well. "Compared to mothers who never breastfed, those who did so for a total of one year were 6 percent less likely to develop breast cancer, and those who did so for a total of two years were 11 percent less likely. Breastfeeding for longer yielded even larger benefits in terms of breast cancer," said the article. All this despite the common knowledge that a baby child is a delicate thing that requires unquestioned attention.

Infants seriously need the antibodies and natural vitamins that breast milk provides for them. Sophie Currier wants to treat the sick and needy, and if anything she displays a great sense of responsibility by establishing priorities in spite of this institutionalized oppression she is faced with.

A person has a priority to help another person (a child no less), but they are forced to neglect them on account of perfunctory policy.

Unfortunately, there is little legislation regarding pregnancies and breastfeeding, and the same goes for laws that protect mother's rights. Currier's petition filed to the Massachusetts Superior Court will hopefully resonate in the ears of bureaucrats. When judges make decisions like this, it begins to turn the gears of the great machine that are so often too rusty to move after years and years of issues being left alone in Congress or having been, in extreme cases, essentially paralyzed by bipartisan chess playing. But when respectable people take their case to a judge, people take notice.

In fact, Currier has fallen into ranks with Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney (D-N.Y.). She rallies for the Mother's Breastfeeding Promotion and Protection Act, which argues that breastfeeding has positive repercussions far beyond the ones that are immediately obvious. For example, breast milk – being the greatest source of nutrition for infants – will result in healthier babies, which, in turn, results in a plus for employers because it results in fewer employee absences due to infant sickness. The privacy and special time allotted to women in the workplace parallels the argument that Currier makes.

Currier was allowed to take shelter in another empty – but monitored – testing room, so even if she had notes on her infant earlier before the test, she'd surely have been caught. Frankly, it's situations like this that upset me: a person has a priority to help another person (a child no less), but they are forced to neglect them on account of perfunctory policy. Ben Franklin said, "Let all your things have their places; let each part of your business have its time." The needs of health and longevity have their place in time, but when they can't be appropriately attended to in a public institution, there is something inherently wrong with its systems.

Sophie Currier is a woman who already achieved a PhD in neuroscience, and takes great care of her children while pursuing her dream job. If there is a problem in 21st century America, it should not be that women with the added responsibility of motherhood fail to find great careers.

Thomas Sitzer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tsitzer@gmail.com.

WHAT'S YOUR OPINION!

LET EVERYONE KNOW BY WRITING FOR THE EDITORIAL OPINION SECTION

E-mail:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

SEP 17 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Louisiana bands to rock Northampton

Tab Benoit, president of New Orleans awareness organization, will headline show

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
Collegian Staff

Tab Benoit, southern Louisiana native, is more than just a hardcore blues artist. He uses the soulful music that has been a part of him for his whole life to open people's eyes to the unjust situation in New Orleans.

Born about 20 miles south of New Orleans, Benoit has been playing music for as long as he can remember. "I've been banging on drums since I was born," says Benoit in a Louisiana drawl.

A decade later, Benoit entered the world of blues. Earlier this year, that world led him to win Contemporary Male Blues Artist of the Year and the B.B. King Entertainer of the Year at the 2007 Blues Music Awards. His album "Brother to the Blues" was also recently honored with a 2007 Grammy nomination.

Benoit is a true musician, playing not only the drums, but the bass, piano, banjo and even the occasional accordion. But the instrument for which he is most renowned is the guitar. He has been compared to the likes of Albert King and Jimi Hendrix. While he does consider them to be influences, he has "tried not to directly copy them.

"I ... just do it my way and hope someone likes my way," said Benoit.

People do. Benoit plays 250 nights a year all across the country. The seemingly daunting number of shows, however, doesn't seem to faze him.

"I'm an artist," Benoit said. "I am artist, not a musician." Rarely practicing, but producing a stellar show almost nightly, he simply allows the music to come out, fresh and new each time.

"Each venue is different, each audience is different, each night is different, so ... I try to just take each venue as a canvas ... and my instruments and the guys in the band they're like the brushes, and the audience is like the colors ... you can dip the brush in each color and paint a new picture every night," he said.

The brushes accompanying Benoit are members of Louisiana's LeRoux, a well-established blues band, also from Louisiana. Benoit and LeRoux travel the country, creating their beautiful paintings, rarely resting more than a few nights in one place. And, of course, the thing these Louisiana men miss the most is their home state's food.

"You can't really get that anywhere else; we're really spoiled when it comes to that," he said.

Benoit cares about more than just food when it comes to Louisiana. Growing up, he was forced to watch the beloved wetlands of the Gulf Coast disappear. In 2005, he formed the Voice of the Wetlands, an organization that allows people to join together in an attempt to save the swamplands.

While working to discover how to fix the problem of the wetlands, Benoit attended various meetings — including FEMA meetings — only to discover a shocking truth.

"There was ... a real lack of talk about people at all," Benoit revealed, in regards to the plans that were put in place should New Orleans flood. "The way FEMA was going to handle New Orleans flooding ... was decided a long time before the storm." And there was a huge gap in these plans where rescue should have been. After observations done on a computer simulated hurricane, called Hurricane Pam, FEMA decided to save and protect oil refineries.

"They never once mentioned people ... they were acting like there were no people there," said Benoit.

VOW hosts a yearly blues festival and a golf tournament to raise money and awareness for the organization. Benoit, the president of VOW, also contributed to the IMAX documentary "Hurricane on the Bayou," which is now playing in IMAX theaters around the world. He has also recorded two collaboration CDs with other big names in blues to spread the word about the situation on the Gulf Coast. His dedication to his causes is apparent in all aspects of his life, however, is the grim and despairing tone of so many of these titles. Indeed, watching both "Rendition" and "In the Valley of Elah," you can sense the anti-war rage pouring off the screen. Even in something like "No Country for Old Men," the Coen brothers' extraordinary adaptation of Cormac McCarthy's crime thriller that takes place in Texas in 1980, the filmmakers seem to be making a very contemporary argument, namely, that American society has gone rotten to its core and lacks any sort of moral leadership.

So how will all of this seriousness play when these movies begin to hit theaters in the coming months? My guess is not very well. Take the case of "Redacted," which ends with a startling montage of real-life photographs from the war, of the horribly maimed bodies of Iraqi civilians, including many women and children. Of all the films I saw at the festival — including ones about abortion, pedophilia, serial killers and even teenage hermaphrodites — this was the one that made viewers most obviously uncomfortable. At the packed

See TORONTO on page 5

Benoit's music is politically active and voices the opinion of a man who has seen the wetlands of the Gulf Coast disappear. VOW, Voice of the Wetlands, looks to spread the word of this tragedy.

life, as he even gives impassioned speeches at his shows, stirring all audience members to indignation.

Tab Benoit has dedicated his life to the blues and to his home. Since childhood, the blues did something for Benoit that no other genre of music could.

"It could change the way you thought," he said, "when you find something that goes past your brain and straight to your heart and makes you feel something different, then I guess it wakes you up."

Blues is the music that will stay with someone forever. Once it has its hold, there's no going back.

"You're going to go through times," Benoit said, "where you just don't want to do this, and in the next sentence, there's nothing else you want to be doing besides this."

Benoit will be playing the Iron Horse Cafe in Northampton this Wednesday, Sept. 19, at 7 p.m. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

2007 International Toronto Film Festival primarily focused on Iraq War

BY CHRISTOPHER KELLY
Collegian Correspondent

TORONTO — It didn't take much effort to identify the dominant trend at this year's Toronto International Film Festival, which concluded its 32nd edition Saturday, Sept. 13. This year, you couldn't swing a box of Goobers without hitting at least one Iraq War-related work.

For the highbrows, there was Brian De Palma's audaciously conceived, if clumsily executed, "Redacted" (which was produced by Mark Cuban and Todd Wagner's HDNet Films), a brutal drama about a group of U.S. Marines who rape and murder a 15-year-old girl in Samarra, Iraq.

For those who prefer their high-minded cinema with a side of cheese, there was the glossy "Rendition," in which Reese Witherspoon plays a woman whose Egyptian-born husband is mysteriously taken into custody by the CIA, which believes he is a terrorist.

Floating somewhere between those two movies was "In the Valley of Elah." Paul Haggis' somber and maddeningly self-important follow-up to "Crash," that stars Tommy Lee Jones as a father investigating what happened to his son, a soldier who went missing after his return from Iraq.

Even the movies that didn't directly talk about Iraq still seemed to be talking about Iraq — or at least about the turmoil of the past two decades in the Middle East and how it's affected all of our lives.

Marjane Satrapi and Vincent Paronnaud's animated "Persepolis" (an adaptation of Satrapi's graphic novel of the same title) follows a young Iranian woman growing up under a fundamentalist regime in the 1970s and '80s. And Alan Ball's marvelous "Nothing Is Private" is set during the Gulf War and features Arab-American characters who are victims of prejudice in a Houston suburb.

The fact that so many filmmakers are preoccupied with current events isn't necessarily surprising — especially not at a festival like Toronto, which prides itself on showing some of the edgiest, darkest new movies around. Much more notable, however, is the grim and despairing tone of so many of these titles. Indeed, watching both "Rendition" and "In the Valley of Elah," you can sense the anti-war rage pouring off the screen. Even in something like "No Country for Old Men," the Coen brothers' extraordinary adaptation of Cormac McCarthy's crime thriller that takes place in Texas in 1980, the filmmakers seem to be making a very contemporary argument, namely, that American society has gone rotten to its core and lacks any sort of moral leadership.

So how will all of this seriousness play when these movies begin to hit theaters in the coming months? My guess is not very well. Take the case of "Redacted," which ends with a startling montage of real-life photographs from the war, of the horribly maimed bodies of Iraqi civilians, including many women and children. Of all the films I saw at the festival — including ones about abortion, pedophilia, serial killers and even teenage hermaphrodites — this was the one that made viewers most obviously uncomfortable. At the packed

See TORONTO on page 5

"Persepolis," an animated film shown at the Toronto Film Festival, is based on the book about a young Iranian woman in the 1970s.

Ryan Seacrest to host 2007 Emmys

BY DANIEL FIENBERG
Zap2it.com

Here we were thinking that the reason why Ryan Seacrest hosted "American Idol," a radio show, TV News, New Year's Eve specials and myriad award shows and local restaurant openings was that he was here on world media domination.

It turns out that Seacrest's actual motivations are far more psychologically revealing.

"Believe it or not, I was the kid who wasn't always asked to go to the dance, if you know what I mean," Seacrest explains to reporters on a conference call in anticipation of his latest hosting gig, Sunday night's 59th Primetime Emmys.

"When I was much younger, I was picked on a little bit. So, to be asked to do anything is kind of exciting now. I do have a fear of failing and I do have a fear of things not working out and I frankly don't know how to do anything else."

We'd be wiping away a tear except that Seacrest is a man who candidly admits, "I find it pretty easy to make fun of me."

Seacrest's candor suggests that he may be exactly the right man to break through the puffery that so often plagues big-time Hollywood award shows. Certainly, he's smart enough to avoid a bloated opening monologue.

There will be plenty of comedy, thank God. Seacrest notes, "The good news is, Lewis Black is going to be there, Jon Stewart, Stephen Colbert, Ellen, they've all RSVP'd, so fortunately, we know that there will be laughs within this three hours. I am not a stand-up comedian, so I don't think I'm gonna go out and try, to prove myself a laboring hour in the first act of the Emmys."

Instead, the show will open with a music number that has already stirred up extensive speculation. Will Seacrest sing? Will Seacrest dance? Will Seacrest even be able to make it on time? Before he can even take the stage at the Shrine Auditorium, Seacrest is producing the E! red carpet special.

"You might find this surprising, but I have no plan at all to get from A to B yet," Seacrest says of his point-to-point

See EMMYS on page 5

Tyra Banks works on continuing hit show

BY NYSSA BEEKES
Collegian Staff

"America's Next Top Model" feels high enough to make sitting down sound really fun; lips so puffy you develop a speech impediment; criticism so harsh you'll crave the next time the judging panel rips into you and calls you a boring waste of film.

But none of that is as important as being fierce. Tyra Banks has not reclaimed her spot as a household name for nothing. She genuinely wants to help you.

Because if you can love yourself, she says, that means she can love herself too, or so she said about Cycle Eight's Whitney.

Just a hunch, but something tells me the Vicki's model does NOT need any help boosting her ego. She already has life-size portraits blanketing the walls of the model mansion.

Kudos to Tyra for birthing this cash cow, but she's not the only catwalk guru on the show. Have you ever seen sexier gams than those on Miss Jay? Now, let your heart go pitter-patter. It's OK. I'll wait.

Try peeling yourself from your comfy hospital bed so the judges don't disqualify you, like Cycle One's Adrienne. Doctors don't want you to leave. Come on!

See MODEL on page 5

Ryan Seacrest will begin the night interviewing celebrities for E!'s red carpet special before attempting to make it to the main stage on time to open the show.

Models hope to boost confidence

MODEL from page 4

Since models smile as much as they gorge on cookie dough, you understand my concern.

But nothing — except for Tyra's mugshot — is held to higher esteem on "ANTM" than the female body. Cycle One's Parisian nude shoot portrayed the reluctancy of two of the four remaining ladies to strip for the sake of fashion.

Consequently, both found themselves in the bottom two during that week's judging panel. What do we have to learn from this? Sacrifice! Morals, schmorals.

If you really want something in life, my pretties, you've got to give up a little too ... well, maybe give up everything.

I mean, what's a little sacrifice here and there? Want your face gracing the cover of Tiger Beat for all of America's youth to see? I earn to love your curves, because "ANTM's" cameras want to watch you do it.

Ladies, give it a shot! Next time you stroll your stuff down Uganda, channel the Amazonian women of "ANTM." Pucker those lips. Stomp your flip-flopped feet to flaunt you pajama pants.

Beckon that piercing gaze on passersby when there's no camera to seduce. Trust me, it'll be genius.

Now excuse me while I unscrew my smile.

"America's Next Top Model" continues to scrutinize the female body even with the attempt to feature plussized woman. The emphasis on high fashion sacrifices health for beauty on the hit show, whose new season will premiere on Sept. 19 on CW.

New Emmy host works out his issues before big show

Ryan Seacrest hit lame hosting "American Idol" and has moved on to host his own show, "On-Air with Ryan Seacrest." The TV star also hosts American Top 40, which airs Saturdas and Sunday mornings.

EMMYS from page 4

exit strategy.

While the usual assortment of hosts come from a comedy or entertainment background, Seacrest has some advantages learned from his decade doing live events on all media.

"The one thing that I have learned hosting 'American Idol' for so many seasons now, is that the best thing to do is really try and be honest in a moment and be real in a moment," he says. "And if you're pretending or trying to be something that you're not, then odds are that you're going to screw up or it's just not going to work."

Regardless of how Seacrest does on Sunday, odds are he'll continue to be offered at least some sort of work.

"I host a great deal of television, which is fantastic, but I'm asked probably on a daily basis to do a bar mitzvah or bat mitzvah greeting for someone's home video camera," he says. "I did about three of them already today."

Film Festival has somber mood

TORONTO from page 4

public screening I attended, you saw a lot of people anxiously shifting in their seats and frequently checking their watches, even though the movie is just 98 minutes long.

And considering how many downbeat options were on display at this year's festival, it was curious to note that the two titles that seemed to generate the loudest buzz were lighthearted comedies: Jason Reitman's "Juno," a teen-pregnancy comedy that plays like an unholy alliance of "Superbad," "Knocked Up" and "Rushmore," and "Lars and the Real Girl," in which Ryan Gosling plays a lonely guy who falls in love with a life-sized, anatomically correct plastic doll.

Could it be that it's still too soon for Hollywood to maturely and even-handedly address the Iraq war and for audiences to be ready for those films (Remember, it was four or five years after the Vietnam War ended that we began to see movies like "The Deer Hunter" and "Coming Home")?

Or could it simply be that, in the face of such much bad news in the real world, moviegoers — even ones at a highbrow festival like Toronto — would just rather forget themselves and their problems for a couple of hours?

"The Valley of Elah," starring Tommy Lee Jones, is the sequel to the film "Crash." The movie follows Jones character as he attempts to find out why his son disappeared after returning from Iraq.

THE BLACK & WHITE IN YOUR MAROON

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

BRINGING THE BEST LOCAL COVERAGE TO UMASS - AMHERST SINCE 1890

CHECK US OUT ONLINE
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WANTED:
Judicial Hearing Board Members

A great experience for students who:

Requirements include:

You need to attend one of the training sessions:

Tuesday, October 2 — 7:00 - 9:00 p.m., 911 Campus Center
Wednesday, October 3 — 1:00 - 3:00 p.m., 176 Whitmore
Wednesday, October 10 — 7:00 - 9:00 p.m., 911 Campus Center
Thursday, October 11 — 1:00 - 3:00 p.m., 170 Whitmore

Applications available at:
Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore
Student Government Association Office, 420 Student Union
Residence Hall Duster Offices
Due Friday, September 28, 2007 at 5 p.m.

Any questions? Please Contact:
Paul Xanconcello or Ashley Dixon
Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore
(413) 545-2681, dosa@stuaf.umass.edu

DON'T MISS OUT ON THIS EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY!!!

Enter to win a sweet Deal!

Guess how many jelly beans are in the jar?

Drawing to be held on September 28th

Simply fill out the entry form with your name, e-mail address, year of graduation, telephone number and your guess of the number of jelly beans in the jar.

The person guessing the exact number or closest to the exact number will win the jar of jelly beans.

Entrants must be UMass students on the meal plan.

DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET
Only The Best...:
SCORE BIG!
7 DAYS A WEEK
University Drive
Amherst, MA 253-0416
We Accept OCMP!

MAD MONDAY
Available Monday Only!
Large Cheese Pizza
18 Inch
$7

Available Tuesday Only!
2lb TUESDAY 2 lbs of Roasted Potatoes
FREE
WITH PURCHASE OF A SuperBird Rotisserie Chicken

Available Wednesday Only!
PRIME TIME WEDNESDAY
Chefs Prime™ Pork Roast
20 oz Cooked Weight, Fully Cooked, Serves 3 to 4
$6

Take Out Thursday
Available Thursday Only!
Ready To Eat or Ready To Heat!
$7
Grandma's Chicken Pot Pie
9 Inch, Family Size

7 Days A Week $7 8 Piece Fried Chicken
2 Drumsticks, 2 Breasts Pieces, 2 Thighs & 2 Wings
We Only Use 100% Canola Oil No Trans Fats

FEED THE WHOLE TEAM!

kick back friday
Cheese P... 40 Pieces
Available Friday Only!
$12

Serves 4 to 5, Ham, Turkey or Roast Beef with Lettuce, Tomato & Cheese, Made Fresh to Order
30 Inch Grinder
SUPER SUB
Saturday & Sunday
Serves 5 to 6!
$30
Available Saturday & Sunday Only

WHAT A DEAL!

Big Y Reserves The Right To Change Items At Any Time Without Notice.

Minutemen trample Tigers

FOOTBALL from page 10

With a defender in his face, Coen threw behind Rancher, but the six-foot-five wideout reached back and snagged the ball with one hand, bobbled it, escaped the cornerback, who had taken an inside edge to defend him, gained control of the ball and scrambled toward the end zone.

"It was the greatest catch I've ever seen in 30 years of coaching," UMass coach Don Brown said of the play.

"When I looked up, I just reached out for it," Rancher said. "It was kind of instinct. Then when I had a good grip on [the ball], I just took off."

Coen said he thought Rancher dropped the ball as he was falling to the turf. By the time Coen could look again, Rancher was headed to the end zone.

After falling behind early, the Minutemen fought their way back to a two-point lead. Rancher's catch-and-run turned into the game-changer early in the second quarter.

"I thought Rasheed's play really picked up our sideline," Brown added. "That was a huge, huge play."

The Tigers would try to climb back into the game after halftime with another field goal to close to 19-13, but would not get any closer. A Chris Koepplin field goal brought the Minutemen back up by nine, but Smalls' interception one minute into the fourth quarter put Brown and Company at ease the rest of the way.

Schaefer ran the Towson offense from the shotgun, usually with four wide receivers, and this play was no different. Looking for Demetrius Harrison on the right sideline, Schaefer fired, but telegraphed the pass. Smalls stepped in front and carried UMass 90 yards to its third straight win to open the season.

The only man with a shot at stopping Smalls was Harrison. As Smalls crossed the goal line, Harrison stood at the Towson 30, turned and headed toward the sideline.

"Once he got to about midfield, I looked up and said, 'No way anybody's catching him.' That was a huge play," Brown said.

"We were in man coverage, and the D-line got pressure on [Schaefer]," Small said. "All I did was wedge him all the way out of bounds so he couldn't get to the ball, and I just made a play on the ball."

After a sub-par third quarter in which the offense sputtered, it came down to more big plays in the fourth.

Senior captain linebacker Jason Hatchell recorded his first career interception on a tipped pass in the fourth quarter.

The Tigers held the ball for 11 minutes of the final frame, but were outscored 14-0. UMass added insurance with another 10-yard score from Omar.

The play literally mirrored Omar's first touchdown, a screen pass from 10 yards out, this time to the right. Just like last time, Omar followed blocks by fellow receivers Rancher and J.J. Moore. The play was ruled a run, however, as the pass from Coen went backwards and was scored as a lateral.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jerrice@student.umass.edu.

UM defense shines, Tigers offense stalls to run the football at all. And that was important, it made them one-dimensional."

DEFENSE from page 10

The Tigers certainly didn't have that running dimension to their offense in the losing effort. Towson carried the football 33 times for a total of 22 yards – an average of 0.7 yards per carry. McCloude ran for just 30 yards on 16 carries, with his longest being for nine yards. Towson only recorded five rushing first downs.

That's not all that went wrong for the Towson offense, either. The Tigers went 0-for-4 on fourth down conversions, and were tackled behind the line of scrimmage nine times (by eight different Minuteman defenders) for a total loss of 40 yards.

The plays that stood out, though, came on special teams as they frequently have so far in 2007 for the Minutemen. When the Tigers took at the game tape, three plays in particular would draw the ire of any special teams coordinator.

With the game tied 10-10 in the first quarter, long snapper Joe McNamara sailed the snap over the head of punter Bill Shears into the back of the end zone, resulting in a safety and a 12-10 UMass lead.

Shears's rough day continued in the third, when he mishandled the snap and was tackled for a 13-yard loss – giving the Minutemen great field position. They capitalized with a field goal, extending the lead to two scores.

Towson place-kicker Mark Benevengo probably won't want to watch the game film, either. Trailing 12-10 early in the second quarter after the safety, Benevengo set up for a 34-yard field goal to take the lead, but UMass safety Michael Meggett busted through and blocked the kick, sending the attempt backwards and out-of-bounds.

The Minutemen marched right down the field after the blocked kick, scoring on a sensational touchdown reception by wide receiver Rasheed Rancher on a 35-yard strike from Coen.

Benevengo connected on a 30-yard field goal for the game's next score, but that proved to be the last for the Tigers.

Ely Rowson can be reached at erowson@student.umass.edu.

Failed road trip for UMass

M. SOCCER from page 10

things in the second half and created some dangerous situations. Unfortunately, we didn't capitalize on them."

With its impressive size and athleticism on both sides on the field, Harvard posed several matchup problems for the Minutemen. Crimson defender Kwaku Nyamekye dominated the center of the team's defensive zone and single-handedly stifled several UM scoring chances.

"We were just trying to keep the ball on the ground and away from [Nyamekye] and try to attack the outside backs," Koch said. "As far as their size all over the field, I feel our quickness can counter that with keeping the ball on the ground. At times we did a good job, and at times we put it in the air and that's where they were pretty effective."

The center back's supremacy was most evident in the 24th minute of play. Ofosu fielded a pass in the Harvard end with nothing between himself and the goal. But Nyamekye chased down Ofosu, pushed the junior off the ball and stole possession.

Harvard nearly scored the game's first goal in the 42nd minute. Red-shirt junior Chris Brown was called for a hand ball deep in his defensive zone after being struck by a shot from close proximity. UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons managed to tip the free kick over the top of the net on the right side.

The first Crimson goal came just over nine minutes into the second half. After a UM foul just outside the penalty area, Matt Hoff curled the free kick to a sprinting Andre Akpan, who brushed past the UMass defense on the right side of the net. The ball hit the sophomore forward square in the chest and slipped into the net.

"The guy put a good ball into the middle and we were just late covering it," Simmons said. "[The UMass defenders] were behind the Harvard guy, so they just beat us to the ball."

After six games this season, sophomore forward Bryan Hogan has one goal on nine shots. He's started in all six games.

Rappaport crossed the ball from 30 yards out several minutes later, but once again the Harvard defense prevented a quality scoring chance.

The Crimson then took the ball down the field and caught the UM defense off guard while in transition. Midfielder Brian Grimm sent a low shot past a shielded Simmons on the left side on the net.

"It was a shot from about 25 yards out right down the middle," Simmons said. "And I just couldn't see it until it got past one of our defenders. I got a fingertip on it, but I didn't get enough of it."

A similar goal was the difference in Friday's match against Siena. Senior forward Thomas Giovacco scored the game-winning goal after entering the game in the 67th minute. He fielded a pass near the edge of the goal box and launched a shot into the top left corner.

The Minutemen maintained significant possession in their offensive zone, but simply couldn't capitalize on their opportunities. The team took 16 shots, including 11 in the second half.

"We did everything well to win the game," Koch said. "We're not really good goal scorers. And so you keep knocking on the door and it doesn't go in, you're letting the other team stay in the game. If we had gotten a few of our other chances in, then it's a whole different story."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Maroon and White struggle to convert over weekend half, Ofosu's breakaway, ended when Nyamekye made up Ofosu's 10-yard advantage and easily took the ball from the UMass forward.

CHANCES from page 10

"He had my number. Any chance I had, he was right there," Ofosu said of Nyamekye. "I tried my best, but I couldn't go straight because I knew he'd get there. I tried to push him off, but he was blocking everything."

Frustration set in for the Maroon and White after Hahn saved two consecutive DeSantis shots in the 51st minute. The game was relatively even at that point, but Harvard changed that quickly with two goals in an 11-minute span.

When the Minutemen finally forced the ball away from Nyamekye, their lone goal followed. By forcing the ball wide, Nyamekye had to prepare to defend against crosses. The ball was cleared into the UMass zone, and Ofosu elected it at the top of the penalty area. Nyamekye came over and Ofosu found Amick, who beat Hahn.

Koch tinkered with the UMass formation prior to Sunday's game, returning to the 4-4-2 that the team employed in 2006. Junior midfielder Tony Bassett did not play in either game this weekend. The Minutemen felt his absence as the Crimson won most balls sent toward the midfield. The Crimson's second goal came from the middle of the field, a spot Bassett typically occupies.

Koch and the Minutemen know that there lies a remedy to the scoring drought that ruined last season and has slowed the start to 2007.

"It's really frustrating. We practice it over and over again, especially the set pieces, getting to the line and crossing it into the box, and for some reason we just can't put it away. I don't know, if we panic, I don't know what it is, but we need to figure it out soon," senior Greg Ettelio said.

"I just think we need to finish our runs and be really committed to what we do," he said. "Those all should be easy goals for us."

Joe Mellyn can be reached at jmellyn@student.umass.edu.

MOVING ON?
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

New WORLD Theater
FALL 2007 SEASON
Womb-Words, Thirsting by Lenelle Moise
Wednesday, Sept 19 and Thursday, Sept. 20, 2007
8 pm, Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, Smith College
Mixing a brew full of womanist Vodou jazz, queer theory hip hop and movement, Womb-Words: Thirsting is an interactive evening of poetic storytelling delivered from the gut slam-style! Join Haitian-American solo artist Lenelle Moise as she re-conceives memory and boldly speaks out about childhood masculinities, sexualities, AIDS, cultural hybridity, and reclaiming f-words.
Somali Community Festival
Saturday, Oct. 27, 2007, 4-8 pm
Panache Banquet Hall, 827 State Street, Springfield, MA
Enjoy Somali music, dancing, and a sneak-preview of performances to come!! Learn about the Wataalo Somali Women's Collective, meet participants, enjoy great food, and buy hand-made crafts to support the community!
Mestiza Power
Thursday, Nov. 29 and Friday, Nov. 30, 2007
8pm, Bowker Auditorium
Mestiza Power is a poetic, powerfully performed and beautifully directed new work from Yucatan, Mexico. Written and directed by Concepción León Mora and performed by Sa'as Tun, Mestiza Power reveals the dignity and struggles of contemporary Mayan women.
Visit our website for ticket prices and venue updates. For tickets call FAC Box Office 413-545-2511
Visit our website for updates! www.newworldtheater.org
FINE ARTS CENTER

CAST
verizon wireless
Campus Tour
presented by
SAMSUNG
411 Connect
People, Places and Fun brought to you by 411.
HANDS-ON MOBILE
featuring
gym class heroes
special guest
THE PACK
Wednesday, September 19, 2007
8pm • Mullins Center
Tickets are available on Tuesday, September 4th at the Mullins Center Box Office:
$10 for UMass Amherst Students
$15 for Five College Students
$35 for the general public
UMASS AMHERST
BROUGHT TO YOU BY: UNIVERSITY PROGRAMMING COUNCIL (UPC), CENTER FOR STUDENT DEVELOPMENT, STUDENT AFFAIRS AND CAMPUS LIFE

SEP 17 2007

Home meet goes well for runners

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

In front of a vibrant home crowd, the Massachusetts cross country teams completed their only home meets of the season this weekend. In the men's race, the Minutemen came in first place out of five teams with 33 total points. The Minutewomen came in second place out of three teams with 40 total points.

Each team had a wealth of individual achievements, ranging from personal records to comeback stories.

However, UMass women's cross country coach Julie LaFreniere articulated that her team still has room for improvement.

"Our number five [the fifth UMass runner to cross the finish line, freshman Gina Perno] was a little too far back and we need to work on getting several people, not just Gina Perno, to close up that gap," said LaFreniere. "That's our weakness right now."

Another freshman runner that is quickly proving her worth is Lauren Stocker. Stocker again led all true freshmen on the team, finishing fourth on the team and ninth overall.

When asked how Stocker was coming along, LaFreniere said that Stocker looks physically different now as opposed to last June when she participated in the Massachusetts state championship meet.

"She's gutsy and competitive," LaFreniere said. "I'm ecstatic that she's here with us and she has the head [mindset] and the determination that we're looking for."

LaFreniere also said that all of the freshmen on the team came to UMass with a similar skill set and that she fully believes that the rest of the freshmen will soon enjoy the same success as Stocker.

Red-shirt freshman Shivi Zan continues to improve in her first year of collegiate competition. Zan had a tremendous burst at the end which helped her finish in fourth place, second on the team behind senior captain Christina Derosa, who finished second overall.

Zan feels as though this is not going to be her greatest cross country season because she is coming off of an injury but she is optimistic that good things are yet to come.

Derosa continued her streak of races in which she finished ahead of any other teammate. The rainy conditions did not seem to deter the Sound Beach, N.Y. product. This was evident in her finishing time of 17:43, a new personal record.

"[The race] went well," Derosa said. "[The rain] made [the course] a little uneven but it anything, training on it is harder than actually racing it. When you're running hard non-stop, you don't pay attention to the unevenness."

The other Minutewoman finishing in the top-five on the team was senior captain Amber Sayer. Sayer finished third on the team and sixth overall.

The men's team had an unlikely hero in freshman Jeffrey Hill, who led all UMass runners with a second-place finish. Hill finished with a time of 25:01, beating co-captain Jesse Regnier's record of 25:11.

Hill gave a first-person perspective of the men's race.

"The first mile was deceivingly hard," Hill said. "The terrain is kind of like a European course, it was really soft. I was trying to take the kick out of the first place runner. I was trying to pass him and challenge him."

Freshman Patrick McAllister finished second on the team and fourth overall. Third on the team was sophomore Jon Pierce, who finished seventh overall. Rounding out the top five of UMass runners were freshmen Kris Carle and David Johnson, who finished ninth and eleventh , respectively.

UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien had questions about the experience of his squad being a factor coming into this race.

"It's always great to see the younger kids on the team compete successfully and with a great deal of excitement in their first college race," O'Brien said.

"Since this is a predominantly younger squad, I think that it was probably one of the things that I had a big question mark about. I had every reason to believe that they could do it but when you get up to the starting line for the first time, you're not sure."

O'Brien admits that he likes to project what will happen throughout the course of the season but he feels that he can't do that in the first few races because his team is very young, making it hard to gauge how the season will turn out.

Both teams will compete next in the Paul Short Invitational at Lehigh University on Sept. 28.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Sowry evens record with win

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team got back into the win column, when it traveled to Siena and came home with a 2-1 victory over the Saints on Sunday.

Siena started the scoring when sophomore midfielder Kristen McGorty scored off of a penalty corner in the 15th minute. Senior defender Emily Winslow earned the assist on the play.

UMass (4-4) responded at the 19:16 mark of the first half. Senior forward Kara Murphy set up junior midfielder Erin Parker in the middle of the circle and Parker put it in the back of the cage for her first goal of the season. It was also Murphy's first assist of the young season.

UMass	2
Siena	1

In addition to the game-tying goal, the Minutewomen put 12 shots on net and had nine penalty corners by halftime.

The second half was far different from the first for both teams. UMass stepped up its defense to shut down any attack by Siena's offense. Siena didn't record a shot on goal in the second half. Also, it had three penalty corners as opposed to its eight corners in the first half.

The Minutewomen also turned up their offensive game in the second half. They unloaded 12 shots on Siena goalkeeper Renee Clavette, which forced her to make five saves. UMass got some insurance when freshman forward Katie Kelly came into the game as a late substitute and scored her second goal of the season from an assist by Mary Shea, the first on the season for her, giving the Minutewomen a 2-1 lead.

Despite being down, Siena hung in the game right until the very end. The offense brought pressure against UMass late in the game. The Maroon and White held off the attack but Siena got one final chance to even the score. The referees awarded the Saints a penalty corner with no time left on the clock. Siena got the ball into the circle and set up the play it designed but senior defender Kristina DoRosario stepped in and broke up the play to preserve the UMass win.

Sophomore goalkeeper Sarah Williams continued to play impressively and make her case for the starting job. She earned the win, improving her record to 3-1 overall this season.

UMass out-shot Siena, 22-5. Sophomore Cher King led the team with three shots on goal.

UMass edged out Siena, 12-11, in penalty corners. UMass had nine at the end of the first half and Siena had eight.

The only booking of the game came in the 69th minute when Parker received a green card.

UMass will try to keep the momentum going when it heads down to Storrs, Ct., to take on regional rival No. 3 Connecticut.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu.

Offensive flurry lead Minutewomen

W. SOCCER from page 10

a nice halftime all smiles, but coach told us not to get ahead of ourselves," Stoll said.

In the second half the message got across to the Minutewomen as they continued to score and play solid defense. Canfield scored her first goal at home this season with an easy tap-in set up by sophomore forward Kelsey Anderson. Anderson looked like Canfield for one play as she stormed down the sideline past the defense to give Canfield an easy score in front of the net.

The defense also held up its end by recording its second shutout of the season. The defense allowed 16 shots, however they were mostly long-range shots and many of them missed the net entirely.

"I really liked our defense," Rudy said. "They collapsed, they pinched in, they locked it up pretty well and it's that back four, we've been playing it all year."

Stoll knows how important the defense is and understands that the better they play the more scoring opportunities she'll have.

"Our defenders played really well, and they connect to our forwards that get into the spaces and that helps because they always have their heads up and are looking," Stoll said.

Red-shirt senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker notched nine saves and has 27 for the season.

Usually the Minutewomen get their best fitness during the games, but the game against Albany was cancelled. Rudy pushed the team hard on Wednesday with a hurt, pain and agony session.

"Known as HPA, on Wednesday it was very heavy duty, it was hard training," he said. "I got them to the agony stage, I got them there and so the message is if you get into the hurt, pain and agony you need someone else to get to agony. You need somebody to assist you and I can do that."

Rudy went on to explain that once players experience agony, they can push through the fatigue, or any other elements against them, during a game.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Stoll nets two goals in win on birthday bounce flew right to Stoll, however, and the sophomore punched it with her cleat into the goal.

STOLL from page 10

"It's great playing with Britt," said Stoll, refusing to take all the credit. "She drills good passes to everyone and I just happened to be there to knock it in."

The tally was her third of the season. She now leads the team in that category.

She scored UMass's first goal of the year and the only one in a 1-0 victory over Maine in the season opener on Aug. 31.

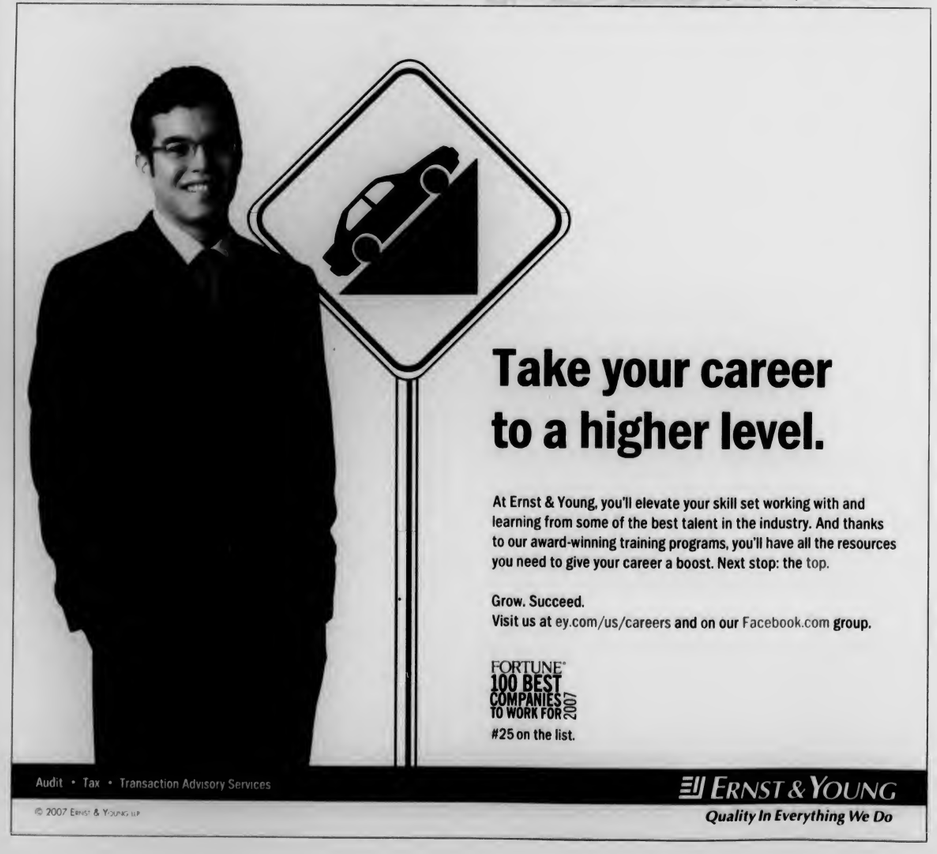
The shutout seemed to put a stop to the offensive drought the Maroon and White seemed to be suffering from the first three games.

The Minutewomen had scored four goals since the season began.

"It feels great," Stoll said about getting out of the drought. "It feels great to finally finish and finish early – we did it all pretty much in the first half. It was a nice halftime – mild – but coach told us not to get ahead of ourselves. We take it one game at a time and we came ready to play."

Stoll's frequent bursts of energy, and her pair of goals within the first 17 minutes, are exactly what UMass coach Jim Rudy had pictured coming from the Dedham, Mass., native during scouting.

"[This is] how I envisioned her. She's a person that can nip into spaces and strip defenders and take very quick goals because she's so quick," Rudy said. "And her work rate is so high. She's always ready to pounce and that's how I envisioned her when I recruited her out of club ball."



Stoll was the Minutewomen's top freshman performer last season, playing in all 17 games – and even starting the last seven after Tina Rodriquez tore her ACL. She was the only freshman to see action in every game.

She pocketed her first collegiate goal in just her second game when she scored the third goal in a 3-1 win over Boston University.

She finished with three points, having notched an assist against Saint Joseph's in the team's 13th game.

"[She's] dynamic, quick, loves to get the ball not for herself, but so she can deal it to someone else," Rudy said. "[She has a] great one-on-one attacking personality who can also pass very well."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

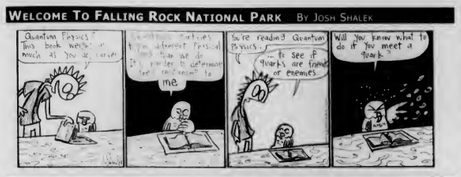
TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			3			8	1
	9					7
2	8	4				3
8	4		9			5	2
				3
	3	9			5		6	7
		8				6	7	9
		7					3
	6	3			7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Plays a part
5 Postal sticker
10 Mr. Bunny
14 Trellis piece
15 Bonehead play
16 Burn balm
17 Skin opening
18 Capital on the Nile
19 Be sure of
20 Ex-QB Bart
22 Lessen
24 New Jersey NBA-ers
27 Loses one's temper
28 Actor Kilmer
31 Felines
33 Mineral spring
34 November event
36 Nerdy
40 So out it's in
41 Mas' mates
43 Desert
44 State categorically
46 Canvasser
48 Knight's title
49 ___ gin fizz
50 Before, in poetry
51 Continue
55 Bell sound
57 Settee for two
58 Golf-course hazards
63 Portent
64 Small crown
67 Kind of thermometer
68 Impudently bold
69 Heavenly hunter
70 Storage building
71 Heavy imbibers
72 Bridge support
73 Weapons talks briefly

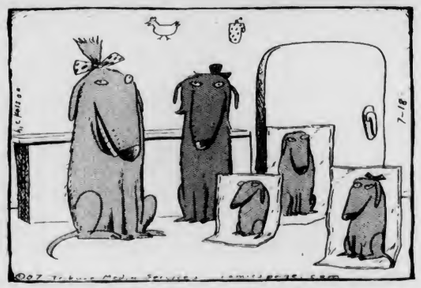


DOWN
1 Small snakes
2 Coagulate
3 Skaket Lopinski-
4 Severe
5 Jelly ___ la la
6 ___ Extra dry
7 Folkways
9 Systematic series of actions
10 Certain fund-raisers
11 Of an arm bone
12 Barnyard fowl
13 Stitched
21 Parish priests' pads
23 Offensive
25 Skater Babilonia
26 Hall
28 Designer Wang
29 Pub servings
30 Why don't we?
32 Goes over the edge
35 Curved pastries
37 Dinner and a movie, perhaps
38 Above
39 Scant
42 Auctioned off
45 Christmas tree's piece
47 Old card game
51 Liquid impacts
52 ___ and Juliet
53 In the open
54 Cow collective
56 Fragrant
58 Follow closely
60 Opera song
61 Gloomy atmosphere
62 Aperture for coins
65 Jolly in Australia
66 ___ Mr.

Is POODLING your thing?
Why not put it to use?
Submit your comics to THE DAILY COLLEGIAN Comix Page and you could be published up to 5 times every week

Quote of the Day

"Communism doesn't work because people like to own stuff."
-Frank Zappa



Welcome To Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson

"Some say I'm an overly protective mother, but I say hey, you can't be too careful, so I had Billy and the twins laminated."

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Unless you are a suspension solution, it is wise not to settle.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you are worried about your future virility, Sting is a good role model.

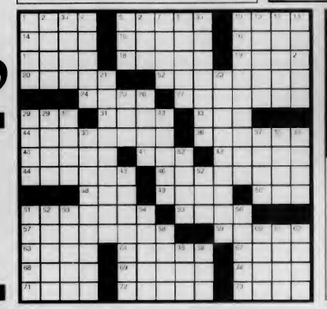
aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Make like yeast and rise to the occasion. However, do not jump in an oven after.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You cannot fight crime without knowing the difference between right and wrong.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You'll feel residual and regrettable effects of this weekend's antics for the next 3 days.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Check out a UMass sporting event this week. Go naked, leave in handcuffs.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are multifaceted like a dodecahedron and every side of you is absolutely ill-nasty.



virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
"Denial is not a river in Egypt" is absolutely the stupidest bumper sticker on Earth.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It is almost time to trade in those Crocs for some really cool and attractive Uggs.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If it is your intent to wrap someone around your finger, gymnasts are your best bet.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Dress as a woman. For some of you this will be normal, for others ... not so much.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Never eat food off of the ground. Unless of course it's like super freakin yummy. Ya.

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

I hear the cries of the people... they demand comics.
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Pottery Class
Tuesday evenings 6:30-9:00pm. Sept. 18 - Nov. 6 for 8 weeks. Bring home self-created finished pieces. Taught by Joy Friedman at the Leverett crafts and arts. To register call 413-548-9673. Email: Joyozuki@crocker.comClass fee: $250 - includes all materials

Auto For Sale

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362
2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Campus Rep Wanted $200.00 per week base salary for semester plus bonus. Flexible schedule, class talks, generate applications email: cchurch@collegepro.com www.collegepro.com

Exp line cook, part-time, nights and weekends, great training program and starting wage. Apply at Eastside Grill, 19 Strong Ave., N'ton or email info@eastsidegrill.com

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply DP Dough Downtown, Amherst

Employment

Rent us your Ears!
Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

STAGE HANDS WANTED
AT FINE ARTS CENTER
$7.50 / HR. VARIABLE SCHEDULE – WEEK DAY AVAILABILITY PREFERRED 9-NOON, 1PM-5. APPLICATIONS AT PRODUCTION SERVICES RM 146 F.A.C.

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com. Contact us through site.

Motorcycle

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

Services

Artisan Editing: an academic editing service, soley focusing on the dissertation/thesis. Contact, artisanediting@aol.com for information and rates

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Tag Sale

Furniture, Furniture, Furniture, Rugs
93 Fearing Street
Saturday the 15th and Sunday the 16th 9-5

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring break 2008
Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849/www.ststravel.com

Woodbury commons outlet shopping trip 9/30 cost $40 call Kathie 413-213-0110

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Submit your classified ads at www.DailyCollegian.com

SEP 17 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No prowl for these Tigers

Minutemen topple Towson, off to best start since 1986

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As Sean Smalls reached the end zone with the football he intercepted 90 yards earlier, any hope the No. 23 Towson Tigers had of a comeback was lost.

The third-ranked Massachusetts football team stymied Sean Schaefer and the Tigers' offense, 36-13, in their CAA opener, picking off Schaefer three times and holding Towson to 22 yards rushing. Michael Omar's pair of 10-yard scores (one rushing, one receiving) propelled UMass to its first 3-0 start since 1986.

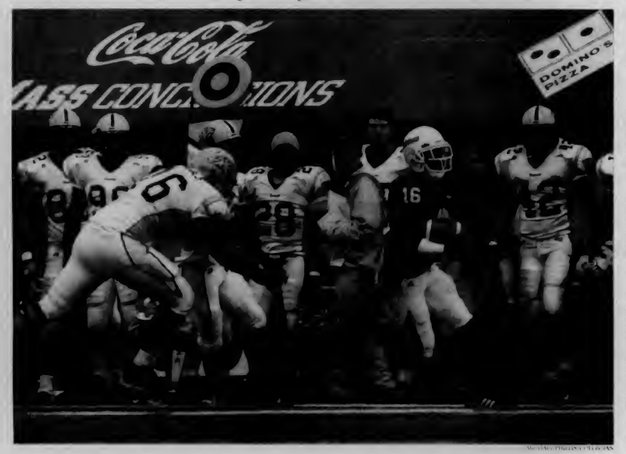
Saturday the Minutemen travel to Orono, Maine to take on the Black Bears.

With an overcast sky and the rain beginning to come down, the Tigers (2-1, 0-1 CAA) looked sharp early in the game, jumping ahead by a touchdown on their first possession with a one-yard Rasheed McClaude run, but that would effectively be the end of the day for the Towson offense.

UMass	36
Towson	13

The teams exchanged field goals before the sun finally came out – and stayed out opening up the first for the Minuteman offense.

UMass took control on the next drive, going 63 yards in eight plays, and finishing with Omar's first touchdown of the day. The Minutemen screened heavily against the Tigers, mostly to the wide receivers, and it earned them their first trip to the end zone.



Quarterback Liam Coen took the snap and immediately hit Omar to his left. With good blocking in front of him, Omar fought his way to the pylon, tying the game at 10.

After Towson punter Bill Shears fumbled a snap in his own end zone for a safety to give the Minutemen a 12-10 lead, Rasheed Rancher ran away from everyone, and took the game with him.

The drive started with what should have been an impressive play gone awry (Coen was sacked on a flea flicker attempt), but finished with a more spontaneous, wild play.

On a third-and-eight from the Towson 35-yard line, Coen dropped back looking for wide receiver Rasheed Rancher. The quarterback found his target, but not until the pass rush had reached him.

See FOOTBALL on page 7

Sean Smalls's 90-yard interception return for a touchdown in the fourth quarter all but sealed the 36-13 UMass victory over Towson Saturday at McGuirk Stadium. The Minutemen intercepted Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer three times and limited the Tigers to 22 rushing yards.

Smalls, Robinson highlight strong defensive performance

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Trailing 22-13 early in the fourth quarter, Towson was deep into Massachusetts territory, needing just 24 yards for a touchdown and a two-point deficit. One underthrown pass and 90 yards later, the ball – and the score – were headed in the other direction.

Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer's pass was intercepted by UMass defensive back Sean Smalls and returned 90 yards for a touchdown – effectively ending any hope of a Tigers comeback. It put an exclamation point on a huge defensive performance by the Minutemen.

The UMass defense pounced on the Tigers for much of Saturday's contest, intercepting Schaefer three times and completely shutting down tailback Rasheed McClaude.

The Minutemen entered the game at 2-0, led mostly by their offense – most notably quarterback Liam Coen, tailback Matt Lawrence and wide receiver J.J. Moore. But in this game, it was the defense that produced the victory.

"I was really proud with the way the defense stepped up," said UMass coach Don Brown. "The offense had been carrying the day for us the first couple of games, so it was the defense's turn to step up."

And every player on Brown's defense had a part in it. While Smalls' interception will receive much of the attention, Courtney Robinson made a big play of his own. With the Tigers in the red zone down 19-10, Robinson intercepted Schaefer in the end zone – killing any momentum that they had just gained following a Coen turnover.

"Courtney had a big play with [that] interception, and we just came after them all game," Smalls said. "You just got to buckle up and step up and make plays."

The Minuteman defense came from all angles and all directions, stifling the ground game and forcing Schaefer to throw under duress. Schaefer was sacked four times and consistently hurried – leading to quick and forced throws that led to turnovers and failed drives.

According to Brown, the Minutemen blitzed over 50 times out of the 77 snaps that the Tigers took – as the defense made a concerted effort to try and limit Schaefer's effectiveness.

"We made them earn everything," Brown said. "We made it very difficult for [Schaefer] to throw the ball down the field. And the one thing that you look at is that we did not allow them

See DEFENSE on page 7

Late goal not enough for UM

Maroon and White drop road pair to Harvard and Siena

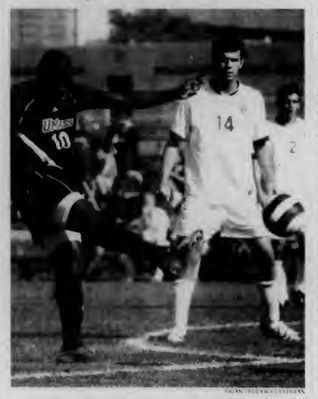
BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE — The ball sailed over the crossbar near the right corner of the goal. After leaving the foot of redshirt junior midfielder Doug Rappaport on a free kick in the 90th minute, the strike marked the final attempt for the Massachusetts men's soccer team to tie Harvard on Sunday afternoon.

The failed free kick came less than two minutes after the Minutemen scored their first goal and swung the momentum back in their favor.

UMass cleared the ball into the offensive zone to junior forward Prince Ofosu in the top of the penalty area. The junior passed the ball to Stuart Amick on the left side, who then crossed the ball into the lower right corner for his first collegiate goal.

But the late goal left the Minutemen 12-4-0) with too little time to tie the score. The 2-1 result was their second road loss of the weekend, falling to Siena (2-2-1), 1-0, on Friday. The team's next match is Saturday against Northeastern and is also its first home game of the season.



UMass	1
Harvard	2
UMass	0
Siena	1

The Minutemen played a competitive first half with the No. 15 Crimson (6-0-0), managing to reach halftime without falling behind on the scoreboard. They suffered several defense breakdowns in the second and found themselves down 2-0 with only 24 minutes left to play.

Despite the half's score differential, the team created more offensive opportunities than in the first.

"I think we made some strides here, especially in the second half," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "We did some things that we talked about – getting crosses and getting [the ball] behind their backs. We finally did these

See M. SOCCER on page 7

Junior forward Prince Ofosu assisted on the only UMass goal in the 2-1 loss to Harvard Sunday afternoon in Cambridge.

Offensive struggles continue for UMass

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE — When Stuart Amick's 88th-minute shot beat Harvard goalkeeper Adam Hahn, the bench of the Massachusetts men's soccer team erupted. The late tally gave the Minutemen hope that this match may end differently than the two before it.

But when Doug Rappaport's free kick in the 90th minute flew over the Harvard goal, the Minutemen (2-4-0) realized that for the fourth time this season, they wasted more opportunities than they could afford. The final whistle blew moments later and with that came UMass's third consecutive loss.

Once again, the Minutemen had every chance to win the match; there was Mike DeSantis's deflection and Prince Ofosu's breakaway. Both plays appeared like certain goals and both times Harvard defenders thwarted the efforts. And while Harvard's defenders rank among the most gifted in the nation, failure to finish isn't a problem exclusive to games against nationally ranked opponents – the Crimson sat at No. 15 in last week's NSCAA/adidas poll.

The Minutemen dropped a 1-0 decision at Siena on Friday. In that game, the Minutemen doubled the Saint shot total and dominated possession. But when the Saints got their one legitimate chance, they took advantage.

"We had the ball on their end for the whole half," junior Prince Ofosu said. "They get once chance and they score. We had all of these chances and we just can't finish."

Similar problems haunted UMass in its season-opening 1-0 loss to Maine. The Minutemen held a 15-5 edge in shots, but a Maine goal in the 97th minute was enough to earn the win for the Black Bears.

In Sunday's loss, the Minutemen constantly seemed on the verge of scoring. They flooded the Crimson box with cross attempts and had several free kicks from advanced positions but failed to convert. Prior to the game, UMass coach Sam Koch asked certain things of his offense. Keeping the ball away from Harvard defender Kwaku Nyamekye was at the top of the list.

Offensively, the Minutemen tried to move the ball into the center of the field to take advantage of sophomore Bryan Hogan's size, and to provide room on the wing for Ofosu to use his speed. Nyamekye's presence forced the whole team to adjust and it took too long for the Minutemen to follow suit.

UMass's best chance of the first

See CHANCES on page 7

Sophomore comes up big on birthday

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Yesterday was a very happy birthday for UMass's Sydney Stoll.

On the 19th anniversary of the day she was born, Stoll scored two goals in the first half of the Minutewomen's 4-0 win over Hartford, providing herself with one the best birthday gifts a soccer player could dream of.

"It feels good," said Stoll, who had both of her goals assisted by senior forward Britt Canfield. "Britt did a lot of work down the flank and I just finished."

Just after eight minutes into the game, the birthday girl received a pass from Canfield on the left side. Stoll looked up, faced Hartford's goalkeeper, Elizabeth Cook, and took aim. Her shot to the upper right-hand corner of the goal deflected off Cook's left hand, into the back of the net.

Another eight minutes later, Canfield got a ball sent by senior captain Jenny Roehrig from around midfield. Canfield dribbled the ball down the left side, toward the net and ripped off a shot. Cook sprawled to the ground and the ball deflected hard off her stomach. The

See STOLL on page 8

Stoll, Canfield star in high-scoring affair

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The offense had no trouble finding the net on Sunday.

The scoring duo of sophomore Sydney Stoll and senior Britt Canfield combined for three of the team's four goals in a 4-0 win for the Massachusetts women's soccer team over Hartford (0-3-2) yesterday.

UMass (3-0-1) dusted off the rust after a nine-day layoff Tuesday night's game against Albany was cancelled due to rain.

The Minutewomen scored three goals in the first half, two by Stoll and a goal from junior Vanessa Patry. Canfield scored the fourth goal during the 81st minute to put the game out of reach for the Hawks.

The game had a physical atmosphere right from the beginning. Both teams had players knocking and pushing each other down as the referees watched and kept their whistles inactive.

"My way of thinking is you have to determine what the official is calling, what level is the officiating at," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "Meaning is there a lot of advantage, a lot of play on, a lot of no harm no foul and then you play to it.

"Something happened early on [in the game], it was a shoulder challenge, it was a little extra hard and a number of kids went flying and one of our kids said something."

Rather than argue with the officials about how they should referee the game, Rudy told his players, "That's information for you guys and you have to play to that level or expect that you're not going to get a call."

"That's the smart aspect of the game, the silly part is to get upset and let it bother you and we didn't do that," he added.

Canfield used her speed to charge down the sideline past the defense and as she looked up she connected to Stoll, who was cutting to the net to score the game's first goal. About eight minutes later, senior midfielder Jenny Roehrig took the ball from the midfield and passed it up to an open Canfield. She charged the goal and took a shot, but the goalkeeper blocked it. The ball bounced off the keeper right in front of Stoll, who was in good position to knock in her second goal of the game.

"We played at a really good pace and the goals just came," Canfield said.

Twenty-five seconds later, Patry scored a goal on a pass from Canfield, giving her three assists. Patry kicked the ball over the goalkeeper's head at the upper corner of the goal. The Minutewomen went into halftime with a 3-0 advantage, however Roidy made sure they didn't get too complacent.

"We did it all pretty much in the first half so it was good,

See W. SOCCER on page 8

NEW EXHIBIT FEATURED IN HAMPDEN – PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 71 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2007

R.A.D. program offered

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With rape statistics climbing nationally, the University of Massachusetts Police Department is offering free defense classes to women on campus.

The program, known as R.A.D. [Rape Aggression Defense] is "designed to teach women about awareness, prevention, risk deduction and avoidance while progressing into the basics of hands-on defense training," according to UMPD officials.

The FBI projects one out of every three women will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime. One forcible rape occurs every seven seconds in the United States; and an estimated 90 percent of them go unreported, according to the UMPD.

To help women become more knowledgeable and equipped to defend themselves, the course provides its students with both the educational and physical tools needed for a successful defense.

"R.A.D. is dedicated to teaching women defensive concepts and techniques against various types of assaults by utilizing easy, effective and proven self-defense tactics. This system of realistic defense will provide women with the knowledge to

See RAPE DEFENSE on page 2

Library elevator-drop raises questions

Malfuntion in library elevator leads to inspection in others

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The elevator malfunction in the W.E.B. Du Bois library early in September has done more than just create long lines but safety concerns on campus as well.

However, building maintenance at the University of Massachusetts wants to dispel students' worries about safety concerns.

"I'll be getting the report back from the engineers [soon]," said Kevin Ryan, contract administrator for building maintenance. "But it was most likely some kind of mechanical failure, which is rare. We will take the correct actions to make sure it never happens again."

On August 31, elevator car number four shot up to the 27th floor of the library. Then, the car's counterweight dropped to the bottom of the elevator shaft, creating a loud crash that was heard throughout the entire building, according to staff members present.

No one was injured after the library elevator incident, but Ryan and library administrators admit the units are old. They were installed around 1972, the time the library was built.

"The rule of thumb [for the life span of an elevator] is about 25 to 30 years," said Ryan. "We've been planning on [replacing the library's units] for awhile, but we couldn't come up with the money."

The elevator drop in the library also raised questions of elevators in other older buildings on campus, such as the five Southwest towers, which each carry three elevators. The buildings themselves were acquired in 1966.

But some towers don't have to worry about old elevator units. Kevin Libby, a former resident assistant in Washington tower, said the cars were recently upgraded to faster and more modern units in 2005.

There are plenty of urban legends and true stories surrounding elevators on campus, including "elevator surfing." Both Libby and Ryan agree that "surfing" was common years ago.

"It is true that folks used to 'elevator surf,'" said Libby. "You used to be able to open the doors and jump on top of the elevators and ride them. The graffiti is still inside the elevator shafts, and you can see it if you look carefully between the doors when the elevator doors close."

Ryan is the liaison between the University and outside contractors. He deals with a number of other building services including emergency generators on campus, but a large part of his job is overseeing and maintaining the 200 elevators in administrative and academic buildings at UMass. The housing office contracts its elevators separately.

"We spend 1.4 million dollars on elevator maintenance a year," said Ryan.

The elevators are inspected by the state once a year, which is usually done over the summer and involves testing their basic functions. UMass's elevators, including the library's, were just recently assessed by state inspectors in August. All elevators passed.

"The state checks and inspects everything physical having to do with the elevator," Ryan said. "They make sure the doors open properly, the fire equipment and emergency lighting is fine and that the car is doing all the functions it's supposed to."

Ryan and the physical plant on campus do small inspections once a week and a larger inspection once a month. He has a long checklist of items that his team reviews.

The 28th floor, or the elevator and machine room, is blocked off with a metal door and padlock, but every week Ryan and others go up to make sure everything works properly.

The computer mainframe resembles an old supercomputer, with hundreds of lights and

See ELEVATOR on page 2

Students walk past elevator car number four in the W.E.B. Du Bois library after its malfunction just a few days before classes began.

MASSPIRG to hold first meeting today

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts public-interest group, MASSPIRG, will be starting off the semester today with its semi-annual kick-off meeting in the Student Union's Commonwealth Room.

The meeting, which begins at 8 p.m., will offer entertainment for its attendees that includes food, music and a guest speaker who is yet to be named.

Students will be given the opportunity to learn about and discuss the main issues that MASSPIRG will be addressing this semester. These issues, which MASSPIRG has worked into five campaigns are: global warming, the Darfur crisis, textbook prices, college affordability, hunger and homelessness.

MASSPIRG's campus organizer, Chris Burns, hopes that tonight's meeting will inspire students to become more involved on campus.

"My hope is that a lot of students come away feeling invigorated and excited that they can make a difference here at UMass concerning all of these important issues," Burns stated.

MASSPIRG has apparently evoked this feeling among many UMass students, who have worked to keep the organization strong on campus for 35 years. The campus chapter of MASSPIRG is part of a much larger state-wide organization, one that prides itself in fighting for citizens' special interests and well-being.

MASSPIRG members have devoted themselves to numerous projects over the years including the Bottle Bill of 1983, which created a return system for recyclable bottles, one of their most notable accomplishments.

Also worth mentioning, was the organization's recent advoca-

See MASSPIRG on page 2

MASSPIRG members speak out at their spot in the campus center and raise awareness to students about voting and change for Massachusetts.

Sept. 11 memorial damaged

BY DANIELLE KAHN

On the fifth anniversary of the September 11th attacks one week ago police were called to the memorial on the Student Union lawn at the University of Massachusetts for reports of vandalism.

When police arrived, they found the flags that had been put up as part of the memorial in disarray. These flags were put up by the UMass Republican Club, ROTC members and former veterans – about forty people in total.

Each flag represented 13 people who had died in the 9/11 attacks. After the flags were put up, the group went over to Herter Hall to watch the film "United 93."

Around the same time, a group of leftist activists tried to arrange the flags to form a peace sign. During this attempt, about 30 were broken.

Republican Club President Brad Deramo felt that the protests exhibited disrespect.

"It shows disrespect for the country, people who died in the 9/11 attacks and the soldiers in Iraq," said DeSantis. "The memorial was only meant to remember the victims of 9/11, it was not meant to be a political event."

When the police got to the memorial, the activists left and there was not much more they could do. Students were unable to decide the intent of the activists without more evidence.

"You can't really judge if you don't know if the flags were broken on purpose, but it was still wrong to toss them around," said sophomore Sarah Leal. "It was obviously constructed the way it was on purpose."

Laura Nichols, also a sophomore, agreed. "There was no malicious intent behind the vandalism if they did not purposefully break the flags," she said.

Danielle Kahn can be reached at dkahn@student.umass.edu

Amherst cartographer creates equal-area map

Bob Abrammss of ODT Maps, Inc. presents an equal-area map of the United States, which includes Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

U.S. area map revolutionized

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A local educational-resource company is vying to put Amherst on the map.

ODT Maps, Inc., an Amherst-based developer and manufacturer of maps, globes and other geographic resources, unveiled an equal-area map of the United States on September 5. This map, touted by founder and economist activist Bob Abrammss as one that will "blow people's minds," presents the continental United States, Alaska and Hawaii – as well as unincorporated territory, Puerto Rico – according to their relative size.

The purpose of an equal-area map is to provide students, educators and other appreciators of [illegible] a clear representation of the total [illegible] of the United States.

Abrammss said his staff were concerned that the status quo in map representation of the U.S. – in which Alaska and Hawaii are usually shown in insets and Puerto Rico largely ignored – Abrammss was especially concerned with the way mapping existing maps that did not included Puerto Rico [illegible] to [illegible] not [illegible].

The creation of the equal-area map came to Abrammss [illegible] year ago after an Alaskan map [illegible] was [illegible] that he could not print students with an accurate representation of their own state contained him. "I was stunned in [illegible] that there was no equal-area map of the U.S.," said Abrammss.

See MAP on page 2

SEP 18 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No prowl for these Tigers

Minutemen topple Towson, off to best start since 1986

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As Sean Smalls reached the end zone with the football he intercepted 90 yards earlier, any hope the No. 23 Towson Tigers had of a comeback was lost

The third-ranked Massachusetts football team stymied Sean Schaefer and the Tigers' offense, 36-13, in their CAA opener, picking off Schaefer three times and holding Towson to 22 yards rushing. Michael Omar's pair of 10-yard scores (one rushing, one receiving) propelled UMass to its first 3-0 start since 1986.

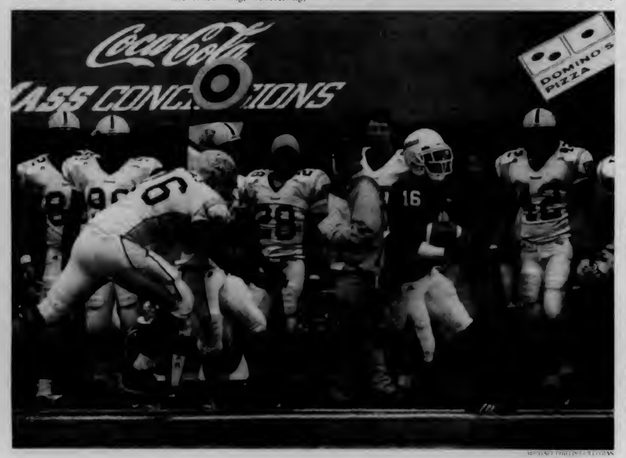
Saturday the Minutemen travel to Orono, Maine to take on the Black Bears.

With an overcast sky and the rain beginning to come down, the Tigers (2-1, 0-1 CAA) looked sharp early in the game, jumping ahead by a touchdown on their first possession with a one-yard Rasheed McClaude run, but that would effectively be the end of the day for the Towson offense.

UMass	36
Towson	13

The teams exchanged field goals before the sun finally came out – and stayed out opening up the first for the Minuteman offense.

UMass took control on the next drive, going 63 yards in eight plays, and finishing with Omar's first touchdown of the day. The Minutemen screened heavily against the Tigers, mostly to the wide receivers, and it earned them their first trip to the end zone.



Quarterback Liam Coen took the snap and immediately hit Omar to his left. With good blocking in front of him, Omar fought his way to the pylon, tying the game at 10.

After Towson punter Bill Shears fumbled a snap in his own end zone for a safety to give the Minutemen a 12-10 lead, Rasheed Rancher ran away from everyone, and took the game with him.

The drive started with what should have been an impressive play gone awry (Coen was sacked on a flea flicker attempt), but finished with a more spontaneous, wild play.

On a third-and-eight from the Towson 35-yard line, Coen dropped back looking for wide receiver Rasheed Rancher. The quarterback found his target, but not until the pass rush had reached him.

See FOOTBALL on page 7

SOPHIE PRIETO-LEVIAS

Sean Smalls's 90-yard interception return for a touchdown in the fourth quarter all but sealed the 36-13 UMass victory over Towson Saturday at McGuirk Stadium. The Minutemen intercepted Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer three times and limited the Tigers to 22 rushing yards.

Smalls, Robinson highlight strong defensive performance

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Trailing 22-13 early in the fourth quarter, Towson was deep into Massachusetts territory, needing just 24 yards for a touchdown and a two-point deficit. One underthrown pass and 90 yards later, the ball – and the score – were headed in the other direction.

Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer's pass was intercepted by UMass defensive back Sean Smalls and returned 90 yards for a touchdown – effectively ending any hope of a Tigers comeback. It put an exclamation point on a huge defensive performance by the Minutemen.

The UMass defense pounced on the Tigers for much of Saturday's contest, intercepting Schaefer three times and completely shutting down tailback Rasheed McClaude.

The Minutemen entered the game at 2-0, led mostly by their offense – most notably quarterback Liam Coen, tailback Matt Lawrence and wide receiver J.J. Moore. But in this game, it was the defense that produced the victory.

"I was really proud with the way the defense stepped up," said UMass coach Don Brown. "The offense had been carrying the day for us the first couple of games, so it was the defense's turn to step up."

And every player on Brown's defense had a part in it. While Smalls' interception will receive much of the attention, Courtney Robinson made a big play of his own. With the Tigers in the red zone down 19-10, Robinson intercepted Schaefer in the end zone – killing any momentum that they had just gained following a Coen turnover.

"Courtney had a big play with [that] interception, and we just came after them all game," Smalls said. "You just got to buckle up and step up and make plays."

The Minuteman defense came from all angles and all directions, stifling the ground game and forcing Schaefer to throw under duress. Schaefer was sacked four times and consistently hurried – leading to quick and forced throws that led to turnovers and failed drives.

According to Brown, the Minutemen blitzed over 50 times out of the 77 snaps that the Tigers took – as the defense made a concerted effort to try and limit Schaefer's effectiveness.

"We made them earn everything," Brown said. "We made it very difficult for [Schaefer] to throw the ball down the field. And the one thing that you look at is that we did not allow them

See DEFENSE on page 7

Late goal not enough for UM

Maroon and White drop road pair to Harvard and Siena

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE – The ball sailed over the crossbar near the right corner of the goal. After leaving the foot of red-shirt junior midfielder Doug Rappaport on a free kick in the 90th minute, the strike marked the final attempt for the Massachusetts men's soccer team to tie Harvard on Sunday afternoon.

The failed free kick came less than two minutes after the Minutemen scored their first goal and swung the momentum back in their favor.

UMass	1
Harvard	2
UMass	0
Siena	1

UMass cleared the ball into the offensive zone to junior forward Prince Ofosu in the top of the penalty area. The junior passed the ball to Stuart Amick on the left side, who then crossed the ball into the lower right corner for his first collegiate goal.

But the late goal left the Minutemen 12-4-0 with too little time to tie the score. The 2-1 result was their second road loss of the weekend, falling to Siena (2-2-1), 1-0, on Friday. The team's next match is Saturday against Northeastern and is also its first home game of the season.

The Minutemen played a competitive first half with the No. 15 Crimson (6-0-0), managing to reach halftime without falling behind on the scoreboard. They suffered several defense breakdowns in the second and found themselves down 2-0 with only 24 minutes left to play.

Despite the half's score differential, the team created more offensive opportunities than in the first.

"I think we made some strides here, especially in the second half," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "We did some things that we talked about – getting crosses and getting [the ball] behind their backs. We finally did these

See M. SOCCER on page 7

JOSH SULLIVAN-COLLEGIAN

Junior forward Prince Ofosu assisted on the only UMass goal in the 2-1 loss to Harvard Sunday afternoon in Cambridge.

Offensive struggles continue for UMass

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE – When Stuart Amick's 88th-minute shot beat Harvard goalkeeper Adam Hahn, the bench of the Massachusetts men's soccer team erupted. The late tally gave the Minutemen hope that this match may end differently than the two before it.

But when Doug Rappaport's free kick in the 90th minute flew over the Harvard goal, the Minutemen (2-4-0) realized that for the fourth time this season, they wasted more opportunities than they could afford. The final whistle blew moments later and with that came UMass's third consecutive loss.

Once again, the Minutemen had every chance to win the match; there was Mike DeSantis's deflection and Prince Ofosu's breakaway. Both plays appeared like certain goals and both times Harvard defenders thwarted the efforts. And while Harvard's defenders rank among the most gifted in the nation, failure to finish isn't a problem exclusive to games against nationally ranked opponents – the Crimson sat at No. 15 in last week's NSCAA/adidas poll.

The Minutemen dropped a 1-0 decision at Siena on Friday. In that game, the Minutemen doubled the Saint shot total and dominated possession. But when the Saints got their one legitimate chance, they took advantage.

"We had the ball on their end for the whole half," junior Prince Ofosu said. "They get once chance and they score. We had all of these chances and we just can't finish."

Similar problems haunted UMass in its season-opening 1-0 loss to Maine. The Minutemen held a 15-5 edge in shots, but a Maine goal in the 97th minute was enough to earn the win for the Black Bears.

In Sunday's loss, the Minutemen constantly seemed on the verge of scoring. They flooded the Crimson box with cross attempts and had several free kicks from advanced positions but failed to convert. Prior to the game, UMass coach Sam Koch asked certain things of his offense. Keeping the ball away from Harvard defender Kwaku Nyamekye was at the top of the list.

Offensively, the Minutemen tried to move the ball into the center of the field to take advantage of sophomore Bryan Hogan's size, and to provide room on the wing for Ofosu to use his speed. Nyamekye's presence forced the whole team to adjust and it took too long for the Minutemen to follow suit.

UMass's best chance of the first

See CHANCES on page 7

Sophomore comes up big on birthday

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Yesterday was a very happy birthday for UMass's Sydney Stoll.

On the 19th anniversary of the day she was born, Stoll scored two goals in the first half of the Minutewomen's 4-0 win over Hartford, providing herself with one the best birthday gifts a soccer player could dream of.

"It feels good," said Stoll, who had both of her goals assisted by senior forward Britt Canfield. "Britt did a lot of work down the flank and I just finished."

Just after eight minutes into the game, the birthday girl received a pass from Canfield on the left side. Stoll looked up, faced Hartford's goalkeeper, Elizabeth Cook, and took aim. Her shot to the upper right-hand corner of the goal deflected off Cook's left hand, into the back of the net.

Another eight minutes later, Canfield got a ball sent by senior captain Jenny Roehrig from around midfield. Canfield dribbled the ball down the left side, toward the net and ripped off a shot. Cook sprawled to the ground and the ball deflected hard off her stomach. The

See STOLL on page 8

Stoll, Canfield star in high-scoring affair

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The offense had no trouble finding the net on Sunday.

The scoring duo of sophomore Sydney Stoll and senior Britt Canfield combined for three of the team's four goals in a 4-0 win for the Massachusetts women's soccer team over Hartford (0-3-2) yesterday.

UMass (3-0-1) dusted off the rust after a nine-day layoff Tuesday night's game against Albany was cancelled due to rain.

The Minutewomen scored three goals in the first half, two by Stoll and a goal from junior Vanessa Patry. Canfield scored the fourth goal during the 81st minute to put the game out of reach for the Hawks.

The game had a physical atmosphere right from the beginning. Both teams had players knocking and pushing each other down as the referees watched and kept their whistles inactive.

"My way of thinking is you have to determine what the official is calling, what level is the officiating at," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "Meaning is there a lot of advantage, a lot of play on, a lot of no harm no foul and then you play to it.

"Something happened early on [in the game], it was a shoulder challenge, it was a little extra hard and a number of kids went flying and one of our kids said something."

Rather than argue with the officials about how they should referee the game, Rudy told his players, "That's information for you guys and you have to play to that level or expect that you're not going to get a call."

"That's the smart aspect of the game, the silly part is to get upset and let it bother you and we didn't do that," he added.

Canfield used her speed to charge down the sideline past the defense and as she looked up she connected to Stoll, who was cutting to the net to score the game's first goal. About eight minutes later, senior midfielder Jenny Roehrig took the ball from the midfield and passed it up to an open Canfield. She charged the goal and took a shot, but the goalkeeper blocked it. The ball bounced off the keeper right in front of Stoll, who was in good position to knock in her second goal of the game.

"We played at a really good pace and the goals just came," Canfield said.

Twenty-five seconds later, Patry scored a goal on a pass from Canfield, giving her three assists. Patry kicked the ball over the goalkeeper's head at the upper corner of the goal. The Minutewomen went into halftime with a 3-0 advantage, however Rudy made sure they didn't get too complacent.

"We did it all pretty much in the first half so it was good,

See W. SOCCER on page 8

NEW EXHIBIT FEATURED IN HAMPDEN – PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 71 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2007

R.A.D. program offered

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With rape statistics climbing nationally, the University of Massachusetts Police Department is offering free defense classes to women on campus.

The program, known as R.A.D. [Rape Aggression Defense] is "designed to teach women about awareness, prevention, risk deduction and avoidance while progressing into the basics of hands-on defense training," according to UMPD officials.

The FBI projects one out of every three women will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime. One forcible rape occurs every seven seconds in the United States; and an estimated 90 percent of them go unreported, according to the UMPD.

To help women become more knowledgeable and equipped to defend themselves, the course provides its students with both the educational and physical tools needed for a successful defense.

"R.A.D. is dedicated to teaching women defensive concepts and techniques against various types of assaults by utilizing easy, effective and proven self-defense tactics. This system of realistic defense will provide women with the knowledge to

See RAPE DEFENSE on page 2

Library elevator–drop raises questions

Malfuntion in library elevator leads to inspection in others

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The elevator malfunction in the W.E.B. Du Bois library early in September has done more than just create long lines but safety concerns on campus as well.

However, building maintenance at the University of Massachusetts wants to dispel students' worries about safety concerns.

"I'll be getting the report back from the engineers [soon]," said Kevin Ryan, contract administrator for building maintenance. "But it was most likely some kind of mechanical failure, which is rare. We will take the correct actions to make sure it never happens again."

On August 31, elevator car number four shot up to the 27th floor of the library. Then, the car's counterweight dropped to the bottom of the elevator shaft, creating a loud crash that was heard throughout the entire building, according to staff members present.

No one was injured after the library elevator incident, but Ryan and library administrators admit the units are old. They were installed around 1972, the time the library was built.

"The rule of thumb [for the life span of an elevator] is about 25 to 30 years," said Ryan. "We've been planning on [replacing the library's units] for awhile, but we couldn't come up with the monies."

The elevator drop in the library also raised questions of elevators in other older buildings on campus, such as the five Southwest towers, which each carry three elevators. The buildings themselves were acquired in 1966.

But some towers don't have to worry about old elevator units. Kevin Libby, a former resident assistant in Washington tower, said the cars were recently upgraded to faster and more modern units in 2005.

There are plenty of urban legends and true stories surrounding elevators on campus, including "elevator surfing." Both Libby and Ryan agree that "surfing" was common years ago.

"It is true that folks used to 'elevator surf,'" said Libby. "You used to be able to open the doors and jump on top of the elevators and ride them. The graffiti is still inside the elevator shafts, and you can see it if you look carefully between the doors when the elevator doors close."

Ryan is the liaison between the University and outside contractors. He deals with a number of other building services including emergency generators on campus, but a large part of his job is overseeing and maintaining the 200 elevators in administrative and academic buildings at UMass. The housing office contracts its elevators separately.

"We spend 1.4 million dollars on elevator maintenance a year," said Ryan.

The elevators are inspected by the state once a year, which is usually done over the summer and involves testing their basic functions. UMass's elevators, including the library's, were just recently assessed by state inspectors in August. All elevators passed.

"The state checks and inspects everything physical having to do with the elevator," Ryan said. "They make sure the doors open properly, the fire equipment and emergency lighting is fine and that the car is doing all the functions it's supposed to."

Ryan and the physical plant on campus do small inspections once a week and a larger inspection once a month. He has a long checklist of items that his team reviews.

The 28th floor, or the elevator and machine room, is blocked off with a metal door and padlock, but every week Ryan and others go up to make sure everything works properly.

The computer mainframe resembles an old supercomputer, with hundreds of lights and

See ELEVATOR on page 2

KATIE CHRISTIAN-COLLEGIAN

Students walk past elevator car number four in the W.E.B. Du Bois library after its malfunction just a few days before classes began.

MASSPIRG to hold first meeting today

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts public-interest group, MASSPIRG, will be starting off the semester today with its semi-annual kick-off meeting in the Student Union's Commonwealth Room.

The meeting, which begins at 8 p.m., will offer entertainment for its attendees that includes food, music and a guest speaker who is yet to be named.

Students will be given the opportunity to learn about and discuss the main issues that MASSPIRG will be addressing this semester. These issues, which MASSPIRG has worked into five campaigns are: global warming, the Darfur crisis, textbook prices, college affordability, hunger and homelessness.

MASSPIRG's campus organizer, Chris Burns, hopes that tonight's meeting will inspire students to become more involved on campus.

"My hope is that a lot of students come away feeling invigorated and excited that they can make a difference here at UMass concerning all of these important issues," Burns stated.

MASSPIRG has apparently evoked this feeling among many UMass students, who have worked to keep the organization strong on campus for 35 years. The campus chapter of MASSPIRG is part of a much larger state-wide organization, one that prides itself in fighting for citizens' special interests and well-being.

MASSPIRG members have devoted themselves to numerous projects over the years including the Bottle Bill of 1983, which created a return system for recyclable bottles, one of their most notable accomplishments.

Also worth mentioning, was the organization's recent advoca-

See MASSPIRG on page 2

MASSPIRG members speak out at their spot in the campus center and raise awareness to students about voting and change for Massachusetts.

Sept. 11 memorial damaged

BY DANIELLE KAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On the fifth anniversary of the September 11th attacks one week ago police were called to the memorial on the Student Union lawn at the University of Massachusetts for reports of vandalism.

When police arrived, they found the flags that had been put up as part of the memorial in disarray. These flags were put up by the UMass Republican Club, ROTC members and former veterans – about forty people in total.

Each flag represented 1 people who had died in the 9/11 attacks. After the flags were put up, the group went over to Herter Hall to watch the film "United 93."

Around the same time, a group of leftist activists tried to arrange the flags to form a peace sign. During this attempt, about 30 were broken.

Republican Club President Brad Delomeo felt that the protesters exhibited distaste.

"It shows disrespect for the country, people who died in the 9/11 attacks and the soldiers in Iraq," said Delomeo. "The memorial was only meant to remember the victims of 9/11; it was not meant to be a political event."

When the police got to the memorial, the activists left and there was not much more they could do. Students were unable to decide the intent of the activists without more evidence.

"You can't really judge if you don't know if the flags were broken on purpose, but it was still wrong to move them around," said sophomore Sarah Lenz. "It was obviously constructed the way it was on purpose."

Laura Nichols, also a sophomore agreed. "There was no malicious intent behind the vandalism if they did not purposefully break the flags," she said.

Danielle Kahn can be reached at dkahn@student.umass.edu

Amherst cartographer creates equal-area map

JOSH SULLIVAN-COLLEGIAN

Bob Abramms of ODT Maps, Inc. presents an equal-area map of the United States, which includes Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

U.S. area map revolutionized

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A local educational-resource company is vying to put Amherst on the map.

ODT Maps, Inc., an Amherst-based developer and manufacturer of maps, globes and other geographic resources, unveiled an equal-area map of the United States on September 7. The map, touted by founder and community activist Bob Abramms as one that will "blow people's minds," presents the continental United States, Alaska and Hawaii – as well as unincorporated territory Puerto Rico according to their relative size.

The purpose of an equal-area map is to provide students, educators and other appreciators of geography a more accurate representation of the Earth's surface, Abramms said.

Abramms said his staff were concerned that the status quo in visual education – as in U.S. surveyed by advocacy organization Arizona-based representing it as roughly another three Texas and left the territories of Puerto Rico largely ignored. Abramms was especially concerned with Census projects or educational maps that did not included Puerto Rico according to their relative land mass.

The impetus of the equal-area map came to Abramms about ten years ago when he was frustrated that he could not provide students with an accurate depiction of their own state, enunciated him. "I was stunned to find out that there was no equal-area map of the U.S.," said Abramms.

See MAP on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE II
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASS. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Deshchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Scarbury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAWL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MEREDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

University speaks of modernizing old elevators on campus after malfunction switches that control all basic elevator functions. Ryan and Dan McCarthy, assistant director of building maintenance, hope that soon the entire floor will be gutted and replaced with all-new equipment.

ELEVATOR from page 1

Ryan revealed other elevator initiatives on campus, including current plans for upgrading the Herter Hall, Thompson Hall and Tobin Hall elevators.

"The Herter plans are scheduled to go out in the next week and a half," Ryan said last Wednesday. "And modernization of the elevators in Tobin and Thompson will begin shortly."

With the recent incident at the library, Ryan has sent an addition out for the Herter elevator plans. It includes a rope gripper which applies pressure to the elevator cables for added safety.

"It's like an added brake," he said. "It's just another layer of protection."

Modernization will mean an all-new control system and mechanical hardware like new doors. The elevators on campus are all monitored by a computer, which Ryan said if he had a certain program, he could see everything an elevator was doing on his desktop.

Kate Olevin can be reached at kolevin@student.umass.edu.

UMass police department to offer rape defense program for two weeks make an educated decision about resistance," according to UMPD officials.

RAPE DEFENSE from page 1

The R.A.D. system was created in 1989 and has successfully trained over 300,000 women all over the country. There are over 7,000 instructors certified to teach the course, who work primarily at colleges and universities in the United States.

According to the R.A.D. Web site, the instructional objective of the program is to "develop and enhance the options of self-defense, so they may become viable considerations to the woman who is attacked."

To help accomplish this goal, trained aggressors dress up in a protective suit, known as the "red suit," and simulate an attack towards the woman enabling the person being attacked to learn how to strike back and adequately defend themselves.

According to Deputy Police Chief Archbald, it's the "most realistic scenario that the woman can have of being attacked and then defending themselves."

The course acknowledges that each situation is different and that no definitive way to prevent a rape from occurring exists but still stresses that the program will help lessen the likelihood of one occurring – while also better preparing women if an attack were to take place.

"We're always trying to encourage women to take the class," Archbald said. "It's a valuable class; we always like to have full attendance. We want woman to be able to objectively defend themselves, the more who show up the better from our perspective."

The course is spread out over two weeks with four classes, which run from 6:00 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday. For those who can't attend the first course, which starts today and runs until Sept. 27, a second course will be offered beginning on Oct. 16 and ending on Oct. 25.

"[Interested students] can go on to our website [www.rad-systems.com], and on the website, is information about our next class and through the website they can connect with the instructors and become registered for the class," said Archbald.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS POLICE DEPARTMENT

A UMass police officer teaches a female student how to use self-defense to prevent herself from an aggressor.

Student group to help MA

MASSPIRG from page 1

cy of the College Cost Reduction and Access Act that just passed in Congress, which helped to increase the Federal Pell Grant by $700.

Regardless of what the group has accomplished on paper, MASSPIRG can attest to its ability to train and encourage young people to become activists desiring to achieve real change.

Longtime MASSPIRG member Vanessa Wright stated that she has not only personally grown throughout her involvement in MASSPIRG but witnessed the transformation in her fellow members as well.

"MASSPIRG doesn't just teach people to work toward issues and social change, it also teaches them how to become great leaders. People begin to demand more of themselves and push themselves into leadership-type roles."

One way the organization hopes to make an impact this fall is to take steps towards transforming UMass into a carbon-neutral university. Carbon neutrality is achieved by cutting reliance on pollutants-causing energy sources by switching to alternative sources such as wind and solar power.

Burns hopes to come closer to this goal by taking steps on campus to raise awareness about global warming.

MASSPIRG plans on holding three educational events on global warming this fall, one of which Burns hopes will be accompanied with the presence of state Senator Stan Rosenberg.

This semester, the group will be encouraging Rosenberg to sign onto the Global Warming Solutions Act, a bill in Massachusetts intended to cut carbon-dioxide emissions by 20% by 2020 and 80% by 2050.

"We're going to try to get a buzz at UMass to make people more aware about the solution to global warming," Burns stated. "There are solutions right now but people just don't talk about them enough."

Stella Cernak can be reached at ecernak@student.umass.edu.

SEP 18 2007

FROM THE WHITE HOUSE TO UMASS
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007
5 – 9 PM · BERKSHIRE DC
AMERICA'S FORMER EXECUTIVE CHEF TO THE WHITE HOUSE, WALTER SCHEIB, WILL VISIT UMASS TO PREPARE FAVORITE FOOD OF THE FIRST FAMILIES.
FIRST COURSE
Corn and Scallop Chowder (Bush Family)
Sweet Potato Soup with Curried Cream (Chelsea Clinton)
SECOND COURSE
Fiesta Jalapeno Lemon BBQ Chicken (West Lawn BBQ)
Salmon over Seckel Pears with Acorn Squash Sauce
STATE DINNER
B.B.Q Baby Back Ribs with Fire Crackers Dipping Sauce (Bill Clinton)
Penne Pasta Salad with Broccoli, Tomatoes and Lemon Dressing (Bush Twins)
DESSERT
Gianna Smith, Cranberry and Goat cheese Tart (Holidae Favorite)
Pear and Ginger Bread (White House Favorite)
"PRIVATE BRIEFING" IN THE BERKSHIRE ROOM FROM 7:00 – 7:45 PM
WALTER SCHEIB WILL SHARE ANECDOTES FROM HIS ELEVEN YEARS AT THE WHITE HOUSE FROM A UNIQUE VANTAGE POINT: THE KITCHEN
OPEN TO THE PUBLIC $11.00 CASH AND FREE TO STUDENTS ON MEAL PLAN
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner

ODT Maps, Inc. puts Amherst on map in new innovation

MAP from page 1

So Abramms and the rest of the staff at ODT, which had shifted its focus from management consulting to map publication, set to work. Over time ODT found that although they weren't the only company putting out equal-area maps, those that did were "few and far between," and were often too obscure to be utilized by mainstream publishers.

The mapmakers at ODT were frustrated with the visual representations used by large publishers of geographic media like National Geographic and Universal and sought to "bring equal area maps to the mainstream."

The self-described "innovative map publishers" at ODT Maps offer, in addition to their recently-released equal area maps, a number of unconventional representations of the United States and the globe.

The Van der Grinten Projection presents a south-at-the-top perspective of the world. The equal-area Peters Map places the Pacific Ocean, rather than the Atlantic, at its center. This alternate projection of the globe raised a few eyebrows with its creation, and producers of NBC's "The West Wing" turned to ODT Maps for use of the projection on their show.

ODT Maps also offers a litany of various projections placing Africa at its center, as well as projections representing population.

The concept behind the various alternate projections is an acknowledgement on part of ODT of the biases inherent in conventional mapmaking. Few educational resources are entirely free from bias and mapmaking, Abramms insists, is no exception.

"We want to give everybody a fair airing of their views," said Abramms in reference to the equal-area U.S. projection, "and we're doing it with this map."

ODT also offers a version of the Mercator projection but expresses disdain at its obscured representation of size. The map was developed in 1569 for use in navigation; and although it provides useful representation of the planet's oceans, it has caused controversy with how it represents certain countries. Greenland is shown to be nearly equal in size to Africa—a land mass 14 times bigger than itself– while Alaska is represented as being bigger than Brazil when, in reality, it is five times smaller.

It's these sort of geographic misrepresentations that ODT Maps finds to be vastly politically incorrect and their more progressive approach to mapmaking has found a receptive audience in the geopolitically aware Amherst community.

"We've got a lot of new fans in the Pioneer Valley," said Abramms.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu.

ODT Maps, Inc., a self–described "innovative map publisher," designed equal–area maps to help the public understand common geographic misconceptions.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The shared burden

Greg Collins

After General Petraeus' report to Congress on Iraq last week, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid said, "I call on the Senate Republicans to not walk lockstep as they have with the president for years in this war. It's time to change. It's the president's war. At this point, it also appears clear it's also the Senate Republicans' war."

We can debate endlessly whether the Iraq War was, in fact, President Bush's war, and historians and citizens will do this in years to come, as they rightfully should. But right now the Iraq War is not the president's war, nor is it the Senate Republicans' war. Similarly, the War on Terror is not the war of governmental fear mongerers, neither is it the war of Muslim haters. Because the defense of innocent lives of all ethnicities and races – and the preservation of all religions – is dependent on victory against terrorists. Both wars are not confined to one particular political party or administration but to humanity as a whole.

Islam is most at risk for having its image tarnished at the hands of the Iraq War and the War on Terror. It is largely accepted by mainstream Islamic scholars that theirs is a religion of peace. Muslims, therefore, have the most to lose and the most to gain from the defeat of violent extremists who justify their acts through Islam.

If Al Qaeda and Hezbollah continue to kill innocent people and expand their influence over the Middle East, North Africa, and Asia, then Islam will be identified with terrorism even more deeply. Those Muslims who maintain that Islam is a religion of peace will be dishonored and forever stained by their beliefs because they are inconsistent with those of Osama Bin Laden.

If humanity is committed to winning the war on terror, then Muslims must not simply condemn evil terrorist acts. They also must change the culture within madrassas, Islamic religious schools, many of which promote jihad. They must not allow demagogues like Shiite cleric Moqtada Al-Sadr and Hezbollah leader Hasan Nasrallah to exploit both Muslims and Islam by claiming that they have a firmer grasp on its religious teachings than peaceful Muslims.

Of course the United States has the military capabilities to kill Muslim terrorists, but these are short-term solutions to the larger issue of radical Islam. It is primarily in the hands of the Muslim community to denounce terrorism and convince their fellow religious followers that bin Laden and al-Sadr and Nasrallah do not represent the tenets of Islam, properly construed, and that there are more effective means to solve Muslims' grievances than acts of sheer evil.

The fact that the Islamic community has the central opportunity and responsibility to do this indicates why the Iraq War and the War on Terror are not only the responsibilities of President Bush or Senate Republicans. Remember that strong governments can secure a country's safety through military might, but only individuals have the capacity to change the mindsets of fellow human beings. The fact that these mindsets should embrace peace without targeting innocent lives is a universal truth that applies to all human beings. This is why Senator Reid's statement that the Iraq War is currently only confined to particular people and political parties rejects the notion that the preservation of peace is the responsibility of all people.

"Strong governments can secure a country's safety through military might, but only individuals have the capacity to change the mindsets of fellow human beings."

This responsibility also encompasses the development of liberal democracies throughout the world, most importantly, in places where despotism has historically reigned. The Iraq War and the War on Terror are not only wars against terrorism, but also – in a larger sense – struggles to transition certain repressive Muslim countries into free and open societies. The point here is not to debate whether President Bush's foreign policy is dictated by neo-conservative ideology. But it is to highlight that the current wars are reflections of weak liberal democratic structures existing in countries like Syria and Iran – conditions which encourage power-hungry rulers to finance and export terrorism to satisfy their evil ambitions.

The success of triumph over evil during these wars will determine whether individuals of any religious background will be protected in countries which currently restrict freedoms. If the senator and like-minded Americans truly think the Iraq War and the War on Terror is the responsibility of President Bush and Senate Republicans exclusively, then they would downplay the importance of Muslims creating democratic states in historically undemocratic countries.

But those who think that the wars also highlight the responsibility of Middle Eastern and Asian Muslim states to become liberal democracies suggest that this success depends not just on President Bush or Senate Republicans. It depends also on Democrats to recognize that premature troop withdrawal would create a cauldron of terror in Iraq and on Muslims to change the internal culture of radical Islam.

For if there is one universal trait that human beings should strive to manifest, it is liberty. And it will take humanity, and not just isolated politicians or political parties, to achieve this.

Greg Collins writes on Tuesdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

As primaries near, Obama toes the line

John Gruenenfelder

Senator Barack Obama remains a favorite candidate among students on college campuses, and UMass is certainly no exception. His campaign, not unlike his rivals, is still taking shape these many months before the election. So far, the retooling that this process requires does not seem to have changed opinion of him among younger people. His stance on the war and the Middle East has undergone some of the most vigorous fine tuning, and this is possibly the issue followed most closely by students.

Obama has a very fine line to walk and seems to be doing a decent job at it so far – but maybe not quite decently enough. Poll after poll shows that Obama is trailing Senator Clinton by roughly 20 points and the revised primary schedule is getting closer each day. Because of this deficit, he keeps trying new strategies to prove that he is everything to everybody when it comes to foreign policy.

Questions about Obama's experience have been prevalent since he and Senator Clinton declared their respective candidacies. It's an odd sort of argument, though, since he undeniably has more years in various public offices than she does, and they've both been senators for nearly the same amount of time.

What she does have over him is eight years as the first lady in the White House. It's really hard to measure just how much experience this has given Clinton, but it is undoubtedly a fair bit. Clinton's team has made sure to make this an important issue, both directly and indirectly, and the media seems to love talking about it.

Obama's views on the Iraq war and the situation in the Middle East seem to change to meet the needs of the situation, but this always comes back to bite him. Even steadfast supporters are bound to be troubled by this eventually. Unfortunately, it's tied to the "experience" issue and he's still trying to find the stance that says, "I know what I'm doing."

During the April Democratic debate, Obama made it clear that necessary force would be used to hunt down America's enemies. He was promptly outmaneuvered by Representative Dennis Kucinich over this rather aggressive stance. It's not wrong, per se, but when you state it as an absolute, it's sure to anger the anti-war crowd because then you seem to be itching for a new fight.

"Obama has a very fine line to walk and, so far, and seems to be doing a decent job at it – but maybe not good enough."

Then, during July's CNN/YouTube debate, Obama was asked if he would meet with Iran's president, among other people, in his first year. He said that he would, phrasing his answer rather absolutely once again. Clinton was given a second shot at this question and gave a more refined answer saying that she would meet if conditions were right, such as the meeting not being used for propaganda. Here, again, Obama's answer sounds fine but his phrasing could make him appear too weak to voters – that he might take the diplomatic approach too far.

Now, just last week, Obama gave a speech in – of all places – Clinton, Iowa, where he laid out a fairly detailed plan to deal with Iraq, troop reductions and humanitarian issues therein. Aside from the short sound byte debate format, his answer was far more nuanced and balanced. It was balanced because there was actually room to look at many sides of the issue. At the same time, it is rather nuanced because it shows an ever-so-careful selection of words. For example, Obama's plan would bring home all "combat brigades" by the end of next year, which is entirely different from bringing home all brigades as many are involved in non-combat operations.

This shifting in his stance shows, more than anything, that Obama has quickly become wise to the way politics are played on a national stage. And it is also true that his overall message about being against the war and wanting the soldiers to come home has not changed from the beginning. If you are an Obama supporter, then it is the latter that matters. If you are on the fence at this point, then those finer points of political drama are probably more important.

Candidates like Representative Kucinich, who are very unlikely to win, are actually afforded a unique luxury. They can talk in absolutes and rarely, if ever, equivocate on important issues. It would be nice if all of the candidates could do this. We'd all get a much more frank discussion on the problems facing our country. But that's not how political theater works, and it is for this reason that it is hard to find fault with Senator Obama's changes in his Iraq and Middle East policy. When he decides to implement Troop Surge II, then I'll start worrying.

John Gruenenfelder writes on Tuesdays. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu

Feet? Gross

David Murray

For almost five decades, college campuses around the nation have been suffering from a grotesque condition, and it seems as if nobody cares. It is a serious problem that arose long ago, but it looks as if not a single step has ever been taken to fix it. All over the planet, all year round, college students are wearing sandals – constantly. And I am sick of it.

Never wear sandals; feet are disgusting. They smell, they are completely covered in dead skin cells and they are a breeding ground for fungi and bacteria. Add in toes, and you've got what looks to be a large tree of tumors sprouting from the bottoms of your legs. There is nothing more unattractive to the cosmopolitan man than a pair of naked feet. This is undisputable. So why would you want to show off Democrats to recognize that premature your hideous, pungent, fleshy growths? It doesn't make sense.

If a man went down the street wearing a piece of string tied around his genitals, showing them off for the entire world to see, he would be arrested immediately. This is clearly a case of indecent exposure. To me, the human foot is much more obscene than any other organ, yet people are allowed to walk down the street, essentially wearing lingerie for their repulsive protrusions, and nobody gives them a hard time.

What makes it worse is that people who don't wear proper foot protection are leaving themselves open to injuries all over their feet, and I don't want to see everybody's festering wounds. It's bad enough if someone cuts his or her hand while making a sandwich or some such event, but foot damage always shows in a much more dramatic manner. If you drop a book on your toe, the entire toenail turns blue and soon falls off. If you puncture the back of your ankle, the surrounding area becomes gray and blue, and the contact area itself becomes a bloody red crater. Nowhere else on the body do minor injuries present themselves in such a vile manner. So, do me a favor, and cover them up.

"There is nothing more unattractive to the cosmopolitan man than a pair of naked feet."

I don't think I'm being unreasonable when I ask the world never to wear sandals again. I'm willing to allow the exception of bathroom sandals. Public showers are creepy, and I understand not wanting to allow direct contact with the bathroom floor and the bottom of your feet. Many reason that hot, summer weather make it unbearable to wear regular shoes. I can honestly say that I've never had a problem with hot feet during the summer, and as a former 250-pound monster, I consider myself an expert on pretty much every form of heat exhaustion. Unless you've been subject to some sort of far-foot disease, you should be able to cope as well.

When discussing sandals, a few special cases will often come up. Flip-flops are one such case. These are much, much worse than regular sandals. Not only do they subject the world to your grotesqueries, as do all sandals, but they make the most annoying sound when you walk. How can anyone put up with that? Every time you go anywhere, you are preceded by what sounds like the cracking of a whip. Cows go running in every direction when you approach them wearing flip-flops. It's just rude.

The other important special case to consider is that of the socks and sandals combination. You can't even make the claim that they cool you off, because socks will trap in any moisture and heat created by your feet. I have no idea why people do this, it doesn't even look good. There is no benefit to unifying these objects of clothing. I think wearing socks and sandals is the ultimate "go to Hell" to American society, and I truly believe it should be considered a capital crime.

I know this isn't going to be anything close to a universally accepted proposal. College students seem to be incredibly attached to their sandals, and seeing that it hasn't changed in the past fifty years, I don't imagine it will change anytime soon. But I have to try something. I realize that I won't be making friends with this column and that's alright. I'm standing up for what I believe in, and what I believe in, before anything else, is that feet are absolutely revolting.

David Murray is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at dlmurray@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

AN UNFAIR ASSESSMENT

Dear Editor,

Re: "Vindication for Veterans."
September 17, 2007.

I was disturbed by the editorial written by Mr. Brad DeFlumeri who, in presenting his strongly held opinions, wrongfully attacked one of my staff and misrepresented some basic facts. First, Assistant Dean Eileen Stewart is the official University of Massachusetts Coordinator of Veterans Affairs. There has been no change or transfer of duties. The Center for Student Development and the Dean of Students Office are presently discussing ways to increase and enhance the support services that the University offers to veterans on our campus. I am pleased that there is an opportunity to move in this direction.

Dean Stewart is a staunch advocate for the needs of veterans on this campus. Since taking on these duties, she has worked tirelessly to streamline and improve the communication with Veterans Affairs and facilitate the efforts of other administrative offices to better serve our veterans and their dependents. To say that Dean Stewart is "….unmistakably part of the problem of veterans being disenfranchised and not part of the solution." is simply not true. Most often, she has been the lone and loudest voice.

It is one thing to say that the University needs to do more for our veterans. It is another to engage in a personal attack on the commitment and work of an administrator who, with limited resources, has tirelessly worked to assist veterans. I trust the readers see the difference.

Jo-Anne T. Vanin
Dean of Students

AN OBVIOUS BIAS

Dear Editor,

Re: "Cut Aid to Saudi Arabia."
September14, 2007.

While I wholeheartedly agree with cutting off billions of dollars in aid to such tyrannical theocracies like Saudi Arabia, I was amused by Mr. Hoffman's admission of his bias for Israel. Israel has been the playground bully of the Middle East for decades now thanks to the generous aid provided by Western European and American governments. Israel has managed to emerge with more and more territory after nominally-defensive wars fought against its neighbors. Israel is not "a good steward of human rights" within its own borders. Sorry Matt. But the people living in the occupied territories are human beings too, and they do not share the same liberties and rights that Jewish citizens do.

Despite the nebulous Saudi threat to Israel Mr. Hoffman alludes to, the last time Saudi Arabia actively fought Israel was in 1948. Israel, on the other hand, continually exerts its American-made military might on its weaker neighbors up to the present day. The ultimate goal of Israel can easily be summed up by this quote: "I do not see partition as the final solution of the Palestine question... after the formation of a large army... we shall abolish partition and expand to the whole of Palestine." Who could have uttered such words from the Hitler phrasebook like "the final solution?" The answer is David Ben-Gurion, the first prime minister of Israel.

Chris Amorosi
UMass student

QUESTIONING CREDIBILITY

Dear Editor,

Re: "UMass professor questions 9/11 attack"
September 14, 2007.

Professor Margulis' comparison of the terrorist attacks on 9/11 with the actions of Nazi Germany is disgusting and morally reprehensible. Everyone has a right to free speech, but no wonder many around the country view this university as a haven for far-left wackos. With professors like this teaching at our school, we will never be taken seriously.

Joe Sklut
UMass Student

THE STRANGE WORLD OF GEORGE W BUSH

SEP 18 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS · LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Alumnus displays art in Incubator

Angela Zammarelli's show reminds students of home

BY ALEXA MCMAHON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Hampden Gallery is taking a different approach from the many other galleries located on campus by bringing back artist alumni to the University of Massachusetts Amherst community.

Sunday, Sept. 16 was the opening reception of, "When I Go Like This You Will Know It Is" by Angela Zammarelli, a 2003 Bachelor of Fine Arts graduate. Displayed in the Hampden Gallery Incubator, it is a mix of domestic and play elements representing the realm of the home.

The Incubator is not the same as a regular gallery comprised of paintings, sculptures and photographs. It is a small room separate from the traditional gallery room. The contained area is a reminder of rooms at home for artists to set up installations. The small space for Zammarelli's work is filled with a blanket tent, diamond fabric swatches, fur squares, and knitted robes hanging from the ceiling to the floor. At first, the work seems simple; but as all the fabrics and various color elements come together, the complexity of her work is revealed. "Everything was intentionally placed," Zammarelli said. Through these placed items, she is able to demonstrate the realm of play where possibilities are endless in everyday life.

The various familiar components that fill the tent: note cards, colors, more fabric swatches, blankets and two stuffed-animal heads are reminders of home. Zammarelli uses pieces like the animal heads and knitted pieces as characters to represent, "the potential in everyday life and the potential of escape," Zammarelli said.

The colorful wool-knitted robe leading up to the ceiling represents escape and the unknown. This realm of play is found in the everyday, average home. In both adult and children's lives, this area of play can be found in the home through the potential of escape and everyday magic. The tent and robe also represents the choices people must make in life: to stay in a safe environment or travel to the unknown.

All of these ideas are shown through the simple objects and placement of the work. Home is something everyone can relate to and is accessible. Zammarelli's short artist statement makes the viewer figure out what this display represents to them using familiar objects. Zammarelli is clear that there is a separation between her and the art.

"Art is about looking," Zammarelli states, demonstrating how she wants the viewer to take his or her own perspective and use it to find meaning in her work for him or herself. She takes from things around her and creates a separate realm that "the potential in everyday life and the potential of escape," Zammarelli said.

The director of the Hampden Gallery, Anne LaPrade, brought Zammarelli's work in for this reason. The installations successfully force viewers to ques-

See ART on page 5

COURTESY MISSEAPOLIS COLLEGE OF ART AND DESIGN

Angela Zammarelli looks to take students out of their typical realm of reality and into a new world. Her art supplies range from note cards to animal beads.

Rap/rock act to play Mullins

BY MICHELLE ABBASCIANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Whether you've seen them gaining popularity by the day on MySpace, heard one of their insanely catchy songs on the radio or caught their newest video for "Clothes Off!" on TV, chances are that Gym Class Heroes have made their way into your life in some way, shape or form.

This unique foursome, hailing from Geneva, N.Y., have worked their way up to rock-star status with a lot of hard work, and of course, with some help from their friends and fellow label-mates. After touring extensively for years, churning out creative and entertaining music videos, and making appearances all across the United States, Gym Class Heroes have earned every inch of their long-deserved, and what seems to be newfound, popularity.

This was made crystal clear after the boys in Gym Class Heroes brought home the award for Best New Group at this year's MTV Video Music Awards. Although they were up for Best Group as well, they gave that up to Fall Out Boy. The boys in Gym Class Heroes should be more than content; the Best New Group award is an honor voted for exclusively by the fans. If this is not enough affirmation for the band that they have reached the point of utmost prominence, then nothing will be.

Although their music would typically be classified as hip-hop, Gym Class Heroes has a hard time fitting into one specifically-labeled group. While most would try to mindlessly categorize them into the aforementioned genre, the boys have resisted putting a label on themselves by touring with an array of artists, making them hard to categorize and even harder not to like. With catchy, R&B-funk-inspired beats and wry, humorous lyrics, Gym Class Heroes have quickly proved themselves as fresh and controversial.

Gym Class Heroes have been gaining ground in the indie/pop-rock scene throughout the past couple years. After securing their current lineup in 2005 and playing a slot on the infamous Vans Warped Tour, Gym Class Heroes began to develop a cult-like following. "Papercut

See GYM CLASS on page 5

Gym Class Heroes will take center stage Wednesday night at the Mullins Center. The band recently won Best New Group at this year's MTV Video Music Awards.

Sickness does not hinder Adams' show

BY DAVE MASTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Calvin Theatre transformed into a celestial sphere this past Sunday as Ryan Adams performed, leaving a streak of light behind for days to come.

Lights went down, and the band came out. The stage was dark as silhouettes scurried to their designated instruments. Anxious applause roared from the audience. One silhouette stood out in particular, as it scrambled to its guitar, arms flailing. Based on the dark mass' movements, it was 6 foot 3, had blonde hair and sported a Johnson shirt and Levi jeans. Furthermore, the characteristics of the dark mass that flailed its arms led the audience to believe that it was Ryan Adams, front man of The Cardinals, who actually has black hair and is kind of short.

Because of the dark, the audience had a hard time seeing the stage's performers.

Most of the concert was played with dim or no lights. The only steady light source was the backdrop of the stage, which looked like a planetarium's ceiling.

It was a stellar experience.

Sight wasn't necessary to enjoy this show. It forced listeners to pay more attention to the music rather than to the musicians. They opened with "Goodnight Rose," the first track off of "Easy Tiger." The live rendition rocked the house down, as Adams and Cardinal guitarist Neal Casal played dual melodies. It contrasted with the tamer and more emotive studio version. Adam's and Casal's guitars criss-crossed musically and intertwined like a roller-coaster plummeting to Earth. Together, their parallel guitar playing suggested new frontiers where no guitarist had ever dared to venture before.

For most of the show, Casal and Adams conversed musically with their twin axes, except on the typical tear-jerkers, like "Dear John." The band shared vocal harmony for this tune, which was originally recorded for "Jacksonville City Nights" as a duet with Norah Jones. The studio version crashed and burned; Adams and Jones' chemistry never proved itself to be a believable pair. But on Sunday, Adams gave the audience a reaffirmation in his ability to make happy people sad within a two-minute span of time. The harmony sounded angelic, full of lament for the loss of 'John' and the problems his absence leaves his lover, as the band cried, "I ended up with a house full of cats/But most of them went missing/Through that window you never fixed/And the door you never latched."

Maybe after 'John' died, he went to the "Peaceful Valley," another song Adams and his Cardinals sang on Sunday night about holy speculations. The band played the song with a different intro, more driving and syncopated. Adams sang the pre-chorus by himself, giving a spatial balance between the verse and the chorus; "Trying to find a peaceful song/Trying to find a peaceful song/To sing when everything goes wrong/Till the peaceful valley calls me home." His voice rattled the walls of the Calvin as he cried the lyrics, making all of the audience believers in the

See ADAMS on page 5

Ryan Adams and his band The Cardinals performed Sunday night on a dimly lit Calvin Theatre stage.

The problems with downloading music

THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE

BY LISA KENT
STAFF ATTORNEY

Q. I just got a notice from OIT shutting down my Internet connection because I'm "sharing copyrighted material." I can't believe this. I've only downloaded a few songs, and everyone does it. Why is this happening to me?

Sit up and listen – although you won't like what you're going to hear. Taking this advice might save you a huge amount of money.

When you use an Internet-based sharing software, like Limewire, that's called "peer to peer file sharing," or "P2P." P2P is an entirely legal way to transfer information using the Internet – when the material is not copyrighted. However, P2P may be illegal when you use it to get bootleg digital copies of copyrighted songs from other users on the Internet.

By law OIT is required to send you a warning that you might be committing "copyright infringement" if it detects you using P2P to share songs. OIT can turn off your Internet connection and require you to take a "copyright literacy" quiz before letting you back on.

So, what is "copyright infringement?" A copyright is a type of ownership of an original work of art, be it a song, a TV show, or a film. When an artist (or, more likely, a record company) registers a song, they receive a copyright. The copyright allows them to stop you from getting the song without their consent or payment.

Most copyrights to songs are owned by the record companies that produce and distribute them. Six of the largest companies are members of the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA). If you haven't been asleep for the past three years, you may have heard that RIAA members have sued well over two hundred students at UMass Amherst in the last two years alone and have sued over 25,000 people nationwide, most of them college students.

The SLSO has counseled many students who find themselves targeted by the RIAA. The most common question is, "How did they [the RIAA] find me [meaning my music collection]?" The RIAA uses subcontractors to act as spies masquerading as P2P users. These users use Limewire, or another P2P service, to obtain songs. If you have a requested song in your "shared" folder, the RIAA's spy will take a "snapshot" of the contents of your "shared" folder. The snapshot is used as circumstantial evidence that you were illegally downloading songs.

The RIAA may give you a chance to settle your "case" for $3,000 before it files one in federal court. While this number seems huge, it may be small compared to the amount you might have to pay if you're found liable. The copyright law says a copyright holder can get $750 for each song you illegally distributed. So, if you downloaded two hundred songs owned by the record companies...you can do the math. Worse, you could also be forced to pay the RIAA's attorney's fees and costs of suit.

Whatever your opinion of the big labels, these lawsuits are no laughing matter. If they sue you, the $3000 settlement increases to $4000, and can go higher. If you are threatened

See DOWNLOADING on page 5

Sober lifestyle effects Adams

ADAMS from page 4

"Peaceful Valley," or at least fellow speculators.

By the way, Adams had the flu, but his voice was flawless. He spared his audience from coughing into the microphone, but he did have trouble keeping his balance. He never fell off stage, as he has done in the past, but he sometimes maintained a flamingo stance for extended periods of time. Every now and then, Adams would mumble things like, "Oh my God! I am so tired!" and "I need to go to bed!" His cute complaints were met with laughs and moral support from an eager audience.

This has apparently been Adams' ninth month completely sober, which by no means limits his tendency to have an idea and go with it, not thinking about its consequences. After coming back for the encore, Adams reported that there was a massive spider hanging on the ceiling, warning the audience to avoid bathroom spiders at all costs, who make for a "dangerous pooping experience," as he put it so eloquently.

Adams' new sober lifestyle leaves him feeling completely paranoid. He has experienced stage fright, influencing him to keep the stage lights dimmed and audiences' eyes away. This concert was by no means Ryan-focused. He positioned himself next to Casal, looking as if he was part of the band rather than the front man. His playing was just as sobering as his attitude; everything meshed perfectly, forming a clean and fluid atmosphere. Adams took the backseat, allowing the entire band to sit behind the main controls, making music deserving of its own constellation, called Ryan Adams and the Cardinals.

Dave Master can be reached at dmaster@student.umass.edu.

Adams showed his soft side on the tune "Dear John" that was originally recorded as duet with Norah Jones.

Zammarelli: "Art is about looking" tion what is going on. LaPrade was surprised at the amount of attention Zammarelli got from students while setting up. "It was not just art students; it was everyone asking what she is doing," LaPrade said. She has the ability to catch a range of people's attention.

ART from page 4

Paula Hodecker and Brendan Stecchini, both UMass alumni, also had their reception Sunday for their work that is being displayed in the Hampden Gallery. When LaPrade asked Hodecker if she could recommend anyone for The Incubator, she automatically thought of Zammarelli, whom she knew from working at the UMass Craft Center. She recognized Zammarelli's ability to work with different types of art from sculpting to installations.

The opportunity for alumni to bring in their own work and recommend other alumni to the gallery gives more artists the chance to get their work shown. LaPrade described this as the "ripped effect." Alumni bringing in more alumni from all different classes keeps the UMass community together.

After graduating from UMass with her BFA in 2003, Zammarelli went to the Minneapolis College of Art and Design where she recently received her Master of Fine Arts degree. She decided to come back to the New England area to continue her art career. LaPrade and Hodecker gave her the chance right out of college to have her work shown in a gallery. The Hampden's willingness to show work of alumni separates them from the pack and is beneficial to the art department.

Zammarelli's installations show fellow art students what is offered at UMass and what is to come in the future. Her work will be displayed in the Incubator from Sunday, Sept. 16 to Friday, Oct. 19 in the Hampden Gallery located in Southwest next to the Berkshire Dinning Hall.

Alexa McMahon can be reached at amcmahon@student.umass.edu.

ANGELA ZAMMARELLI

"WHEN I GO LIKE THIS, YOU WILL KNOW IT IS"

HAMPDEN ART GALLERY

The Hampden Art Gallery gave Zammarelli the opportunity to put together an exhibit showcasing her art shortly after graduating.

P2P services gets students in trouble with a lawsuit, or just concerned about your rights, contact a lawyer immediately for legal assistance.

DOWNLOADING from page 4

If you still have P2P file sharing software, purge it from your computer. If you haven't been sued or threatened with suit, purge your shared folder. For more information on how to clear your computer of potentially incriminating information, consult the Electronic Frontier Foundation (EFF.org) which has a useful web page on the subject: http://www.eff.org/IP/P2P/riaa-v-thepeople.php.

The SLSO can offer free resources and advice if you have been targeted. You should act quickly so as not to miss court-imposed deadlines. Come up to room 922 in the Campus Center, or call 545-1995.

The information contained in this article refers to Massachusetts law and does not constitute legal advice. Please submit legal questions to askthelawyer@stud.umass.edu. If you need legal advice, seek out an attorney who can give you advice based upon your circumstances and applicable law. Fee paying UMass Amherst students with questions may call the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 to arrange and appointment or come to 922 Campus Center to pick up more information.

Band promotes new CD with tour

GYM CLASS from page 4

Chronicles," the band's first full-length CD released in 2005, made a small splash in the music scene and gained them some popularity among anyone who heard their charismatic tunes.

With the help of the internet and their modest but devoted fan base, the band got propelled even further into the spotlight after countless appearances and relentless touring. Their work ethic and amazing live shows eventually paid off when they caught the attention of lead singer guitarist of Fall Out Boy, Patrick Stump. The vocalist was so impressed that soon thereafter Gym Class Heroes were signed to bassist Pete Wentz's record label, Fueled By Ramen Decaydance.

After finally legitimizing themselves, the band toured even more extensively mostly with their new label-mates– and continued to gain popularity after putting out their second CD in 2006, "As Cruel As School Children." Multiple music videos (including the popular "Cupid's Chokehold") and thousands of "new friend requests" later, Gym Class Heroes have successfully become one of the hottest new bands in the indie pop-rock hip-hop scene.

If their catchy beats have captured your attention, you can see them playing with Fall Out Boy, Plain White T's and Cute Is What We Aim for this fall on the "Young Wild Things" tour. You can also catch their energetic live set on Wednesday, September 19 at the Mullins Center at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $10 with a UMass ID and $34 for the public.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu.

GYM CLASS HEROES

SEPTEMBER 19

MULLINS CENTER

$10 UMASS STUDENTS

VCAST
veri onwireless
Campus Tour
presented by -
SAMSUNG 411 Connect
People, Places and Fun brought to you by 411
HANDS-ON MOBILE
featuring -
gymclassheroes
special guest - THE PACK
Wednesday, September 19, 2007
8pm - Mullins Center
Tickets are available on Tuesday, September 4th at the Mullins Center Box Office:
$10 for UMass Amherst Students
$15 for Five College Students
$35 for the general public
UMASS AMHERST BROUGHT TO YOU BY: UNIVERSITY PROGRAMMING COUNCIL (UPC), CENTER FOR STUDENT DEVELOPMENT, STUDENT AFFAIRS AND CAMPUS LIFE

CLUB CASTAWAY
Come see us soon!
Proudly Presents
Football Every Monday
Starting with Beautiful Dancers at 5pm
No Entertainment Charge until 5pm
Free Food — Open at 4pm
Ladies over 18 years
call for amateur night
1st prize $300
2nd prize $200
3rd prize $100
Tuesday - Saturday
11am - 1am
Routes 5 & 10
Whately, MA
413-665-8733
No entertainment charge for students with college ID and legal photo ID
Must be over 21 years old

SLU upsets No. 2 Indiana

Patterson's late goal gives Billikens win over Hoosiers

BY SAM EHRLICH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As both Saint Louis and Indiana learned, one miscue could mean the end of a game.

Junior Kyle Patterson scored his second goal of the season in the 66th minute to help Saint Louis (2-1-2) upset No. 2 Indiana (3-2-1) 1-0 to take a share of the Saint Louis Nike Soccer Classic.

The score came on a rare mistake by the Hoosier defense – a ball turned over deep in its defensive third. Patterson, sensing a disadvantage, sprinted down the field and shot the ball past IU keeper Chay Cain, giving the Billikens a 2-1 lead.

Fittingly, Brad Ring's goal for the Hoosiers came on SLU's only defensive miscue of the night. Uncovered, the junior midfielder took the ball about 20 yards out and blasted a shot past SLU keeper Ross Kaufmann on the low part of the left side.

The Billikens tied it three minutes before the half when Brian Grazier took a cross from Dado Hamzagic and shot it past Cain for his first-career goal.

The Billikens also had four players selected to the all-tournament squad, including Patterson and co-MVP midfielder Josh Aranda.

XAVIER BLOWS PAST IUPUI

A-10 Soccer

To this point in the 2007 season, Xavier has proved that it is good to be home.

Xavier scored their first two goals in the first half, including a goal at 37:41 for senior Jon Enders and at 41:49 from Butcher – his first career score.

After fellow freshman El-Hadji Dieng scored to make it 3-0 early in the second half, IUPUI pulled goalkeeper Peter Brasovan in the 77th minute. This failed to stop Butcher and the Musketeers, however, as the freshman, along with sophomore Doug Dalton, scored off new goalkeeper Mike Rietveld to make the final score 5-0.

UR DROPS NIKE CUP FINAL

Josue Soto scored with 3:20 remaining in the game to lead Campbell past Richmond to take Saturday's game and the UR Nike Challenge Cup.

Soto scored on a direct kick from the right side past UR keeper Eric Seiocchetti to give the Camels a 2-1 lead and the victory.

The tournament MVP also played a hand in Campbell's first score, giving a pass to Richard Jata, who then shot it past Seiocchetti for the first goal of the game.

Richmond had a chance with 57 seconds left after a Campbell hand-ball gave the Spiders a penalty kick. Goalkeeper Bryce Kenny made a diving save to his left, however, and the Camels cleared the ball for the victory and the tournament win.

Richmond senior Callum Thomas tied the game in the 49th minute, scoring his first goal of the season from 20 yards out. Freshmen Jake Russell and Daniel Larkin had assists on the goal.

Russell now has points in the last three games for the Spiders, including an assist of fellow freshman Jordan Evans' game-winner last week against Cornell. He, along with Thomas and sophomore Malcolm Joseph, were named to the all-tournament team … Temple's Max Kinderwater was named the Rookie of the Week for the same time period. The freshman midfielder tallied the game-winner versus Howard and added an assist to earn three points for the tournament … Charlotte moved to 7-0-1 in its last eight home opener after destroying Davidson, 5-1 … George Washington became the latest team to lose to Loyola despite a late surge including a game-tying goal in the 87th minute. Loyola scored again a minute later, however, to beat the Colonials 3-2.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN/SAINT LOUIS MEDIA RELATIONS

Midfielder Kyle Patterson scored the game-winning goal in Saint Louis's 2-1 win over No. 2 Indiana on Saturday.

Amick scores first-career goal in loss

SOCCER from page 8

In games against Vermont and Dartmouth, the Minutemen had first-half advantages which they lost before scoring the game-winner in overtime.

In UMass' six games so far this season, it has scored five goals compared to the eight it has allowed. So it's not only the second-half that the Minutemen struggle to score in. The Minutemen have, however, been outstanding defensively in the first half and in extra sessions, allowing one goal in each.

STARTS AT ONE

Not only did Amick's goal against the Crimson snap a scoreless streak that went on for more than three games worth of soccer, it was also the first of his career.

In the 88th minute, he took a pass from Ofosu in box and slid it home to pull UMass within one.

He has seen action in all but one game this season for the Minutemen and is the only UMass freshman to record a point. Fellow rookie Ben Arikian has played in every game for UMass – including five starts – but hasn't found his way onto the score sheet.

Koch raved about his freshman class prior to the season; he thought that not only could it add depth to his team, but felt certain players possessed the skills to emerge as key players for the Minutemen.

Matt Hess and Chris Vaccaro are the two other freshmen who have appeared in all six games for the Minutemen this season. Neither has had much of an impact in their action.

TOUGH LUCK

UMass and its opponents have essentially taken the same amount of shots through the first games of 2007.

Goalkeeper Zack Simmons has played well but has allowed a few goals that bothered him. Against Vermont, a 48-yard strike found him out of position and sailed over his head. The second goal the Crimson scored was a shot from just outside the penalty area that rolled into the low-left corner. Simmons was visibly upset with himself after the goal and after the game.

Offensively, the Minutemen haven't suffered from bad luck so much as poor execution. Amick's goal may be a positive step from the Minutemen. After the goal, all 11 players on the field appeared determined to tie the game. They fell just short as red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport's free kick attempt sailed just wide and time expired moments later.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons has allowed eight goals in six starts this season. His goals-against average is 1.30.

Wrublesky wins rookie of the week

BY KATHERINE SARASOHN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Jen Wrublesky of Saint Joseph's was named A-10 Rookie of the Week. She scored midway through St. Joe's 1-0 Sept. 14 victory over Virginia Commonwealth.

A-10 Field Hockey

This was the Hawks' first home victory of the 2007 season.

Senior Rebecca Cunfer of St. Joe's (3-4) was named player of the week; Cunfer earned her first shutout of the season in the win over VCU.

On Sept. 16, the Hawks beat Delaware, 2-1, in an upset victory. Senior Brianne Miller scored her first goal of the season in the game. Sophomore Mary Beaman had a second-half penalty stroke which won the game.

WASSERMAN SAVES BILLIKENS

Junior Emily Kassab of Saint Louis scored her first career goal. The Billikens (2-6) beat Missouri State, 1-0, on Sept. 14.

The next day, Saint Louis lost to Robert Morris by a score of 1-0. Goalkeeper Amy Wasserman was strong in both games. Wasserman turned away 15 shots over the weekend.

TOUGH WEEKEND FOR RICHMOND

On Sept. 14, Richmond squared off against No. 8 James Madison. This was the fifth time Richmond played a team in the NFHCA Top 20 poll. The game was close in the first half, but James Madison ended up winning 7-0.

Two days later, the Spiders (1-7) suffered a similar fate against Towson; dropping a 5-2 decision. At halftime, the score sat at 2-2, but the Tigers ran off three consecutive second-half goals to upend the Spiders.

CLIPPED WINGS

Temple lost to No. 7 Penn State, 2-0, on Sept. 12. The Owls' three losses have all come against Top 20 teams (Penn State, Michigan and Albany).

On Sept. 16, Temple, (5-3), beat VCU, 3-1. Ali Lokey, who currently sits second in the A-10 with 13 points on five goals and three assists, kicked the scoring off with a 40th-minute tally. She added a goal on a breakaway in the 53rd minute.

URI FALLS

Rhode Island lost 2-0 to Providence on Sept. 12. Senior M.J. Britt had 11 saves, which marked a season-high for the Rams. Sophomore Jill Powers scored the game-winning goal for the third time this season.

URI defeated Monmouth, 1-0, on Sept. 15. The next day, Rider defeated the Rams at home, 2-1.

LA SALLE SPLITS WEEKEND

Over the weekend, La Salle won once and lost once. On Sept. 14, it lost to Bucknell, 1-0. La Salle had more shots than Bucknell, 15-11, but struggled to beat Bison goalkeeper Diana Bartley. This marked the fourth loss of the season for the Explorers.

On Sept. 16, Kara Harpel and Maria Allegretto each scored a goal for the Explorers. Ellen Axelsen from New Hyde Park, N.Y., recorded three saves, helping La Salle get the win. La Salle defeated Lafayette 2-1. Penn State defeated West Chester, 5-0, on Sept. 14.

Katherine Sarasohn can be reached at ksarasohn@student.umass.edu.

Letorneau, Williams compete for job minutes this season. She started all eight games in the backfield and put two shots on goal. Midfielder Makaela Potts started four out of eight games.

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

Despite not having a start this season, forward Katie Kelly makes the most of her time on the field. She leads all freshmen with two goals, both of them game-winners, for four points. She also leads in shots on goal with seven.

Ariana Cappelli and Christine Dzwill have seen limited playing time. Cappelli saw action in two games, and Dzwill got into one game.

Courtney Mayerick has yet to see any time on the field.

RACE FOR THE STARTING JOB

Sowry continued alternating goalies this past week and both senior Becky Letourneau and sophomore Sarah Williams showed that they want the starting job.

Williams got the start on the road against Siena. She let in an early goal but was near-perfect in the second half. She made one save in the first and did not need to make another save in the entire game. Williams has phenomenal statistics up to this point in the season. Her goals-against average is a nifty 0.68, and her save percentage is an impressive .824. The win over Siena improved her record to 3-1.

Senior Becky Letourneau started in net against BU. She held strong through the first half, only needing to make one save. Despite allowing two goals, she made four saves and impressed Sowry with her play.

"She did pretty well. I think after she was injured on the weekend she came into the game with confidence. I think she was very solid, and she provided great leadership," Sowry said.

She still continues to post great statistics. She has a GAA of 1.35, a save percentage of .722 and a record of 1-3. However, in her four starts, the offense has scored only two goals … Senior midfielder Kara Murphy registered her first point of the season when she assisted junior Erin Parker for the game-tying goal against Siena … Junior Mary Shea also got her first point in 2007 when she rifled a pass to freshman Katie Kelly for the game-winning goal against the Saints.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jsmcgrail@student.umass.edu.

Dicken scores twice, VU tops Lehigh

FOOTBALL from page 8

tle inconsistent; but offensively, I thought we played well."

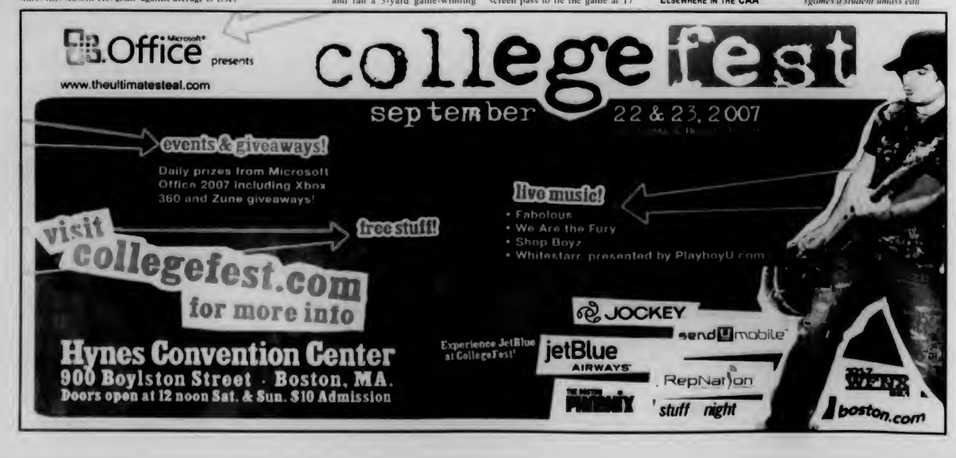
W & M's passing offense ranks No. 1 in the country and ranks second in total offense.

DICKEN CARRIES CATS

Villanova running back Matt Dicken caught a 67-yard touchdown pass to force overtime and ran a 3-yard game-winning touchdown in overtime to defeat Maine, 24-17.

Dicken ran for 112 yards, scoring a touchdown, and caught three balls for 72 yards and a touchdown.

Despite being sacked five times, quarterback Antwon Young completed 16-22 passes for 178 yards, and he rushed for 40 yards.



"Dicken broke a 67-yard screen pass to tie the game at 17 and their kicker missed the field goal with about 17 seconds on the clock," Villanova coach Andy Talley said.

"A short field goal, which I thought was going to be a slam dunk. I thought we were going to lose the game there, but the gods were with us. The ball just went wide, and we had a chance to get into overtime and we got lucky in the overtime."

ELSEWHERE IN THE CAA

Northeastern destroyed Northwestern State, 42-14; quarterback Anthony Orio ran for two scores and threw for two more … No. 10 Delaware beat Rhode Island, 38-9 … No. 9 James Madison easily handled Virginia Military Institute, 45-17. VMI held the ball for 22:19 in the first half but were down 28-0 at halftime.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

								3
4				6		1		7
	7	2			4		8
	4	7						2
1			5		6			9
9						7	6
	3		1			2	7
7		8		3				5
2

ACROSS
1 Careless handwriting
7 Blighted tree
10 Quick swims
14 Inessential matters
15 Affirmative vote
16 Dice toss
17 Dark Chinese tea
18 Portal
20 From the beginning
21 Destroy utterly
23 Mack or Knight
24 Nav. system
25 Benefactor
26 Port and sherry
27 Make a choice
28 Twin suspension
31 Complete
33 Solidify
36 Yield
38 Snake, lizard or turtle
40 Lamb's mom
41 Strung along
43 Winter coat
44 Five-dollar bill
45 NASCAR driver
47 Branches
50 Croc relative
51 Madison Ave. output
54 Intensified
56 Explode
57 Proving false
58 Widen
60 Always
61 Household
62 Appeared threateningly
63 Existed
64 Guitarist Paul
65 Put into a cipher

DOWN
1 Summer simmer
2 Old hag
3 Irritated
4 Declare openly
5 Be victorious
6 Coral-reef encrustant
7 Bit of facial hair
8 Bolshevik leader
9 Damon of Hollywood
10 Timber fungus
11 Davenport man
12 Greek philosopher
13 More crafty
19 Cayenne
22 Concocted
24 Focus of attention
26 Female GI, once
27 Bullring cheer
28 Chill
29 Acknowledge applause
30 Wind dir.
32 Showily adorned
33 Knight's title
34 Wapiti
35 Pekoe or Darjeeling
37 Cub quarters
39 Black goo
42 Tempers and nerves
44 Digit
46 Pantspor
47 Insectivorous mammal
48 Vine
49 More widespread
50 Wish granter
51 Texas shrine
52 Mothered overly
53 Stockholm man
55 Money drawer
56 Legislative coalition
59 Solar wind bit

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

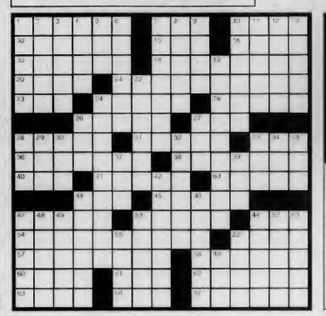
Don't make this hippo any angrier than it is already!

Read the comics every day, eat your vegetables, and keep this Mama Hippo happy.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Genius is more often found in a cracked pot than in a whole one."
-E.B. White

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK



LAST DITCH EFFORT BY JOHN KROES

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Everything is better when it's deep-fried...even love.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Start a new extreme sport called "Running down bumpy hills with scissors."

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Sometimes when you're trying to look tough, you end up just looking constipated.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Imitate Wolverine's berserker attack seven inches away from a total stranger.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
There's a magic whistle in the first level of the library. There is also a fire flower.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Wear a glove, grab your junk and moonwalk it out.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are Odysseus, son of Laertes, who dwells in Ithaca.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Wear a beret and grow a moustache. It won't make you French, but it's a start.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The Pita Pit is run by the mafia. Pay full price, or you'll be sleeping with the pitas.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
The laziest people on earth are pharmacists and people who litter next to a trash can.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Perch in a tree near the campus center, and elbow drop people as they pass under you.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
It may be getting increasingly colder, but turtlenecks are not the answer.

Writing comics is good for your cardiovascular health.
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Pottery Class
Tuesday evenings 6:30-9:00p.m. Sept. 18 - Nov. 6 for 8 weeks. Bring home self-created, finished pieces. Taught by Joy Friedman at the Leverett crafts and arts. To register call 413-548-9673. Email: Joyozuki@crocker.com Class fee: $250 - includes all materials

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Honda Accord Ex 79,000 Miles, Black, 2 Door, 5 speed. Runs/Drives Great. $6,500. 413-455-6236

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd. white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

AUTO FOR SALE

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty $5250. 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Campus Rep Wanted $200.00 per week base salary for semester plus bonus. Flexible schedule, class talks, generate applications email: cchurch@collegepro.com www.collegepro.com

Exp line cook, part-time, nights and weekends, great training program and starting wage. Apply at Eastside Grill, 19 Strong Ave., N'ton or email info@eastsidegrill.com

Delivery Drivers
Delivery from 6pm to 12am.

EMPLOYMENT

Must have a car and a cell phone. $5.00 hour plus tips. Apply in person at The Loose Goose Cafe 1 East Pleasent Street Amherst, MA.

Drivers + Kitchen Help Wanted, must be able to work 20hrs a week. Apply DP Dough Downtown, Amherst

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

STAGE HANDS WANTED
AT FINE ARTS CENTER
$7.50 / HR. VARIABLE SCHEDULE – WEEK DAY AVAILABILITY PREFERRED 9-NOON, 1PM.-5. APPLICATIONS AT PRODUCTION SERVICES RM 146 F.A.C.

EMPLOYMENT

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com. Contact us through site

MOTORCYCLE

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

SERVICES

Artisan Editing: an academic editing service, solely focusing on the dissertation/thesis. Contact: artisanediting@aol.com for information and rates

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH: providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring break 2008! Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations: 800-648-4849/www.ststravel.com

Woodbury commons outlet shopping trip 9/30 cost $40 call Kathie 413-213-0110

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES). We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1,300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SEP 18 2007

SEP 19 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CHRISTIAN C. MILLER/COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Tony Bassett missed both of UMass's games this weekend. It is unknown why he didn't play against Harvard on Sunday and Siena on Friday as UMass coach Sam Koch was unavailable for comment; the Minutemen lost both games on the road.

Bassett absent from lineup in UMass losses

Second-half struggles a problem for UM as A-10 play looms

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior Tony Bassett missed both the Massachusetts men's soccer team's games this past weekend. The Minutemen fell to Siena, 1-0, on Friday and saw a late rally fall short in a 2-1 loss to Harvard on Sunday.

Bassett started all 19 games for the Minutemen in 2006 and had done so in three of the team's four games this season. UMass coach Sam Koch was unavailable for comment on the injury to his central midfielder.

UMass Soccer

He was on the bench in uniform during Sunday's loss at Harvard but did not see any time nor was he seen warming up at any point.

Bassett's lone point on the season came on an assist on junior Prince Ofosu's game-winner against Dartmouth on Sept. 3.

He works primarily in the center of the UMass midfield. Although he does have a scoring touch – he scored three goals in 2006 – he shines in the defensive game. The Minutemen struggled to win 50-50 balls in the midfield against Harvard. While the Crimson held a noticeable height advantage over the Minutemen, Bassett's absence didn't make things easier for UMass.

Freshman Jeff Arn made his season debut in the loss to Siena. Koch reported earlier in the season that the forward suffered a pulled hamstring in training camp and may miss some time.

Arn entered the game in the 69th minute and came out quickly after that in the 77th minute.

SECOND-HALF STRUGGLES

When Stuart Amick beat Harvard goalkeeper Adam Hahn on Sunday, it was the first second-half goal for the Minutemen in 2007.

Opponents had outscored the Maroon and White 4-0 prior to the match with the Crimson. Harvard scored both of its goals in the second half on Sunday before Amick's; the second-half scoring differential now stands at 6-1.

See SOCCER on page 6

JOAN DONEGAN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Erin Parker scored UMass's first goal and her first of the season in Sunday's 2-1 win over Siena in Loudonville, N.Y.

Minutewomen solve late-game woes

Kelly excels coming off bench, King continues hot play in '07

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After three straight losses, the Massachusetts field hockey team got back on track with a win.

UMass traveled to Siena and came home with a 2-1 victory on Sunday. The win evened the Minutewomen's record at 4-4.

The team looks to keep the momentum going as it hits the road to face No. 3 Connecticut on Saturday afternoon.

LATE GAME ADJUSTMENTS

In the three losses, the Minutewomen held strong in the first half but let mental mistakes get the better of them. It was the opposite in the Siena game.

UMass Field Hockey

UMass turned up its defense and not only kept Siena from scoring but also stopped any attack Siena could put together. The defense held Siena to zero shots through the entire second half.

The only offense the Saints could produce came on a penalty corner with no time left in the game. That attempt was promptly stopped by senior defender Kristina DeRosario, who stepped in and stole the ball to end any threat Siena posed.

PUTTING UP NUMBERS

Winning the Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week has not slowed down sophomore Cher King. Since winning the award, King has scored a goal and put six shots on goal. She leads the team in points (11), goals (5), shots on goal (15) and is tied for the lead, with freshman Katie Kelly, in game-winning goals (2).

UTILIZING YOUNG PLAYERS

The Minutewomen have six freshmen on the team. UMass Coach Justine Sowry uses them in different ways, but they are having an impact on the game.

Defender Jamie Bourazeris has played a significant amount of

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Phillips leads W & M past Liberty, Wildcats upset Marshall

CHRISTIAN C. MILLER/COLLEGIAN

William & Mary quarterback Jake Phillips completed 20-of-28 passes for 335 yards and three touchdowns in the Tribe's 48-41 win over Liberty. He also scored the game-winning touchdown in the win.

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

According to Associated Press reports, former New Hampshire backup quarterback Henri "Hank" Hendricks pleaded not guilty on Sept. 10 to murder, assault and other charges in relation to the fatal beating of a professional surfer.

Hendricks is one of five members in a gang accused of beating Emery Kauanui Jr., in the La Jolla area of San Diego on May 24, 2007.

CAA Football

The other four members were charged days after Kauanui's death, but Hendricks was not a suspect until later. Hendricks was charged last week and surrendered to authorities on Sept. 10.

When Hendricks appeared in court that same day, Deputy District Attorney Sophia Roach asked to increase his bail from $750,000 to $2 million. She argued that he is a dangerous person, and it is not the first time he has been alleged of attacking someone. The Deputy Public Defender Richard Gates said to a Superior Court judge that Hendricks wasn't directly involved in Kauanui's death. Judge John S. Einhorn lowered the bail to $500,000 and ordered Hendricks to appear in court on Sept. 14.

The other four defendants in the case have pleaded not guilty. Seth Cravens, 21; Eric House, 20, Orlando Ouna, 22; and Matthew Yanke, 21.

According to witnesses and court papers, Kauanui was knocked down by two or three men, who continually kicked him in the head and the face. When Kauanui got up, Cravens allegedly punched him. Kauanui died in the hospital four days later from the injuries.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

Despite a tough week off the field for UNH, senior quarterback Ricky Santos was able to lead his No. 12 Wildcats to a 48-35 win over Marshall of the Division I Football Bowl Sub-division. Santos was named Colonial Athletic Association Offensive Player of the Week. Santos gained 334 total yards, 45 rushing and 289 in the air. He passed for three touchdowns, completing 23-33 passes with no interceptions. He also scored a rushing touchdown.

Marshall is the third-consecutive BCS opponent to lose to the Wildcats. They defeated Northwestern in 2006, 37-17, and beat Rutgers, 35-24, in 2004.

"The thing that Ricky did better than the first game, he threw balls away instead of trying to make things happen," UNH coach Sean McDonald said during the CAA teleconference. "He also had four scrambles in key third-down situations that got us first downs and kept drives alive. We go as far as he goes. He distributed the ball really well. Two guys had six catches, and another had four. He makes us better every time he's on the field."

Hofstra linebacker Stanley Gutierrez earned CAA Defensive Player of the Week honors for his performance against Albany in a 28-13 victory. He had a career high 15 tackles with six solo stops. He also had an interception in the fourth quarter. Gutierrez now has three interceptions in his career and leads the defense, which is ranked 15th in the nation.

"Stanley Gutierrez is having a great year, that was his best game to date since we've taken over the program – very bright kid, really doing a great job for us in the middle," Hofstra coach Dave Cohen said. "We moved [senior linebacker] Gian Villante to the outside this year to give him a chance to play in space, and Stanley has just responded well and he's our leader for the defense."

OT FOR NOVA AND W & M

William & Mary quarterback Jake Phillips scored on a 1-yard run to triumph over Liberty, 48-41. Phillips completed 20-of-28 passes, throwing for 335 yards and three touchdowns.

W & M, (2-1), kicked a field goal to increase the lead to seven with 7:12 left in regulation. On the next possession for Liberty, quarterback Brock Smith threw an interception. The Liberty defense held W & M in check and forced it to punt, giving the Flames two minutes to tie the score. The Flames drove 71 yards scoring on a 3-yard run from running back Zach Terrell. Smith completed the two-point conversion to tie the game when he hit running back Rashad Jennings in the back of the end zone.

Liberty scored on the second play in overtime on a 25-yard run from Jennings. The Tribe tied the game when Phillips hit tight end Drew Atchison on a 15-yard touchdown pass. The Tribe stuffed the Flames on a fourth-and-one in the second overtime. On the next drive, Phillips used six plays to score the game-winning touchdown.

"We had our hands full, and I thought we played well, especially offensively," W & M coach Jimmye Laycock said. "I think, defensively, we were a lit-

See FOOTBALL on page 6

POZAR, BONEY TOP DOUBLES | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 78 LO: 50 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007

Former congressman speaks at UMass

Encourages campus republicans to engage community, support local candidates

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Current chairman of the Massachusetts Republican party Peter G. Torkildsen encouraged community action and campaigning yesterday during a Republican Club meeting.

"The professors, when I was here, were basically in two groups: liberal democrats and socialists," said Torkildsen, a UMass alumnus and former U.S. Congressman. "They said I should rebel against authority, so I became a Republican."

Around 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday, 15 people crammed into the Republican Club headquarters on the fourth floor of the Student Union building. Amid a plethora of Republican-themed bumper stickers, most notably a magnet on the RSO's mini-fridge with the slogan "Hippies use side door," Torkildsen introduced himself and gave the club an update on what the Massachusetts Republican party has been up to.

The 1982 UMass graduate emphasized the importance of community action, especially in propelling the Republican party to success.

"We're trying to get all the local communities energized again," he said.

As chairman, part of Torkildsen's job is to "groom" and organize Republican candidates, but also volunteers. He encouraged UMass students to not only identify and encourage Republican voters, but also to volunteer and commit time to helping out on a campaign, even if for just one weekend. Throughout his talk, he emphasized how important volunteers and student interns are to candidates.

"[Help out] to the extent you can," he said. "Studies are important, of course, but help out a candidate."

Some current undertakings of the Commonwealth's Republican party include further popularizing Jim Ogonowski, a hopeful candidate for Congress from the 5th district who is scheduled to be in the Oct. 16 election.

Torkildsen also emphasized what the Massachusetts Republican party is doing to beef up their ranks and raise their popularity in the state.

"We are so small a party that if we have a candidate everywhere it will dilute our resources," he said.

Part of their strategy is to pay as much attention as possible to communities that have a strong Republican backing or look promising for the GOP. It is in this way that Torkildsen hopes to create a more cohesive Republican party in Massachusetts.

The Republican Club will be hosting several events and sponsoring more speakers on campus during the rest of the fall semester. These will include Phyllis Schlafly, who will address conservatism and anti-feminism on Oct. 3, and Jonah Goldberg, the editor of National Review Online, who will speak sometime in December. Republican club president Brad DeHumeri also revealed hopes to host Mitt Romney in November or December.

The Republican Club meets every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 423 in the Student Union.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin at student.umass.edu.

DANA CHIVVIS/COLLEGIAN

Peter Torkildsen, shown here with UMass Republican club president Brad DeHumeri, called on campus conservatives to take an active role in local politics yesterday.

Despite high cost, master's degrees on rise

BY ANDY SMITH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

More students than ever are enrolling in graduate study programs at universities around the country, according to a recent article in the New York Times.

Despite the high cost of graduate tuition, students put themselves in a better position for jobs as they finish their education. At private universities, students take out in excess of $50,000 in loans for their graduate education.

"It's an expensive degree, but students have calculated how fast they get their investment back," John J. MacAloon, an associate dean at the University of Chicago, told the New York Times. "And it is beneficial for the university because there is a lot of tuition income to be had."

The number of master's degrees earned in the U.S. has grown 150 percent since 1970, which is twice as fast as the growth of bachelor's and doctorate degrees over the same time span.

According to the Times article, some university officials feel the increase in the level of graduate enrollment has to do with the pressure on students to higher degrees and credentials.

Universities also gain national recognition for their graduate programs not only from the reputation, but from the research and funding opportunities. Schools like the University of Massachusetts

See GRADUATE on page 2

The UMass field hockey team takes a photo with 11-year-old Marissa Factora, a cancer survivor. The Minutewomen have helped the University become the first school to adopt two players as little sisters. For story, see page 8.

Vote for senators today

The Student Government Association is holding senate elections today and Thursday.

Students can vote at any dining commons or at the campus center from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and from 5 to 8 p.m.

Senators are elected representatives of residential areas who bring each area's needs and desires to the senate.

The number of senators is determined by the area's size and ranges from two to six senators, with Southwest North and Southwest South counted separately. Commuter students can elect 14 representatives, although only 11 are on the ballot. Voters may also write in candidates who are not on the lists.

SGA President Aaron Bolved encouraged students to vote.

"Senators are the embodiment of what it means to have a democratic process," he said. "By coming out and voting, you're being proactive about what you want to happen on campus."

-Katie Huston

FOR A LIST OF CANDIDATES, SEE PAGE 2

9/11 has 'regional impact' only

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Sept. 11 attacks have not had the same impact on young Americans as other historical watershed events, according to the work done by a University of Massachusetts professor.

Marketing professor Charles Schewe recently released research which claims the events of Sept. 11, 2001 may not have had the same impact on those coming of age at the time as did the attack on Pearl Harbor, or the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

Pearl Harbor, the Great Depression, the Kennedy assassination, and the Watergate scandal are examples of generational cohorts, Schewe said. Each event had a strong and lasting impact on individuals coming of age (17 to 25 years old) at the time.

"[Pearl Harbor] had a national impact and it affected people thereafter," he said, noting the planting of victory gardens and the rationing of food and goods. He also points out that people who came of age during the Great Depression are still saving their money in case the economy bottoms out once more, even though most are at the ends of their lives.

Sept. 11, in contrast, had a "more regional impact," affecting those on the East Coast, in New York City, and in Washington, D.C. the most.

"People in Los Angeles were not impacted like people in New York," Schewe said.

Today, Schewe says that for many young people the attacks of Sept. 11 have been linked with the war in Iraq, even more so than with the war in Afghanistan. This diminishes the solitary impact of Sept. 11, according to Schewe.

Professor Charles Schewe analyzed Sept. 11 in comparison with other generational events.

Schewe said a skeptical view of the world is common in young adults today, but said it is not necessarily a direct result of Sept. 11.

"Baby boomers jumpstarted this questioning of authority, so their children are 'naturally more likely to question,'" he said.

One area where the effects of Sept. 11 are still visible nationally, Schewe points out, is at the airports, where security is still a much higher priority than it was before the attacks.

Local bioethanol company founded by UM professor

Q microbe used in new biofuel process

BY LEE WAICUS

The University of Massachusetts is making its mark in the green movement by researching and developing new ways to help convert biomass into ethanol.

Microbiology professor Sanjay Tiwari is the founder and chief scientific advisor of the new Amherst-based biofuel technology company Siuni thanol.

Started in October of 2006, Siuni thanol is a company based in laboratories on campus at UMass and a second independent facility in Amherst.

"The company is at an early stage that has the potential to develop a technology to greatly benefit the environment," said Upchurch.

Investors in the company include Verasun Energy, one of the largest investors of renewable fuel.

"The benefit long term is independence from foreign oil, CO2 reduction, and support of agriculture as a means of a transportation fuel," said Jeff Sharp, the CEO of Siuni thanol.

Sharp said UMass benefited by being a partner in the company as students and consultants from fields including business, engineering and microbiology would be hired to work for Siuni thanol.

The key to the new process is a bacterium nicknamed "Q microbe," a strain of the soil-dwelling bacterium Clostridium phytofermentans. Q microbe was isolated near the Quabbin Reservoir in central Massachusetts by lab research assistant Thomas Wiznia.

The microbe efficiently converts biomass to ethanol in a carbon-neutral process without going through several of the usual enzyme treatment steps that exist in the bioethanol producing process.

The production steps through which bioethanol is produced include pre-treating the plant material (switchgrass or chemically treated biomass, treating the biomass with enzymes, adding fermenting organisms, and finally recovering and purifying the ethanol.

The Q microbe is unique in its ability to live in environments without oxygen and its ability to consume and break down cellulose – a tough molecule that is the key ingredient in biomass – more easily.

"We hope this project will grow at the University and flourish as a commercial component," said Sharp.

Lee Waicus can be reached at lwaicus at student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 12

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exner
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McGill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Stigein
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Deshchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toon Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEARS. THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1905, AND FINALLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914. SEE THE WHITE COLLEGIAN IN 1968. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ONLINE SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@daily-collegian.com

Florida student Tasered during Kerry speech

By TRAVIS REED
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Video of police Tasering a persistent questioner of Sen. John Kerry became an Internet and TV sensation Tuesday, generating fierce debate about free speech and the motives of the college student involved – a known prankster who often posts practical jokes online.

University of Florida President Bernie Machen said Monday's takedown, in which the student loudly yelled, "Don't Tase me, bro!" was "regretful." He asked for a state probe of campus police actions and placed two officers on leave.

The student in the middle of it all, 21-year-old Andrew Meyer, had no comment after he was released on his recognizance on various charges following a night in jail.

But details from his online writings and videos raised the question of whether his harangue during the forum was genuine or some kind of stunt.

Meyer, a senior telecommunications major from the Fort Lauderdale suburb of Weston, has a Web site featuring several homemade videos. In one, he stands in a street with a sign that says "Harry Dies" after the latest Harry Potter book was released. In another, he acts like a drunk in a bar while trying to pick up a man dressed in drag.

The site also has what is called a "disorganized diatribe" attributed to Meyer that criticizes the Iraq war, the news media for not covering the conflict enough and the American public for paying too much attention to celebrity news.

Another site had pictures of Meyer licking a woman's face and making a suggestive pose as he stood behind a fake cow. The site listed his activities as "getting wasted" and "being ridiculous."

Machen would not say whether the university had any previous conflicts with Meyer but indicated some such issues would come up in the investigation. He declined to elaborate and would not say whether he thought the latest episode was a prank.

Various videos of the arrest had been viewed more than 400,000 times on YouTube as of Tuesday afternoon and were in heavy rotation on TV news.

About 100 students gathered on campus Tuesday to plan protests, some wearing T-shirts denouncing police violence.

Benjamin Dictor, a liberal arts junior speaking for the group, called for the officers to be disciplined. Tasers to be banned on campus and the charges dropped.

"For a question to be met with arrest, not to mention physical violence, is completely unacceptable in the United States, especially in the halls of education," Dictor said.

University police said in a news release that officers had been summoned by the forum's sponsors to escort Meyer from the building, though organizers disputed that and said his microphone was cut off after he used a sexually explicit term.

Police added that Meyer was Tasered because he resisted when officers were attempting to place him in handcuffs.

Andrew Meyer, a 21-year-old student at the University of Florida, spent a night in jail after he was subdued by campus police for questioning Senator John Kerry.

SGA candidates

CENTRAL
Jason Behrens
Kyle Bernier
Katelyn Canty
Andrew Dawson
Rudy Mahotiere
Alain Stephen
Monica Sweeney

NORTHEAST
William Bartow
Maria Payano

ORCHARD HILL
Trevor Beck
Tom Devine
Isaac Fairbank
Patrick Holly
Constantinos Stivaros

SOUTHWEST NORTH
Tiffany Aleman
Michael Anthony
Marie W. Bertrand
Jason Cunningham
Cheryl Feinstein
Shaun Robinson

SOUTHWEST SOUTH
Kevin Bolduc
Yannick Brookes
Steve Gerome
Colleen McKiernan
Amanda Wilson

SYLVAN
Peter Nalepa
Kenneth Scriboni
Evan Turell

NORTH
Write-ins only

COMMUTER
Devin Ashe
Scott Dresser
Jeremy Gibbs
Matthew Gwilliam
Nathan Lane
Matthew Morin
Elizabeth Protzman
Igor Romashko
Vanessa Snow
Shea Swavely
Jonathan Werner

Nebraska state senator files lawsuit against Christian God

By NATE JENKINS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The defendant in a state senator's lawsuit is accused of causing untold death and horror and threatening to cause more still. He can be sued in Douglas County, the legislator claims, because He's everywhere.

State Sen. Ernie Chambers sued God last week. Angered by another lawsuit he considers frivolous, Chambers says he's trying to make the point that anybody can file a lawsuit against anybody.

Chambers says in his lawsuit that God has made terrorist threats against the senator and his constituents, inspired fear and caused "widespread death, destruction and terrorization of millions upon millions of the Earth's inhabitants."

The Omaha senator, who skips morning prayers during the legislative session and often criticizes Christians, also says God has caused "fearsome floods ... horrendous hurricanes, terrifying tornadoes."

He's seeking a permanent injunction against the Almighty.

Chambers said the lawsuit was triggered by a federal suit filed against a judge who recently barred words such as "rape" and "victim" from a sexual assault trial.

The accuser in the criminal case, Tory Bowen, sued Lancaster District Judge Jeffre Cheuvront, claiming he violated her free speech rights.

Chambers said Bowen's lawsuit is inappropriate because the Nebraska Supreme Court has already considered the case and federal courts follow the decisions of state supreme courts on state matters.

"This lawsuit having been filed and being of such questionable merit creates a circumstance where my lawsuit is appropriately filed," Chambers said. "People might call it frivolous but if they read it they'll see there are very serious issues I have raised."

U.S. District Judge Richard Kopf, in an order last week, expressed doubts about whether Bowen's lawsuit "has any legal basis whatsoever" and said sanctions may be imposed against Bowen and her attorneys if they fail to show cause for the lawsuit.

The Associated Press usually does not identify accusers in sex-assault cases, but Bowen has allowed her name to be used publicly because of the issue over the judge's language restrictions.

Cheuvront declared a mistrial in the sexual assault trial in July, saying pretrial publicity made it impossible to gather enough impartial jurors.

Senator Ernie Chambers of Nebraska is suing God for creating natural disasters and causing death and destruction.

Universities take advantage of demand for graduate degrees which thrive on research studies, are able to offer prospective graduate students something they can not get at other universities.

GRADUATE from page 1

Because some students will have a graduate degree on their resume, they will have more opportunity to be accepted to a high-salary job somewhere, which would trim the burden of the loans they owe.

"Master's programs are the most obvious targets of opportunity," said George L. Mehaffy, a vice president of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, in the Times article. "The degrees are in high demand, and this is an optimal time to enter or expand the market."

Another advantage for universities is that they are not required to provide dormitories and dining halls for graduate students, as they typically do not live on campus. For universities that have doctoral programs, adding a master's program means another rise in tuition dollars without having to pay much for resources like water and electricity the students use in their dormitories.

The Daily Collegian could not obtain graduate enrollment records for UMass Amherst dating back as far as 1980. However, according to the Graduate School Factbook, the total number of enrollment in graduate programs at UMass has risen slightly from 4,628 in 2002 to 5,067 in 2006.

The UMass Amherst Graduate Studies Department offers 50 programs that lead to a doctorate degree and 68 that lead to a master's degree. An out-of-state student taking over nine credits in a graduate program has to pay about $10,000 per year in tuition and fees.

UMass Graduate Dean John Mullin could not be reached for comment in time for publication.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu

Live free and write for the Collegian
News@DailyCollegian.com

FROM THE WHITE HOUSE TO UMASS
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007
5 – 9 PM · BERKSHIRE DC

AMERICAS FORMER EXECUTIVE CHEF TO THE WHITE HOUSE, WALTER SCHEIB, WILL VISIT UMASS TO PREPARE FAVORITE FOOD OF THE FIRST FAMILIES.

FIRST COURSE
Corn and Scallop Chowder (Bush Family)
Sweet Potato Soup with Curried Cream (Chelsea Clinton)

SECOND COURSE
Fiesta Inaugural Lemon BBQ Chicken (West Lawn BBQ)
Salmon over Sorrel Pears with Acorn Squash Sauce

STATE DINNER
B.B.Q Baby Back Ribs with Fire Crackers Dipping Sauce (Bill Clinton)
Penne Pasta Salad with Broccoli, Tomatoes and Lemon Dressing (Bush Twins)

DESSERT
Granny Smith, Cranberry and Goat cheese Tart (Holiday Favorite)
Pear and Ginger Bread (White House Favorite)

"PRIVATE BRIEFING" IN THE BERKSHIRE ROOM FROM 7:00 – 7:45 PM

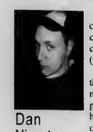
WALTER SCHEIB WILL SHARE ANECDOTES FROM HIS FIFTEEN YEARS AT THE WHITE HOUSE FROM A UNIQUE VANTAGE POINT, THE KITCHEN

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC $11.00 CASH AND FREE TO STUDENTS ON MEAL PLAN

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

2007 Grand Prize Winner

SEP 19 2007



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." – Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Following the example of Davy Jones

Dan Nicastro

Video tape is a wonderful thing. It can help with school projects, it can catch precious family moments and it can even be used to win football games (just kidding; please don't lynch me).

Best of all, video tape helps to capture things public officials probably should not have said. While politicians and other public figures generally find visual media helpful in spreading their political ideology, more often than not, constant media surveillance comes back to bite them in the proverbial ass. After much thought, I believe I've found a solution inspired by the holiday we celebrate every year on this date: Talk Like a Pirate Day.

We live in a world where – thanks to Hallmark – every day is some sort of celebration of an overly specialized group of individuals or industries. Case in point: there is a "sweetest day" to celebrate American candymakers, or perhaps you'd like to shop QVC for the ever-important "Christmas in July" holiday. But amid the sea of fake, commercialized holidays one has risen above the fray. Today, Sept. 19, is "International Talk Like a Pirate Day."

With all this in mind, I'd like to solve the problem of loose political lips sinking ships (so to speak) by suggesting politicians heed the lessons of this important holiday and talk like swashbuckling gentlemen o' fortune when addressing the media.

There are several reasons why this is a public relations windfall. First of all, who doesn't love pirates? Actually, there are probably lots of people who don't like pirates, but that's because they're thinking of "real" pirates. We're not talking about real pirates here – this is the pirate-speak of Captain Jack Sparrow, Davy Jones or you and your drunk friends. It's all the fun of pirating without the hassle and mess of pillaging. Everybody wins.

If politicians are communicating in pirate–speak, the American people will not be able to understand any of the horrible verbal gaffes these public officials are making.

But just look at the pirate translation: "Yar, victory be made by good, grand exit strategy and 'tis important th' Cap'n of this nation be explaining t' us what thar exit strategy be. Arrr." See? Not only does speaking like a pirate hide the fact that President Bush has fallen into the same trap for which he chided Clinton, it adds the possibility of "props" during press conferences. Wearing a tri-corner hat while speaking would help to take the focus of attention off the content of the speech and place it instead on what in hell President (or then-Governor) Bush was wearing on top of his head.

Still not convinced? How about some more recent examples? We all know the woes of Larry "Wide Stance" Craig. His bathroom escapades have forced him to plead guilty to a misdemeanor and to resign his seat in the U.S. Senate. Take his most famous quip from this whole episode: "I am not gay, nor have I ever been gay." Translated into pirate, the words take on a whole new meaning: "I be nay the lover of scallywags nor be havin' I 'erebeen the lover of thar sprogs."

In plain English, this phrase sounds bigoted, defensive and unintelligent. However, all the horribly offensive connotations disappear when the phrase is turned into pirate-speak. Instead of a self-hating homophobe, Larry Craig becomes a man who loves neither scallywags nor sprogs. And honestly, who can blame him?

John Kerry is probably one of the politicians in most dire need of this transition to pirate-speak. His long winded, confusing quotations cemented his reputation as a "flip-flopper" and eventually cost him the 2004 presidential election.

Let's take his most famous example: "I actually did vote for the $87 billion before I voted against it." What? There's no way anyone could make sense out of that. But when translated, the phrase becomes: "Yarr, I be a voter for th' 87 cargo holds o' dubloons before I be against 't, ya fifty fivered bilge rats." It still makes no sense, but now it's in pirate-speak, so who cares?

It's too bad Donald Rumsfeld resigned his post, because his long winded, nonsensical diatribes were the closest thing we had to pirate-speak. Oh well, I think this suggestion could usher in a new era in politics. If no one can understand political leaders, no one will be able to ridicule them or use their words against them.

What we need in politics is more theater and less explanation of previous confusing, misleading or hypocritical statements. It's much easier to gloss over and repeat the phrase "Shiver me timbers, th' victory be ours," than to explain and account for the phrase "mission accomplished."

Dan Nicastro be a scurvy weekly scribe. He 'kin be reached at the bot'm of Davy Jones' locker, or at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

Why tamper with a good thing?

Anthony David Rueli

When I tell people that I am a senior at UMass still living on campus in the dorms, the most common response I receive is usually, very simply, "Why?"

I try not to get into it, especially with people I don't know very well. I usually shake my head or roll my eyes and give them a non-answer like, "Uh, you know…"

Afterward, however, I always get a bit of a disconcerting feeling about the confused looks I get, or the wrinkled eyebrows, or even looks of disgust. Why is it such a horrible thing to most people to stay on campus for the entirety of one's college career?

So, if you've ever asked someone why they remain on campus as a senior and been waved away or non-answered, this might give you a little insight on people and their housing decisions.

There's a plan that most people are supposed to follow with their housing at UMass. Everyone lives on campus as a freshman, and most people do as well as a sophomore. As a junior, the student is expected to find a place off campus. If they don't, they'd better start looking for one for their senior year, otherwise…

Well, otherwise what? I guess the only negative thing I can think of about remaining on campus is the aforementioned questions and strange looks.

During one's freshman and sophomore years, this place becomes your home. It's safe (well, you know what I mean), cozy, and familiar. Your food is there for you. Your electricity and heating are all taken care of, as are cable (premium!) and high-speed Internet.

What I want to answer when people ask me why I still live on campus as a senior is, "Why would you ever want to move off campus?" Hell, I wish I could live on campus all my life. I'd never have to worry about grocery shopping or any of the above utilities, just pay a yearly bill.

It seems to me that as students come to college, they get their first sense of independence. It's a wild feeling, living outside of your home for maybe the first time ever; I don't think anyone would dispute that.

"Why would you ever move off campus?"

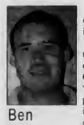
Then, when looking at their off-campus friends, they begin to feel like children all over again, living in a place that's designed only for students. RAs begin to seem like parents and the dorms like prisons. This begins the rush to move out to gain even more independence.

Again…why? For the rest of our lives, we'll be living "off campus," so to speak. Whether it's in an apartment, a house, or on the street, you've got to look after yourself. No one's gonna have your back 24/7 in the real world. Why not live it up in a huge hotel for students only while you still have the chance?

Another reason people feel the need to move off campus is so they can hold grand house parties. Excuse me for being naïve, but I don't see why one would want to accept massive amounts of strangers into their home to drink all their alcohol, make a huge mess, and steal things.

I'm not saying anything against house parties; they are indeed far superior to anything that could be held at a dorm. It's just that when I'm at a house party, I want to be the one drinking all the alcohol, making a huge mess, and stealing things, not the one who has to worry about it (and, God bless them, clean up after it the next day).

Another common complaint about the dorms is living with a roommate. This problem is easily solved by the time you are a junior or a senior by simply applying for a single. Believe me, if I can get one (with my lengthy, multi-paged list of transgressions), you sure can.



Granted, watching more and more of my friends from freshman year disappear off campus has been a bit depressing, but we do our best to stay in contact. I guess losing touch with friends is going to become even more of a problem when we graduate, so why not start dealing with it now anyway?

It's also worth noting that there are quite a few seniors still living on campus. I've come across many in my own dorm.

It may seem exciting your junior or senior year to move off campus. But there are plenty of reasons for someone – even a senior – to stick around. Now, next time you come across a senior still living on campus, maybe you won't need to ask them why.

Anthony David Rueli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at arueli@student.umass.edu

A move in the wrong direction

Ben Duffy

The planned attack on the integrity of General David Petraeus materialized, just as I said that it would.

Petraeus, the highest U.S. commander in Iraq, delivered his assessment of the situation in the combat zone to Congress last week, while the so-called "anti-war" left executed its defensive plan magnificently. They had their talking points already typed and ready to go, so there wasn't a moment's delay in responding dishonestly to Petraeus's generally positive testimony.

MoveOn.org set Petraeus in its crosshairs before he had even uttered a word before Congress. On the day of his testimony, the group ran a full page ad in the New York Times entitled, "General Petraeus or General Betray Us?" By suggesting that the general would "betray us," MoveOn.org essentially called him a traitor. MoveOn.org and company called a patriotic man with nearly thirty years of military service a "traitor" because he didn't deliver the dismal appraisal of the Iraq War they had wanted.

Nearly every word of the advertisement can be easily refuted by facts. The advertisement begins, "Every independent report on the ground situation in Iraq shows that the surge strategy has failed." Not only can I point to independent reports that contradict this assertion, but I can do one better. I can name two sources that are decidedly liberal and "anti-war" that are now begrudgingly admitting some success.

The liberal Brookings Institution admits that violence is down. "All major categories of violence have been trending downward over the course of the year, according to most primary data sources, be they American, Iraqi or nongovernmental," said Michael O'Hanlon, the senior author of the Brookings Institution's Iraq Index.

The German magazine "Der Spiegel" also shocked me with a recent article called "Baghdad and Babylon" about the improving situation in Iraq. I've lived three years in Germany. I don't think I'd ever seen a "Der Spiegel" article about the Iraq War that wasn't seething with desire for American defeat.

MoveOn.org set Petraeus in its cross–hairs before he had even uttered a word before Congress.

The first positive report from "Der Spiegel" that I have ever read appeared this August. The article contains so many juicy quotes about American success that it's hard to pick just one. "Ramadi is an irritating contradiction of almost everything the world thinks it knows about Iraq – it is proof that the U.S. military is more successful than the world wants to believe. Ramadi demonstrates that large parts of Iraq…are essentially pacified today."

All independent sources believe that the surge has failed? Bunk.

MoveOn.org's advertisement pushes the limits of mendacity even further: "Yet the General claims a reduction in violence. That's because, according to the New York Times, the Pentagon has adopted a bizarre formula for keeping tabs on violence. For example, deaths by car bombs don't count." MoveOn.org's website cites liberal columnist Paul Krugman as its source. Note to MoveOn.org: columnists are not sources, and Krugman's "facts" should not be taken at face value. Contrary to what MoveOn.org says, their source was not "The New York Times," but rather Paul Krugman, whose "facts" are at odds with what the NYT has actually reported.

If MoveOn.org hadn't taken Paul Krugman's word as Gospel, they would have read this Sept. 8 NYT story: "Victims from car bombs are treated as sectarian casualties if the attack appears to be directed at a sectarian or ethnic group…Casualties that result from fighting between groups…however, are not classified as sectarian, as they are the result of clashes between two Shiite organizations. But victims of all car bomb attacks…are included in the overall civilian casualty count."

That's right: all car bomb victims are calculated as casualties. So MoveOn.org got that wrong too.

The advertisement continues: "The Washington Post reported that assassinations only count if you're shot in the back of the head – not the front." MoveOn cites a September 6th article from Karen DeYoung as its source. Anyone who actually read the article however, would see that DeYoung did not say any such thing: "Intelligence analysts computing aggregate levels of violence against civilians for the NIE puzzled over how the military designated attacks as combat, sectarian or criminal, according to one senior intelligence official in Washington. 'If a bullet went through the back of the head, it's sectarian,' the official said. 'If it went through the front, it's criminal.'"

Keep in mind that DeYoung's source is identified only as a "senior intelligence official." Nonetheless, the classification system described here does not ignore people shot through the front of the head in statistics of total violence. It just doesn't classify them as victims of "sectarian violence."

MoveOn.org's pre-emptive strike against the general's honor was carried out because they couldn't bear to hear positive news from Iraq. They placed the advertisement so that people would wake up on the morning of Petraeus's testimony with ample warning not to believe a word of it.

MoveOn's "defeat at all costs" approach is getting old. With prior knowledge that Patraeus's testimony was going to annihilate their argument that the war in Iraq is lost, they moved quickly to annihilate the character of a lifelong soldier. They used "facts" that weren't supported by their sources and came to conclusions that couldn't stand on their own. MoveOn's behavior is reprehensible.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu i'M not interested

The iPod: everybody's got one. You've probably even got one. The innovative idea of being able to carry around more stolen music than you probably even know was the biggest marketing success of our generation.

Devon Courtney

Apple pulled it off; they got virtually everyone within the young consumer demographic to pay an obscene amount of money for something that – let's face it – is completely impractical.

You're probably a little bit upset. You're probably saying to yourself, "Hey, it's not impractical! I didn't get ripped off! You're an idiot!" But let's face facts. You probably spent between 200 and 300 dollars on something that would have cost only half of what you paid, if only you had decided you didn't want a lowercase "i" in front of it. And practicality? I'll bet my parietal lobe that you don't even know 50,000 songs.

Guess what? Apple's doing it all over again. Maybe you've heard of a trendy new product called the iPhone. I'll bet double or nothing that you probably want one of those too. On top of it all, this is what really gets me; you probably don't even know why.

Ignoring the obvious fact that they're reselling you two products which you already own (an iPod and a cellular telephone), they're counting on the fact that you, the brainless consumer, are willing to part with $500 for a device that you have no idea what it does, all the while with a stupid-looking grin on your face.

Most people, from trendy Abercrombie-wearing party boys to ditzy, disoriented go-go girls collectively flip their lids when someone pulls out an iPhone. Every time I see someone with an iPhone, I literally roll my eyes and count down from three seconds, each time reaching "one" and instantly hearing some half-witted automaton croon with envy, "Oh my gawd, is that an iPhone?"

The last time I asked somebody why she wanted one, she told me she wanted to have a phone that played music and videos and "other stuff." Now, I have a cellular telephone that does that, and I didn't pay a damned thing for it. That's right, it was free. The $500 dollars I saved by having something equivalent that didn't cost me anything? I spent it on wings, stiff drinks, women, and tuition for next semester – you know, things that won't be obsolete in two years.

Guess what? Apple's doing it all over again.

That's another thing. Apple doesn't stop ripping you off after you fork over your 500 dollars for the device itself. According to Wireless Tech Magazine, the highway robbery continues with all the iPhone's unnecessary functions that you end up paying monthly fees for. In their article, they illustrate with charts and graphs that if you activate all of the completely unneeded features that an iPhone is capable of, you will end up paying in total roughly $6,000 every two years to operate it. I don't know about you, but I definitely don't have even half of that sum just lying around in a cell phone slush fund.

What if you don't want to pay that much? That's fine. AT&T has a whole plethora of service plans for iPhone owners (three). The smallest plan in the trio – which involves minimal minutes, basic texting, data for e-mail and Web browsing, and video messaging capability – you'll end up paying $59.99 per month before fees. Throw in a mandatory two-year contract, a mandatory $36 activation fee, and your total (according to figures found on Gizmodo.com) is just over $2,000.

What reasons are left to own one? You might want a unique status symbol; you would probably purchase one for the same reason people pursue BMW's, crystal chandeliers, lawn gnomes, trophy wives, or flamingos. You might think the touch screen is a nifty quirk, yeah, it's cutting edge technology, all right. My prediction is that it'll get old pretty quickly, and that by itself, that feature won't be worth the dear price you've paid.

When it's all said and done and you still want an iPhone, I'm afraid there's no hope left for you. If you've got the money and you want the attention that it will bring you for a brief period of time (approximately the same amount of time it will take for other cell phone manufacturers to copy the iPhone design), then your main reason to get one will be "just because." And to the Apple Corporation, that reason is plenty.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

For the record:

A September 14th column by Teresa Franco entitled "Misplaced discrimination" inaccurately described two men stopped by airport security as Muslims. The men were Sikhs.

Write letters to the editor!
Respond to what we print:

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

SEP 19 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hardcore plays Mercy

Aspiring local bands unite for a night of metal rock

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Correspondent

Anyone who has lived in Western Massachusetts for a while can talk about the diverse music it has been generating for decades. Folk, psychedelic, pop-rock, indie, metal – it seems the residents of this side of the state will never have a chance to complain about a lack of fresh new music to jam to.

This past Saturday showcased the most promising and aspiring of the hardcore music scene. Punk hardcore bands from all around the area came to the MERCYhouse Church on North Pleasant Street to play the biggest event around these parts, the Western Massachusetts Hardcore (WMHC) Festival, to a crowd of over 100 kids.

This may not sound like much to the traditional concertgoer, who usually pays upward of $40 for a ticket and stands in an audience of thousands in a gigantic arena, but this local festival is a great opportunity for the lucky bands who earn a slot on it. The 10 bands that appeared on the bill included Beneath Dying Embers, A Life of Chaos, Where I Stand, Bad Days, There Was Change, Pressures On, Five Across The Eyes, Give em' Hell!, Shoot to Kill and Hands In, who headlined the fest and also released their first full-length CD, "Against The Storm" on Frequency Deleted Records.

Beneath Dying Embers is a prime example of one of the hopeful young bands who desire to follow along the same track as bands like Killswitch Engage. It's a metal hardcore band from Westfield that earned a slot on the lineup at the festival, which was also the day of their demo release. Allen, lead guitarist of Beneath Dying Embers, cites Killswitch as one of their biggest inspirations.

Although Beneath Dying Embers' performance was not the band the crowd was itching to see,

See HARDCORE on page 5

Five Across The Eyes, a four-piece band from Holyoke, Mass., has been together since 1999. Their energy-packed performance was a highlight at the Western Massachusetts Hardcore Festival last Saturday.

Kerouac's 'Road' turns 50

Author's adventure classic looks back at the 'Beat Generation'

By Steve Paul
McClatchy Newspapers

The road narrative has been a staple of American literature from Lewis-and-Clark days to Cormac McCarthy's most recent novel.

One of the most enduring, if not always endearing, accounts of men in motion is Jack Kerouac's "On the Road." The hipster classic turns 50 on Sept. 5, and even at that ripe age it's still mythic, still vital.

Young people still find inspiration in this "Beat Generation" anthem, if not in its movable, liquid feasting then in the sense of self-enlightenment it yearns to achieve.

"'On the Road' is one of those books that every generation discovers without fail," says Lisa Birman, an Australian who directs the summer writing program named for Kerouac at the Naropa University in Boulder, Colo.

Jack Kerouac would've turned 85 this year had he not succumbed to alcohol in 1969. He was 47 when he died, sad and bitter, archly conservative, living with his mother and befuddled by the lost connections to his past. He was never comfortable with the fame that "On the Road" brought, nor with the way he and his writing were mostly misunderstood.

Kerouac was born into a French-Canadian family in Lowell, Mass., in 1922. In 1940 he entered Columbia University in New York on a football scholarship, but that didn't last, and he entered a period of odd jobbing at gas stations, newspapers, diners, even the Merchant Marines as he wrote short stories and a novel.

In the mid-1940s he met and befriended two fellow outsider writers, the poet Allen Ginsberg and William S. Burroughs, a laconic type who opted or life on its exploratory, philosophical edges.

They and others who joined their circle fed on one another's anxieties, enthusiasms and existential truth-seeking at a time when the dawn of the nuclear age seemed to have changed everything.

So what was "On the Road?"

Kerouac began writing it 60 years ago. He conceived it as the record of a series of road trips across the big American landscape. On many of those journeys, Kerouac was joined by the person or the spirit of one Neal Cassady, a veteran Denver car thief, thrill seeker and swaggering "holy goof."

In April 1951 Kerouac sat at his typewriter for three solid weeks, spewing out tales of hitchhiking, rail-riding, motoring, jazzing and juicing in one long paragraph, single-spaced, on thin sheets of paper fastened together to make a scroll 120 feet long. Even after revising the manuscript, six years went by before Viking published the book.

Yet, in all these years I first read the book as a teen in the late 1960s, it never occurred to me that Kerouac's name could be comfortably mentioned in the same sentence with Hilly Graham's.

Mysticism of one kind or another including that achieved in a spontaneous rush of prose is a hallmark of Beat literature, even if it does cause some critics to cramp up. (Think of Truman Capote's dismissal of "On the Road" as being less writing than typing.)

Yet, Kerouac clearly had God on his mind, too. And that in part may explain the funk in which he lived his last years, during those fabled, flower-powered 1960s, when rebellion reigned and God had been declared dead.

The scroll version offers Kerouac's unmistakable voice the yawl and yawp of American language unspooling uninhibitedly in the sullen night of the soul. This "On the Road" will introduce you to the very same "gone girls" and "sordid hipsters" that populated the book as published in 1957.

"One feels closer to the more palpable psycho-physical energy of Kerouac," says Anne Waldman, poet and co-founder (with Ginsberg) of Naropa's Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics. "The pulse of it, the nuances, the authentic, 'original' experience is felt here in the surge of the one long paragraph, one long jazz 'note' if you will."

Other than occasional trims, paragraphing and minor revisions, the difference between the scroll and "On the Road" as we've known it is Kerouac's use of real names. So Dean Moriarty is Neal Cassady, Bull Lee is Burroughs, Carlo Marx is Ginsberg and Sal is, of course, Jack.

And thus we can begin to wonder and debate which version of the book is closer to the raw truth, if not memoir truth or nonfiction truth as transformed into a kind of fiction.

No matter that Ginsberg believed in the notion of "first thought, best thought" and Kerouac made his "spontaneous bop prosody," we've long known that both adhered to the contradictory idea that all writing is revision.

The scroll itself became a pop-culture gaudie in 2001 when it went up for auction at Christie's in New York. Jim Irsay, owner of the Indianapolis Colts football team, bought it for more than $2 million and has displayed it around the country in recent years. The new book, prefaced with four hefty essays, adds to its legitimacy as an icon and an investment.

The Beat Generation's classic anthem "On the Road" by Jack Kerouac celebrated its 50th anniversary this September.

Fashion designers gear up for spring

By Reece Coppolino
Collegian Columnist

Fashion is constantly evolving, making it one of the world's most complex, demanding and competitive industries. The leaves have barely fallen off of the tree branches around campus, but designers have already marched their 2008 spring designs down the runway.

Although some of us may feel overwhelmed by this fast-paced lifestyle, we must admit that no one can serve up a fresh new season of avant-garde trends faster than in a true New York minute.

At the start of every September, the streets of Manhattan begin to bustle with notable fashion designers, prospective buyers, and gussied-up socialites. New York's Fashion Week begins to take flight off the runway. The 14-year-old event provides designers with the opportunity to preview their latest collection for the approaching spring season. Sponsored by Mercedes-Benz this year, Bryant Park was converted into an enormous fashion showcase. The eight-acre park was crowded with tents that housed full runways, seating, lighting and sound systems, and backstage fitting rooms.

With the help of captivating lighting effects and a sharp soundtrack, models stride down the runway depicting their designer's unique fashion philosophy, inspiration, and signature vision.

Michael Kors showcased his concept called "Sand Chic," with splashes of candy-colored swimsuits, frilly embellishments, and a modern take on cashmere sweaters. He summed up his collection as "strident, sexy American style with a sporty edge," with a bit of inspiration from the work of Georges Seurat.

Diane Von Furstenberg, president of the Council of Fashion Designers of America and a participating designer, drove her collection around the term, escapism. Free-flowing draped fabrics, dramatic tropical colors, and oversized prints emerged on the runway.

"It's all about freedom," she said backstage after a successful show. "Freedom for a woman to live her fantasy."

While some designers decided to take a louder approach, others chose a softer side. Ultimate femininity was achieved in BCBG Max Azria's collection with the use of light, gentle fabrics including, tulle and organza.

Leatrice Eiseman, executive director of the Pantone Color Institute, described the overall color palette of spring 2008 as "perfectly reflecting the cheerfulness of the season." She claimed "stabilizing neutrals combined with pops of brighter colors to create unique, distinctive looks are the basis for a great spring and summer wardrobe."

Pantone predicts that the color palette of spring 2008 will include golden olive, toasted beige, iris purple, strawberry red, dusty rose, egg yolk, sage green, cantaloupe orange, silvery gray, ocean blue, and buttery sage. The color experts believe this playful palette will provide "endless exploration and creative combinations." Think rainbow sorbet!

As Fashion Week progressed, prominent new styles emerged, while the dress continued to remain a high priority item for spring 2008. Oversized prints, as showcased in Von Furstenberg's collection, were popping up on numerous runways from African to abstract. Stripes and polka dots received the most attention.

A feminine and frilly take on embellishments have been expressed in the form of ruffles. Betsey Johnson's collection illustrated this sweet style with tiers of tulle ruffles and eyelet layers. Lace was also a very popular overlay for fabrics.

The previews of Fashion Week predict that next spring is all about

See FASHION on page 5

Diane Von Furstenberg was a participating designer at this year's event. Tropical colors and oversized prints were the themes of her collection.

'Valley' full of pretentious politics

By Christopher Kelly
McClatchy Newspapers

"In the Valley of Elah," written and directed by Paul Haggis, takes place mostly in and around Fort Rudd in New Mexico, where a retired Army investigator named Hank Deerfield (Tommy Lee Jones) travels to find his missing son Mike (Jonathan Tucker).

Mike's unit recently returned from a tour of duty in Iraq, but within days Mike was reported AWOL which is especially strange considering that none of Mike's recent e-mails to his father had hinted that anything was wrong.

Soon after Hank's arrival in New Mexico, Mike's body is discovered on the border between Fort Hood and the town of Bradford. Devastated and desperate to understand what happened, Hank recruits a local police detective named Emily Sanders (Charlize Theron) to help him investigate the death.

All this might easily be the set-up for a pulpy detective thriller by Nelson DeMille – the story of a righteous and square-jawed hero wading through the lurid muck of a crime that many would prefer to see covered up.

But Haggis – who's coming off a Best Picture win for "Crash" – seems to have convinced himself that he's the second coming of Ingmar Bergman. Filled with painstaking silences and scenes that take three times longer than they should, "Elah" wants to be the definitive statement on the spiritual cost of the ongoing Iraq War. Instead, it just feels overwrought and self-important – an episode of "CSI" with liberal pretensions.

As the investigation unfolds, Hank finds himself stonewalled by a pair of Army bureaucrats, Lt. Kirklander (Jason Patric) and Sgt. Carnelli (James Franco), both of whom would prefer to believe that Mike simply got into trouble with some local drug dealers. Hank, meanwhile, stumbles across a number of video files taken in Iraq on Mike's cell phone, which hint at a terrible atrocity the men of Mike's unit don't want anyone to know.

Gradually, the disparate threads come together. Yet any pleasure we might take in "Elah" as an old-fashioned police procedural is crushed by the solemn weight of Haggis's approach, and especially by Jones's performance. The actor's voice rarely rises above a whisper, and his face is frozen into a mask of anguish. It's certainly an impressive portrait of a man in the throes of grief, struggling to make sense of tragedy.

But this resolute sourpuss isn't a character you want to spend two hours with, and Haggis doesn't do us any favors by frequently photographing Jones staring dolefully into space for 10 seconds at a stretch. "Elah" is one of those movies that feels the burning need to remind us, at every turn, that it is "serious" and "important," and Jones does nothing to resist Haggis's most heavy-handed impulses.

As Emily, Theron displays impressive conviction and earnestness – she gets better with every movie. But she has the unenviable task of putting over one idiotic cliche after another. Her character is struggling to raise a young son by herself, and she's also the sole woman in her department, where she's forever being ridiculed by her male counterparts.

What these female-empowerment subplots have to do with the larger themes of "Elah" is anybody's guess. Haggis got his start writing for television, and he still thinks in TV-friendly terms; the people here are defined by one or two obvious personality traits, and they each have a readily recognizable problem that can be neatly resolved over the course of the film.

With a supporting cast that includes Susan Sarandon, who's given very little to do as Hank's wife, Josh Brolin as Emily's boss and Frances Fisher as a local bar floozy, "Elah" brings to mind the

See JONES on page 5

Hands In releases debut disc

Hands In, a youthful-ness hardcore band from Springfield, headlined the event and celebrated the release of their debut full-length CD "Against the Storm" on Frequency Deleted Records.

HARDCORE from page 4

they still gave a strong, energetic set, and tried to engage their audience as much as possible. The guitars were strong and drove their high-energy songs. Though their vocals could use some improvements, this might also be blamed on the age of their band members, as they are all still in high school and developing their talents. Overall, their set was a decent attempt and their hard efforts earned a respectful round of applause from the crowd.

While most of the opening bands played through their sets, the crowd stood by idle and indifferent for the most part, with a few attempts by moshers to get the energy going. Another band that stuck out with their energetic performance was Bad Days. The lead singer, though short in stature, made up for his height with his powerful, blood-curdling screams. The vocalist paced back and forth, never stopping, while he shouted his inaudible lyrics into the microphone and lunged at the people standing closest to the stage. Although there were a few minor technical difficulties during Bad Days' set, it did not dampen this band's energy. It was ultimately a good set, with some powerful riffs. As their set concluded, a loud round of applause erupted with scattered cheers from the crowd.

As the next few bands went on, they got harder to distinguish from each other. Although they all had overall good sounds and all gave their best efforts, most sounded very similar to the next. They all seemed to blend together as they screamed mostly inaudible lyrics into the microphone.

However, another band that seemed to catch the attention and a great response from the crowd was hardcore punk band Five Across The Eyes, a four-piece from Holyoke, MA. The band is fairly more experienced than other performers on the bill and have been playing together since 1999. With the exception of the recently added bassist, the bandmates have all been close friends prior to formation.

"We're inspired by what each other does, we are each other's influences," said guitarist-vocalist Matthew Spence.

As the opening riffs of Five Across The Eyes' song sounded throughout the MERCYhouse Church, the crowd's energy immediately increased and everyone moved up closer to the stage, completely surrounding the band. Although their audience was modest, it did not discourage the band or deter the fans at all. The band looked like they were enjoying themselves just as much, if not more than their eager, supportive fans who were shouting the words right back at them.

After their set concluded and the audience finally took a breath, it was evident that these boys had a very devout following.

"I expect big things," Matthew Spence advised.

Five Across the Eyes is sure to make it far in this scene with their fun-loving, energetic, positive attitudes, and hard-working ethics.

The next couple of bands also played very good sets, with the endgys of the crowd building by each song. Where I Stand and Give em' Hell both gave high-quality performances, getting the kids riled up and their hard, thrashing guitars and machine-gun-like drums making it hard to sit still while watching them. Give em' Hell was a particular crowd favorite, evident by the enormous mosh pit that took up about 85 percent of the room.

The last band to go on, Hands In, was easily the most anticipated of the night. A mosh pit had already opened prior to the band's first note, as the kids were eager to hear the band they had been waiting for since the show started four hours earlier.

This band, although fairly young as well, was highly energetic, and it was evident just by watching their first song that they had it together. Their set was full of amazing guitar riffs and their fast-paced songs kept the crowd moving the whole time.

Fans from the audience, and even members from some of the other bands, climbed up on stage at the ends of a few of Hands In's songs, making for a massive sing-along packed with insane amounts of vivacity. The climax of the band's set flung plastic baseball bats, foam surfboards, candy and people, among other things, across the room in a blur of moshers.

All in all, the Western Massachusetts Hardcore Festival was jam-packed with energy and many talented, aspiring young bands. An overall display of camaraderie could be seen during the whole show, which really tells a lot about this local scene. The bands are hard-working, diligent, and full of fresh new talent, and the fans are devoted, and just as full of energy as the bands. It is really a sight to see members of other bands right up front during other sets, signing and moshing along with the fans. It is quite evident that this scene is tight-knit and that it is not going anywhere anytime soon.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu.

Designer Jacobs causes controversy

FASHION from page 4

showing off your natural waist and the length of your legs. High and cinched waists are back because trim is in. Micro-minis are at an all-time high, a popular item in Derek Lam's collection.

The eight-day showcase ran quite smoothly, but there were certainly a few notable ups and downs throughout the week. Although Marc Jacobs's collection for spring 2008 was highly admired for its surreal and cutting-edge elements, the audience reluctantly waited two hours for his arrival.

Of course the media went into a frenzy, claiming Jacobs was too busy binge drinking in his hotel room. Jacobs denied these allegations and placed the blame on last-minute design alterations. The stressful show and numerous ill-tempered audience members led Jacobs to question his participation in New York's next Fashion Week.

Fellow designer Diane Von Furstenberg sympathized, saying, "I understand Marc's frustration. I just wanted to call him to beg. I wanted to tell him how important Marc Jacobs is in the American fashion industry."

A cheerful highlight came to the scene when Cynthia Rowley incorporated springtime activities into her collection. The designer sent her models peddling down the runway on timeless cruiser bicycles. Models managed to keep their heels on while sporting long T-shirt dresses. When the styles progressed from casual to elegant, spring cocktail dresses were stamped with bold chain-link pattems. This playful production was definitely one to remember.

New York Fashion Week offered us a quick glimpse of fashion's future, but as an unpredictable industry, these looks are far from set in stone. Once the winter snow begins to melt, it will certainly be interesting to see how the public reacts to these presumed styles and trends of spring 2008.

Reece Coppolino can be reached at rcoppoli@student.umass.edu

Cynthia Rowley sent her fashion line down the runway with a burst of uncommon tionality. Models rode bicycles in heels to emphasize springtime activities.

Film critiques war

JONES from page 4

same strategy Haggis employed in "Crash": Put enough A-listers in your movies, and you're bound to convince some people that you've made a masterpiece.

But whereas "Crash" showed a real flair for melodrama and had an almost operatic grandiosity that carried us right over the sanctimonious patches, "Elah" is cluttered with clunky symbolism and speechifying. As a rule, any movie that features characters reciting Biblical allegories to one another (the title of the film refers to the David and Goliath story, recounted in excruciatingly tedious fashion here by Hank to Emily's son) is not something you want to subject yourself to.

And for all of Haggis's supposed thoughtfulness, it's a little startling to come to the end of "Elah" and realize that his message couldn't be more reductive or obvious. In the scheme of this movie, military personnel should not be held accountable for their criminal actions, not when George W. Bush placed them in this quagmire to begin with.

Decent men gone mad, widespread rape and murder, a moral universe that's been turned upside down – according to Haggis, it's all because the Bush administration sent our boys to war and abandoned them there.

Well, maybe. But even if you agree with the director that our nation is in a state of distress, that still doesn't excuse the fact that "In the Valley of Elah" amounts to little more than a two-hour campaign commercial for Barack Obama.

IN THE VALLEY OF ELAH
DIRECTED BY PAUL HAGGIS
STARRING
TOMMY LEE
JONES
B

PEARSON

National Evaluation Systems (NES) is a leader in the testing industry providing customized assessments for teacher licensure. NES is part of Pearson Education, one of the world's premier education companies.

PART-TIME TEMPORARY POSITIONS

We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately, pay attention to details, and be comfortable in a busy work environment. Various work schedules are available between 9:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. Additional ongoing positions are available during conferences at our Hadley office. Hours for these table assistant positions are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Preference will be given to individuals who can work 15+ hours a week. Pay rate starts at $8.00/hr. (Req. #20165)

Applications accepted only at www.pearsoned.com.

EOE

Arts is looking for a new Assistant Editor

Back 2 Cool
Citizens of Humanity
7 for all Mankind
Chinese Laundry
Steve Madden
Free People
Mavi
Ugg
Keds
Vans
Frye
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

CLUB CASTAWAY
Proudly Presents
Come see us soon!
Football Every Monday
Starting with Beautiful Dancers at 5pm
No Entertainment Charge until 5pm
Free Food — Open at 4pm
Ladies over 18 years
call for amateur night
1st prize $300
2nd prize $200
3rd prize $100
Tuesday - Saturday
11am - 1am
Routes 5 & 10
Whately, MA
413-665-8733
No entertainment charge for students with college ID and legal photo ID
Must be over 21 years old

SEP 19 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hardcore plays Mercy

Aspiring local bands unite for a night of metal rock

By Michelle Arbasciano
Collegian Correspondent

Anyone who has lived in Western Massachusetts for a while can talk about the diverse music it has been generating for decades. Folk, psychedelic, pop-rock, indie, metal – it seems the residents of this side of the state will never have a chance to complain about a lack of fresh new music to jam to.

This past Saturday showcased the most promising and aspiring of the hardcore music scene. Punk/hardcore bands from all around the area came to the MERCYhouse Church on North Pleasant Street to play the biggest event around these parts, the Western Massachusetts Hardcore (WMHC) Festival, to a crowd of over 100 kids.

This may not sound like much to the traditional concertgoer, who usually pays upward of $40 for a ticket and stands in an audience of thousands in a gigantic arena, but this local festival is a great opportunity for the lucky bands who earn a slot on it. The 10 bands that appeared on the bill included Beneath Dying Embers, A Life of Chaos, Where I Stand, Bad Days, There Was Change, Pressures On, Five Across The Eyes, Give em' Hell!, Shoot to Kill and Hands In, who headlined the fest and also released their first full-length CD, "Against The Storm" on Frequency Deleted Records.

Beneath Dying Embers is a prime example of one of the hopeful young bands who desire to follow along the same track as bands like Killswitch Engage. It's a metal hardcore band from Westfield that earned a slot on the lineup at the festival, which was also the day of their demo release. Allen, lead guitarist of Beneath Dying Embers, cites Killswitch as one of their biggest inspirations.

Although Beneath Dying Embers' performance was not the band the crowd was itching to see,

See HARDCORE on page 5

Five Across The Eyes, a four-piece band from Holyoke, Mass., has been together since 1999. Their energy-packed performance was a highlight at the Western Massachusetts Hardcore Festival last Saturday.

Kerouac's 'Road' turns 50

Author's adventure classic looks back at the 'Beat Generation'

By Steve Paul
Mc Clatchy Newspapers

The road narrative has been a staple of American literature from Lewis-and-Clark days to Cormac McCarthy's most recent novel.

One of the most enduring, if not always endearing, accounts of men in motion is Jack Kerouac's "On the Road." The hipster classic turns 50 on Sept. 5, and even at that ripe age it's still mythic, still vital.

Young people still find inspiration in this "Beat Generation" anthem, if not in its movable, liquid feasting then in the sense of self-enlightenment it yearns to achieve.

"'On the Road' is one of those books that every generation discovers without fail," says Lisa Birman, an Australian who directs the summer writing program named for Kerouac at the Naropa University in Boulder, Colo.

Jack Kerouac would've turned 85 this year had he not succumbed to alcohol in 1969. He was 47 when he died, sad and bitter, archly conservative, living with his mother and befuddled by the lost connections to his past. He was never comfortable with the fame that "On the Road" brought, nor with the way he and his writing were mostly misunderstood.

Kerouac was born into a French-Canadian family in Lowell, Mass., in 1922. In 1940 he entered Columbia University in New York on a football scholarship, but that didn't last, and he entered a period of odd jobbing at gas stations, newspapers, diners, even the Merchant Marines as he wrote short stories and a novel.

In the mid-1940s he met and befriended two fellow outsider writers, the poet Allen Ginsberg and William S. Burroughs, a laconic type who opted or life on its exploratory, philosophical edges.

They and others who joined their circle fed on one another's anxieties, enthusiasms and existential truth-seeking at a time when the dawn of the nuclear age seemed to have changed everything.

So what was "On the Road?"

Kerouac began writing it 60 years ago. He conceived it as the record of a series of road trips across the big American landscape. On many of those journeys, Kerouac was joined by the person or the spirit of one Neal Cassady, a veteran Denver car thief, thrill seeker and swaggering "holy goof."

In April 1951 Kerouac sat at his typewriter for three solid weeks, spewing out tales of hitchhiking, rail-riding, motoring, jazzing and jacing in one long paragraph, single-spaced, on thin sheets of paper fastened together to make a scroll 120 feet long. Even after revising the manuscript, six years went by before Viking published the book.

Yet, in all these years I first read the book as a teen in the late 1960s, it never occurred to me that Kerouac's name could be comfortably mentioned in the same sentence with Billy Graham's.

Mysticism of one kind or another including that achieved in a spontaneous rush of prose is a hallmark of Beat literature, even if it does cause some critics to cramp up. (Think of Truman Capote's dismissal of "On the Road" as being less writing than typing.)

Yet, Kerouac clearly had God on his mind, too. And that in part may explain the funk in which he lived his last years, during those fabled, flower-powered 1960s, when rebellion reigned and God had been declared dead.

The scroll version offers Kerouac's unmistakable voice the yawl and yawp of American language unspooling uninhibitedly in the stallen night of the soul. This "On the Road" will introduce you to the very same "gonic girls" and "sordid hipsters" that populated the book as published in 1957.

"One feels closer to the more pulpable psycho-physical energy of Kerouac," says Anne Waldman, poet and co-founder (with Ginsberg) of Naropa's Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics. "The pulse of it, the nuances, the authentic, 'original' experience is felt here in the surge of the one long paragraph, one long jazz 'note' if you will."

Other than occasional trims, paragraphing and minor revisions, the difference between the scroll and "On the Road" as we've known it is Kerouac's use of real names. So Dean Moriarty is Neal Cassady, Bull Lee is Burroughs, Carlo Marx is Ginsberg and Sal is, of course, Jack.

And thus we can begin to wonder and debate which version of the book is closer to the raw truth, if not memoir truth or nonfiction truth as transformed into a kind of fiction.

No matter that Ginsberg believed in the notion of "first thought, best thought" and Kerouac made his "spontaneous bop prosody," we've long known that both adhered to the contradictory idea that all writing is revision.

The scroll itself became a pop-culture goodie in 2001 when it went up for auction at Christie's in New York. Jim Irsay, owner of the Indianapolis Colts football team, bought it for more than $2 million and has displayed it around the country in recent years. The new book, prefaced with four hefty essays, adds to its legitimacy as an icon and an investment.

The Beat Generation's classic anthem "On the Road" by Jack Kerouac celebrated its 50th anniversary this September.

'Valley' full of pretentious politics

By Christopher Kelly
Mc Clatchy Newspapers

"In the Valley of Elah," written and directed by Paul Haggis, takes place mostly in and around Fort Rudd in New Mexico, where a retired Army investigator named Hank Deerfield (Tommy Lee Jones) travels to find his missing son Mike (Jonathan Tucker).

Mike's unit recently returned from a tour of duty in Iraq, but within days Mike was reported AWOL which is especially strange considering that none of Mike's recent e-mails to his father had hinted that anything was wrong.

Soon after Hank's arrival in New Mexico, Mike's body is discovered on the border between Fort Hood and the town of Bradford. Devastated and desperate to understand what happened, Hank recruits a local police detective named Emily Sanders (Charlize Theron) to help him investigate the death.

All this might easily be the set-up for a pulpy detective thriller by Nelson DeMille – the story of a righteous and square-jawed hero wading through the lurid muck of a crime that many would prefer to see covered up.

But Haggis – who's coming off a Best Picture win for "Crash" – seems to have convinced himself that he's the second coming of Ingmar Bergman. Filled with pains-taking silences and scenes that take three times longer than they should, "Elah" wants to be the definitive statement on the spiritual cost of the ongoing Iraq War. Instead, it just feels overwrought and self-important – an episode of "CSI" with liberal pretensions.

As the investigation unfolds, Hank finds himself stonewalled by a pair of Army bureaucrats, Lt. Kirklander (Jason Patric) and Sgt. Carnelli (James Franco), both of whom would prefer to believe that Mike simply got into trouble with some local drug dealers. Hank, meanwhile, stumbles across a number of video files taken in Iraq on Mike's cell phone, which hint at a terrible atrocity the men of Mike's unit don't want anyone to know.

Gradually, the disparate threads come together. Yet any pleasure we might take in "Elah" as an old-fashioned police procedural is crushed by the solemn weight of Haggis's approach, and especially by Jones's performance. The actor's voice rarely rises above a whisper, and his face is frozen into a mask of anguish. It's certainly an impressive portrait of a man in the throes of grief, struggling to make sense of tragedy.

But this resolute sourpuss isn't a character you want to spend two hours with, and Haggis doesn't do us any favors by frequently photographing Jones staring dolefully into space for 10 seconds at a stretch. "Elah" is one of those movies that feels the burning need to remind us, at every turn, that it is "serious" and "important," and Jones does nothing to resist Haggis's most heavy-handed impulses.

As Emily, Theron displays impressive conviction and earnestness – she gets better with every movie. But she has the unenviable task of putting over one idiotic cliche after another. Her character is struggling to raise a young son by herself, and she's also the sole woman in her department, where she's forever being ridiculed by her male counterparts.

What these female-empowerment subplots have to do with the larger themes of "Elah" is anybody's guess. Haggis got his start writing for television, and he still thinks in TV-friendly terms, the people here are defined by one or two obvious personality traits, and they each have a readily recognizable problem that can be neatly resolved over the course of the film.

With a supporting cast that includes Susan Sarandon, who's given very little to do as Hank's wife, Josh Brolin as Emily's boss and Frances Fisher as a local bar floozy, "Elah" brings to mind the

See JONES on page 5

Fashion designers gear up for spring

By Reece Coppolino
Collegian Columnist

Fashion is constantly evolving, making it one of the world's most complex, demanding and competitive industries. The leaves have barely fallen off of the tree branches around campus, but designers have already marched their 2008 spring designs down the runway.

Although some of us may feel overwhelmed by this fast-paced lifestyle, we must admit that no one can serve up a fresh new season of avant-garde trends faster than in a true New York minute.

At the start of every September, the streets of Manhattan begin to bustle with notable fashion designers, prospective buyers, and gussied-up socialites. New York's Fashion Week begins to take flight off the runway. The 14-year-old event provides designers with the opportunity to preview their latest collection for the approaching spring season. Sponsored by Mercedes-Benz this year, Bryant Park was converted into an enormous fashion showcase. The eight-acre park was crowded with tents that housed full runways, seating, lighting and sound systems, and backstage fitting rooms.

With the help of captivating lighting effects and a sharp soundtrack, models stride down the runway depicting their designer's unique fashion philosophy, inspiration, and signature vision.

Michael Kors showcased his concept called "Sand Chic," with splashes of candy-colored swimsuits, frilly embellishments, and a modern take on cashmere sweaters. He summed up his collection as "strident, sexy American style with a sporty edge," with a bit of inspiration from the work of Georges Seurat.

Diane Von Furstenberg, president of the Council of Fashion Designers of America and a participating designer, drove her collection around the term, escapism. Free-flowing draped fabrics, dramatic tropical colors, and oversized prints emerged on the runway.

"It's all about freedom," she said backstage after a successful show. "Freedom for a woman to live her fantasy."

While some designers decided to take a louder approach, others chose a softer side. Ultimate femininity was achieved in BCBG Max Azria's collection with the use of light, gentle fabrics including, tulle and organza.

Leatrice Eiseman, executive director of the Pantone Color Institute, described the overall color palette of spring 2008 as "perfectly reflecting the cheerfulness of the season." She claimed "stabilizing neutrals combined with pops of brighter colors to create unique, distinctive looks are the basis for a great spring and summer wardrobe."

Pantone predicts that the color palette of spring 2008 will include golden olive, toasted beige, iris purple, strawberry red, dusty rose, egg yolk, sage green, cantaloupe orange, silvery gray, ocean blue, and buttery sage. The color experts believe this playful palette will provide "endless exploration and creative combinations." Think rainbow sorbet!

As Fashion Week progressed, prominent new styles emerged, while the dress continued to remain a high priority item for spring 2008. Oversized prints, as showcased in Von Furstenberg's collection, were popping up on numerous runways from African to abstract. Stripes and polka dots received the most attention.

A feminine and frilly take on embellishments have been expressed in the form of ruffles. Betsey Johnson's collection illustrated this sweet style with tiers of tulle ruffles and eyelet layers. Lace was also a very popular overlay for fabrics.

The previews of Fashion Week predict that next spring is all about

See FASHION on page 5

Diane Von Furstenberg was a participating designer at this year's event. Tropical colors and oversized prints were the themes of her collection.

Hands In releases debut disc

Hands In, a youth-crew hardcore band from Springfield, headlined the event and celebrated the release of their debut full-length CD "Against the Storm" on Frequency Deleted Records.

HARDCORE from page 4

they still gave a strong, energetic set, and tried to engage their audience as much as possible. The guitars were strong and drove their high-energy songs. Though their vocals could use some improvements, this might also be blamed on the age of their band members, as they are all still in high school and developing their talents. Overall, their set was a decent attempt and their hard efforts earned a respectful round of applause from the crowd.

While most of the opening bands played through their sets, the crowd stood by idle and indifferent for the most part, with a few attempts by moshers to get the energy going. Another band that stuck out with their energetic performance was Bad Days. The lead singer, though short in stature, made up for his height with his powerful, blood-curdling screams. The vocalist paced back and forth, never stopping, while he shouted his inaudible lyrics into the microphone and lunged at the people standing closest to the stage. Although there were a few minor technical difficulties during Bad Days' set, it did not damper this band's energy. It was ultimately a good set, with some powerful riffs. As their set concluded, a loud round of applause erupted with scattered cheers from the crowd.

As the next few bands went on, they got harder to distinguish from each other. Although they all had overall good sounds and all gave their best efforts, most sounded very similar to the next. They all seemed to blend together as they screamed mostly inaudible lyrics into the microphone.

However, another band that seemed to catch the attention and a great response from the crowd was hardcore punk band Five Across The Eyes, a four-piece from Holyoke, MA. The band is fairly more experienced than other performers on the bill and have been playing together since 1999. With the exception of the recently added bassist, the bandmates have all been close friends prior to formation.

"We're inspired by what each other does, we are each other's influences," said guitarist/vocalist Matthew Spence.

As the opening riffs of Five Across The Eyes' song sounded throughout the MERCYhouse Church, the crowd's energy immediately increased and everyone moved up closer to the stage, completely surrounding the band. Although their audience was modest, it did not discourage the band or deter the fans at all. The band looked like they were enjoying themselves just as much, if not more than their eager, supportive fans who were shouting the words right back at them.

After their set concluded and the audience finally took a breath, it was evident that these boys had a very devout following.

"I spect big things," Matthew Spence advised.

Five Across the Eyes is sure to make it far in this scene with their fun-loving, energetic, positive attitudes, and hard-working ethics.

The next couple of bands also played very good sets, with the energy of the crowd building by each song. Where I Stand and Give em' Hell both gave high-quality performances, getting the kids riled up and their hard, thrashing guitars and machine-gun-like drums making it hard to sit still while watching them. Give em' Hell was a particular crowd favorite, evident by the enormous mosh pit that took up about 85 percent of the room.

The last band to go on, Hands In, was easily the most anticipated of the night. A mosh pit had already opened prior to the band's first note, as the kids were eager to hear the band they had been waiting for since the show started four hours earlier.

This band, although fairly young as well, was highly energetic, and it was evident just by watching their first song that they had it together. Their set was full of amazing guitar riffs and their fast-paced songs kept the crowd moving the whole time.

Fans from the audience, and even members from some of the other bands, climbed up on stage at the ends of a few of Hands In's songs, making for a massive sing-along packed with insane amounts of vivacity. The climax of the band's set flung plastic baseball bats, foam surfboards, candy and people, among other things, across the room in a blur of moshers.

All in all, the Western Massachusetts Hardcore Festival was jam-packed with energy and many talented, aspiring young bands. An overall display of camaraderie could be seen during the whole show, which really tells a lot about this local scene. The bands are hard-working, diligent, and full of fresh new talent, and the fans are devoted, and just as full of energy as the bands. It is really a sight to see members of other bands tight up front during other sets, signing and moshing along with the fans. It is quite evident that this scene is tight-knit and that it is not going anywhere anytime soon.

Michelle Arbasciano can be reached at marbasci@student.umass.edu

Designer Jacobs causes controversy

FASHION from page 4

showing off your natural waist and the length of your legs. High and cinched waists are back because trim is in. Micro-minis are at an all-time high, a popular item in Derek Lam's collection.

The eight-day showcase ran quite smoothly, but there were certainly a few notable ups and downs throughout the week. Although Marc Jacobs's collection for spring 2008 was highly admired for its surreal and cutting-edge elements, the audience reluctantly waited two hours for his arrival.

Of course the media went into a frenzy, claiming Jacobs was too busy binge drinking in his hotel room. Jacobs denied these allegations and placed the blame on last-minute design alterations. The stressful show and numerous ill-tempered audience members led Jacobs to question his participation in New York's next Fashion Week.

Fellow designer Diane Von Furstenberg sympathized, saying, "I understand Marc's frustration. I just wanted to call him to beg. I wanted to tell him how important Marc Jacobs is in the American fashion industry."

A cheerful highlight came to the scene when Cynthia Rowley incorporated springtime activities into her collection. The designer sent her models peddling down the runway on timeless cruiser bicycles. Models managed to keep their heels on while sporting long T-shirt dresses. When the styles progressed from casual to elegant, spring cocktail dresses were stamped with bold chain-link patterns. This playful production was definitely one to remember.

New York Fashion Week offered us a quick glimpse of fashion's future but as an unpredictable industry, these looks are far from set in stone. Once the winter snow begins to melt, it will certainly be interesting to see how the public reacts to these presumed styles and trends of spring 2008.

Reece Coppolino can be reached at rcoppoli@student.umass.edu

Cynthia Rowley sent her fashion line down the runway with a hint of uncommon normalcy. Models rode bicycles in heels to emphasize springtime activities.

Film critiques war

JONES from page 4

same strategy Haggis employed in "Crash": Put enough A-listers in your movies, and you're bound to convince some people that you've made a masterpiece.

But whereas "Crash" showed a real flair for melodrama and had an almost operatic grandiosity that carried us right over the sanctimonious patches, "Elah" is cluttered with clunky symbolism and speechifying. As a rule, any movie that features characters reciting Biblical allegories to one another (the title of the film refers to the David and Goliath story, recounted in excruciatingly tedious fashion here by Hank to Emily's son) is not something you want to subject yourself to.

And for all of Haggis's supposed thoughtfulness, it's a little startling to come to the end of "Elah" and realize that his message couldn't be more reductive or obvious. In the scheme of this movie, military personnel should not be held accountable for their criminal actions, not when George W. Bush placed them in this quagmire to begin with.

Decent men gone mad, widespread rape and murder, a moral universe that's been turned upside down – according to Haggis, it's all because the Bush administration sent our boys to war and abandoned them there.

Well, maybe. But even if you agree with the director that our nation is in a state of distress, that still doesn't excuse the fact that "In the Valley of Elah" amounts to little more than a two-hour campaign commercial for Barack Obama.

IN THE VALLEY OF ELAH
DIRECTED BY PAUL HAGGIS
STARRING TOMMY LEE JONES
B

PEARSON

National Evaluation Systems (NES) is a leader in the testing industry providing customized assessments for teacher licensure. NES is part of Pearson Education, one of the world's premier education companies.

PART-TIME TEMPORARY POSITIONS

We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately, pay attention to details, and be comfortable in a busy work environment. Various work schedules are available between 9:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. Additional ongoing positions are available during conferences at our Hadley office. Hours for these table assistant positions are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Preference will be given to individuals who can work 15+ hours a week. Pay rate starts at $8.00/hr.
(Req. #20165)

Applications accepted only at www.pearsoned.com.

EOE

Arts is looking for a new Assistant Editor

Back 2 Cool
Citizens of Humanity
7 for all Mankind
Chinese Laundry
Steve Madden
Free People
Mavi
Ugg
Keds
Vans
Frye
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

CLUB CASTAWAY
Come see us soon!
Proudly Presents
Football Every Monday
Starting with Beautiful Dancers at 5pm
No Entertainment Charge until 5pm
Free Food — Open at 4pm
Ladies over 18 years call for amateur night
1st prize $300
2nd prize $200
3rd prize $100
Tuesday - Saturday
11am - 1am
Routes 5 & 10
Whately, MA
413-665-8733
No entertainment charge for students with college ID and legal photo ID
Must be over 21 years old

Dixon pleased with team's early success

TENNIS from page 8

"As a freshman, Candyince showed great grit. She might have been the player to feel the pressure the most because of her youth and inexperience at the college level, but she served strong when it counted."

Along with Pozar and Boney, the Minutewomen advanced two doubles teams into the Sunday invitational matches.

Maude Leclysse and Laura Murillo advanced to the semifinal round of the Second Doubles Main Bracket Championship after defeating Alex Albano and Lanna Bichler of Duquesne, 8-4, in the quarterfinal round. However, they fell to the No. 1 seed – and eventual champions – Lauren Lucido and Tania Varela of Bucknell, 8-4, in the semifinals.

Senior Kristin Dipiero was part of a surprising Minutewoman squad.

Kristin DiPiero and Carly Ludmer lost to the fourth-seeded team of Anne Hang and Robie Vermmo of Army, 8-4, in the quarterfinals.

For each of the doubles teams, a freshman was paired with a veteran upperclassman. According to Dixon, this was to get the freshman more game experience heading into the regular season.

"I did not expect that we would do very well in the singles draws," Dixon said. "Having said that, clearly we need to work on being more match tough. The trick for freshmen is to learn the college game, which is quite different from the juniors. We will work hard on this prior to our home match against UConn."

However, despite the lack of players placed in singles play by Dixon, the Minutewomen still had players place in the invitational matches on Sunday.

Tanisha Hodgson, a freshman from Aruba, advanced all the way to the quarterfinals in the Third Singles Main Bracket Championship. She finally met her match there, losing to Hofstra's Lauren Clifton, 6-0 and 6-0.

Freshman Kaitlyn Carpenter also played on Sunday, advancing to the second round on an injury to her opponent, but lost to Fairfield's Dana Postupack.

Dixon believes all her freshman have long careers in front of them, but is particularly excited about their chances for this season.

"Our goal as usual is to win the conference," she said. "In order to do this we need our freshmen to perform well. We will work a lot on our doubles play, which is so critical to our success.

"We also will try to get our freshmen to toughen up early, to make better shot selection choices and to be physically strong."

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich a student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen reach out

VICTORY from page 8

Marissa's story isn't all that different from Jaclyn's. When she was seven years old, Marissa began suffering from headaches and vomiting. Assuming it was standard, Marissa's mother, Michelle, brought her to a doctor. After finding a brain tumor, doctors told the family that there was a 99 percent chance that it was not cancer. Unfortunately for the Factoras, the slim 1 percent chance became a horrifying reality.

Unable to walk after chemotherapy, Marissa was forced to wear leg braces and ride in a wheelchair. She was enrolled in physical therapy four days a week, including two days a week before she went to school. After six months elapsed, she was able to walk again.

When Marissa began complaining of back pains, the Factoras were forced to seek medical help once again. The tumor had now spread down the spine, and Marissa once again needed to undergo chemotherapy treatment.

With that treatment, the tumor in her spine has been removed, but the tumor in her head will remain there for the duration of Marissa's life. It's currently stable, and the 11-year-old has grown four inches since her last chemo treatment.

With the suggestion from Dostal, Marissa will now become a part of the UMass field hockey team for the 2007 season. She was present at the Siena game this past Sunday and will try to attend other games throughout the season.

"All you're doing is being a friend to these sick kids," Dostal said. "It means the world to them."

Accompanied by her mother and younger brother Shane, Marissa was introduced to each member of the team this past Friday night. Each player went around and gave their name as well as a fact that made them unique from the others.

The team also presented Marissa with a field hockey media guide, a UMass sweatshirt, and a pompom. In addition to this, the newest member of the team received a sewing kit from the Friends of Jaclyn Foundation.

Judging from the way Marissa handled herself throughout the night, one would never guess that she has a brain tumor. A smile adorned her face during the introductions, and when presented with the sewing kit, she playfully asked her mother, "Do I have to carry it back to the car?"

Jaclyn and her father, Denis, were also present for Marissa's introduction to the team. Denis is a big proponent of the interaction between collegiate teams and disadvantaged children. He witnessed the Northwestern lacrosse team help his daughter through the tough times, and although Denis says that the "game isn't as big as life itself," the team was able to take her mind off shots and other unpleasant medical treatment with text messages and phone calls.

Jaclyn's inspirational story was also able to help the team perform at its highest level on the field.

Denis wants more teams to follow the lead of programs like Northwestern and UMass and adopt children to their sidelines. While speaking to the field hockey team, he said that 3,410 children are diagnosed with brain tumors each year, and the survival rate stands at 65 percent. The goal of Friends of Jaclyn is to raise money for brain tumor research that will "improve the quality of life."

UMass will have the distinction of becoming the first school to have two players come to games and be taken in as a younger sister. The women's lacrosse team adopted brain tumor patient Lexie Williams during last year's season.

Denis is impressed and proud that UMass has become the first school to take the initiative and call him about adopting a child with a brain tumor.

His daughter's sickness has handed Denis challenges, and he's developed a different outlook in the process.

"It gives you a whole new perspective on life," he said. "What's important and what's trivial."

It didn't take long for Marissa to fit in with the field hockey team. After the introductions and informational talk were finished, the 11-year-old was posing for pictures with the team, including one of her sitting in a player's lap.

Dostal said the team's addition of Marissa helps people who are lucky enough to have full health appreciate the life they have.

"We complain on a daily basis about class and not being able to sleep late," she said. "This is a real nice perspective check."

While the Minutewomen's level of team success on the playing field this season still very much lies in the balance, there will be one victory that overshadows the rest.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor a student umass edu

Billikens, Rams improving, Hextall leading Explorers

A-10 Soccer

By Adam Miller
Collegian Correspondent

The Saint Louis Billikens climbed above .500 this weekend when they won the Toys for Tots Tournament Sunday, beating Southeast Missouri State and Army. Saint Louis scored three goals against Southeast Missouri State. Freshman midfielder Alissa Mautz scored two goals and assisted on the other.

The game started off slow with a scoreless first half, but picked up after halftime.

Mautz scored the first goal of her career after rebounding a shot from sophomore Kelly Waeckerle that went off of SEMO goalie Lindsay Pickering's hands. Three minutes later, Mautz gave the Billikens a second goal after the Redhawks gave up a loose ball that was kicked into the upper part of the net.

Sophomore Maggie Farrell gave the Billikens another goal to cushion the lead three minutes after SEMO scored its first goal to cut the lead to one.

The championship game Sunday against Army was a low-scoring affair. The Billikens won, 1-0, in double overtime.

Saint Louis senior midfielder Mary Green earned the MVP award of the tournament after a clutch performance against Army.

Green got her first goal of the season in a game-winning penalty kick with 2:01 left in the second overtime after Waeckerle was injured on the play.

Mautz and Billikens midfielders senior Liz Fox and sophomore Susan Federickson earned spots on the Toys for Tots All-Tournament Team.

Rams end Tigers' home streak

The Colorado College Tigers started off their own invitational with a loss to the Rhode Island Rams on Friday, 2-1.

The Tigers lost at home for the first time in 12 games.

Rhode Island freshman forward Adrienne Ruhe Lischke's scored the first goal of her career after receiving a pass from senior Deb Nelson, who had two assists in the first 21 minutes of the game.

Lischke's tally gave Rhode Island its second goal of the game to secure the victory.

The Rams are 3-2-1 on the season, after dropping the second game of the invitational on Monday to No. 25 Marquette, 4-0. The Rams were without their two top scorers.

Junior Dora Larusdottir missed the game due to a virus, and an undisclosed injury prevented freshman Jessica Babice from finishing.

URI returns home for the next two matches, where it hosts New Hampshire Friday and Sacred Heart Sunday.

Hextall on scoring surge

La Salle senior forward Kristin Hextall is playing a big role in the team's success this season.

Hextall has scored one goal in five of the Explorers' last six games, helping them to a 4-2 record. She leads the Atlantic 10 in goals, as well as shots (27) and points (12).

Hextall's season got off to a quick start, making team history with the fastest opening goal, scoring 37 seconds into the season opener. The team rallied around her, beating Wagner, 5-0, on Aug. 31.

Nine days later, Hextall scored the game-winning goal against Loyola-Chicago in the 78th minute, sealing up a 3-2 win. The tally placed Hextall fourth all time in goals scored. She currently has 23 career goals. Her last one came Sunday against Sacred Heart.

Players of the Week

Dayton sophomore midfielder Mandi Bäck and Massachusetts senior forward Britt Canfield are this week's A-10 Players of the Week.

Against Iona State, Bäck scored Dayton's two goals on Sunday, including the game-winner in double overtime. She currently leads the team with three goals.

Canfield had a career-high five points Sunday in the 4-0 victory against Hartford. She contributed one goal and three assists to UMass's victory.

Rookie of the Week

Mautz's two goals and one assist against SEMO in the 3-1 victory earned her A-10 Rookie of the Week honors. Mautz put a shot on goal that was stopped by the SEMO goalie, but Mautz got the rebound and kicked the ball back in.

Three minutes later, she hit the game-winner to give Saint Louis a 2-1 lead. Mautz later assisted on a third goal to secure the victory.

Notes

Charlotte freshman forward Whitney Weinraub scored her third goal of the year Sunday as the 49ers beat No. 17 Clemson, 3-1, improving the team's record to 3-3 ... Fordham senior forward Erica Frizzell scored the only goal in the Rams' 1-0 victory over Seton Hall Sunday. It was her first goal of the season ... St. Bonaventure is currently 2-0 on the road after shutting out Saint Francis on Sunday. 2-0. Freshmen midfielders Anna Cunningham and Marilyn Wargo each recorded a goal. The Bonnies are 3-2-1 this season.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill3@student.umass.edu.

UMass looks to avenge '06 loss to 'Green

W. SOCCER from page 8

Villarroel.

In her three-year career she has accumulated six goals and nine assists for 21 points.

Rudy certainly has confidence in the junior, as he named her captain along with senior Jenny Roehrig and goalkeeper Kristin Walker, a red-shirt senior.

Big Green history

The Minutewomen head to Hanover, N.H., tomorrow to take on Dartmouth at 7 p.m.

UMass is 15-4-1 all time against Dartmouth, which is 1-5 so far.

The last time the two squads squared off was 2005 and the Big Green left Amherst with a 1-0 win in double overtime. The winning goal was scored on a free kick by Sarah Johnson 106 minutes after the game started.

Dartmouth has been struggling out of the gate, having scored three goals in six games.

Two of those goals have been scored by sophomore Maggie Goldstein. The other goal was tallied by senior Annie Stanley.

Worth mentioning...

For the second consecutive game, Walker was subbed out to give sophomore Lauren Luckey some playing time.

Walker was removed from action against Hartford in the 79th minute and was taken out of the game against Iona on Sept. 7 in the 54th minute.

Rudy said Luckey showed great improvement in the spring season and, though, Walker has earned some loyalty for her work between the posts, Luckey has her looking over her shoulder.

As Rudy put it, "We'll see."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Better It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

Wake up Wednesday with flap jacks & funnies!

FREE Pancake Breakfast
Wednesday, September 26
8:30 - 11:30 a.m., Memorial Hall

Start your senior year off with a FREE breakfast and animated comedy! Stop by Memorial Hall anytime between 8:30-11:30 a.m. where you can enjoy pancakes piled high with sweet maple syrup, breakfast sausage, coffee and juice, all while you kick back and relax watching morning cartoons! Roll out of bed, stop by before or after class and bring your appetite!

This breakfast is exclusive to seniors!
No registration required... Just stop in!

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION · STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Visit UMassAlumni.com/students for more information

For news, updates, analyis and more... daily collegian sports. blogspot .com

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY KARAOKE
* * * * * *
FRIDAY, SEPT. 21, 2007
MARK SNOW BANK
SATURDAY, SEPT. 22, 2007
80 PROOF BAND
* * * * * * * * * * *
STUDENT BAND WANTED
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O'S
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-8766
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT/SUN
NEXT TO CUMTAXA APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

6				5		7
1			6	3	2
	8		5		1
	8		7	3
7						2
		4	1		6
	9		8		2
	6	1	3			8
8		7				5

ACROSS
1 Deuces
5 Has on
10 Enormous
14 Solemn vow
15 Shoelace end
16 Choir voice
17 Not taken in by
18 Gag in time
19 Neeson of "Schindler's List"
20 Ferocious African cats
22 Fly
24 Papal name
25 Accumulates
26 Slow and fast
29 Singer Cara
30 Lasers to
31 PC operators
32 Bikini part
35 Miscalculates
36 Book of maps
37 Sheep output
38 Cub Scout group
39 Poker pot builders
40 Snapshot
41 Ranch visitors
42 Penetrate
43 Verbal combatant
46 Penny loafer adornment
47 Sermonizer
48 Written discourse
52 South American monkey
53 Minor fight
55 False god
56 Bus. school course
57 Voice a thought
58 Jody Foster film
59 Pealed
60 Designated
61 Gall-ants

DOWN
1 Awl or auger
2 Dwindle
3 Milanese eight
4 Mall visitors
5 Large marine mammal
6 Old oath
7 High peaks
8 Hi- graphics
9 Some clams
10 Piece of luggage
11 Wanted poster word
12 Assert
13 Heavy reading?
21 Lends a hand
23 Moving vehicles
25 Neighborhoods
26 Mell
27 Pop in Pans
28 Work for
29 Man and Dogs
31 Say
32 Yahoo
33 Coll. army training
34 Cosmetic ingredient
36 Harry the magician
37 Sharpening
39 Biography beginning?
40 Canada
41 Seeing socially
42 Sounded like a chick
43 Mollycoddler
44 Trial of Flying author Jonly
45 Rouge, i.e.
46 Poet Hart
48 Cut back
49 Creative spark
50 Auctioneer's closer
51 Pipe turns
54 Bean-counter's letters

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Why do we fall, sir? So that we might better learn to pick ourselves up."

-Michael Caine as Alfred Pennyworth

It doesn't take much effort and it helps everyone out.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

TWO DUDES By Aaron Warner

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

Although he'd seen butterflies do it a thousand times, when Bob emerged from his cocoon, he remained the same.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Dress up and act like you know what you are talking about. You can be a professor.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are a beatbox. Feel the flow, be the beat.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
My only advice to you: SWEATER VEST, SWEATER VEST, SWEATER VEST. Tkow!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Conserve the world's water supply by drinking your own sweat as you perspire.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Increase your intimidation factor by acquiring a pet vulture and blinging cane.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Forgive and forget all the wrongdoings of your friends in exchange for their souls.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are 100% juice. Not from concentrate, not 15%. You're the real deal, baby.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Never trust a man in loafers. His shoes are so absurd he's likely to steal yours.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Grab someone's arm and start screaming, "Don't make me break this arm!"

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Dress as Santa and break into your neighbor's room. Give him a stern beating.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Always trust what you see on television. Especially the Playboy channel.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Makeup is primarily intended as a garnish, not a main course. AKA remove the mask.

Get on all fours and beg like a dog... maybe someone will submit some comics.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

AUTO FOR SALE

1996 Honda Accord Ex 79,000 Miles. Black. 2 Door, 5 speed. Runs/ Drives Great. $6,500. 413-455-6236

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

AUTO FOR SALE

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K, Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Campus Rep Wanted $200.00 per week base salary for semester plus bonus. Flexible schedule, class talks, generate applications email: cchurch@collegepro.com www.collegepro.com

Exp line cook, part-time, nights and weekends, great training program and starting wage. Apply at Eastside Grill, 19 Strong Ave., N'ton or email info@eastsidegrill.com

EMPLOYMENT

Delivery Drivers
Delivery from 6pm to 12am. Must have a car and a cell phone. $5.00 hour plus tips.
Apply in person at:
The Loose Goose Cafe
1 East Pleasent Street
Amherst, MA.

Rent us your Ears!
Listening Experiments $10/ hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com. Contact us through site.

FOR SALE

Queen Futon Frame, cherry, great condition $200.00 Greenfield 413-774-7679

MOTORCYCLE

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

SERVICES

Artisan Editing: an academic editing service, soley focusing on the dissertation/thesis. Contact artisanediting@aol.com for information and rates

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St Amherst www.birthright.org

Disc Jockey Available for private parties + clubs Low rates. 413-313-6394

PAPER HELP
Help write, research, organize, edit, type papers. $25/hr. UMass local, Harvard Graduate English, M.Ed 413-230-8578

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing STD screening & treatment GYN & breast exams Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Woodbury commons outlet shopping trip 9/30 cost $40 call Kathie 413-213-0110

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips Low prices guaranteed Group discounts for 8+ Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Egg donors needed $5500/ donation. Healthy women 20-31. Visit fertilityneeds.com/donors.asp or call 1-888-494-4060

SEP 19 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 2007 — SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A different victory

Inspired by stories near and far, UMass gets a new teammate

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Division I college athletes are recruited by coaches to play their respective sports, winning games is usually stressed as the most important thing.

During the 2007 season, though, the Massachusetts field hockey team will partake in something far more significant than whatever they do or don't accomplish on the field.

When first-year assistant coach Kelly Dostal realized the 2007 Northwestern women's lacrosse team was on the verge of winning their third straight national championship, she began to follow the team's season. Dostal had won three consecutive field hockey championships at Wake Forest from 2002-04, and was curious to see if the Wildcats could replicate a similar feat.

While following of the team, she caught wind of a story that had little to do with championships, and a lot to do with human compassion.

Jaclyn Murphy grew up as any other normal child did. She was the picture of health, until she was suddenly diagnosed with medulloblastoma in 2004, which the Friends of Jaclyn Web site describes as "a malignant and life-threatening tumor." Jaclyn's family decided to stop her chemotherapy prematurely, as the five-and-a-half sessions she underwent began to take its toll. The 10-year-old was losing weight and her hearing.

Through connections that led the family to the Northwestern women's lacrosse team, Jaclyn became an instrumental part of the Wildcats' success. She became part of the team during the 2005 season, in which Northwestern went 21-0 and won its first of three consecutive national championships. Jaclyn, who will turn 13 later this month, has remained a part of the team since. One game last year was held in her hometown of Yorktown, N.Y.

The donations from that game between Northwestern and UMass raised over $40,000 for the Friends of Jaclyn Foundation, and things began to take off from there.

Fast forward to 2007. Camp Sunshine, located on Maine's Sebago Lake, describes itself as "a retreat for children with life-threatening illnesses and their families." This is where Jaclyn was introduced to Marissa Factora from Ridge, N.Y.

See VICTORY on page 6

Assistant coaches Chrissy Needham and Kelly Dostal and head coach Justine Sowry pose with the newest Minutewoman, Marissa Factora, and her brother, Shane. Marissa, a cancer survivor, is now an honorary member of the Massachusetts field hockey team.

Pozar, Boney highlight start to '07 season

Minutewomen surprise at West Point in season opener

BY SAM EHRLICH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Despite some strange arrangements, the Massachusetts tennis team started off well in their first tournament of the new season.

Junior Masha Pozar and freshman Candytree Boney took the First Doubles Main Bracket Championship and freshman Tanisha Hodgson advanced to the quarterfinals in singles at the Army Invitational in West Point, N.Y.

"I was pleased with the team, both in terms of effort and results," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "There were 20 teams participating, and we were one of the top three schools, as far as results."

Pozar and Boney were ranked No. 2 going into the tournament, but turned heads by defeating the top-ranked team of Anela Dujsic and Polina Zaretsr from Rutgers.

"Playing with Boney was great," Pozar said. "I was excited about it since I found out we were playing together. She has great energy about her and is incredibly mature and mentally strong for a freshman."

Dixon admitted she was surprised by the pair's performance.

"Frankly, I know that they will be a solid doubles team but with only two weeks of practice and no match play, I did not think that they would do as well as they did," said Dixon. "They have the potential to be quite good."

The tournament took three full days of competition to complete. Preliminary matches took place Friday, those who advanced played through Saturday and Sunday to the championship rounds.

Pozar and Boney's team advanced to the final round by beating Michael Tollerton and Charlee Warford from host Army, 8-3, in the quarterfinals. They then defeated Courtney Dorsey and Laura Marin from Howard in the semifinal match, 8-6.

The final was a back-and-forth affair, with Pozar and Boney jumping ahead to start, but then falling behind by four match points. They eventually came back to win, 9-8.

"The fact that they came back and did not fold is a great sign for the future for them," Dixon said.

See TENNIS on page 6

Senior Masha Pozar and doubles partner Candytree Boney were the top doubles pair at the Army Invitational last weekend.

Canfield lights it up for UM

Senior has hand in each of four goals against Hartford

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though three different players scored in the Massachusetts women's soccer team's 4-0 win over Hartford on Sunday, the victory would not have been possible without Britt Canfield.

The senior forward assisted on three goals and recorded one of her own, for five points against the Hawks. She now has two goals and four assists (eight points) on the season.

The standout performance earned her UMass Dinn Bros Athlete of the Week and Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week Monday afternoon.

"She's the big cheese," said UMass coach Jim Rudy jokingly. "She is the goal scorer and she's been that since her freshman year. When she's at that level she's a package to stop."

Since becoming a member of the Maroon and White, Canfield has registered 22 goals and seven assists, for 43 points.

Rudy says Canfield is the fastest player on the team. Her speed and quick reflexes drive opponents and even teammates nuts as she can outrun anyone and everyone down the field.

Recruiting the past few years, however, has collected a handful of players that can run with Canfield.

"Now there's just other people who can carry the load, where she doesn't have to at all. And now there's players that, when [Canfield] breaks the flank, there's people arriving," Rudy said. "It used to be she broke the flank and no one would arrive – they were all back here at midfield. But we've added some speed with [sophomores] Sydney [Stoll], [Katie] Ruggles and [freshman] Ashley Hamel. She's not alone anymore."

UMass Soccer

PATRY POCKETS FIRST GOAL

Junior forward Vanessa Patry registered her first tally of the 2007 season Sunday.

Following Stoll's second goal of the game, Patry took a pass from Canfield 25 seconds later and booted it into the upper right-hand corner of the net, over the head of Hartford's goalkeeper, Elizabeth Cook.

It took longer than usual for Patry to score her first goal of the season – at this point last year, she had scored three goals. Her freshman year, she had already notched a goal and three assists.

She ended last season second on the team in goals scored (4), tying then-senior captain Nadia

See W. SOCCER on page 6

Plenty of touchdowns to go around early in 2007 season

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After three games, the Massachusetts football team is 3-0 for the first time since 1986. The early success has been a total team effort, with the offense, defense and special teams all playing key roles at some point this season.

And it's been a number of different players that have stepped up for each unit. On special teams, place-kicker Chris Koepplin has connected on all four field goals and punter Brett Arnold boasts a 46.4-yard average on 13 punts. The return game has been huge, as well, with both J.J. Moore and Courtney Robinson returning kicks for touchdowns.

A number of players have made an impact offensively – seven different players have caught a touchdown pass from quarterback Liam Coen. Moore is the only player that has two. The players with one are tight end Ian Jorgensen, fullback Breyone Evans and wide receivers Rasheed Rancher, Joe Sanford, Michael Omar and Jeremy Horne.

Two players who haven't been a recipient of a Coen touchdown pass are running backs Matt Lawrence and Tony Nelson. But the pair of rushers have been integral to the strong start this season, with both averaging well over five yards per carry.

Lawrence, the starting tailback, has been a big part of the offense with 341 rushing yards and two touchdowns. He ranks second in the conference in rushing. Nelson has performed admirably as the change-of-pace back averaging 6.4 yards on his 24 carries. He had 70 yards rushing on seven carries against Colgate on September 8.

UMass has exploded for 111 points in three games (37 ppg) and has an equal amount of rushing first downs (26) as passing.

SACK PARTY

Saturday's victory over Towson was largely a credit to the defense. Sean Smalls and Courtney Robinson had key interceptions and the front seven stopped running back Rasheed McClaude from going anywhere.

Smalls received much of the attention following the game for his big play, but it's been the rush defense that has been the story for the Minutemen in 2007 – and that can largely be attributed to the defensive line.

Wide receiver J.J. Moore is the only Minuteman to catch two touchdown passes from quarterback Liam Coen. Six others have caught one score.

In addition to leading the Colonial Athletic Association with 13 sacks, the Minutemen top the conference in rushing defense, limiting opponents to a 1.6-yard average on 100 rushes. The defense has allowed fewer than five rushing first downs per game, a figure that easily leads the conference.

The leader of the defensive line has unquestionably been defensive end David Burns. A former walk-on, Burns has 15 tackles and leads the conference with 4.5 sacks. Fellow starters on the line, Brandon Coffier and Michael Hanson, have combined for 30 tackles, eight tackles for a loss and four sacks. Reserves Darnel DeLaire and Bob McLaughlin have also contributed

UMass Football

The defense has been particularly stingy in the red zone, as teams have scored just five touchdowns in 10 opportunities. On three separate occasions the opposition has failed to come away with even a field goal in the red zone.

The defense is ranked second-to-last in pass yards allowed per game, but that's due in large part to teams needing to make comebacks late in games against UMass. In the season opener against Holy Cross, opposing quarterback Dominic Randolph threw an eye-popping 62 times as the Crusaders rally fell short in the fourth quarter. UC had 15 passing first downs in that game, but it wasn't enough.

FLAGS A-FLYING

For the third Saturday in a row, UMass coach Don Brown fielded questions from the media regarding his team's penalties. With 41 penalties in three games, one could see why. But Brown downplayed the 15 penalties his team had in the 36-13 victory over Towson this past weekend.

"When you look at it, a lot of them were energy and effort," Brown said. "I think a handful of them were defensive offsides, and when you're blitzing people that much trying to time cadence up – that's something you have to fight."

The Minutemen have committed an average of 13.7 penalties per contest. Of the 11 other teams in the conference, no team has averaged more than eight per game. The 41 penalties have gone for 382 yards, which is almost double the next-highest in the CAA (Hofstra, 196 yards).

NOTES

Although the Minutemen have outscored their opponents 111-60, the UMass offense has gained fewer first downs (53) than its opposition (65).

Despite scoring 51 more points than their opponents, the Minutemen actually trail in time of possession, 31:36 to 28:24. That ranks UMass second-to-last in the conference ... Arnold leads the CAA in both punting average and net punting average ... Coen ranks third in the conference in passing efficiency (163.1) ... UMass has allowed the most passing first downs in the conference (37) ... Moore has the second-most receiving yards in the conference (265).

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MULLINS CENTER HOLDS GYM CLASS | PAGE 6

SUNNY : HI: 85 LO: 56 — WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM — THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 2007

Local Police weigh in on weekend

Local law enforcement agencies were busy this weekend as Sept. activity continues. More than 200 calls were made to APD alone.

Agencies see little change

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past weekend was a lively one for local law enforcement as more than 200 calls were fielded by the Amherst Police department alone.

"During the three-day period, officers made 78 arrests for offenses such as alcohol and narcotic violations, disorderly conduct and operating under the influence," said an APD spokesperson.

Of the 200 calls, one made early on the morning of Sunday, Sept. 15 was initially for a noise complaint. This particular call, received at 12:30 a.m., resulted in the break-up of a large party on Olympia Drive.

According to APD, "It took five officers over 30 minutes to clear out over 400 college-aged individuals and restore the peace to the area."

Patrick Archbald, deputy chief of the University of Massachusetts police department, reported a similarly busy weekend.

One UMass student was shocked to find his laptop computer stolen from his room in Dwight Hall. The rest of the area was undisturbed, but the machine, valued at $800, vanished even after the owner insisted he left the room locked.

Jonathan Astrada, 22, of Jamaica Plain, MA, was among those arrested over the weekend. He is charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon after forcibly slamming a female victim into a wall, bouncing her head against the barrier. The wall is considered as the dangerous weapon in the police report.

On Sunday, Sept. 15, at approximately 1:25 a.m., the UMPD responded to a call outside of the John F. Kennedy Tower.

Eitan Bygoslavsky, 18, of Mansfield, MA, was arrested shortly after the police arrived. He is charged with aggravated

See POLICE on page 3

ISOM unveils new dean

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After months of searching, the Isenberg School of Management at the University of Massachusetts has hired a new interim dean.

Dr. Anthony "Tony" Butterfield, who has served as director for the Isenberg doctoral program for over 10 years and has taught UMass business students since 1972, will succeed former interim dean Soren Bjorstad for the position. Butterfield was hired on Sept. 1 and is set to serve for two years in the position.

"The Isenberg School has outstanding students, faculty, staff and alumni," said Butterfield.

The search for a new dean began at the end of the spring 2007 semester when Bjorstad announced he would like to return to teaching Integrative Studies at ISOM, effectively resigning his post. Since then, the office of the Provost reviewed several candidates and decided upon Butterfield.

Butterfield earned his doctorate and master's degrees in psychology from the University of Michigan in 1963 and 1960, respectively. He earned his bachelor's degree from Yale University in 1961.

The new dean has also been published in several publications, including Journal of Management Personnel Psychology, Handbook of Gender and Work and Academy of Management Journal.

"It will be an honor and a labor of love to work the school, campus, business and alumni communities to move the school further ahead in our pursuit of excellence," said Butterfield. "The students and Commonwealth deserve nothing less."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

Researchers remind youth to vote via text message

Mobile phones give lessons on civic responsibiliy

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A study from researchers at Princeton University and the University of Michigan showed that sending text message reminders increases youth voter turnout. The study, done in collaboration with Working Assets Wireless and Student PIRG's New Voters Project, observed that text messages sent on the eve of the 2006 election led to a 4.2 percent boost in youth voting.

"The youth vote matters – 18 to 31 year-olds will represent more than one-third of the country's electorate by the year 2015," stated Ethynne Bamison, Director of the Student PIRG's New Voter's Project.

Research done by the Student PIRG's New Voters Project shows that the most effective way to get young people to vote is by directly asking them.

Since young voters are considered a mobile population, text messages are a more effective form of communication than other traditional campaign tools. Fifty-nine percent of the voters who received a text message reminder found it helpful, while 1 percent reported that the reminder made them less likely to vote.

The text message reminders cost $1.56 per additional vote generated. The study compared this to other forms of campaigning such as traditional phone calls, which had about the same effectiveness as text messaging but cost $20 per additional vote generated. Door-to-door canvassing had a 7-9 percent increase but cost about $30 per additional vote generated.

Several different text message reminders were tested, and a

See TEXTS on page 3

Meg Iler answers a call on the way to class. Researchers are now using texts as a method to reach tech-savvy college aged students in an effort to get them to the polls.

UM Alum establishes fund

$3 million for system students

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts students from across all five campuses may soon become the receipts of the largest privately-financed scholarship in University history.

Charles J. Hoff, an alumnus of UMass Lowell, announced his most recent donation of $3 million towards the scholarship program in his name during yesterday's Board of Trustees meeting in Lowell.

"The Hoff family is dedicated to providing opportunity and reducing financial barriers to education," said UMass President Jack Wilson. "The Hoffs take a personal interest in ensuring that students who might be overlooked receive a chance to excel."

Sixty of the scholarships are to be given to the Lowell campus, with another 30 going to Boston and Dartmouth. The Amherst campus will receive 15 of the scholarships and the UMass medical school in Worcester only 10. Though the largest number of scholarship receipts will come from the Lowell campus, students at Amherst and the other three campuses can expect to receive some benefits as well, according to Hoff.

"We want this program to benefit students across all five campuses because the promise of the University of Massachusetts is a promise that transcends individual campuses and particular regions of the state," Hoff said. "As UMass goes, so too goes the future of the Commonwealth and the future of the nation."

Hoff undertook funding his scholarship program in 1991 with an initial contribution of $2.5 million which supported 1,000 students over the last 16 years, according to the Lowell Sun. With the additional $3 million, starting this year the scholarship will fund 145 UMass students annually across

See HUFF on page 3

College Cost Reduction Act to be reviewed by president

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a conference call with reporters from Northeast and Mid-Atlantic college newspapers, United States House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer (D-MD) summarized and answered questions regarding the College Cost Reduction Act, the largest student aid bill in 60 years.

According to Hoyer, more than 200,000 students a year either don't go to or hold off going to college due to financial reasons.

"Our country cannot afford to price students out of the market," said Hoyer. "We understand that colleges students are not only very interested, but very engaged."

The bill was introduced by Rep. George Miller (D-CA) and goes to the president to be signed into law this week. The multiple benefits of the bill come to students at no new cost to taxpayers.

Instead, subsidiaries paid to private loan companies have been redirected to directly aid students. There are several parts to the bill, all of them designed to increase the amount of financial aid to the tune of $20 million over the next 5 years. Included in the boosts is a raising of the maximum value of the Pell Grant scholarship. Worth $4,050 in 2008, the need-based scholarship is set to increase by $5,200 by 2015. Roughly $5.5 million less to moderate-income students would benefit from these changes.

Another stipulation in the CCRA is the stringent and inflexible loan requirements that go along with many loans and scholarships. Often coupled with the complex application process, these requirements close the door to further education on many qualified students. The CCRA lowers or addresses this problem by simplifying the process

See CCRA on page 3

Students sound-off as the presidential race heats up

BY NICK BUSH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To understand the political conviction of UMass students, one only has to look at the campus' political scene on the eve of an election year.

When asked what candidate each supports in the 2008 Presidential election, a large number of UMass students responded with simply "Obama."

The first-term Democratic senator from Illinois seems to have drummed up a great deal of enthusiasm in Amherst and on college campuses nationwide.

"I've heard a lot of good things about Barack Obama," said freshman Rebecca O'Neil, an independent. "People seem excited [about him]."

"I'm leaning towards Obama," said James S., a junior. "He seems like a very interesting candidate, with a fresh attitude."

Hillary Clinton also received a good deal of support when students were questioned. Most quoted her husband Bill as a major influence to their decision.

"Bill Clinton was a good president in the nineties. His administration made the country very stable," said freshman Jessica Tellbuhn, a Republican. "I would vote for Hillary, since I believe she would be a good president, and make similar decisions."

A number of students remained undecided on a 2008 presidential candidate, however. "It's too early to make a decision," said Kara Burke, another freshman. "All of the issues have not been debated sufficiently yet. I'm going to wait."

The 2008 campaign is just getting pace," said Wills, a senior. "It's going to be fun to watch."

When asked which political party they most closely affiliated with, approximately one half of students questioned responded Democrat. The rest were divided fairly equally between independents, Republicans and Libertarian.

Surprisingly very few UMass students admitted to attending a political rally or protest within the past five years. Although those students responded that they made a difference politically immediately after the event.

See RACE on page 3

DEMOCRATS

Dennis Kucinich 12-29-06 — John Edwards 1-3-07 — Chris Dodd 1-11-07 — Bill Richardson 1-22-07 — Hillary Clinton 1-22-07 — Joe Biden 1-31-07 — Barack Obama 2-12-07 — Mike Gravel 4-14-07

Nov. — Dec. — Jan. — Feb. — Mar. — Apr. — Sep.

John McCain 11-16-06 — Mitt Romney 1-31-07 — Sam Brownback 1-22-07 — Duncan Hunter 1-25-07 — Mike Huckabee 1-29-07 — Rudy Giuliani 1-29-07 — Ron Paul 3-12-07 — Tom Tancredo 4-12-07 — Fred Thompson 9-5-07

REPUBLICANS

2007 SEP 20 2007

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 13
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Szagin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Bae
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Emily Nichols
Asst. Arts & Living Olga Dedchenko
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Cara Grannemann
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seaburn
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Ideloti
Assistant Sports Eli Bowersmith
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Tom Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, relying on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aleph Lecture and the Collegian Salmagundi in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1904 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been printed by Spectrum Press since 1998. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Teacher fights for gun rights

Wants glock for classroom

By Brad Knickerbocker
Associated Press

Ashland, Ore. — In court documents, she's known as "Jane Doe." Innocuous enough, but the woman behind that pseudonym pushes one of the nation's hottest political buttons: guns and school safety.

What Ms. Doe wants to do is take her Glock 9-mm pistol to the high school in Medford, Ore., where she teaches.

She's licensed to carry a concealed weapon and she has what many supporters say is a legitimate reason for being armed: a restraining order against her ex-husband based on threats he's allegedly made against her and her children.

But district policy prohibits anyone except a law-enforcement officer from bringing a weapon onto campus. When word got out that she had a concealed-carry permit, administrators reminded her of that policy. There's the political rub: According to state law, "any element relating to firearms and components thereof, including ammunition, is vested solely in the Legislative Assembly."

Backed by gun-rights groups, Doe intends to challenge the school district in state court this week. Meanwhile throughout the country, lawmakers are filing bills that would make it legal for adult school employees to carry firearms, in some cases providing special weapons safety training for those who want to be part of their school's security force in addition to their classroom teaching duties.

Gun-rights groups and school boards around the country are paying close attention to the Oregon case.

"There's a specific state statute that prohibits local governments, including school districts, from passing laws or policies prohibiting people from owning or possessing firearms," says James Leuenberger, the Portland, Ore., lawyer representing the teacher.

"Jane Doe," who agreed to be interviewed by phone on condition of anonymity, says she does not want to be viewed as an "Annie Oakley." Trying to extricate herself from an abusive relationship led her to buy her first gun just a few years ago, she says. Prior to that she had not been an activist in defense of the U.S. Constitution's Second Amendment provision regarding "the right to keep and bear arms."

But as a veteran teacher, she has come to believe strongly that having responsible armed adults on campus could have prevented tragedies such as those at Columbine High School in Colorado, Thurston High School in Oregon, and Virginia Tech University last April.

"I have no doubt at all that any time a criminal has gone into a school intending to commit violence they did so knowing nobody was going to be able to stop them," she says. "We've seen what happens when teachers do nothing or can do nothing, and that's not acceptable to me."

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, 37 states have laws specifically banning guns at schools. In general, administrators, teachers' organizations, and law-enforcement agencies favor such laws. In the confusion of a school shooting, police officials have said, adding guns to the situation just makes the predicament more dangerous.

The state panel investigating the April 16 shootings by a mentally disturbed student who killed 33 people at Virginia Tech University (the nation's deadliest school shooting) agrees.

"If numerous people had been rushing around with handguns ... the possibility of accidental or mistaken shootings would have increased significantly," the panel wrote.

But that has not stopped a push by the NRA and other gun advocates to allow guns on school property as a safety measure.

In Michigan last week, 16 state lawmakers sponsored legislation allowing teachers, administrators, and other school employees to carry concealed weapons on school property. Ohio has a similar bill pending. South Carolina, Alabama, and Virginia are among several other states that have considered lifting school campus gun bans this year, according to Stateline.org, which tracks state issues.

Louisiana lawmakers refused to pass a bill that would have outlawed guns in college dormitories, and legislators in Maine similarly killed a bill that would have given colleges the authority to prohibit guns on campuses.

Anthony Stavros, a member of the Nevada State Board of Regents governing higher education and a Las Vegas police captain, has proposed deputizing university employees as reserve officers, trained and qualified to carry weapons. The Iowa Board of Regents is close to allowing campus police to be armed.

But efforts to allow guns in grade schools and high schools tend not to get very far in state legislatures. The South Carolina measure failed. Administrators and the state teachers' union in Michigan have voiced strong opposition to the proposal there.

So far, just one state – Utah – allows concealed weapons on campus. Utah's law applies to public colleges and universities. The University of Utah opposed the 2004 legislation that allows weapons on campus (including those owned by students with concealed carry permits), but lost in the state supreme court.

For high school teacher "Jane Doe," who takes her case to court this week, the issue is very personal.

"I have two children in school," she says, "and I would like to think that if something like that ever happened, there would be somebody there to do the right thing to protect my kids."

Khmer Rouge leader incarcerated

By Ker Munthit
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — Cambodia's most senior surviving Khmer Rouge leader was arrested and charged with crimes against humanity on Wednesday – three decades after the murderous regime left 1.7 million people dead through starvation, overwork and execution.

Khmer Rouge ideologist Nuon Chea, the top aide to late leader Pol Pot, was arrested at his home in northwestern Pailin near the Thai border and flown to Phnom Penh, where he was put in the custody of a U.N.-backed tribunal.

The tribunal is investigating abuses committed when the communist Khmer Rouge held power in 1975-79. A statement released by the tribunal said its judges had placed Nuon Chea in "provisional detention" after charging him "for crimes against humanity and war crimes."

"Now the time has come for him to share his version of the history of Khmer Rouge before the court of law," said Youk Chhang, director of the Documentation Center of Cambodia, an independent group researching Khmer Rouge crimes.

"So many people have died. The facts are everywhere. There are plenty of mass graves, prisons, documents, photographs that can show what he did at that time," Youk Chhang said.

In Washington, the State Department said in a statement "the U.S. supports bringing to justice senior leaders responsible for the atrocities committed under the Khmer Rouge regime. This arrest is a welcome step forward for the Tribunal, and we await the outcome with interest."

Police surrounded Nuon Chea's home and served him with an arrest warrant after closing off surrounding roads. Officers then took the 82-year-old – who denies any wrongdoing – into custody, as his son and dozens of onlookers watched in silence.

"My father is happy to shed light on the Khmer Rouge regime for the world and people to understand," said his son, Nuon Say.

Nuon Chea joined the Khmer Rouge in the 1950s in its formative stages as Cambodia's underground communist party, later becoming its chief political ideologue and right-hand man to Pol Pot.

Prosecutors for the tribunal have said there are five senior Khmer Rouge figures they have recommended be tried. Nuon Chea is the second, and highest-ranking, leader to be detained.

Kaing Guek Eav, also known as Duch, who headed the former Khmer Rouge S-21 torture center, was the first suspect detained. He was charged on July 31 with crimes against humanity. The other suspects have not been publicly named.

Duch has implicated Nuon Chea in atrocities. According to a transcript of Duch's government interrogation after his arrest in 1999, he said Nuon Chea had "direct command" over S-21, where many purged communist cadre were detained.

"Nuon Chea had them sent directly to me," Duch said in the interview, a transcript of which was obtained by The Associated Press. Nuon Chea has consistently denied any responsibility for the regime's mass brutality, although he has said he was ready to face the tribunal.

"I admit that there was a mistake. But I had my ideology. I wanted to free my country. I wanted people to have well-being," Nuon Chea told the AP in 2004.

"I didn't use wisdom to find the truth of what was going on, to check who was doing wrong and who was doing right. I accept that error," he said in the interview.

Theary Seng, the director of Center for Social Development, a nonprofit group monitoring the development of the Khmer Rouge tribunal, said Nuon Chea's arrest was "a very good starting point."

"Even if we don't see a conviction, at least we have witnessed a process" of searching for justice, Theary Seng said.

After the Khmer Rouge were driven from power in 1979, the Khmer Rouge continued to fight a guerrilla war that unraveled only a decade ago and ended with a tacit agreement to let several of the former leaders live quietly in the country.

Pol Pot died in 1998. His former military chief, Ta Mok, died in custody in 2006.

Nuon Chea's senior-level colleagues – Ieng Sary, the former foreign minister, and Khieu Samphan, the former head of state – still live freely in Cambodia but are in declining health.

www.dailycollegian.com

KAUST Discovery Scholarship

Full scholarships for science and technology students

The King Abdullah University of Science and Technology (KAUST), a 21st century graduate-level research university, is offering scholarships for future leaders in science, engineering, and technology.

The benefits of the KAUST Discovery Scholarship include
- Full tuition at current institution
- Living stipend, book and computer allowance
- Upon graduation, admission and full scholarship for the KAUST master's degree program at the University's Red Sea campus

The KAUST campus opens in September 2009. Highly talented students with one to three years remaining in first university degree programs can apply now.

Visit www.kaust.edu.sa/discovery, or email scholarships@kaust.edu.sa.

CONTACT
KAUST

WANTED:
Judicial Hearing Board Members
A great experience for students who:
Are interested in student leadership
Wish to enhance communication skills
Want to build their RESUME
Want to learn about the University's judicial system
Requirements include:
Full-time enrollment 2.0 GPA No current judicial sanction
You need to attend one of the training sessions.
Tuesday, October 2, 7:00 – 9:00 p.m., 911 Campus Center
Wednesday, October 3, 1:00 – 3:00 p.m., 370 Whitmore
Wednesday, October 10, 7:00 – 9:00 p.m., 911 Campus Center
Thursday October 11, 1:00 – 3:00 p.m., 370 Whitmore
Applications available at Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore; Student Government Association Office, 420 Student Union; Residence Hall Cluster Offices
- Due Friday, September 28, 2007 at 5 p.m. -
Any questions? Please Contact: Paul Vasconcellos or Ashley Dixon, Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore, (413) 545-2684 ; dosoa@stuaf.umass.edu
DON'T MISS OUT ON THIS EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY!!!

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org 413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
Walk on anytime! No Tee Times Necessary!

Bill to cut college students' costs

CCRA from page 1

tion and analysis processes as well as tweaking the Increased Income Protection Allowance.

This means that a student, as well as that student's family, can make more money while still receiving financial aid, helping families whose assets may look better on paper than in reality. The CCRA also reduces interest rates on student loans from the current 6.8 percent to 3.4 percent over the next five years. The average savings to the 6.8 million students who take out need-based loans each year would be $4,400 over the life of the loan.

The average starting salary for a teacher in 2004 was $31,704– not nearly enough to offset the nearly unmanageable student debts most face. Under the CCRA, students who commit to teaching a high-need subject in a high-need area for four years would receive $4,000 in up-front tuition assistance, to a maximum of $16,000, in either their undergraduate or graduate careers. The low salary and high costs of becoming a teacher is the greatest deterrent to most students intending to pursue a career in teaching.

Other public servants, such as first responders, law enforcement officers, firefighters, nurses and prosecutors would also receive assistance under the CCRA. Under the bill, the maximum repayment period for public servants would change to ten years from twenty-five, reducing the strain.

"We want to do anything we can to encourage people to get into public service," said Senator Chris Murphy (D-CT).

In Massachusetts, the expected increase in loan and Pell aid to students and families over the next five years stands at $522,318,000. Massachusetts students who take out need-based loans each year currently number 98,990, with 77,196 receiving the Pell Grant. The average debt of the graduate of a public school is $13,994 after four years.

Frank Vitale is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at fvitale a student.umass.edu

Soldiers tested for brain injures

By Kristin M. Hall
Associated Press

Fort Campbell, Ky. — Before they leave for Iraq, thousands of troops with the 101st Airborne Division line up at laptop computers to take a test: basic math, matching numbers and symbols, and identifying patterns. They press a button quickly to measure response time.

It's all part of a fledgling Army program that records how soldiers' brains work when healthy, giving doctors baseline data to help diagnose and treat the soldiers if they suffer a traumatic brain injury – the signature injury of the Iraq war.

"This allows the Army to be much more proactive," said Lt. Col. Mark McGrail, division surgeon for the 101st. "We don't want to wait until the soldier is getting out of the Army to say, 'But I've had these symptoms.'"

The mandatory brain-function tests are starting with the 101st at Fort Campbell and are expected to spread to other military bases in the next couple of months. Commanders at each base will decide whether to adopt the program.

The tests provide a standard, objective measurement for each soldier's reaction time, their short-term memory and other cognitive skills. That data would be used when the soldiers come home to identify mild brain trauma that can often go unnoticed and untreated.

One veterans group wants to ensure the Army doesn't use the results to deny treatment by claiming that soldiers' problems came from pre-existing conditions.

"We certainly think these tests should not be used to reduce the responsibility that the Army has to treat the soldiers who have served," said Jason Forrester, director of policy for Veterans for America.

About 7,500 Fort Campbell soldiers have completed the tests, said Dr. Robert Schlegel, a University of Oklahoma researcher who administers the 10-minute exams to soldiers as they file quickly through a testing center.

One question asks soldiers to memorize patterns on the screen and then identify them later among several different patterns. Other questions require soldiers to match numbers and symbols, or complete simple addition and subtraction problems.

"Every body functions a bit differently in terms of how quickly they react to things, how well they process things and remember things and so forth," Schlegel said.

Brain injuries caused by explosions have become some of the

See SOLDIERS on page 4

Texts remind youth to vote

Method has mixed reviews

TEXTS from page 1

short, to-the-point reminder was found most effective. The messages were sent to half of a group of about 12,000 new registrants chosen for the study between 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. on the eve of the election. Of the half who received text messages, 56 percent voted, while 53.2 percent of the half that did not receive a reminder voted.

Working Assets is a wireless telephone company that sponsors national and international social justice, environmental and civic participation programs. Its customers vote online to decide which programs receive the funds raised. The company has been involved in voter registration efforts since 2003, during which time they have helped register more than 1.2 million voters.

Student PIRG's New Voters Project has been in existence since 2003 and is a non-profit, non-partisan organization that works to increase youth participation in the voting process and draw the attention of political leaders to the issues of young people.

"Although it has not been fully decided exactly how we plan on incorporating this study into our campaign, we are definitely excited by the results of this study and are in the process of seeing just where the benefits of text messaging will lead both our campaign and the youth in our country," said Gloria Vidal, media director of Student PIRG's New Voters Project.

MASSPIRG has also been involved in the New Voters project here at UMass, working to register new voters for the 2006 elections.

"I don't think a text would make me more likely to vote if I was already planning on it," said UMass sophomore Leah Tassman. "Maybe it would help with people who forgot it was Election Day."

Caitlin Quinn is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at cquinn a student.umass.edu

Little change seen in crime

POLICE from page 1

assault and battery. Bogoslavsky allegedly struck his victim in the facial region several times, resulting in the victim's hospitalization several surgeries. The victim suffered a broken jaw, a laceration on his forehead and the misaligning of several teeth.

There were conflicting reports regarding the cause of the fight. The victim had allegedly asked Bogoslavsky for a cigarette, a request that was not fulfilled.

The weekend was typical of September weekends in years prior. UMPD reported 571 calls last weekend compared to 622 in 2006 and 451 in 2005. The average number of calls for the first weekend of the semester is 290, compared to 258 during the second. In its book, Best Bets Colleges: 2008 Edition, the Princeton Review did not include UMass in the top 20 colleges in the book's Party Schools section. The survey, based largely upon student responses to the Review's questions, has been declared by UMass spokesman Patrick Callahan to be "junk science."

While UMass was rated 9th and 7th in 2006 and 2007, respectively, the University's falling off the party school list has resulted in no change in police call frequency.

Jeff McGuinness is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at wmcguinn a student.umass.edu

UM sounds off on politics

RACE from page 1

ing at UMass, a number of organizations such as MassPIRG and the Cannabis Reform Coalition still thrive.

"We are dealing with a very exciting time right now," said CRC president Jon Werner. "This year students have a unique opportunity to fight the drug war by supporting a ballot initiative that can decriminalize marijuana in the state in the next election." He added, "The CRC has been strongly supporting this initiative, with a recent jump in membership to 80 students and a new campaign to collect signatures in support of the ballot initiative. We are now the largest student-run political organization on campus."

MassPIRG has been active in past months as well, working to raise awareness for issues such as global warming, and hunger and homelessness.

The organization's grassroots efforts have also been turned recently towards lobbying to make college expenses more affordable. Less expensive textbooks and more financial aid to cut student debts are also issues the group has been focusing on.

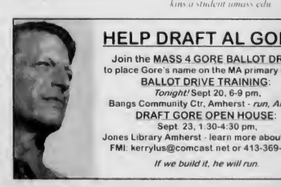
The UMass Republican Club hosted a speech by the former U.S. Congressman and current chairman of the Massachusetts GOP, Peter Torkildsen, on September 18.

The club also plans to host other speakers over the course of the year, including conservative writer Phyllis Schlafly on October 3 and Jonah Goldberg of the National Review in December. Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri also revealed his hope to the Daily Collegian earlier in the week that presidential candidate Mitt Romney will speak at UMass later in the year.

Huff gives big

HUFF from page 1

the five campuses. With matching funds from the individual campuses and the University Presidents office, a total of 2,500 students will have been financially supported by 2017.



"Charles and Josephine Huff are making a dramatic statement about their commitment to and confidence in the University of Massachusetts," Wilson said. "The Huff scholarship program and endowment will stand in perpetuity and will fuel the aspirations of students and their families throughout the generations."

Only Massachusetts residents are eligible for the scholarship. Students are also required to demonstrate financial needs as outlined by federal guidelines, to receive the benefits. Scholarship recipients are expected to maintain a grade-point-average of 3.0 or better in order to expect continued support from the program.

Huff graduated from the UMass Lowell College of Management in 1966 with a degree in industrial management. Throughout his career Huff has held senior positions with national corporations like Polaroid and Gillette. He served as a member of the UMass Board of Trustees until 2006.

"My education gave me the tools and placed me on a path, and I am forever grateful," Huff said. "This scholarship program will continue to benefit highly motivated students from all walks of life."

Derrick Perkins is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at dperkins a student.umass.edu

HELP DRAFT AL GORE!
Join the MASS 4 GORE BALLOT DRIVE to place Gore's name on the MA primary ballot!
BALLOT DRIVE TRAINING:
Tonight! Sept 20, 6-9 pm, Bangs Community Ctr, Amherst - run, Al, run!
DRAFT GORE OPEN HOUSE:
Sept. 23, 1:30-4:30 pm, Jones Library Amherst - learn more about Gore!
FMI: kerrylus@comcast.net or 413-369-4053
If we build it, he will run.

RELAX?
FORGET IT!
PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
Full Fitness Facilities CyberTrac Weights 45 Cardio Machines Studio w/35 Classes Cybex "Xtraflex" treat Basketball court 3 ultra ball court
Indoor Tennis courts Indoor Cycling Yoga Pilates Full Sized Indoor Pool with Lazy
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
Locally owned and operated
INFO-RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS
THE EARTH INSTITUTE AT COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
Earn Your MPA in Environmental Science and Policy
The Master of Public Administration Program in Environmental Science and Policy is a twelve-month program that combines Columbia University's hands-on approach to teaching public policy and administration with pioneering thinking about the environment
For more information or to RSVP, e-mail ar2393@columbia.edu or call 212-854-3142
For information on other SIPA programs, please visit the Web site at www.sipa.columbia.edu
Application deadline for early decision: November 1
You Are Invited to an Information Session
University of Massachusetts–Amherst
Monday, September 24
Location: Goodell Building, Room 508
Time: 12:00–12:30 pm
www.columbia.edu/cu/mpaenvironment

Enter to win a sweet Deal!
Guess how many jelly beans are in the jar?
Drawing to be held on September 28th
Simply fill out the entry form with your name, e-mail address, year of graduation, telephone number, and your guess of the number of jelly beans in the jar
The person guessing the exact number or closest to the exact number will win the jar of jelly beans.
Entrants must be UMass students on the meal plan
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 13

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Estey
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Marvin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McGill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Scagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szyszczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Deshchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Beau McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Cara Grannemann
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jay Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenoaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Evan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON REVENUE RECEIVED IN SELLING THE PAPER AS WELL AS ADVERTISING. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALPHA LITE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1903, THE MINUTE COLLEGIAN IN 1908 AND FINALLY THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENTLY OWNED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Teacher fights for gun rights

Wants glock for classroom

BY BRAD KNICKERBOCKER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ashland, Ore. — In court documents, she's known as "Jane Doe." Innocuous enough, but the woman behind that pseudonym pushes one of the nation's hottest political buttons: guns and school safety.

What Ms. Doe wants to do is take her Glock 9-mm pistol to the high school in Medford, Ore., where she teaches.

She's licensed to carry a concealed weapon and she has what many supporters say is a legitimate reason for being armed: a restraining order against her ex-husband based on threats he's allegedly made against her and her children.

But district policy prohibits anyone except a law-enforcement officer from bringing a weapon onto campus. When word got out that she had a concealed-carry permit, administrators reminded her of that policy. There's the political rub: According to state law, "any element relating to firearms and components thereof, including ammunition, is vested solely in the Legislative Assembly."

Backed by gun-rights groups, Doe intends to challenge the school district in state court this week. Meanwhile throughout the country, lawmakers are filing bills that would make it legal for adult school employees to carry firearms, in some cases providing special weapons safety training for those who want to be part of their school's security force in addition to their classroom teaching duties.

Gun-rights groups and school boards around the country are paying close attention to the Oregon case.

"There's a specific state statute that prohibits local governments, including school districts, from passing laws or policies prohibiting people from owning or possessing firearms," says James Leuenberger, the Portland, Ore., lawyer representing the teacher.

"Jane Doe," who agreed to be interviewed by phone on condition of anonymity, says she does not want to be viewed as an "Annie Oakley." Trying to extricate herself from an abusive relationship led her to buy her first gun just a few years ago, she says. Prior to that she had not been an activist in defense of the U.S. Constitution's Second Amendment provision regarding "the right to keep and bear arms."

But as a veteran teacher, she has come to believe strongly that having responsible armed adults on campus could have prevented tragedies such as those at Columbine High School in Colorado, Thurston High School in Oregon, and Virginia Tech University last April.

"I have no doubt at all that any time a criminal has gone into a school intending to commit violence they did so knowing nobody was going to be able to stop them," she says. "We've seen what happens when teachers do nothing or can do nothing, and that's not acceptable to me."

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, 37 states have laws specifically banning guns at schools. In general, administrators, teachers' organizations, and law-enforcement agencies favor such laws. In the confusion of a school shooting, police officials have said, adding guns to the situation just makes the predicament more dangerous.

The state panel investigating the April 16 shootings by a mentally disturbed student who killed 33 people at Virginia Tech University (the nation's deadliest school shooting) agrees.

"If numerous people had been rushing around with handguns ... the possibility of accidental or mistaken shootings would have increased significantly," the panel wrote.

But that has not stopped a push by the NRA and other gun advocates to allow guns on school property as a safety measure.

In Michigan last week, 16 state lawmakers sponsored legislation allowing teachers, administrators, and other school employees to carry concealed weapons on school property. Ohio has a similar bill pending. South Carolina, Alabama, and Virginia are among several other states that have considered lifting school campus gun bans this year, according to Stateline.org, which tracks state issues.

Louisiana lawmakers refused to pass a bill that would have outlawed guns in college dormitories, and legislators in Maine similarly killed a bill that would have given colleges the authority to prohibit guns on campuses.

Anthony Stavros, a member of the Nevada State Board of Regents governing higher education and a Las Vegas police captain, has proposed deputizing university employees as reserve officers, trained and qualified to carry weapons. The Iowa Board of Regents is close to allowing campus police to be armed.

But efforts to allow guns in grade schools and high schools tend not to get very far in state legislatures. The South Carolina measure failed. Administrators and the state teachers' union in Michigan have voiced strong opposition to the proposal there.

So far, just one state – Utah – allows concealed weapons on campus. Utah's law applies to public colleges and universities. The University of Utah opposed the 2004 legislation that allows weapons on campus (including those owned by students with concealed carry permits), but lost in the state supreme court.

For high school teacher "Jane Doe," who takes her case to court this week, the issue is very personal.

"I have two children in school," she says, "and I would like to think that if something like that ever happened, there would be somebody there to do the right thing to protect my kids."

Khmer Rouge leader incarcerated

BY KER MUNTHIT
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia— Cambodia's most senior surviving Khmer Rouge leader was arrested and charged with crimes against humanity on Wednesday– three decades after the murderous regime left 1.7 million people dead through starvation, overwork and execution.

Khmer Rouge ideologist Nuon Chea, the top aide to late leader Pol Pot, was arrested at his home in northwestern Pailin near the Thai border and flown to Phnom Penh, where he was put in the custody of a U.N.-backed tribunal.

The tribunal is investigating abuses committed when the communist Khmer Rouge held power in 1975-79. A statement released by the tribunal said Its judges had placed Nuon Chea in "provisional detention" after charging him "for crimes against humanity and war crimes."

"Now the time has come for him to share his version of the history of Khmer Rouge before the court of law," said Youk Chhang, director of the Documentation Center of Cambodia, an independent group researching Khmer Rouge crimes.

"So many people have died. The facts are everywhere. There are plenty of mass graves, prisons, documents, photographs that can show what he did at that time," Youk Chhang said.

In Washington, the State Department said in a statement "the U.S. supports bringing to justice senior leaders responsible for the atrocities committed under the Khmer Rouge regime. This arrest is a welcome step forward for the tribunal, and we await the outcome with interest."

Police surrounded Nuon Chea's home and served him with an arrest warrant after closing off surrounding roads. Officers then took the 82-year-old- who denies any wrongdoing– into custody, as his son and dozens of onlookers watched in silence.

"My father is happy to shed light on the Khmer Rouge regime for the world and people to understand," said his son, Nuon Say.

Nuon Chea joined the Khmer Rouge in the 1950s in its formative stages as Cambodia's underground communist party, later becoming its chief political ideologue and right-hand man to Pol Pot.

Prosecutors for the tribunal have said there are five senior Khmer Rouge figures they have recommended be tried. Nuon Chea is the second, and highest-ranking, leader to be detained.

Kaing Guek Eav, also known as Duch, who headed the former Khmer Rouge S-21 torture center, was the first suspect detained. He was charged on July 31 with crimes against humanity. The other suspects have not been publicly named.

Duch has implicated Nuon Chea in atrocities. According to a transcript of Duch's government interrogation after his arrest in 1999, he said Nuon Chea had "direct command" over S-21, where many purged communist cadre were detained.

"Nuon Chea had them sent directly to me," Duch said in the interview, a transcript of which was obtained by The Associated Press. Nuon Chea has consistently denied any responsibility for the regime's mass brutality, although he has said he was ready to face the tribunal.

"I admit that there was a mistake. But I had my ideology. I wanted to free my country. I wanted people to have well-being," Nuon Chea told the AP in 2004.

"I didn't use wisdom to find the truth of what was going on, to check who was doing wrong and who was doing right. I accept that error," he said in the interview.

Theary Seng, the director of Center for Social Development, a nonprofit group monitoring the development of the Khmer Rouge tribunal, said Nuon Chea's arrest was "a very good starting point."

"Even if we don't see a conviction, at least we have witnessed a process" of searching for justice, Theary Seng said.

After the Khmer Rouge were driven from power in 1979, the Khmer Rouge continued to fight a guerrilla war that unraveled only a decade ago and ended with a tacit agreement to let several of the former leaders live quietly in the country.

Pol Pot died in 1998. His former military chief, Ta Mok, died in custody in 2006.

Nuon Chea's senior-level colleagues– Ieng Sary, the former foreign minister, and Khieu Samphan, the former head of state– still live freely in Cambodia but are in declining health.

www.dailycollegian.com

KAUST Discovery Scholarship

Full scholarships for science and technology students

The King Abdullah University of Science and Technology (KAUST), a 21st century graduate level, research university, is offering scholarships for future leaders in science, engineering, and technology.

The benefits of the KAUST Discovery Scholarship include:
- Full tuition at current institution
- Living stipend, book and computer allowance
- Upon graduation, admission and full scholarship for the KAUST master's degree program at the University's Red Sea campus

The KAUST campus opens in September 2009. Highly talented students with one to three years remaining in first university degree programs can apply now.

Visit www.kaust.edu.sa/discovery, or email scholarships@kaust.edu.sa.

CONTACT
KAUST

WANTED:
Judicial Hearing Board Members

A great experience for students who:

Are interested in student leadership
Wish to enhance communication skills
Want to build their RESUME
Want to learn about the University's judicial system

Requirements include:

Full-time enrollment 2.0 GPA No current judicial sanction

You need to attend one of the training sessions.

Tuesday, October 2 7:00 – 9:00 p.m. 911 Campus Center	Wednesday, October 3 1:00 – 3:00 p.m. 370 Whitmore
Wednesday, October 10 7:00 – 9:00 p.m. 911 Campus Center	Thursday, October 11 1:00 – 3:00 p.m. 370 Whitmore

Applications available at
Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore
Student Government Association Office, 420 Student Union
Residence Hall Cluster Offices
- Due Friday, September 28, 2007 at 5 p.m. -

Any questions? Please Contact:
Paul Vasconcellos or Ashley Dixon
Dean of Students Office, 227 Whitmore
(413) 545-2684 ; dosoc@stuaf.umass.edu

DON'T MISS OUT ON THIS EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY!!!

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org 413-256-4071

Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass

Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst

Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!

Bill to cut college students' costs

CCRA from page 1

tion and analysis processes as well as tweaking the Increased Income Protection Allowance.

This means that a student, as well as that student's family, can make more money while still receiving financial aid, helping families whose assets may look better on paper than in reality. The CCRA also reduces interest rates on student loans from the current 6.8 percent to 3.4 percent over the next five years. The average savings to the 6.8 million students who take out need-based loans each year would be $4,400 over the life of the loan.

The average starting salary for a teacher in 2004 was $31,704– not nearly enough to offset the nearly unmanageable student debts most face. Under the CCRA, students who commit to teaching a high-need subject in a high-need area for four years would receive $4,000 in up-front tuition assistance, to a maximum of $16,000, in either their undergraduate or graduate careers. The low salary and high costs of becoming a teacher is the greatest deterrent to most students intending to pursue a career in teaching.

Other public servants, such as first responders, law enforcement officers, firefighters, nurses and prosecutors would also receive assistance under the CCRA. Under the bill, the maximum repayment period for public servants would change to ten years from twenty-five, reducing the strain.

"We want to do anything we can to encourage people to get into public service," said Senator Chris Murphy (D-CT).

In Massachusetts, the expected increase in loan and Pell aid to students and families over the next five years stands at $522,318,000. Massachusetts students who take out need-based loans each year currently number 98,990, with 77,196 receiving the Pell Grant. The average debt of the graduate of a public school is $13,994 after four years.

Frank Vitale is a Collegian staff writer. He can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

Soldiers tested for brain injures

BY KRISTIN M. HALL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky.

Before they leave for Iraq, thousands of troops with the 101st Airborne Division line up at laptop computers to take a test: basic math, matching numbers and symbols, and identifying patterns. They press a button quickly to measure response time.

It's all part of a fledgling Army program that records how soldiers' brains work when healthy, giving doctors baseline data to help diagnose and treat the soldiers if they suffer a traumatic brain injury the signature injury of the Iraq war.

"This allows the Army to be much more proactive," said Lt. Col. Mark McGrail, division surgeon for the 101st. "We don't want to wait until the soldier is getting out of the Army to say, 'But I've had these symptoms.'"

The mandatory brain-function tests are starting with the 101st at Fort Campbell and are expected to spread to other military bases in the next couple of months. Commanders at each base will decide whether to adopt the program.

The tests provide a standard, objective measurement for each soldier's reaction time, their short-term memory and other cognitive skills. That data would be used when the soldiers come home to identify mild brain trauma that can often go unnoticed and untreated.

One veterans' group wants to ensure the Army doesn't use the results to deny treatment by claiming that soldiers' problems came from pre-existing conditions.

"We certainly think these tests should not be used to reduce the responsibility that the Army has to treat the soldiers who have served," said Jason Forrester, director of policy for Veterans for America.

About 7,500 Fort Campbell soldiers have completed the tests, said Dr. Robert Schlegel, a University of Oklahoma researcher who administers the 10-minute exams to soldiers as they file quickly through a testing center.

One question asks soldiers to memorize patterns on the screen and then identify them later among several different patterns. Other questions require soldiers to match numbers and symbols, or complete simple addition and subtraction problems.

"Everybody functions a bit differently in terms of how quickly they react to things, how well they process things and remember things and so forth," Schlegel said.

Brain injuries caused by explosions have become some of the

See SOLDIERS on page 4

Texts remind youth to vote

Method has mixed reviews

TEXTS from page 1

short, to-the-point reminder was found most effective. The messages were sent to half of a group of about 12,000 new registrants chosen for the study between 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. on the eve of the election. Of the half who received text messages, 56 percent voted, while 53.2 percent of the half that did not receive a reminder voted.

Working Assets is a wireless telephone company that sponsors national and international social justice, environmental and civic participation programs. Its customers vote online to decide which programs receive the funds raised. The company has been involved in voter registration efforts since 2003, during which time they have helped register more than 1.2 million voters.

Student PIRG's New Voters Project has been in existence since 2003 and is a non-profit, non-partisan organization that works to increase youth participation in the voting process and draw the attention of political leaders to the issues of young people.

"Although it has not been fully decided exactly how we plan on incorporating this study into our campaign, we are definitely excited by the results of this study and are in the process of seeing just where the benefits of text messaging will lead both our campaign and the youth in our country," said Gloria Vidal, media director of Student PIRG's New Voters Project.

MASSPIRG has also been involved in the New Voters project here at UMass, working to register new voters for the 2006 elections.

"I don't think a text would make me more likely to vote if I was already planning on it," said UMass sophomore Leah Tassinari. "Maybe it would help with people who forgot it was Election Day."

Caitlin Quinn is a Collegian staff writer. She can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu assault and battery. Bogoslavsky allegedly struck his victim in the facial region several times, resulting in the victim's hospitalization several surgeries. The victim suffered a broken jaw, a laceration on his forehead and the misaligning of several teeth.

Little change seen in crime

POLICE from page 1

There were conflicting reports regarding the cause of the fight. The victim had allegedly asked Bogoslavsky for a cigarette, a request that was not fulfilled.

The weekend was typical of September weekends in years prior. UMPD reported 571 calls last weekend compared to 622 in 2006 and 451 in 2005. The average number of calls for the first weekend of the semester is 290, compared to 258 during the second. In its book, Best 366 Colleges: 2008 Edition, the Princeton Review did not include UMass in the top 20 colleges in the book's Party schools section. The survey, based largely upon student responses to the Review's questions, has been declared by UMass spokesman Patrick Callahan to be "junk science."

While UMass was rated 9th and 7th in 2006 and 2007, respectively, the University's falling off the party school list has resulted in no change in police call frequency.

Will McGuinness is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu

UM sounds off on politics

RACE from page 1

ing at UMass, a number of organizations such as MassPIRG and the Cannabis Reform Coalition still thrive.

"We are dealing with a very exciting time right now," said CRC president Jon Wenner. "This year students have a unique opportunity to fight the drug war by supporting a ballot initiative that can decriminalize marijuana at the state in the next election." He added, "The CRC has been strongly supporting this initiative, with a recent jump in membership to 80 students and a new campaign to collect signatures in support of the ballot initiative. We are now the largest student-run political organization on campus."

MassPIRG has been active in past months as well, working to raise awareness for issues such as global warming, and hunger and homelessness.

The organization's grassroots efforts have also been turned recently towards lobbying to make college expenses more affordable. Less expensive textbooks and more financial aid to cut student debts are also issues the group has been focusing on.

The UMass Republican Club hosted a speech by the former U.S. Congressman and current chairman of the Massachusetts GOP, Peter Torkildsen, on September 18.

The club also plans to host other speakers over the course of the year, including conservative writer Phyllis Schlafly on October 3 and Jonah Goldberg of the National Review in December. Republican Club President Brad DeHuniet also revealed his hope to the Daily Collegian earlier in the week that presidential candidate Mitt Romney will speak at UMass later in the year.

"I've been asked to join many campaigns and political clubs since arriving here," said freshman Maria Kniaznik. "I definitely feel like this is a politically motivated campus."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu

Huff gives big

HUFF from page 1

the five campuses. With matching funds from the individual campuses and the University Presidents office, a total of 2,500 students will have been financially supported by 2017.

"Charles and Josephine Hoff are making a dramatic statement about their commitment to and confidence in the University of Massachusetts," Wilson said. "The Hoff scholarship program and endowment will stand in perpetuity and will fuel the aspirations of students and their families throughout the generations."

Only Massachusetts residents are eligible for the scholarship. Students are also required to demonstrate financial needs, as outlined by federal guidelines, to receive the benefits. Scholarship recipients are expected to maintain a grade-point-average of 3.0 or better in order to expect continued support from the program.

Hoff graduated from the UMass Lowell College of Management in 1966 with a degree in industrial management. Throughout his career Hoff has held senior positions with national corporations like Polaroid and Gillette. He served as a member of the UMass Board of Trustees until 2002.

"My education gave me the tools and placed me on a path, and I am forever grateful," Hoff said. "This scholarship program will continue to benefit highly motivated students from all walks of life."

Derrick Perkins is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

RELAX?
FORGET IT!
PLAY HARD TO STAY HARD
JOIN THE BEST
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS
The area's premier full fitness facility
Fall Semester Student Special ! $188 FOR 15 WEEKS
Full Fitness Facilities · Cybex Free Weights
45 Cardio Machines · Studio w/ 35 Classes
Cybex "Nautilus" circuit
Basketball court · Volleyball court
Indoor Tennis courts
Indoor Cycling · Yoga · Pilates
Full-sized Indoor Track with Jacuzzi
90 GATEHOUSE RD, ECHO HILL
AMHERST, MA • 256-6446
Locally owned and operated
INFO · RATES AT HAMPFIT.COM

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS
THE EARTH INSTITUTE AT COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

Earn Your MPA in Environmental Science and Policy

The Master of Public Administration Program in Environmental Science and Policy is a twelve-month program that combines Columbia University's hands-on approach to teaching public policy and administration with pioneering thinking about the environment.

For more information or to RSVP, e-mail ar2397@columbia.edu or call 212-854-3142.

For information on other SIPA programs, please visit the Web site at www.sipa.columbia.edu

Application deadline for early decision: November 1

You Are Invited to an Information Session
University of Massachusetts–Amherst
Monday, September 24
Location: Goodell Building, Room 508
Time: 12:00–12:30 pm

www.columbia.edu/cu/mpaenvironment

HELP DRAFT AL GORE!
Join the MASS 4 GORE BALLOT DRIVE to place Gore's name on the MA primary ballot!
BALLOT DRIVE TRAINING:
Tonight! Sept 20, 6-9 pm,
Bangs Community Ctr, Amherst - run, Al, run!
DRAFT GORE OPEN HOUSE:
Sept. 23, 1:30-4:30 pm,
Jones Library Amherst - learn more about Gore!
FMI: kerryliu@comcast.net or 413-369-4053
If we build it, he will run.

Enter to win a sweet Deal!

Drawing to be held on September 28th

Simply fill out the entry form with your name, e-mail address, year of graduation, telephone number, and your guess of the number of jelly beans in the jar.

The person guessing the exact number or closest to the exact number will win the jar of jelly beans.

Entrants must be UMass students on the meal plan.

DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

SEP 20 2007

Dubai tower rises

DUBAI — The world's tallest building, still under construction in the booming Gulf emirate of Dubai, has become the world's tallest free-standing structure, its developers said on Thursday.

The Burj Dubai tower is now 555 meters (1,821.5 feet) tall and has surpassed the 553-meter- (1,824.9-feet) CN Tower in Toronto, Canada, which held the record for the world's tallest free-standing structure since 1976, developers Emaar Properties said in a statement.

The skyscraper, being built by South Korea's Samsung and set for completion at the end of next year, is one of several mega projects taking shape in Dubai, which is part of the United Arab Emirates.

The statement did not reveal the tower's final projected height or its final number of stories, which Emaar has kept secret since launching the project in January 2004.

The developer announced in July that Burj Dubai, Arabic for Dubai Tower, had exceeded Taiwan's Taipei 101 which is 508 meters (1,676.4 feet) tall, to become the tallest building in the world.

Associated Press

The Burj Dubai tower will be the world's largest when completed.

Meteorite may sicken Peruvians

Scientists deny the claim

BY ANDREA THOMPSON
Associated Press

Scientists doubt that the supposed meteorite strike that sickened some 200 residents of Peru last weekend actually involved anything from space.

Based on reports of fumes emanating from the crater, some scientists actually suspect that the event could have been some kind of geyser-like explosion rather than a meteorite impact.

"Statistically, it's far more likely to have come from below than from above," said Don Yeomans, head of the Near Earth Object Program at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, California.

The noxious fumes that have supposedly sickened curious locals who went to examine the crater would seem to indicate hydrothermal activity, such as a local gas explosion, because "meteorites don't give off odors," Yeomans told SPACE.com.

SKEPTICISM WARRANTED

Several times in recent history, reports of meteorite impacts have turned out to be untrue after scientific examination. Doubt in the scientific community was as rampant today as the speculations out of Peru.

Details surrounding the incident are also increasing experts' skepticism.

"Many of the reported features of the crater ("boiling water," sulphurous fumes, etc.) point to a geological mechanism of the crater formation," wrote Benny Peiser, a social anthropologist at John Moores University, in a daily newsletter that catalogues research and media coverage of space rock impacts and other threats to humanity. "I would not be surprised if, after careful analysis, the alleged meteorite impact reveals itself to be just another 'meteorwrong.'"

It's not impossible that the crater was left by a meteorite, Yeomans said, but if so, then the impact object most likely was small, based on the size of the crater. It would also probably have been a metal meteorite, because those are the only kind of small meteorites that don't burn up as they plummet through Earth's atmosphere, he added. Small stony meteorites rarely make it to the surface.

A couple features of the event reports suggest there was a space rock involved, said geophysicist Larry Grossman of the University of Chicago. The bright streak of light and loud bangs seen and heard by locals are consistent with a meteor streaking through Earth's atmosphere, he said. Most meteors do burn up, never becoming meteorites (which is what they're called if they reach the surface).

Because no one actually saw anything impact at the crater site, it's hard to say whether a space rock was involved because they are often deceptive as to where they will land. Many times, people swear a meteor landed nearby when in fact it was so far away that it dipped below the local horizon but never actually struck the ground.

"Sometimes these things land hundreds of thousands of miles away from where [people] think they will land," Grossman said.

INVESTIGATION NEEDED

Pictures of the crater show that the hole in the ground appears fresh, Grossman said, and the debris strewn around it is consistent with a meteorite impact but also could have been caused by digging.

And there are no previous reports of noxious fumes emanating from meteorite remnants or their craters, he said.

"If the noxious fumes came from the hole, it wasn't because the meteorite fell there," Grossman said, saying they would like have come from something already in the ground.

Grossman said that to determine whether the crater was made by a meteorite, the water in the hole must be pumped out and any large chunks of rock at the bottom should be examined to see if they are consistent with meteoritic composition.

Peru ran geologists are on their way to examine the crater, according to news reports.

Army studies soldiers' brains

SOLDIERS from page 2

most common combat wounds suffered in Iraq. Thirty percent of soldiers taken to Walter Reed Army Medical Center since 2003 suffered traumatic brain injuries, according to the Defense and Veterans Brain Injury Center.

The brain-injury center, which has seven facilities around the country, has seen 2,669 patients between 2003 and 2007. But doctors believe many less obvious brain-injury cases go undetected.

Sgt. Adam Wyatt, 22, has been close to 20 to 30 blasts from homemade bombs, rocket-propelled grenades or mortar fire during his last two deployments. But he's never been directly hit.

"The initial shock is a little disorienting," Wyatt said. "Your first thought is seeing if anyone is wounded and suppressing enemy fire."

Soldiers sometimes walk away from explosions with no obvious injuries. But the concussion from the blast can have a lingering effect that is not always immediately apparent.

"They look physically normal, but their neurocognitive performance is off," said Col. Mary Lopez, a physician specializing in occupational therapy.

Most brain injuries are mild, and soldiers can recover with rest and time away from the battlefield. But the military estimates that one-fifth of the troops with these mild injuries will have prolonged or lifelong symptoms requiring continuing care.

So little is known about traumatic brain injuries that these baseline readings could become an important cornerstone for future study.

Even the parameters of the injury are not known, like how close a soldier must be to a blast to suffer damage, or whether being knocked unconscious makes a difference, said Jordan Grafman, a neuroscience researcher at the National Institutes of Health.

Fahlman all smiles, symbol turns 25

By Daniel Lovering
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — It was a serious contribution to the electronic lexicon. :-) Twenty-five years ago, Carnegie Mellon University professor Scott E. Fahlman says, he was the first to use three keystrokes — a colon followed by a hyphen and a parenthesis – as a horizontal "smiley face" in a computer message.

To mark the anniversary Wednesday, Fahlman and his colleagues are starting an annual student contest for innovation in technology-assisted, person-to-person communication. The Smiley Award, sponsored by Yahoo Inc. carries a $500 cash prize.

Language experts say the smiley face and other emotional icons, known as emoticons, have given people a concise way in e-mail and other electronic messages of expressing sentiments that otherwise would be difficult to detect.

Fahlman posted the emoticon in a message to an online electronic bulletin board at 11:44 a.m. on Sept. 19, 1982, during a discussion about the limits of online humor and how to denote comments meant to be taken lightly.

"I propose the following character sequence for joke markers: :-)," wrote Fahlman. "Read it sideways."

The suggestion gave computer users a way to convey humor or positive feelings with a smile – or the opposite sentiments by reversing the parenthesis to form a frown.

Carnegie Mellon said Fahlman's smileys spread from its campus to other universities, then businesses and eventually around the world as the Internet gained popularity.

Computer science and linguistics professors contacted by The Associated Press said they were unaware of who first used the symbol.

"I've never seen any hard evidence that the :-) sequence was in use before my original post, and I've never run into anyone who actually claims to have invented it before I did," Fahlman wrote on the university's Web page dedicated to the smiley face. "But it's always possible that someone else had the same idea – it's a simple and obvious idea, after all."

Variations, such as the "wink" that uses a semicolon, emerged later. And today people can hardly imagine using computer chat programs that don't translate keystrokes into colorful graphics, said Ryan Stansifer, a computer science professor at the Florida Institute of Technology.

"Now we have so much power, we don't settle for a colon-dash-paren," he said. "You want the smiley face, so all these chatting softwares have to have them."

Instant messaging programs often contain an array of faces intended to express emotions ranging from surprise to affection to embarrassment.

"It has been fascinating to watch this phenomenon grow from a little message I tossed off in 10 minutes to something that has spread all around the world," Fahlman was quoted as saying in a university statement. "I sometimes wonder how many millions of people have typed these characters, and how many have turned their heads to one side to view a smiley, in the 25 years since this all started."

Amy Weinberg, a University of Maryland linguist and computer scientist, said emoticons such as the smiley were "definitely creeping into the way, both in business and academia, people communicate."

"In terms of things that language processing does, you have to take them into account," she said. "If you're doing almost anything and you have a sentence that says 'I love my boss' and then there's a smiley face, you better not take it seriously."

Emoticons reflect the third original purpose of language – to enable people to express emotion, said Clifford Nass, a professor of communications at Stanford University. The emotion behind a written sentence may be hard to discern because emotion is often conveyed through tone of voice, he said.

"What emoticons do is essentially provide a mechanism to transmit emotion when you don't have the voice," Nass said.

Office Microsoft presents www.theultimatesteal.com collegefest
september 22 & 23, 2007
events & giveaways!
Daily prizes from Microsoft Office 2007 including Xbox 360 and Zune giveaways! live music!
• Fabolous
• We Are the Fury
• Shop Boyz
• Whitestarr, presented by PlayboyU.com free stuff!
visit collegefest.com for more info
JOCKEY
sendUmobile
Experience JetBlue at CollegeFest! jetBlue AIRWAYS
Replnation stuff night boston.com
Hynes Convention Center
900 Boylston Street · Boston, MA.
Doors open at 12 noon Sat. & Sun. $10 Admission

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." – Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MA casinos a bad bet

Nick Milano

It's no real surprise that Deval Patrick is planning and advocating for the authorization of three casinos in Massachusetts. His dreams to make community college free for all students and to make Massachusetts a center for research in the life sciences will require sufficient funding that the state cannot yet support. So why not invite casinos to Massachusetts, hold a public bid for them, and reap the supposed millions of dollars that taxation of the casino industry might provide?

From a probable increase in crime to an expected increase in problem and addicted gamblers, there are enough drawbacks to scare off proponents of gambling. To understand the potential dangers of compulsive gambling, one has to look no further than a study from the Massachusetts Council on Compulsive Gambling on the gambling behaviors of Massachusetts high-school students. Of those surveyed, one in 20 had already been arrested for gambling related activity, one in 10 mentioned family problems due to gambling and, most shockingly, 13 percent revealed that even when they wanted to stop gambling, they were unable to walk away.

With the recent boom in the popularity of the World Series of Poker, it is not surprising to hear that high school kids like to play poker with friends, but this study was performed 13 years ago, long before the World Series was a nationally televised, $12.5 million affair. One can only wonder how high those percentages might climb if there are casinos a quick train ride or a short drive away for everyone in Massachusetts.

In addition to the dangers local casinos pose to compulsive gamblers and their families, the state must consider the logistics of regulating the gambling industry. Both New Jersey and Nevada have extensive agencies whose sole purpose is to monitor the business practices of the casinos. New Jersey has separate boards to govern over the Lottery and the casinos while also boasting two more agencies to regulate and investigate the gambling industry.

In other words, the state of Massachusetts will have to create at least one agency to regulate casinos and another to prosecute them for breaking laws. This will only expand an already large government which is in the midst of implementing a variation on universal health care. Casinos will bring money to the state, but how much of this new revenue will just go to watching over the gambling industry? It seems to me the best way to save money is to cut costs, not invite a whole new industry to the state.

Patrick's plans are much to the contrary. The plan to make community college free is just one of many initiatives that will undoubtedly increase spending in a state where Democrats have trouble constraining themselves. The casinos will not serve to provide a surplus source of money, but will become a crucial part of the state's income. It is one thing to be beholden to the citizens who fund the state through taxes, but it is entirely different and much more dangerous for the state to be dependent upon the revenue of the gambling industry. When faced with the inevitable conflict between citizens and the casino lobbyists, in whose interest will the state act?

Casinos will bring money to the state, but how much of this new revenue will just go to watching over the gambling industry?

One needs to investigate no farther than New Jersey to see the power the gambling industry can hold over a state. In trying to assure the good health of its citizens and tourists, the New Jersey legislature passed a mandate against indoor smoking, but made casinos exempt. To them, satisfying casino owners was more important than providing a safe working and gaming environment for the thousands of people who visit casinos. Atlantic City tried to enforce its own restriction, but the gambling industry vehemently objected, professing concerns over a potential loss of profits. Having already won over the state, the gambling industry won a compromise when the city edited the mandate to only cover 75 percent of a casino's floor. Colorado and Nevada also passed anti-smoking laws which put casinos out of the mandate's reach. This is only one way the gambling industry can hold its host state and city hostage. Imagine the implications in a state where the governor wants casinos to fund several major new initiatives.

Some proponents for casinos figure Massachusetts should at least gain from the money that is leaving the state as New England residents descend upon Connecticut and Rhode Island to gamble. Yes, the state could make millions of dollars in additional revenue, but what sort of power will this give the gambling industry? Yes, the state will see an increase of jobs, but how many families will be torn apart by a gambler who cannot resist the allures of the casino's bright lights just a few miles down the street? Yes, in theory, taxes, especially the climbing property tax, will go down, but in a state notorious for wild spending habits, is this not just a theory? Will the state leadership recognize the chance to lessen the state's tax burden, or like that compulsive gambler, will they be unable to control spending as history has shown? There are too many questions. There are too few answers. Why risk opening Pandora's Box?

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?
WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!
THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS
EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS
FOR NEXT SEMESTER!
GET YOUR ARTWORK
PUBLISHED!

No need to use force

Melissa Garber

Every time a moderately controversial speaker comes to UMass, there seems to be no shortage of student protesters to accompany the event. The Republican Club knows that they cannot sponsor a lecture without some group somewhere on campus finding a relatively creative way to disrupt it. Maybe I haven't been paying enough attention, but as far as I know, the protesters have yet to have a major encounter with the UMass cops.

So why is it that University of Florida student Andrew Meyers was arrested and then Tasered for asking too many questions at a Q & A forum with Senator John Kerry? I have seen kids like Meyers at every speech I have gone to on campus. He was annoying, he was obnoxious and he was just a little bit too eager. To UMass students, this should sound like a pretty familiar situation – obnoxious kid won't stop pestering the guest speaker.

I'm sure by now everyone has seen the YouTube.com video of Meyers being arrested. He was asking Kerry some pointless questions about Yale, he was obviously still really upset about Kerry's '04 loss, and then suddenly the cops were forcefully arresting him. Apparently his microphone had been turned off as kind of a way nice way of telling him to shut up.

So the cops tried to arrest Meyers, who was flailing his body around in resistance and was shouting over and over, "What did I do?" Which is exactly what I was wondering. Besides asking too many questions, what did he do?

At this point Kerry had told the cops quite passively that he would answer the student's questions, and he was doing just that. It was really odd. The audience's reaction, on the other hand, was even more embarrassing than Kerry's. They were clapping and cheering like one of their peers wasn't being arrested for no reason.

Apparently they enjoy their rights being ignored by overzealous cops. I'm sure the audience would have been far less enthusiastic about the situation if Meyer's rights to get belligerently drunk at a party had been taken away rather than his rights to free speech.

But I guess he was really annoying.

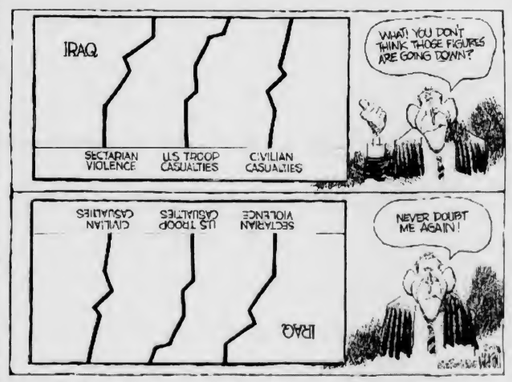
I am pretty sure the level of police brutality cannot just rise with the level of student obnoxiousness.

and that completely justifies the cop's actions. Meyers was being arrested for disturbing the peace and resisting arrest. What I don't understand is whether he was disturbing the peace before or after the cops arrested him.

The most terrifying part of the whole event, besides the student body's response (which is more disturbing than terrifying,) is seeing Meyers on the ground with several cops holding him down, screaming that he would get up and walk out as long as he wasn't Tasered. I think the exact quote is, "Don't Tase me, bro."

So he called the cop a "bro." That is really annoying. I understand he was being unnecessarily obnoxious. But I am pretty sure the level of police brutality cannot just rise with the level of student obnoxiousness. Meyers was being held down on the ground by four cops as another cop Tasered him. He was a big kid, but he was not the Hulk.

He was already subdued; there were plenty of cops and just one Andrew Meyers. There was no reason to use that kind of force on him. There is no reason to use that kind of force on anyone who poses no physical threat.



There are reports that this was a prank and that he had brought a video camera to tape the whole event. But I am pretty sure the cops were not in on this. He could not have guessed that asking a lot of questions would get him arrested, much less Tasered.

He probably just wanted to be taped harassing Kerry. Even if he was acting for the cameras as he got arrested, there was no way he knew the situation would escalate to 1,000 jolts of electricity being shot through his body.

Despite what every newspaper seems to be reporting, Meyers' past history of taping his pranks is irrelevant to this situation. His actions did not justify the kind of brute force that was used on him.

Meyers went over his one-minute question limit and was probably engaging in a little self-promotion. That was his crime. His resistance to the cops involved him squirming around a lot. He was not armed and he was not aggressive. It was five cops versus one kid. Where does the need for a Taser factor in?

Melissa Garber is a Collegian editor. She can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu.

It's how you play the game

Caroline Moss

Blondes may have more fun, but they most certainly don't have more … maps. If you don't know what I'm referring to, then ask Lauren Upton. I'm sure she could clearly and coherently explain. And if she's unable – which is not that big of an "if" to begin with – please search YouTube for "Miss Teen South Carolina" or "aphasic beauty queen" prior to reading this column.

For those of you who do know what I'm talking about, I think we can all agree on what a laugh it was to watch Upton, 18, answer why a fifth of Americans can't locate the United States on a map. Interesting question – perhaps it's the unsatisfactory state of the majority of our education system. Or perhaps it's that "U.S Americans are unable to do so because, um, some people out there in our nation don't have maps." Also, something about Iraq and South Africa. After managing to come in third (It's called a beauty pageant for a reason), Upton's popularity skyrocketed instantly due to her lack of literacy. YouTubers had a field day. BustedTees.com designed a graphic T-shirt derived from the now infamous answer, and I'm pretty sure geography teachers everywhere listened to My Chemical Romance while slitting their wrists in dark corners.

Who won the title of Miss Teen USA 2007? Technically, it was Colorado's Hilary Cruz. I say it was Lauren Upton.

While I agree that it is appalling that an 18-year-old beauty pageant contestant proved to have less public speaking skills than a six year old or the president of our country, we have to look at the real underlying message that this situation sends to our culture and society. I'm sure many of you, just like myself, saw one of the many YouTube videos of Upton's response without watching the Miss Teen USA pageant on television. Personally, I didn't even know it was airing that weekend, and if I had, I wouldn't have watched it. So my question to you is: Who won the title of Miss Teen USA 2007? Technically, it was Colorado's Hilary Cruz. I say it was Lauren Upton.

Blondes have always been stereotyped as dumb, and the media has done little to disprove the theory. With frontrunners such as Paris Hilton and Kristin Cavelleri from Laguna Beach, it's easy to continue to generalize blondes as being idiots. Jessica Simpson's "Chicken of the Sea" comment is never far from our minds regardless of what color hair dye she uses. These women are the butt of society's jokes; we insult their life choices, we degrade them and we refuse to believe that they will turn into respectable adults. Yet they grace the covers of our magazines as style icons and their faces will remain on MTV in syndication until what appears to be the end of time. Let's be honest with ourselves: the reason we can so persistently scoff at their lifestyles is simply because we care enough to sneak onto perezhilton.com during lecture to find out more about them. As I watch Lauren Upton on the Today Show and see no trace of the actual winner of Miss Teen USA, I have to wonder; have blondes had it right all along?

Lindsay Lohan recently said in an E! commercial advertising what will probably be her 9th True Hollywood Story, "It's like, you see the tabloids, and as much as you hate being in them … you still want to be in them." Even Lindsay knows there's no such thing as bad press. Even in her case, and in the case of Paris Hilton's 28 nights in jail, where the term "bad press" is an understatement, the girls still headlined every magazine imaginable. Since the premiere of "Georgia Rule," Lindsay's career has taken a downfall, so what does she do? Cocaine. While her movies are fading, her personal failures have brought her into the forefront of the spotlight.

There's backhanded success for you.

Take Lauren Conrad of "Laguna Beach," now of "The Hills." In essence, she is a nothing. She's an attractive rich girl from Orange County who proved that even pretty people can have drama in their lives and mansions. And now look at her. She has two reality TV shows under her belt and an internship at Teen Vogue, not to mention huge popularity among the most crucial demographic: teens and young 20-somethings. She may have said some idiotic things in her past, but we're the ones who can re-watch those idiotic moments time and time again because, hey, we bought all of the seasons on DVD.

So while Lauren Upton may have proved herself stupid when discussing the lack of maps in the average American household, who gets the last laugh? As of Sept. 17, she signed a deal with Donald Trump's modeling agency in New York City where her assignments could earn her anywhere up to $25,000 per day. As for the actual winner, Hilary Cruz? Nothing glorified yet. She hopes to finish college and one day be a television journalist.

Upton earned her fame via nothing substantial, but like the dignified Lindsay Lohan knows, it's still fame. Beggars can't be choosers … even if you do know how to locate the United States on a map.

Caroline Moss is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cemoss@student.umass.edu.

Murder by millions

Jeff Napolitano

On Sept. 9, Boston Globe columnist Jeff Jacoby declared in that paper that we (the United States) are winning the war on terrorism, calling a lack of terrorist attacks on U.S. soil since 9/11 our "good fortune." He gives a narrative of the events since then, including the bombing and invasion of Afghanistan, praising the implementation of the Patriot Act, and claiming that al-Qaida is being eliminated (albeit slowly). Those of us with common sense and enough literacy to read the newspaper instinctively understand Mr. Jacoby to be an idiot clinging to a fundamentalist ideology. But what makes him uniquely unqualified to write in a paper with such wide distribution as the Globe is what he did not mention at all – not even once – in his entire column: Iraq.

Jacoby's glaring omission isn't terribly surprising. The most cursory glance at the news on Iraq shows that our invasion and occupation of that country is costing us about $200 million per day. The total financial cost (as opposed to the human, emotional, political, and other costs) has been estimated to be up to $2 trillion. The current body count of U.S. soldiers stands at 3,780, with tens of thousands physically maimed, and an untold number mentally devastated. The current body count of Iraqi civilians stands at an estimated 1,220,580, according to the latest polling done by the British polling firm O.R.B. It should be noted that third-party and sophisticated methods of polling are needed to determine the death of innocent people in Iraq, because our government and military do not bother to count those who die on their watch.

The declaration by Jacoby that the "war on terror is working" comes at the same time that General Petraeus testified that he "doesn't know" whether the Iraqi occupation is making Americans safer. The National Intelligence Estimate directly contradicts Jacoby's claims, stating that "the average number of daily attacks against civilians remained about the same over the last six months" and that the vast majority of benchmarks that were established by Washington politicians have failed to be reached. Now, in a stunning but not surprising move, the Bush administration, in collusion with Democrat and Republican presidential candidates alike, is beginning to beat the same, tattered, unconvincing war drums about Iran.

These are all crimes – including attempting to provoke a war with Iran – and each of them should be brought to the Hague and incarcerated for the rest of their lives.

Are we insane? For those of us who didn't have geography in our increasingly meager and cash-strapped public schools, Iran is a really big country, with a really big population of about 70 million (over twice that of Iraq). Furthermore, they ain't a poor country – they're the leading economic force in the region, and they've got big friends like Russia and China. Unlike Iraq, if the United States attacks Iran, Iran will attack back.

It is an act of Orwellian hypocrisy for Bush, Hillary, and Obama to be deriding Iranian "interference" in Iraq. For the leaders of a country who intentionally deceived the population of the threat of Iraq, for them to sign off on the bombing of a civilian population, for them to be a part of an aggressive invasion in violation of the standards to which we held the Nazis, and for them to then criticize Iran for daring to try to have influence in their neighbor is beyond hubris. These are all crimes – including attempting to provoke a war with Iran – and each of them should be brought to the Hague and incarcerated for the rest of their lives. They should certainly not be members of the federal government, never mind candidates for president.

So what are the real consequences of the "war on terrorism"? Some of these are painfully evident: an all-time high in anti-American sentiment around the world, the money lost that could otherwise be healing not only this country, but the world, the lives of not only our own people, but the lives of people whom we were supposed to be saving. Perhaps the most untold damage of all are those who make claims about patriotism and righteousness, who are hurting us more than bin Laden ever could. Or perhaps it's our common understanding that something is terribly wrong in this country and that we are filled with too little will and too much cynicism to do anything about it. I hope neither is the case, but the trajectory we're following makes it look like things are going to get much worse before (and if) they ever get better.

Jeff Napolitano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jnapolit@student.bmc.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Photos courtesy Toan Trinh
Page design Chris Martin

Gym Class Heroes rock Mullins

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Correspondent

The Mullins Center was alive with the sounds of hundreds of screaming college students last night at the Gym Class Heroes concert. The band, a four-piece hip-hop-rock group from New York, blew the crowd away with their energetic and controversial performance. A performance packed with sexual overtones and among other things, multiple braziers thrown on stage by a pack of scantily-clad girls in the audience.

As kids filed into the Mullins and gathered around the stage, the music of DJ Abilities, one of the informal openers for Gym Class Heroes, filled the air. He spun some rap hip-hop beats for the crowd's listening enjoyment while they waited, which proved very successful as the floor in front of the stage was turned into an impromptu night club.

After departing, DJ Abilities was soon followed by the opening act, The Pack, who emerged onto the stage complete with sunglasses and chains around their necks. Their set was entertaining, full of audience participation and attempted sing-alongs. Although their song lyrics were somewhat repetitive, they really got the anxious crowd pumped-up and ready for the band everyone was waiting for.

Directly after the Pack finished playing, yet another band called Tyga stormed rather unexpectedly onto the stage, shouting random, inaudible greetings into their microphones. Their set was similar to that of the previous act, except with two less members and no sunglasses.

Travis McCoy, lead singer of Gym Class Heroes, later explained that one of the members of Tyga was his younger cousin, which might explain why they were the band to play directly before the headliners.

Gym Class Heroes' set was nothing short of astounding. They charged onto the stage with flags waving, to boisterous screams of excitement. The band dove right into their first song, "New Friend Request" which drew an energetic and surprisingly involved response from the audience. The screams grew even louder when Travis incorporated "UMass" into a couple of the songs.

It was evident from anyone standing in the area in front of the stage, or in the seats surrounding it, that this band knows how to put on an entertaining live show. Not only did Travis integrate the crowd into his between-song-banter as much as possible, but he even singled people out to make a point, in a way of introducing some of the band's songs.

Before beginning the insanely popular and catchy "Cupid's Chokehold," McCoy pointed out a girl in the crowd and asked if she had a boyfriend. When the girl responded negatively, the singer proceeded to say "well you will after this song!" It was comments such as those that made this band's live performance so enjoyable to watch. It was also very clear that everybody in that arena agreed because the dancing never stopped, along with the ceaseless energy of the band.

Gym Class even kept it interesting by signing their version of a Beach Boys song, "Good Vibrations" off their 1966 album "Smiley Smile." Before beginning the song, Travis explained that "this is not your conventional cover song," which was made obvious by the fresh hip hop style take they put on it. It was surprisingly well done and even had some kids singing along, which was even more shocking.

Another crowd favorite seemed to be "The Queen and I" which is the first track off of the bands sophomore album, "As Cruel as School Children." The floor turned into a dance party during this song. There was not an idle body in the whole place, as the energy poured out of the crowd and band alike.

The facial expressions of the band during their set were enough to run that show alone. The drummer, bassist and guitarist kept smiles permanently plastered on their faces from beginning to end, while Travis stuck out his tongue, winked, and scrunched up his face more times than anyone could count.

At the end of Gym Class Heroes' last song, as McCoy was closing out the set and making his finishing remarks, multiple bras got thrown on stage directly in front of the dumbfounded vocalist. He stopped mid-sentence, flashed a broad smile to the screaming girls who were obviously the owners of the undergarments, and proceeded to finish out the set with the bras draped around his shoulders as the band departed from the stage.

After the band made the audience squirm for all of 30 seconds for an encore, the boys came striding back onto the stage for one last song, their most popular to date, "Clothes Off!"

From beginning to end, the concert was beyond entertaining and an overall success for all of the bands on the lineup. Gym Class Heroes really pulled through, and lived up to their high standards of an outstanding, energetic live performance full of sexual innuendo and unexpected surprises.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu.

SEP 20 2007

Eating like the President

Former Executive Chef for the White House Walter Scheib visited the Berkshire Dining Commons yesterday and prepared some of the favorite dishes of the first families. During his time in the White House, Scheib has cooked for both the Clinton's and Bush's.

Leaving fresh prints on World War II

Director, Burns newest project

By Chuck Barney
Contra Costa Times

Acclaimed big-screen directors from William Wyler to Steven Spielberg have been drawn to it. Newsman Tom Brokaw gave voice to the generation that lived through it. And the History Channel has gluttonously overdosed on it.

Still, Ken Burns believed there was a way to leave fresh footprints on the well-trampled turf that is World War II.

For his latest PBS documentary, a 15-hour epic simply called "The War" which begins airing Sept. 23 at 8 p.m., he embraced what he calls a "bottom-up" approach that emphasizes the grunts rather than the generals and storytelling over strategizing.

"We didn't want to be distracted by celebrity generals and politicians and by strategy and tactics, by armament and weaponry and all things Nazi," Burns says. "We were more interested in bearing witness to the experience of combat by so-called ordinary people. And, also, the experience of someone anxiously waiting at home for a loved one to come back from that war. ... It's an entirely different take."

The result is perhaps Burns' finest work yet — a deeply intimate, artistically profound and emotionally powerful television experience that promises to haunt the dreams of viewers long after they've seen it. Yes, it's another Burns-style marathon, parceled out over seven nights. And at times, it's horrifying to watch. But those who stick with "The War" will find it time well spent.

Burns, who became a household name 17 years ago with "The Civil War" (still the highest-rated program in PBS history), chose to return to the battlefield after being struck by a sense of urgency. More than 1,000 World War II veterans are dying every day and taking with them invaluable shards of history.

"Very few of these people have opened up and talked about their experiences," says Burns, whose father, Robert, served as a lieutenant in the Army Corps of Engineers in France. "All those memories represent irrevocable loss. As someone once told me: 'When a man dies, it's like a library burning down.'"

When Burns and his longtime filmmaking partner Lynn Novick, initially delved into the project 6 years ago, their natural inclination was to get their hands on a pile of World War II documentaries. What they found left them largely unimspired.

"I remember popping in a film about a certain Pacific battle one afternoon and thinking it would be great," recalls Novick. "But my eyelids started getting really heavy, and I had to ask myself, 'Why am I falling asleep?' It just had a feeling of sameness and came across like a textbook. We wanted to do a film that seizes your attention emotionally."

But how to get their arms around such a massive subject? Burns and his crew ultimately decided to pick four geographically disparate American communities and use them as entry points into the World War II experience. The cities: Waterbury, Conn.; Mobile, Ala.; Luverne, Minn.; and Sacramento, Calif.

"We wanted to choose towns that our audience would have no preconceptions about," Burns says. "It was important that we didn't want to come to these places with any kind of baggage and assumptions."

With residents conveying often poignant accounts, each community winds up providing a different window into the war. Sacramento, for example, is largely used to put a face on the Japanese citizens who were forced into internment camps. In Mobile, we find the story of a sleepy town that was transformed into a major industrial center with a population that more than doubled during the war, leading to growing pains and racial turbulence.

While scouring the towns for interview subjects, the filmmakers struggled at times to find people who could adequately articulate the World War II experience. Rare exceptions were veterans such as Quentin Aanenson, an airman from Luverne. One of several interviewees who makes a strong impression in the film, Aanenson conveys with remarkable clarity and astuteness the extraordinary impact the war had on his generation.

"There are many veterans who probably had the experiences he did," says Novick. "But not many who are able to express themselves like he does and who have done the work to figure out how to explain what they saw and what they felt and to have made peace with it."

Aanenson, who met with TV writers during a summer press conference, acknowledges that many of his fellow veterans long have been reticent when it comes to discussing their war experiences.

"It probably was the degree of the stress and trauma of what those days were like," he explains. "And we also noticed that as we came home, unless there was someone who had been in similar circumstances, they couldn't understand anything we might say about it. So I think we learned to just draw it inside ourselves and deal with

See BURNS on page 8

Return of the 'Family Guy'

Cartoon hit gears up for new season

By Rick Bentley
McClatchy Newspapers

The cast of the Fox Network animated comedy "Family Guy" has just completed a reading of the script for the 100th episode in front of a group of television critics. That show will air later this year but you are going to have to wait for the sixth season DVD to hit streets this time next year to hear a lot of what they said.

Profanity is as thick as paparazzi around Britney Spears. And there are a few topics — let's say, jokes about abortion — that have been toned down from the original script.

"I think the abortion one was about eight times as long," says series creator and main voice talent Seth MacFarlane. "The swearing you'll only see on the DVD. Since that's become such a big part of 'Family Guy,' if we bleep something for TV, we'll let it slide on the DVD."

The fifth season DVD hit stores Tuesday. The new season of "Family Guy," that will feature the 100th show later this year, begins at 9 p.m. FOX Sunday on Fox. It is a one-hour parody of "Star Wars."

"Family Guy" has always been a show that pushes television limits when it comes to what this family, a clan so dysfunctional they make "The Simpsons" look like "The Waltons," says and does. MacFarlane talks about that balancing act and other aspects of the show in the following:

Question: Which is funnier: comedy that offends people or when it doesn't offend?

Seth MacFarlane: "The thing that I try to do with 'Family Guy' is to kind of have this balance between the classic and the edgy. You know, we do a lot of poop jokes, but at the same time, we use a 45-piece orchestra every week with a full string section.

"We don't try to shock for shock's sake. If something is just shocking and not funny, then we'll cut it out. And we have these table reads every week in which we have a very good cross section of artists and people from the outside and writers, and the studio network is there. No one is shy about gasping in horror if we have crossed the line, and so it's a very good barometer."

Q: Do you feel any pressure each year to change the pop references to attract a younger audience?

SM: "We're not just trying to do '80s references. We had an episode recently where Peter (voiced by

See FAMILY GUY on page 8

Hair By Harlow
Salon & Day Spa
Experience...
• Rejuvenating facials
• A variety of manicures
• Nail pampering
• Hair design
Brazillian Waxing!
220 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone: (413) 253-8897

FOUR Seasons
OPEN EVERY DAY UNTIL 11PM!
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
Beer
Budweiser & Bud Light 24 pk btl $16.99*
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk cans $13.99*
Keystone Light 30 pk cans $12.99*
Bass Ale 12 pk btl $11.99*
Magic Hat 12 pk btl $11.99*
Pacifico 12 pk btl $11.99*
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 12 pk btl $11.99*
Miller Chill 12 pk btl $10.99*
Killians Irish Red 12 pk btl $9.99*
Narragansett 20 pk btl $8.99*
Landshark Lager 6 pk btl $6.69*
Saranac Pomegranate Wheat 6 pk btl $4.99*
*all beer prices plus deposit
WINE SALE
10% OFF
6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!!
MIX & MATCH
*Regular priced 750 ml bottles of varietal wines.
Liquor
Hennessey Cognac VS 750 ml $28.99
Bombay Sapphire Gin 1.0 liter $26.99
Grey Goose Vodka 750 ml $26.99
Tanqueray Gin 1.0 liter $25.99
Sailor Jerry Rum 1.75 liter $22.99
Crown Royal Canadian Whiskey 750 ml $22.99
FOUR SEASONS 584-8174
Jameson Irish Whiskey 750 ml $21.99
Jim Beam Black Bourbon 750 ml $19.99
Jose Cuervo Flavors 750 ml $18.99
Stolichnaya Vodka 80° 750 ml $18.99
Jagermeister 750 ml $16.99
Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter $16.99
Denaka Vodka 1.75 liter $14.99
Ron Rico Vanilla Rum 1.75 liter $11.99
Myer's Platinum Rum 750 ml $8.99
Early Times Bourbon 750 ml $8.99
PROMOS
Thursday Sept 13th
Naragansett Tasting 6-8 p.m.
Friday Sept 14th
Landshark Lager 5-7 p.m.
& BacardiMojito
Sale: 9/13 - 9/16
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

BOOTED
Boots by:
Ugg
Frye
Lea Fiscotti
and many more!
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
THE LEADER IN INTERNATIONAL INTERNSHIPS AUSTRALIA
CHINA
ECUADOR ENGLAND FRANCE
GERMANY
GUATEMALA
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
MEXICO
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.
This is B.U.
This could be you.
Come find out how.
Come meet Theresa Leary from Boston University International Programs
Education Abroad Fair
Monday, September 24, 4 – 6 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS SCIENCE ENGINEERING
www.bu.edu/abroad
Financial aid is available.
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
abroad@bu.edu

Great DVD race is on

Blu-ray, HD compete for movie standard

BY BUZZ MCCLAIN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

You really needed another component in your stack, didn't you? The Audio/Video Receiver, the cable/satellite box, the DVD player and the CD changer were just not enough, were they?

The satellite radio tuner and the phonograph (surely you have one of those?), along with the USB turntable for creating CDs from your vinyl, left a few openings in the back of that A/V receiver that you just HAD to fill, right?

And even if the answer is no, "they" the ominous "they" that are always thinking of new ways to get into your wallet did it again. They created something so cool that you knew you had to have it: The high-definition DVD player. HD discs can do all sorts of magical digital things while the movie is playing.

You can see special effects before the effects are added; watch the storyboard version in time with the movie; hear pop-up factoids from the director; create your own version of stunt cars, etc., etc., ad infinitum.

But "they" didn't stop there. They made two of them based on inventor Shuji Nakamura's breakthrough blue-laser beam. Two competing formats that don't play the same DVDs, which are different from the hundreds of DVDs you already own.

The battle is on between Blu-ray Disc, or BD, and HD DVD. Blu-ray is currently outselling HD DVD two to one, but an announcement last month by Paramount Pictures and DreamWorks Animation SKG that they won't support the format slowed down the victory celebration, because Paramount had previously been dining from both sides of the high-def buffet. Warner Bros. and New Line Cinema are still rooting for both formats, but other studios are making one-system alliances.

To complicate matters further, this summer, Blockbuster put its stock in Blu-ray, announcing it would stop carrying HD DVD discs in 1,200 of its 1,450 stores. Target also said it would stop carrying HD DVD players.

So, which one should you invest in? And how much will it cost you? Here's what you need to know.

As editor-in-chief of Video Business magazine, a sister publication to Variety, Marcy Magiera spends a lot of time pondering the high-definition DVD format war. We thought whichever Magiera went with Blu-ray or HD DVD would certainly point to the winner.

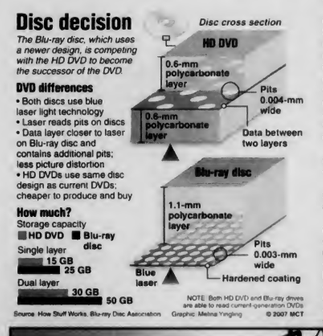
"I don't know which one I'd buy," she says. "I just don't know."

Well, when might she know? "I don't think this will be over for a while," she says. "Not at least until 2009."

It all comes down to how much of a "home video consumer you are," she says. "The average consumer does not care if a movie is from Universal or Fox. They care about the movie. In that sense, Blu-ray has more content because there are more studios behind it, and this year Blu-ray happens to have the hot product, 'Fantastic 4: Rise of the Silver Surfer,' 'Spider-Man 3,' 'Pirates of the Caribbean 3.' But it could all be different next year and HD DVD studios could have all the hot product."

Despite the heavy-hitting titles coming to market in time for the holidays, sales of HD discs are a drop in the overall DVD-market bucket.

"It's a couple of percentage points of the overall market," Magiera says, adding for comparison, "it's a little bigger now than VHS and UMD put together."



VHS, to rewind for newcomers, was the predecessor to DVD; UMDs are tiny movie discs made for watching on hand-held PlayStation Portables. Neither sell very many.

But Richard Glikes, executive director of Home Theater Specialists of America which represents those who install components, typically for high-end clients told Video Business: "Personally, I think the die has been cast. I surveyed our membership and 93.95 percent of the high definition players sold [are] Blu-ray. Six percent are HD DVD, and a lot of those are the 1.G combo unit."

"I don't think it will be too long before Blu-ray is pronounced the winner."

Of course, that was before the Paramount/DreamWorks announcement.

We understand your reluctance to spend hundreds of dollars on a component and thousands more on updating your video library until a victory has been declared. Once the loser is vanquished, their format won't be supported in the future, and we still get steamed every time we walk by that Betamax player in the basement.

In a galaxy far, far away...

FAMILY GUY from page 8

MacFarlane) and Quagmire (also voiced by MacFarlane) are both at an opera, and they're sitting very far away from each other, and they're texting each other throughout the whole performance. We do try and make sure that we are kept up-to-date, although there's still some Bob Hope references that neither of those generations are going to get."

Q: "South Park" is another animated series that pushes the line of good taste. Are you a fan of that show?

SM: "Yes, I am a fan of 'South Park.' I think that show is very funny, and I think that the movie was hysterical. You know, I remember first seeing that "Santa-vs.-Jesus" thing that they put out, and I don't think I've ever laughed as hard in my life as I did at that thing."

Q: The Federal Communications Commission is often the subject of your DVD commentaries. Have you had any feedback from them?

SM: "Not really. I mean, we did have a letter of inquiry from the FCC regarding the FCC episode, but the feedback that we got back from them was that they actually thought it was funny, which surprised the hell out of me and gives me a little bit of hope."

Q: How different is it reading the script in front of an audience?

SM: "It's always really so different. We just got back from doing a show in Montreal for the comedy festival. You had 2,000 drunk people in their 20s who were just laughing at stage directions."

COURTESY FOX

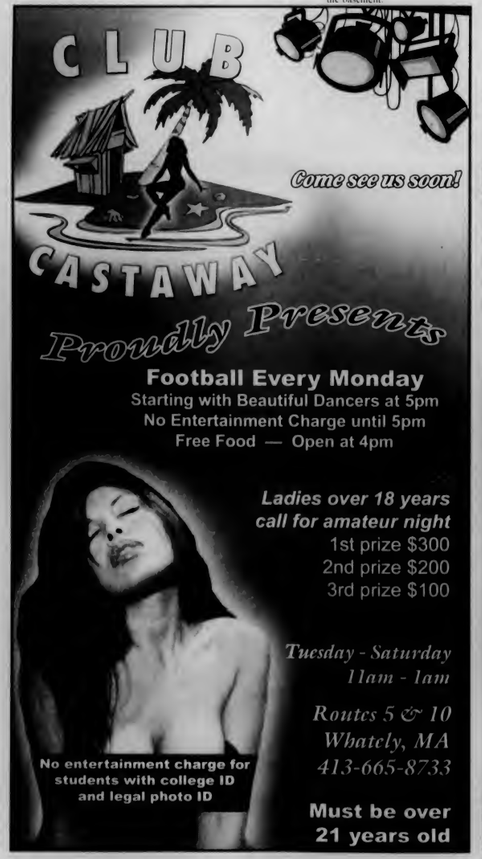
The newest season of "Family Guy" opens with the 100th episode. The script for the one hour special is a retelling of one of the greatest adventures of all time, "Star Wars."

PBS, Burns set to re-team

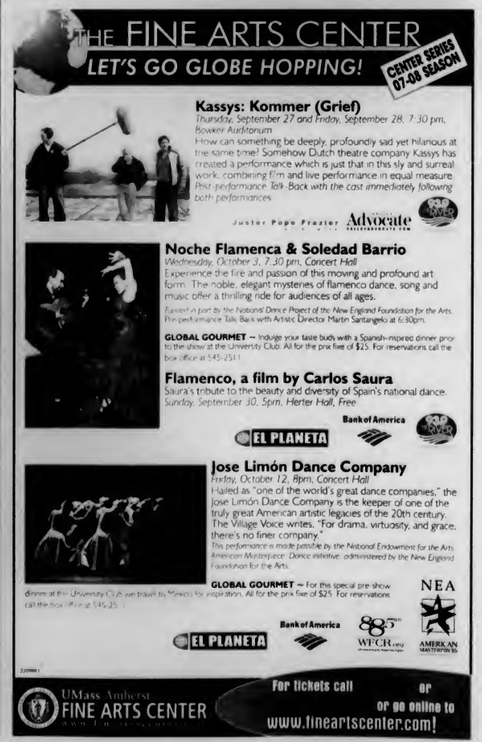
BURNS from page 8

it that way."

It was Burns' daunting task to draw it out and form a coherent narrative. Although he'll be the first to say, his film is far from a comprehensive effort ("It's more poem than textbook," he says), it does follow, from an American perspective, the complete chronological timeline of the war.



"This is the first film, documentary or otherwise, that covers both the European and the Pacific theaters simultaneously with the home front," he says.



And it wasn't without challenges, not the least of which came in the form of protests by Latino groups that "The War" lacked a Hispanic presence. After initially balking, Burns appended the film with new material that deals with Hispanic soldiers and the story of an American Indian.

"It was our obligation to listen and to hear," Burns says. "I think we've found the right balance, had the right compromise, that permitted us not to alter our original vision and at the same time honor [some] legitimate concerns."

Film-maker Ken Burns is set to present his look at WWII in the 15 hour PBS documentary "The War," airing September 23.

MATTHEW CHASE/COLLEGIAN

Quarterback Liam Coen injured his left knee last week but he is expected to play against Maine on Saturday. The red-shirt junior leads a UMass offense that is averaging 37 points through its first three games.

UMass looks to stifle strong Black Bear running attack accumulated 316 rushing yards and three touchdowns on 59 carries for a 5.4 yard average. Last week against the Wildcats, Huellen rushed for a career-high 167 yards and two scores.

FOOTBALL from page 12

"It starts with Huellen," Brown said. "How don't do a good job with Huellen, we'll have a long day. We need to take care of him first."

If the Minutemen defense limits the star tailback, the Black Bears could be in for a long afternoon as they lack a strong aerial attack with quarterback Adam Farkes.

Maine has just 218 passing yards after three games (72.7 per game) and has yet to throw a touchdown pass. Farkes and Michael Brusko who have split the quarterbacking duties have been intercepted three times, while completing 57.1 percent of their passes. The Black Bears have 10 first downs through the air, compared to 28 on the ground.

The team's leading receiver, Manny Pierre has just 67 yards. Huellen leads the team in receptions with 11, but those catches have only gone for 26 yards.

Both quarterbacks, unlike Coen, bring a running dimension to the offense. Brusko had 109 rushing yards in the season-opening victory over Monmouth, while Farkes has 51 yards on 14 rushes. It's something the UMass coaching staff is mindful of.

"Farkes is a good athlete," Brown said. "That's who they're going to play at quarterback [on Saturday] and he's shown some good moments. He likes to move around in the pocket."

Despite Huellen's strong start, the Black Bears are averaging 12.7 points per game compared to the 37 points per game the Minutemen have put up. Maine has struggled offensively after the first quarter, as more than half (21) of its 38 points have come within the first 15 minutes.

Defensively, the Black Bears have struggled to start the 2007 season allowing 25.7 points per game. Their struggles against the run have been particularly surprising, considering they led the CAA in rushing defense last year having only allowed 63.9 yards per game.

This season, opponents have more than doubled that average (128.7). Last week, Villanova running back Matt Dicken ended Maine's 12-game streak of not allowing a 100-yard rusher.

The 2:30 p.m. kickoff will mark the 54th meeting between the two schools. UMass leads the all-time series, 39-13-1. The Minutemen are 17-9 against the Black Bears at Alford Stadium. Maine coach Jack Cosgrove is in his 15th season at the helm, sporting a 5-9 record against the Maroon and White. Its last victory (37-7) against UMass came on Nov. 10, 2001 – a season in which Cosgrove won A-10 Coach of the Year.

GAME NOTES

Maine's offensive coordinator Kevin Bourgoin graduated from UMass in 1996, and played four seasons for the Minutemen as a wide receiver ... The Minutemen have scored at least 35 points in each of the first three games for the first time in team history (125 years) ... The Black Bears lost to the Minutemen in eight of the last nine meetings.

Eli Rosenstraukc can be reached at erosenst at student.umass.edu

Rancher a threat on offense

RANCHER from page 12

On a third-and-eight from the Towson 35-yard line, Coen hurried a pass to Rancher, who had broken inside on a slant route. The pass was well in front of Rancher, but with his long reach, the ball hit No. 3 right on the left hand. He then tipped it to himself, hung onto the ball and ran off for six.

The ability to catch a pass with one hand is usually frowned upon by coaches – who want two hands on the ball at all times – but it can be an indispensable talent.

"In practice, I try to make a lot of one-handed catches, and I get yelled at for doing that," Rancher said. "But it just so happened that when I came out of the break, the ball was a little in front of me. I didn't really do it intentionally. I just kind of reacted with one hand, and had to tip it to myself. When I got a hold of it, I just tried to get to the end zone."

Coen was impressed with the play by Rancher, but he said he's seen Rancher make plays like that before.

"He does that all the time," Coen said. "In practice, he makes the craziest catches, and he has great hands. That's one thing that you kind of forget is that he has great hands. He makes one-handed catches all over the place, so for him to make that play, you say, 'Wow, that's a great play,' but I expect him to make that play."

UMass coach Don Brown was perhaps the most impressed with Rancher's one-handed grab, but was quick to point out that he still has plenty of work to do.

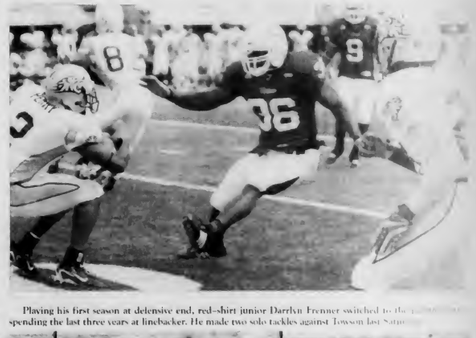
"He certainly has made some big plays for us, and we're excited about that," Brown said. "I'd like him to be a little bit more consistent throughout the football game and not only make the sensational plays, but do all the other things we're asking him to do as well."

Rancher's combination of size and speed make him unique, especially in a conference full of relatively short cornerbacks.

"He's a very difficult matchup for anybody," Brown said. "And plus, he can run. Not only is he six-five, but he can run, so that's a very difficult matchup for anyone in our league."

"It's easy to work with that [size]," Coen added, "having the ability to just throw the ball to guys with that size, he does a good job for us."

Rancher's height, hands and speed were all on display in those 35 yards between the line of scrimmage and the end zone. His height and long reach allowed him to pull in the ball with his hands allowed him to make the catch, and his speed separated him from the defenders and allowed him to run into the end zone.



"I take pride in that because I feel that it's an advantage for us ... I don't feel that there are many guys I face in practice that are six-foot-10. I feel as an offensive player, I feel that something I do is an advantage for my team."

The other thing that coaches see every time Rancher steps on the pass route is the hustle he has brought in the absence of Sheed Brandon, who was of course the team's leading wide receiver in 2006.

Sheed [illegible] that role when he was one of the leaders of that group [illegible] camp, and he's [illegible] a big-time leadership role by leading by example and dealing with the [illegible]

"People might [illegible] Brandon as being [illegible] of loud, but he's [illegible] was one of the [illegible] guys I've ever [illegible] Sheed's trying to [illegible] Brandon showed [illegible]

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr at student.umass.edu

Playing his first season at defensive end, red-shirt junior Darrlyn Frenner switched to the [illegible] spending the last three years at linebacker. He made two solo tackles against Towson last Satur[illegible]

SEP 20 2007

Road challenges await

W. SOCCER from page 12

aggressive and strong on corners and free kicks," Rudy said. "It's going to take a good mindset, strong will and confidence to play a team like this."

Leading the Big Green attack is sophomore forward Maggie Goldstein, who has two goals this year — already tying her total from last season. Their top returning scorer senior forward Monica Martin de Bustamante has not played this season, she had five goals last year.

The Minutewomen will not only have the challenge of playing on the road at Burnham Field which seats 2,000 fans — but they will play with a different ball.

"They play with one of those weird Nike balls, it looks like something you find in a Kiddy store, but it's legal," Rudy said. "That's what they use. I don't know what their conference mandates, but I know they use it at home. I was trying to get a hold of one of those things, but I went to about four sports stores and I just couldn't find one."

The Minutewomen would like to maintain their unbeaten record and keep the momentum going by treating each game with great importance.

"You leave and go, you leave the last one then move on to the next one," Rudy said. "They're all unique challenges."

Before the offense had a burst with four goals against Hartford, they struggled to convert near the goal. "The only way to answer that is the next game," Rudy said after the Hartford game when asked if the team is out of its offensive slump.

Senior forward Britt Canfield notched three assists last game to get the offense moving and scored a goal of her own. Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll leads the scoring with three goals on the season.

Steve Gamez can be reached at sgamez@student.umass.edu.

Senior back Kaelyn Caldwell leads a UMass defensive that has not lost a game this season. The team has a 0.47 goals-against average — a statistic that is the best in the Atlantic 10.

Sophomore forward Katie Ruggles and the Minutewomen have scored eight goals in four games this season, ranking the team third among A-10 teams in offensive production.

South Coast team becomes reliable pipeline to Amherst son. Knowing he would lose six players to the '05 graduation, Rudy started searching for aggressive and intense play.

RECRUITING from page 12

UMass needed players that could be creative on the field, take people on and provide some more quickness in the attacking phase of the game. Rudy says Stoll fit the bill.

"She was a great attacking personality. She has speed and quickness and skill and she loved to take on and beat people and you don't see a lot of that in women's soccer. And that's what we were looking for," he said. "We were a decent passing team, but we lacked some of that individuality and creativity, which can really change a game."

Since joining the UMass squad, Stoll has tried to make South Coast proud. She has also made Rudy grateful he looks at the Scorpions for talent.

Her freshman year she netted a goal and an assist, for three points. And her grit and feistiness told Rudy he snagged a solid player.

This year, Stoll leads the team in goals with three in four games. She also has an assist.

After Stoll's freshman year and losing three more players to graduation — Rudy needed to bring in some quicker defenders and add some speed to the back.

Enter Kelsey Anderson and Alyssa Visconti.

"We liked [Anderson] for her defensive scrappiness and her speed," Rudy commented. "And also, she had [a knack] for going forward out of the back and she liked to get forward and attack but she was also willing to get back as well. So she wasn't just a one way player."

Anderson has started her freshman year in stride, already registering a goal and an assist.

As for Visconti, Rudy fell in love with her skill and composure under pressure. He says she is as skillful as any defender he has seen coming out of club or high-school ball.

Iverson spoke with the two players and got them to come to UMass for an unofficial visit. Rudy said both committed to play for the Minutewomen soon after.

One thing crucial to Rudy's scouting process has to do with personality.

"It's one thing to recruit good kids, but we recruited good players, as well," he said. "You can get great players in a lot of places, but the questions [are], 'What is their upbringing. What are their parents like, and What is the coaching they have received?' and Paul Turner does it right."

The Maroon and White already have another South Coast player on its radar screen. Rudy asked that the name not be revealed, but said the prospected athlete is being scouted for the 2008 season.

He won't be looking for just next season, however. Rudy knows he has found a goldmine in the South Coast and plans to continue digging through it as an additional source to stock his talent.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

MOVING ON? POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation. Coupon expires by Potter's website only!
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

www.mikesmaze.com 413-665-8331
Weekends & Holidays 11am-5pm now thru Oct
MikesMaze presents LOUIS! live in corn with Food Fun & MUSIC!

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU 413-593-5222 705 Memorial Drive In Chicopee www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
OCTOBER 6TH
From HBO's "Tourgasm" & Comedy Central's "Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn"
ROBERT KELLY
OCT. 27TH From the movies "Norbit," "Deuce Bigalow" & "Undercover Brother" EDDIE GRIFFIN
DEC. 1ST Star of the HBO special "D.L. Hughley Unapologetic" and Host of BET's "S.O.B." D.L. HUGHLEY
OCT. 20TH Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" & from FOX-TV's "Fantasia" BILL BELLAMY
NOV. 3RD From "The Howard Stern Show" and star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel Unprotected" ROBERT SCHIMMEL

Natural. Gentle. Safe. Effective.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's Student Insurance: Blue Cross, GIC, Fallon, Harvard Pilgrim, Tufts Health Plan, Aetna, Cigna, Connecticare, United Healthcare, Oxford, Mass Mutual, Medex, Medicare, Worker's Comp & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street Amherst, MA (near Bertucci's)
549-1500

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

WWW.DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS. BLOGSPOT.COM

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY
Tennis Singles.....9/24
Weekend Softball (M/C).....9/24
Ultimate Frisbee (M/C).....9/24
Volleyball (M/W/C).....10/1
OFFICIALS NEED
Volleyball - Clinic Dates: October 2, 3, 9, 10
Call for requirements, times and locations.
On The Web: www.umass.edu/campusrec

PEARSON
National Evaluation Systems (NES) is a leader in the testing industry, providing customized assessments for teacher licensure. NES is part of Pearson Education, one of the world's premier education companies.
PART-TIME TEMPORARY POSITIONS
We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately, pay attention to details, and be comfortable in a busy work environment. Various work schedules are available between 9:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. Additional ongoing positions are available during conferences at our Hadley office. Hours for these table assistant positions are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Preference will be given to individuals who can work 15+ hours a week. Pay rate starts at $8.00/hr. (Req. #20165)
Applications accepted only at www.pearsoned.com.
EOE

ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
MISSION OF BURMA plus The Bunnies, Who Shot Hollywood
FRI. SEPT. 21 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM $ ADVANCE
AESOP ROCK featuring Rob Sonic and DJ Big Whiz
plus THE OCTOPUS PROJECT, BLOCKHEAD with DJ SHORTY
TUE. SEPT. 25 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM $ ADVANCE
Pearl Street Nightclub NORTHAMPTON, MA
Sound Tribe Sector Nine plus GRASSHOPPERS
WED. SEPT. 26 • 8:30 PM DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM
JOSH BLUE
FRI. OCT. 5 • 8:00 PM DOORS OPEN 7:00 PM
CALVIN 19 KING ST NORTHAMPTON, MA
TAKE PVTA BUS #43 TO NORTHAMPTON. RUNS 'TIL 1:45 AM THURSDAY-SATURDAY!
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

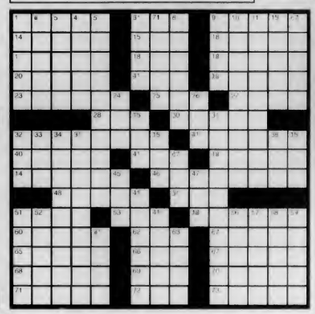
Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		8			9	5	3
	6						1
3			5				6
			9		4		1
	8	5				3	9
	1		2		5
8					6			2
1							7
7		3	1			6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Explosion
6 "...Mniver"
9 Minute arachnids
14 Long spoon
15 Chow down
16 Shaq or Tatum
17 Knock out gas
18 Superior salutation?
19 Jetson's dog
20 Smithy, at times
21 R.V contents
22 Carols
23 Division
25 Alternative to HBO
27 Alda sitcom
28 Light beam
30 R.C. honoree
32 Internet spots
37 Legal outlines
40 Punches
41 B-bod
43 Relation in degree
44 Valuable things
46 Crusaders' foes
48 Experiments
50 Columnist Henloff
51 Dundee man
53 Inc. in the U.K.
55 Money grubbers
60 Mottled bean
62 Hosp. sections
64 First name in talk shows
65 From Tibet, for example
66 Very long time
67 Wide-eyed
68 Ascend
69 Forensic sampling
70 Rainbow-shaped
71 Monastery group
72 Calendar watch abbreviation
73 Tilts

DOWN
1 Consecrate
2 Shop tool
3 Type of committee
4 Frozen precipitation
5 Saboteurs
6 Clutter
7 Singer Bonnie
8 Strokes slings
9 Lament
10 Sleepless one
11 One-on-one, heart-to-heart
12 Some nobles
13 Agitate a liquid
24 Stool pigeon
26 Tax
29 Alternative
31 Unreasonable
32 Pugilists' grp.
33 Emie of the links
34 Beam Town resident
35 Sugar coated savory
36 Female sib
38 Flipper
39 Distress signal
42 Light brown
45 Letters on Cardinal caps
47 Anes animal
49 Knights' changers
51 Burst of energy
52 Kid of early TV
54 Unchanging information
56 Let live
57 "Fear of Flying" author Jong
58 Baltimore player
59 Small storage buildings
61 This ... on me!
63 Break suddenly



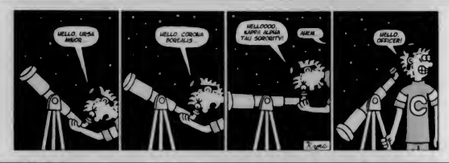
Congratulations Dennis!

You are this year's first winner of the "Finish The Sudoku and eat it" contest.

Note: Dennis does not actually look like this. He only sent me half his face. I took the liberty of filling the rest in for him.

SEND HIS TO: COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500



QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Move like a jellyfish, Rhythm is nothing."
-Jack Johnson

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"If you don't quit floundering, Blevins, I'm going to skin you, filet you and grill you up with some lemon juice."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your intellectual ammunition is running low. Reload with some homework.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Only after you've danced the tango covered in pico de gallo can you appreciate salsa.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If someone sneezes, say "Bless you!" Have some class gosh damit.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Avoid run on sentences because they are long and do not work and get confusing.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
There's nothing cool about the scurvy so eat some fruit my carnivorous friend.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Dress up today in an effort to compensate for your sloppy soul.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
From chinchilla to chica, your bedroom is a paradise for all creatures great and small.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Everyone knows you are a liar if you act like you understand modern art.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Use the word "archipelago" today and you will surely find yourself in a lagoon of joy.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
By the time you read this, it will be too late.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
A joyous furniture acquisition lies in your not too distant future.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You will lose your keys today but I will tell you where they are tommorow.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun - Wed: 3pm - 2am
Thurs - Sat: 3pm - 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom Townhouse. Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact: caseofme@gmail.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4. 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Campus Rep Wanted $200.00 per week base salary for semester plus bonus. Flexible schedule, class talks, generate applications email: cchurch@collegepro.com www.collegepro.com

Exp line cook, part-time, nights and weekends, great training program and starting wage. Apply at Eastside Grill, 19 Strong Ave., N'ton or email info@eastsidegrill.com

Delivery Drivers Delivery from 6pm to 12am. Must have a car and a cell phone. $5.00 hour plus tips. Apply in person at: The Loose Goose Cafe

EMPLOYMENT

1 East Pleasent Street Amherst, MA.

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com. Contact us through site.

FOR SALE

Queen Futon Frame, cherry, great condition $200.00 Greenfield 413-774-7679

MOTORCYCLE

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Disc Jockey Available for private parties + clubs Low rates. 413-313-6394

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992

SERVICES

27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES). We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more information, please visit our website at www.robertsuchmanolsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600

SEP 20 2007

SEP

2
1

2
0
0
7

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Black Bears in range

Coen to start against Maine, despite injured left knee

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts quarterback Liam Coen joked with reporters that his recent left knee injury would limit his "mobility" this weekend against Maine.

While the injury is no laughing matter to UMass coach Don Brown, the Minutemen expect their star signal-caller to be on the field for this Saturday's matchup with the Black Bears in Orono, Maine.

"It feels really good, and I'll definitely be out there on Saturday," said Coen, referring to his left knee.

A victory for UMass (3-0, 1-0 Colonial Athletic Association) would be its sixth-straight over the Black Bears (1-2, 0-1 CAA) and would mark its first 4-0 start since 1986. Maine enters the game at Alfond Stadium winless against the Minutemen since 2001 and with a two-game skid.

Last season's meeting ended in heartbreak for the Black Bears, as they failed to convert an extra point attempt which would have tied the game with less than two minutes remaining. UMass clinched the Atlantic 10 North Division championship with the 10-9 victory.

Maine dropped a tough decision last weekend, losing in overtime, 24-17, to conference foe Villanova. A week earlier the Black Bears were demolished, 38-0, by Connecticut – a Football Bowl Subdivision opponent.

Meanwhile, the Minutemen keep winning despite being unable to put it all together for 60 minutes. UMass has overcome a near second-half collapse, turnover issues and penalties en route to its 3-0 start.

Brown's comment following last week's win over Towson is a microcosm of the 2007 season.

"It wasn't artistic. Many of our wins aren't, but we'll take it," he said.

For the Minutemen to take this weekend's game, they'll have to focus a majority of their attention on Maine running back Jhamal Fluellen.

In three games, the 5-foot-9 junior

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Rancher provides large target for Minutemen at receiver

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When you first see him, Rasheed Rancher is an imposing presence. At six-foot-five, with dreadlocks falling from the top of his head and landing on his shoulder pads – which stand at eye level for the casual observer – he is a huge target for quarterback Liam Coen.

And one that the Massachusetts football team has made full use of through three games in the 2007 season. Thus far, Rancher has snagged nine passes for 174 yards and one sensational touchdown.

Last season, the role of the big-target-who-catches-touchdowns was filled by current New York Giants practice squad member, Brandon London.

Following London's graduation, Rancher knew it was up to him to fill the void for Coen and the rest of the offense.

"Brandon London was a great teammate to have. He taught me a lot," Rancher said. "Coming in, I knew I would have to pick up my game, me and J.J. [Moore] because [London] was the No. 1 guy. So over the summer, I made it a point to come in [to camp] in better shape, ready to go and go longer into games."

Rancher's score on Saturday was an indication of just how much the red-shirt senior is looking to elevate his play.

See RANCHER on page 9

One of two starting senior wide receivers, Rasheed Rancher leads the Minutemen with 19.3 yards per catch. He caught two balls for 46 yards, including a 35-yard touchdown reception last weekend in a 36-13 victory against Towson.

UM looks to stay unbeaten

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team takes its unbeaten record into Dartmouth today for one of its toughest games of the season.

The Minutewomen (3-0-1) are coming off a solid performance against Hartford, in which they score a season-high four goals. Dartmouth is only 1-5, however, its record is not an indication of how good the team can be. Dartmouth has played a much stronger schedule than the Minutewomen, including No. 5 Texas A&M and two opponents in the Atlantic Coast Conference, Maryland and Duke. UMass coach Jim Rudy acknowledges that the ACC is one of the best conferences in the country.

"Even with their 1-5 record, I think they will be our hardest non-conference competition I've seen them play and they're big and powerful, they haven't let up a lot of goals but they haven't scored a lot either," Rudy said.

Scoring goals will be the key to the UMass attack against the Big Green. Dartmouth has only scored three goals on the season. The last time those teams matched up was in 2005, where the Minutewomen lost in double overtime, 1-0. UMass leads the all-time series 15-4-1, but has not beaten Dartmouth since 1995.

"Even if they're tired they don't give up and I think it's a team that is trying to find what their identity is," Rudy said about Dartmouth. "They are big and they are very strong and they have an unusual system that we may have some problems with."

If the team starts to have problems against Dartmouth then they will have to adjust. However, Rudy believes that this will be the first time this year the team might have to make adjustments and he is concerned how they will react to those changes. For the most part this season, other teams have been adjusting to the style UMass plays.

Dartmouth has two freshmen that literally stand above everyone else: midfielder Sarah Feldman is 6'0 and forward Meagan Tibbo is 5'11. Feldman uses her height to get balls in the air and will present a problem for UMass's midfielders, who are no taller than 5'9.

"Feldman will be a package to handle in the air and they're very

See W. SOCCER on page 10

Recruiting source valuable for Rudy

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sophomore Sydney Stoll and freshmen Kelsey Anderson and Alyssa Visconti knew each other before becoming members of the Massachusetts women's soccer team.

The three athletes – all Massachusetts natives – met playing for the South Coast Scorpions in the Massachusetts Premier League (MAPLE).

In recent years, in fact, the Scorpions have been a great source of talent from which UMass coach Jim Rudy plucks his potential Minutewomen.

"We've looked at [the Scorpions] for some time. This team, two years back, was a really special team," Rudy said. "I saw them play and they were just a wonderful team to watch – skillful, deceptive, all things I admire in players. There is a whole bunch of kids on that team that we looked at very seriously.

"But, your recruiting, a lot of it is conditioned by what your needs are," he continued. "How many people are leaving and where they play on the field and what you have left. That determines how you [recruit]."

Rudy was first turned on to the Scorpions a few years back thanks to a former letter-winner and All-American he coached at UMass.

Erica Iverson, a member of Class of '97 and a future WUSA All-Star, is married to Scorpions coach Pat Turner. With connections like that, it was easy for Rudy to know where to scout talent.

"Erica can speak well and about her experience and tell the kids and their parents about what UMass was like, and hopefully she said some good things about the coach that she had while she was here," Rudy said with a laugh.

He first noticed Stoll before the 2005 UMass sea-

See RECRUITING on page 10

One of the stars of the Minutewomen offense this season, sophomore forward Sydney Stoll leads the team in goals with three.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Senior Britt Canfield led the Massachusetts women's soccer team on an offensive outbreak against Hartford. Canfield made plays for her teammates, dishing out three assists and scored a goal of her own.

On her first assist, she hit sophomore Sydney Stoll in front of the net. On her second assist, she fired a shot into a sliding Hawk goalkeeper, the shot hit off the keeper and Stoll found herself in front of the net for the score. Twenty-five seconds later Canfield charged again and found junior Vanessa Patry, who placed the ball over the goalkeeper's head for the score.

In the second half Canfield put Hartford away by scoring her first goal of the season at Rudd Field.

The five points against the Hawks was a career high for Canfield as she was named Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week. She now has four assists on the season, already surpassing her total last year and tying her career high set in 2005. She is second on the team in goals with two and leads the team with eight points.

The Minutewomen rank third in the A-10 while scoring an average of 2.00 goals per game. The team's defense has been even more impressive this year with a league-best 0.47 goals-against average.

The Granville, Mass., native is tied for first in the conference in shots per game with 4.50. She also ranks second in points per game with 2.00.

Last season, Canfield started every game and was the team's leading scorer with seven goals.

RUNNER-UP

Sophomore Sydney Stoll scored two goals within 17 minutes in UMass's 4-0 victory over Hartford.

In the ninth minute, she took a pass from Canfield on the left side. Stoll shot the ball over the head of the Hawks's goalkeeper, Elizabeth Cook, to put the Minutewomen up 1-0.

Eight minutes later, Canfield received a ball from senior captain Jenny Roehrig around midfield. Canfield raced down the field and fired off a shot. Cook dove to the ground and the ball bounced off her stomach. The deflection went right to Stoll, who booted it to the back of the net, to make it 2-0.

She has now scored a team-leading three goals on the season and one assist, for seven points. The sophomore also ranks fifth among A-10 players with 1.75 points per game.

Last season, Stoll was the only freshmen to see playing time in all 17 games. She scored her first collegiate in only her second game, a 3-1 win over Boston University.

CANFIELD PLAYS HERO AGAIN FOR UM PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 83 LO: 61 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 2007

Anti-War Network holds protest

Students gathered outside the Student Union yesterday for the Campus Anti-War Network's first public event of the semester. Speakers at the protest called to mobilize a stronger anti-war movement at UMass.

Textbook theft rises at UMass

BY EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Textbook theft is becoming an increasingly troubling problem for colleges and universities around the United States.

For a college student, a textbook can be a very expensive item to purchase. According to Ken Kahler, store director of the University Store and Textbook Annex at the University of Massachusetts, the cost of textbook prices has been on the rise in recent years.

"Textbook inflation over the past 10 years has been around six percent," said Kahler.

Every semester, students are asked to purchase more books. The increases in textbook prices have not gone unnoticed by students.

According to UMass sophomore Jesse Carrillo, textbooks are "ridiculously overpriced."

Trish Cronin, a junior at UMass as well as a Resident Assistant (R.A.) in Baker dormitory in the Central residential area, agrees.

"I keep spending more and more money every semester on [textbooks]," she said.

As textbook prices rise they become a very tempting item to steal, especially on college campuses where they can be found just about anywhere. Yet students are not

See TEXTBOOKS on page 2

Anti-War Network speaks out against Iraq War

BY JACKIE HAT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Student members of the Campus Anti-War Network (CAN) organized a speak-out against the Iraq war on the Student Union steps yesterday at noon.

The event lasted about an hour and drew in a crowd of approximately 50-100 spectators, with speakers invited to express their opinions at the open microphone.

Topics touched upon included stories of friends in the military traumatized by service in Iraq, criticism of Congress' lack of progress in bringing an end to the war and calls to action for mobilizing a stronger anti-war movement.

"We should look for some other force to bring change other than the Republicans and the Democrats," said speaker Ross Hogan. "That's why we need to build an anti-war movement in this country connected with GIs that are fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan that want to resist the occupation, and connected with students, workers and others here in the United States that also want to stop it. That's what happened in the Vietnam War, that's what can happen now."

A majority of Americans are against the war in Iraq, said Dan Keefe, one of the event's organizers. He added that the next step is to translate the anti-war sentiment of the majority into action.

Yesterday's speak-out was the first public event of the semester for the Campus Anti-War Network, a nationwide organization with a newly established branch at the University of Massachusetts. It was part of a national week of action with other events taking place on college campuses across the country.

"We want to send delegates [to CAN's national conference on the weekend of October 19," said Charles Peterson, who has been an activist in the organization for the past three years. "We're trying to do a New England-wide mobilization in Boston, on October 27. We want to bring busloads of people [to that]."

The Campus Anti-War Network is also screening the film "Iraq for Sale: the War Profiteers" today at 5:30 p.m. in room 168 of the Campus Center. Regular meetings are held this semester on Wednesdays at 5:30 p.m. in the Blue Wall.

"It's about empowering people to get involved and to be active participants," says Keefe. "I'd like to see a large anti-war movement at UMass that has ties to the community and the faculty.

Jackie Hat can be reached at jhat@student.umass.edu

Former White House chef Walter Scheib worked for both Presidents Bill Clinton and George W. Bush.

UMass dining services introduces Scheib as first in guest chef series

BY CORY GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Fine dining came to the University of Massachusetts with the arrival of former White House chef Walter Scheib Wednesday night.

Scheib was the main White House chef for 11 years, working for President Bill Clinton and President George W. Bush. He served UMass students the favorite dishes of both presidents, such as sweet potato soup and penne pasta salad.

Scheib was invited to the event by the director of Dining Services, Ken Toong. Toong said he met Scheib at the National College and University Food Service Association (NACUFS) where Scheib was the special guest chef.

Toong saw this as a great opportunity to bring some positive coverage to UMass and a great meal to its students.

Toong was excited for UMass to be the first university in the nation to have Scheib come to cook for them.

"I wanted to be the first. I wanted UMass to be the first to have this," he said.

Also, Toong saw the guest appearance as a way to encourage and excite the students.

"There is an image of what college dining hall food tastes like, we want to show that college eating is a same different now than in the past," he said.

Another advance Toong sees for college dining halls is having chefs from different schools across the country come to UMass and to have UMass chefs go to other schools.

There is a tentative contract in the works to switch chefs with schools such as College of the Holy Cross, Harvard University, University of California (Berkeley), University of Iowa and University of New Hampshire.

Toong says that he wants to make the dining hall more like a learning common. This could be made possible by having guests such as Toong stand near the [illegible] they are serving, and in the case of Scheib, to tell stories of the dishes he made for the presidents and their families.

Guest chefs will come to the dining halls about once a month, said Toong.

"Quality is very important, lots of variety and diversity will help to make eating at UMass fun," he said.

The guest chef series has previously welcomed Mai Pham, chef and owner of Lemon Grass Restaurant in California and chef and owner of El Naranjo located in Southern Mexico. Iliana de la Vega. A chef is also will be cooking with Alaskan seafood is scheduled next [illegible]

[illegible] can be reached at [illegible]@student.umass.edu

Study shows college students in poor sleep pattern

73 percent of college students have occasional sleep problems

BY JASMINE PENDLETON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

College students around the country are setting a trend of spending their nights getting little to no sleep.

According to a recent study at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., two-thirds of students report they have pulled an all-nighter during a semester, which is said to drastically affect a student's grade point average.

Also, in a recent study through Brown University, it was found that only 11 percent of college students get adequate sleep and about 73 percent have occasional sleep problems. That same study found that 30 percent of women and 18 percent of men reported they had suffered from insomnia in the last three months, as defined as having "too little or poor quality of sleep."

Seven to eight hours of sleep is the recommended amount that a college student is to have every night, but on average, college students get about six hours per night.

Even though it may only be one hour off, that one hour does a lot to a young adult's system, and over time, it could possibly turn into a sleep disorder like insomnia.

For most, less sleep means less activity throughout the day. This can cause delayed reactions, laziness, weak attention span, drowsiness, tendency to make mistakes and sickness.

"If I don't get enough sleep," said UMass freshman Wendy Nunez. "I fall asleep in class, I daydream, I don't feel like taking notes, I'm just too lazy to do anything."

Currently UMass is not offering an educational course based solely on the importance of good sleeping habits. However, if students were aware of the effects of getting insufficient sleep, it's possible they may make a better attempt to get proper rest.

While many students are probably aware of the consequences of losing sleep, they often have too much to do at night to get enough rest.

Hopefully the importance of sleep will sink into students and they can be more focused in their classes.

Jasmine Pendleton can be reached at jpendlet@student.umass.edu

UMass students take advantage of the W.E.B. du Bois library's learning commons, open 24 hours Monday through Thursday, though it may affect their sleep.

Google soon to include Facebook

BY [illegible]

[illegible] potential [illegible] network [illegible] going to be accessible [illegible] search engine [illegible] Google.

[illegible] announced [illegible] Philip Tong [illegible] the announcement on the Web site [illegible] September [illegible] developers select Facebook's social [illegible] profile search [illegible].

Any [illegible] anyone who is not a member of Facebook can go to the welcome page and search for anyone with a public profile on the Web site. The results appear in thumbnail format.

Beginning in October, public thumbnail profiles will be accessible through many search engines including Google, Yahoo

See FACEBOOK on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 14

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Scaglio
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Olga Dedchenko
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melone
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwinkle
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRAP IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TWICE-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillencourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

One textbook purchased at the Textbook Annex or University Store on campus can cost over $100.

High costs in textbooks cause growing rate of theft on campus always as careful as they should be with their books.

TEXTBOOKS from page 1

UMass sophomore Abhay Vatsa had his calculus book stolen when he accidentally left it behind in a classroom.

"I left it under my chair with my Agenda book," said Vatsa, "I went back to get it and the Agenda was there but the textbook was gone."

Many students admitted to leaving their books behind, even for short amounts of time, at different places on campus.

"I leave my backpack in the Dining Commons by a table and then go get food," said Carrillo, "and I also leave my books in practice rooms in the Fine Arts Center."

This is not, however, a recommended practice. As an R.A., Cronin advises students to always lock their dorm room doors, even if they are just leaving their room for a moment.

Kahn agrees, saying that he has experienced many instances in which students have approached him to explain their textbook theft stories.

"Mostly it occurs on campus when books are left unattended in study halls, libraries, cafeterias, etc.," said Kahn. "We recommend that students always secure their books and not leave them unattended."

Once the textbooks have been stolen there are plenty of places for people to sell them. The anonymity of the internet makes it a perfect place for these books to be sold. Web sites such as Half.com, Webuycollegebooks.com, and Textbook.com are just a few examples of places on the web where people can go to sell books without any questions asked. There are also many groups on Facebook.com that are completely devoted to the buying and selling of textbooks.

With books flying out of rooms, classrooms, and other campus buildings, students need to be aware of their belongings. It might come as a surprise to some students that textbooks are an increasingly hot commodity, all the more reason to keep them safe and secure.

Eden Uniyer can be reached at euniyer@student.umass.edu.

Facebook profiles to be displayed in general searches

FACEBOOK from page1

and MSN Live.

University of Massachusetts senior Joe Cassimassima laments how Facebook is slowly becoming more public. He feels it is now less secure and, "becoming more like MySpace."

Junior Megan Kolb agrees, "I liked Facebook better when it was just college students," she said. "That's kind of creepy. What's the point of getting a username and password if anyone can find your profile?"

Senior Fallon Mercedes has similar feelings about her right to privacy. "Facebook is personal. Personal things are shared with friends, not the public," she said.

When Facebook was first developed, users needed a college e-mail address to make an account, and had to be part of a college network. Users now can just be part of a regional or workplace network, or no network at all.

Others on campus feel this has been a foreseeable future and is not a serious issue.

"Since anyone can sign up now, it doesn't seem to make a difference who sees my profile anymore," said sophomore Tucker Deveau.

Freshman Molly Fleisig said, "as long as they [non-users] can't see my full profile, I don't care".

Facebook wants to give those who are not registered a chance to "find their friends and connect," according to the site's frequently asked questions page for public search listings and external indexing.

A thumbnail shows a user's name, profile picture, and interactive links (send message, poke, view friends, etc). One must be logged in to use these interactive links.

Access through search engines will begin approximately one month from the September 5 announcement on Facebook's blog. The Web site's FAQ page on the subject states, "Indexing public search listings results for people on Facebook in these external search engines allows more people to connect with those they are looking for."

Sophomore Michael Greehan agrees, saying, "That's what you use Facebook for, to find out about people."

In his blog post, Philip Fung assured the Facebook community that there was no cause for concern.

"The public search listing contains less information than someone could find right after signing up anyway," said the site.

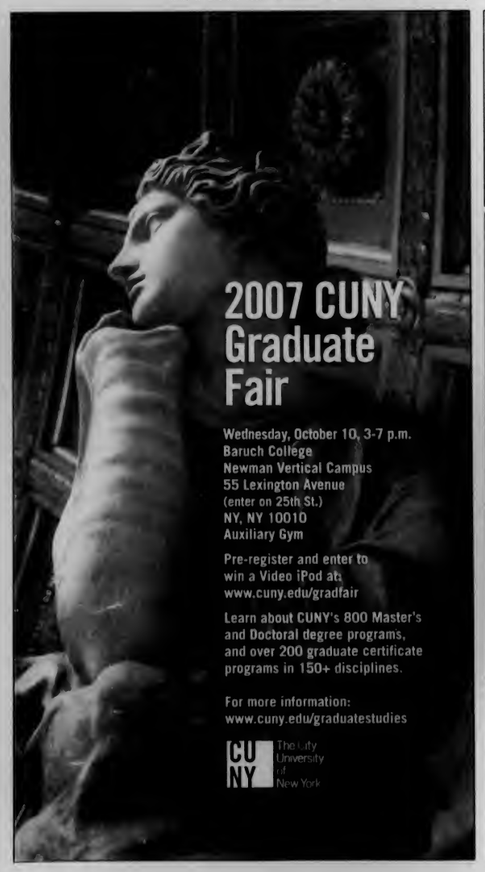
"We're not exposing any new information, and you have complete control over your public search listing."

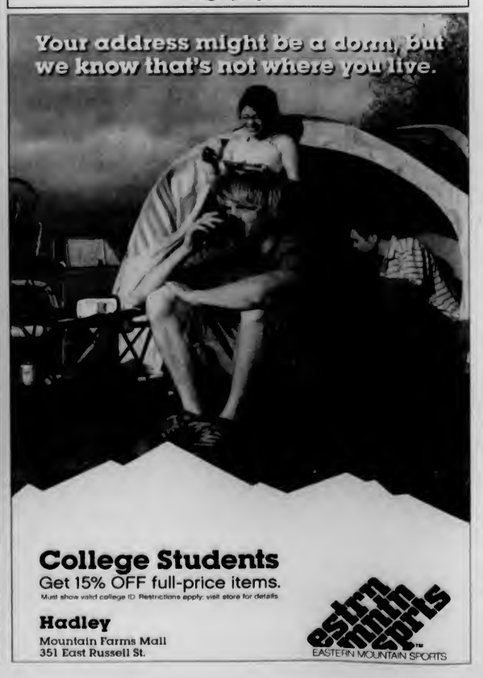
All Facebook users have the option of not being found in searches. Public search listings are only going to be made for users who are 18 or older and have their privacy set to "everyone."

Those who already have their privacy restricted in any way will not have a public search listing.

Users whose privacy is currently set to "everyone" can still change it at any time. They can opt not to appear in search engines, or the search from the Facebook welcome page, or both.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorreia@student.umass.edu.





COURTESY DAILYTRIBUNE.BLOGSPOT.COM

Google, as well as other search engines, will start to include facebook profiles in its searches starting in October.

"Life, liberty and the pursuit of the Collegian"
News@DailyCollegian.com

SEP 21 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How safe are Americans?

Recently, commanding General Petraeus, along with U.S. Ambassador Ryan C. Crocker testified in Congress on the situation in Iraq. What is important to realize is that Petraeus is the guardian of American power interests, and thus his testimony should reflect that. He is not the friend of the average American and never was intended to be. Thus, there is no surprise that both factions of the business party drench Petraeus in praise.

Bruce Lerner

Normal, non-business people, however, must ask certain questions after hearing the general's speech, particularly in regard to his comments on the safety of the American people.

One of the goals that the current administration keeps emphasizing with regard to the war in Iraq and the war on terror is to fight the terrorists "there, so we don't have to fight them here." This is obviously an appeal to the average American's completely justifiable desire for safety.

What is missing from this line of logic is the assumptions underlying such a sentiment. The key assumptions are that American power is completely benign and that terrorists are crazies who only understand force. Unfortunately, silly phrases do not actually create safe situations and facts are needed in order to truly act in a rational manner.

"One could only wish for such honesty from other members of the government."

Petraeus' role in society was truly hared when he responded to a senator's question on if the war was making the U.S. safer, presumably one of the goals of the administration. Petraeus responded, one can assume honestly, that "Sir, I don't know actually. I have not sat down and sorted it out in my own mind."

One could only wish for such honesty from other members of the government. Interestingly, after being questioned by another senator, Petraeus cleared up his earlier rejoinder by stating, "We have very, very clear, very serious national interests [in Iraq]." Again, the man's honesty is noteworthy.

So, there is a problem, since the general admits he has not thought at all about one of the key goals of the whole war, but he does forcefully proclaim that there are great U.S. interests in fighting the war. This means only that safety is not important to the administration but other goals are.

These other goals are not very hard to decipher, but they revolve around controlling key resources in strategic areas of the world. This is something the average American will not gain anything from and will in fact suffer from. Petraeus has thus admitted, thankfully, on national television that everything the U.S. media has been broadcasting is false, as the things the government says it cares about have apparently not been explained to the highest commander in the war.

Now that Petraeus' affably stoic proclamations have produced insight into the inner workings of the American war machine, it is time to ask several more questions. Why does the general plead ignorance to a basic question of the war when national agencies have repeatedly published works specifically on the topic? The Web site of the director of National Intelligence contains a lot of information on the threat of terrorism here and abroad. What these documents show is that the war in Iraq has done precisely the opposite of what Bush said it was supposed to do.

To quote the National Intelligence Estimate of 2006: "The Iraq conflict has become the 'cause célèbre' for jihadists, breeding a deep resentment of U.S. involvement in the Muslim world and cultivating supporters for the global jihadist movement." It is simply preposterous for politicos to plead ignorance and then innocence, when the facts are right there in their own government, and in fact on the internet.

The war in Iraq has vastly increased the threat of terrorism and hurt Americans' safety. To quote the National Intelligence Council's report on the 2020 project: "Iraq and other possible conflicts in the future could provide recruitment, training grounds, technical skills and language proficiency for a new class of terrorists who are "professionalized" and for whom political violence becomes an end in itself." It would not be hard to reach this conclusion just by thinking of what the result of massive violence to people's lives is.

It is obvious that the higher-ups do not have the majority's interests in mind, and that they are willing to destroy people in other places while doing the same at home. The responsibility lies on everyday people to hold the bosses responsible for their actions and to dismantle their absurd claims using the various branches of the government. It is not hard to prove that the earth is round, just as it is not hard to prove that the world is a much more dangerous place now than it was before. No equivocal answers are needed from generals or politicians.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brlerner@student.umass.edu

Documentary tells alarming story

It's Wednesday evening, I'm putting away some laundry, listening to some music, and for the most part, minding my own business. There's a knock at my door. Figuring that it is my roommate I open the door to find myself faced with this flyer-holding man asking me, "What do you think of the war?"

Leigh Greaney

For such a simple question, it's been a question thrown across my mind for most of this week. Typically, I can not be bothered with politics. However, after watching a documentary, "The Ground Truth," in one of my classes, "bothered" is an understatement.

The film highlights a group of veterans from the war in Iraq and their experiences – experiences that are as eye-opening as they are tragic. Normally, when we, as Americans, think about men and women going and joining the armed forces, we think of it as praise-worthy, and a service to our country.

Whether it be for money, pride, educational opportunities, even the love of your country, at one point doesn't it all come down to the fact that you're joining to kill? To join the Army, Marines, Navy, Air Force, or whatever field you chose, the objective is the same. You are being sent to kill.

That is the bottom line. Not only are soldiers sent to kill, but those who chose to serve are given the desire to kill. That's the part that makes war more than political, it becomes psychological. Recruits enter basic training, with varying reasons for joining, and are psychologically dehumanized until they are designed to be killing machines. All of this occurs, of course, under the guise of "helping the nation."

These killing machines are created by a group dynamic to which, at first, they don't even know they are falling victim. They are deprived of sleep to keep them weak. They are consistently screamed at by their commanding officers who call them anything they can think of. Not only are they made to see themselves as worthless, they are made to see their enemy as worse then worthless. This chant from the documentary, sung by recruits in basic training, pretty much sums up their apathy:

"Bomb the village, kill the people
Throw some napalm in the square
Do it on a Sunday morning
Kill them on the way to prayer
Ring the bell inside the schoolhouse
Watch the kiddies gather 'round
Lock and load with your 2-40
Mow them little [expletive] down"

In the documentary, Soldiers develop a pride in killing rather than a pride in protecting the country. Veterans have given accounts where they were chastised for not killing. Peer pressure arises , as not killing is seen as a weakness. It becomes sport. Being in the Army becomes an excuse to take life. Authority rules and the result is an army of trigger-happy soldiers who are killing to kill.

"These killing machines are created by a group dynamic to which, at first, they don't even know they are falling victim."

With this war especially, this desire to kill is a fundamental tool used to destroy the enemy. No longer is it obvious who the enemy is. The civilians and the terrorists all dress the same and are located in the same places. Who's job is it to decipher who is a threat and who is not? It's all combat all the time, and the enemy could be anywhere. The solution? Shoot everything, blanket fire. Men, women, and children, shoot them all. Take out the threat.

One of the documentary's featured veterans, Sean Huze, told a story that still sends a chill up my spine when I think about it. On the way to one of his missions in his tank he saw a Muslim woman walking toward him. She didn't look threatening, yet he was trained to shoot anything that got in the way of the tank. She could potentially be armed with an explosive, which could injure the troops.

He took two shots at her to "take her out," yet not kill her. Just as she was pulling a white flag out of her dress, the surrounding tanks, seeing that she was being shot at, followed suite and opened fire on her. The dark image of the woman lying dead in the sand clutching the white flag is one Sean Huze will never live a day without remembering.

That woman, along with thousands of innocent casualties killed by trigger-happy American soldiers, should be enough to make us reconsider what we are doing over there. Are we just as much terrorists as we consider the people we are trying to fight? Children are left with missing limbs, parentless, psychologically damaged, or even dead at the hands of American soldiers. Families are ripped apart. Torture and harassment are wide spread. What are we doing?

So, when I am asked what I think of the war, I think it is just as horrific and apathetic as every other war in the history of the world. Bloodshed has led to more bloodshed. In an effort to avenge ourselves we are creating reason for others to want revenge. It is a vicious cycle of hate. I just want it to end.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu

Rap rivals prove violence is not the answer

Rivalries have been happening for as long as we've existed. Think about it, cavemen probably fought for their food. Rivalry happens within many social groups and has evolved as time has progressed.

Haley Navarro

Sports, politics, academics – these are just a few areas of present culture within which rivalry exists. In popular culture this gives us something to talk about. Britney and Christina, Angelina and Jennifer. You name it. You've probably talked about it.

But perhaps the most famous rivalry in the past 25 years within our popular culture was that of the Notorious B.I.G. and Tupac Shakur. This rivalry was the most talked about of its time, because of the music, the East-West competition and the emergence of gangsta rap.

The rivalry sparked public awareness about the seriousness of violence within these ruthless individuals and their cliques.

However, what a lot of people don't know is that it mostly existed in the media. Things did happen to fuel these media facades, but it was an easy thing to play off for journalists. They were both very different and easy to expose little things that may have happened. This, unfortunately, sold a lot of magazines, and sold even more when both of them were shot.

Within the last couple of months, a new public rivalry has emerged, and the media loves it. Kanye West and 50 Cent, who seem to have nothing in common, have now begun what seems to be a "beef."

"Within the last couple of months, a new public rivalry has emerged, and the media loves it."

This time, though, it seems to be non-violent and all in good fun.

It began this summer when each rapper decided to put out both of their new albums on September 11. Kanye West originally was going to release his record on a different date because of this, but then decided against it and put his out on the same day.

50 Cent, whose real name is Curtis Jackson, heard about this and released a statement saying that it Kanye West sold more albums than he did, he would officially give up rapping. This statement fueled the media to focus on these two and a rivalry officially began.

On September 11, Kanye West's album was expected to move 700,000 copies by the end of the day, while 50's album was only expected to move 400,000.

It's not like both rappers are trying to be the best gangsta rappers out there though. 50 cent, who is a protege of Eminem, is classified as gangsta rap because of who he is associated with. He was even originally under Dr. Dre's label. He tends to rap a whole lot about women, getting shot, being rich, you know really compelling stuff. But mostly women I'd say.

I don't blame him though, that's what sells. Clubs don't play his music less, and the radio still plays his singles. He is one of the highest-selling rappers in the world due to his commercial success in 2003. Using electronic beats and 808s is popular, he's a prime example.

Kanye West, however, tends to take a different approach to rap. He uses extensive amounts of sampling and samples. In the past, he's used a sample from Ray Charles on "Gold Digger" and used Daft Punk in his latest single: "Stronger."

Kanye West takes a more serious outlook with his lyrics and messages, using his faith, racism and the war. He does also sing about women, but he doesn't necessarily exploit them.

Kanye West has really changed the outline for modern rap. He has various genres of singles that have been successful. The only problem with him, though, is that he is really emotional when it comes to his music.

At this year's Video Music Awards he was nominated for various awards and when he lost all of them, he was quoted back stage for saying, "Fk MTV. Tell them what I said. Five nominations! I lost to the Black Eyed Peas last year. I'm never coming to MTV. Y'all find Britney. I'm tired of this pop st, man."

Personally, I tend to lean more towards the musical styles of Kanye West. But don't get me wrong, I do not oppose "Pro Technology" playing on the radio. America's youth seems to be taking sides when it comes to this rivalry. I received invitations on Facebook to go to a record store to buy Kanye's album.

Some people have advertised their "side," and some people just don't care and listen to both.

For a rivalry of this stature, where fame and fortune are on the line, it's refreshing to see it happen with no violence. They aren't threatening each other's mothers or anything violent like that. They keep it strictly business and leave it to their fans. Both were interviewed on the red carpet before the VMA's, and both said it was all in good fun.

Haley Navarro is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnavarro@student.umass.edu

Trendy techno

I have this acquaintance (and for all intensive purposes, no, this acquaintance is not me). His name is Andrew, and like my self, he is college freshman at a university well south of here. Anyway,

Hannah Nelson

Andrew bought a certain Apple product just a couple months ago, and since then his world has revolved around this hand-held miracle.

It is what wakes him up in the morning and lulls him to sleep at night. He can surf the net, call his friends, and rock out to Queen by just a twitch of his finger. Steve Jobs might as well have super-glued the thing to Andrew's hand, because it never leaves his sight. Just in case you haven't figured it out yet, I am talking about the now infamous iPhone.

And it would seem that Andrew is not the only one. There is a video surfacing on the internet that spoofs the Apple-philes who seem, in fact, to be in love with the glow of that 4-by-2-special touch pad screen. It features quite the character who makes you do a double-take, and no, that isn't Weird Al. This man's best friend is his iPhone and he serenades his undying love for the multi-tasking beauty. Seriously, Steve Jobs would do well to have Andrew in his next marketing campaign.

To digress from the iPhone alone, there is a whole array of essentials that both cell phone providers and MP3 makers would like you, the college students of 2007, to have. It's someone from outside the ways and means of college behavior was suddenly transplanted onto the UMass campus, would they be inclined to think we were all part of some cult, or simply that the car bads were just a normal part of our physiology. Hell I'm getting a bit excessive now.

"We have turned into walking billboards for the latest 'it' product."

We have turned into walking billboards for the latest 'it' product. Between classes, about boredom, or the weekend. Days are on their cell phones or listening to music. But that isn't a bad thing. I may be sounding like I'm anti-technology but I talk on my cell phone and listen to music as I travel around the same as everybody else. During lunch, my stomach may be taking in FOOD, but my brain is running off of podcasts and CD.

It's the other stuff that gets to me. That place on the pavement with a cell phone to ear that gets a bit amusing. All that stuff is the excessive ads and controversy that in itself only causes more buzz. It's the consciences of modern America, which includes cars and computers as well. The upgrading and the feeling that you have to outdo the Smiths, or the neighbor across the hall.

Again, I come back to Andrew. He loves to show off all the features he has downloaded onto his iPhone. He says he loves having everything from his schedule to his music in one place. But he also admits that part of all this love come from having the best thing since sliced bread. And that is the crux of the matter. When is it okay to stop upgrading and be content with the status quo?

When I told my mother I was writing a thing or two about iPhones this week, it's instant response was, "I want one of those."

And that is exactly what we know that the LHDs are targeting us to do. The fact that there's a huge population of college-school kids to working adults who want the next big thing in the palm of their hand. I'm not saying that there's nothing wrong with that.

Now with the iPhone – something like its number, I ask, what's even more complicated? The best answer I can think of is the ever-evolving human society. Value, progress, luxury, technological advancement and desire. Do we need that? Does what looks cool, like, and makes us feel like

I can't help but think that the current state of our generation will be defined by these words like the current player. Sidekick, Crackberry, The Pod, the iPhone, the MP3 player, to a certain extent, Facebook. And the only reason why I think I should be concerned is because I want to see if we can remember what the future is going to look like. Can we even remember all the gadgets we've had. I know people that have had multiple cell phones as they have been through upgrades. I have been through at least two MP3 players, an iPod or Apple. Whether I use it, I have to say that the video iPod or the pink Razr flip phone are pretty sweet. I must admit that I feel very connected to the electric pulse of the world when I'm plugged in to the electric pulse of the world when I'm plugged in to the electric pulse of the world when I'm plugged in

SEP
21
2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Post-punk not dead yet

Reunited Mission of Burma pushes the limits of sound

By Corey Charron
Collegian Staff

Mission of Burma will be playing at the Pearl Street Clubroom tonight, on the second stop of a brief five-show New England tour.

The post-punk pioneers started up in Boston in April of 1979, consisting of lead guitarist Roger Miller, bassist Clint Conley, drummer Peter Prescott and sound engineer Martin Swope. Swope's main role was to tape a guitar sound, loop it and send it through the monitors as a type of fourth instrument. The unpredictability of using such a machine added to the anything-goes mantra that Mission of Burma brought to their concert atmosphere.

Their physically demanding and entertaining showmanship matched their already astonishing musical talent. When the band reunited in 2002, Bob Weston took Swope's place; a member of another great post-punk band, Shellac, who is keeping the same exciting aesthetic that Mission of Burma had been famous for.

Mission of Burma released their first record EP on Ace of Hearts Records in 1981, titled "Signals, Calls and Marches." Their first full-length, "Vs," came out a year later on the same record label, and was a critical and cult sensation. But the incredibly loud music soon took a toll on guitarist Roger Miller, causing tinnitus in his ears, a buzzing or high pitched sound that deteriorates hearing. The sound problems led to the band's break up in 1983, after releasing a live record, "The Horrible Truth About Burma."

In 2002, Mission of Burma reunited. They have released two new, critically adored albums. "ONoffON" in 2004 and "The Obliterati," in 2006 on Matador records. What had been their biggest draw – their live sets – still pleasantly surprised audiences, as the foursome were still able to bring their raucous energy to the stage, twenty years after breaking up. Roger Miller adjusted to the intense noises with large headphones to protect his hearing.

Gang of Four, Sonic Youth, and Pere Ubu are three bands that come to mind immediately when thinking of close relatives to Mission of Burma's musical style. The jittery, intense post-punk sounds lead a Boston scene streaming with interesting, progressive bands. Their ability to create artistic yet catchy music has inspired many musicians to push the limits of what rock music can become.

Matador records plans on re-issuing Mission of Burma's first three

See BURMA on page 5

COURTESY MATADOR RECORDS

Mission of Burma released two records since their reunion in 2002. The band reminds fans of their energy and musical abilities during live performances.

Benoit impresses at Iron Horse Café

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

Tab Benoit rocked the Iron Horse Café Wednesday night in front of a full house. Kicking off the set with the driving "Why Are People Like That?" the audience could see they were in for a great show.

"He's in a zone that fans appreciate but only musicians truly understand," said Randy Manyak, a long-time Benoit fan who traveled an hour-and-a-half to see the show.

Fans from all over the country are not an uncommon thing at a Tab Benoit concert. Touring the United States on a big, black bus twice a year, Benoit's music touches people, no matter where they are from, on a level that always leaves them needing more.

Wednesday's show saw Benoit in top form. Each pick of each guitar string was rife with pure emotion, and every song was played with complete abandon and dedication. The shift between dynamics was flawless, moving from hard-rocking blues to mournful ballads and back again without ever losing the audience.

It wasn't only the honesty with which he played that made the show so engaging. As usual, Benoit added a little comedy. After the first few songs, he introduced himself.

"Hello, my name is Tab Benoit, and I have a problem," he began. "Life is a problem and I play music to get through it. I am an addict. I'm working on a twelve-step program."

The audience interaction didn't end there. Benoit invited the crowd to shout out requests, resulting in a chorus of different titles. Benoit was glad that no one was calling out the same song, but joked about it being due to a lack of a hit. Throughout the show, members of the audience would yell out comments and Benoit played off the crowd, playing along and cracking jokes every chance he got.

It wouldn't be a Tab Benoit show without the breaking of a few guitar strings, one of which he turned into a comedy routine worthy of the classic "Looney Tunes." Benoit wrestled with the unruly string, trying to keep it out of his way, while never missing a beat of the song he was playing.

Mid-way through the show, people were up and dancing, unable to contain themselves any longer. It wasn't just Benoit's playing that made it impossible to sit still. The bassist and drummer, both members of the blues group Louisiana's LeRoux, were just as intense and thrilling as Benoit. The three musicians gelled in such a way that it seemed as though they were one flawless machine.

Benoit ended his show with a heartfelt plea to the audience to pay attention to the situation in New Orleans, and the problems with the rest of the United States, such as the collapsed bridge in Minneapolis. He urged people to "break down barriers" and take charge; to get involved and make a change.

"I don't just live in Louisiana; I live in the United States!" Benoit stated, to cheers.

He also plugged the upcoming Voice of The Wetlands (V.O.W.) Festival, which is an annual music festival on the bayou of Louisiana, which is taking place October 12-14. Admission is free. Benoit stressed, making it accessible for everyone to come down and learn about the swamplands and what people can do to fix them.

He then left the stage to a standing ovation, and met with fans outside the Iron Horse building, chatting amiably while happily taking pictures and signing autographs.

Tab Benoit and Louisiana's LeRoux proved on Wednesday night that "Blues is here to stay," as they sing on the recently Grammy nominated album "Brother to the Blues". With a mix of old blues classics and new originals, Benoit provided nothing less than pure entertainment for the lucky audience at the Iron Horse.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY KAWAI BEAM

Tab Benoit delivered an energy filled set at the Iron Horse Café. He ended the show by asking the crowd to pay attention to the situation in New Orleans.

Foster returns to the big screen

Suspensful plot invites audience into actress' mind

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

Jodie Foster returns to the big screen with a bang, literally, as a victim-turned-vigilante taking the law into her own hands in "The Brave One." Foster plays a damsel-in-distress yet again, like she did in previous flicks like "Panic Room" and "Flightplan." However this time around, she plays a darker character, blurring ethical lines and creating her own form of justice. Foster is convincing enough to completely erase the stereotype that only men can act in these types of roles.

"The Brave One" paints the life of Erica Baine (Foster), a middle-aged woman living in New York City, who hosts a talk-radio program, voicing essays about the city she loves. She is about to get married and her life could not be going any better. That is, until tragedy strikes.

Late one evening during a stroll with their dog through Central Park, the happy couple is attacked and brutally beaten by a trio of thugs. It truly is a night that changes Erica's life forever. Her fiance is murdered and she is left lying at his side, unconscious and beaten beyond recognition.

After waking from a coma three weeks later, Erica is left trying to make sense of what she has recovered from. Her character goes through a transition of phases, wandering through various stages of emotions – grief, frustration, anger, apathy and ultimately revenge.

She evolves into a different

See FOSTER on page 5

COURTESY KAWAI BEAM

Foster takes it upon herself to carry out justice in "The Brave One." Her performance creates suspense and reveals her ability to play a darker role.

THE BRAVE ONE

DIRECTED BY NEIL JORDAN

STARRING JODIE FOSTER

B

Aesop Rock drops new album

Brilliant rhymes and progression keep hip hop going strong

By Nick Miriello
Collegian Staff

As Aesop Rock returns to Northampton with the release of his new album: "None Shall Pass," a lesser-known performer rides in the back seat. For all the genius that is Aesop Rock, much of his brilliance can be attributed to his friend and DJ: Blockhead. Over the past ten years while Aesop has been spilling rhymes dense with tension, anxiety and philosophy, Blockhead has been present in the background.

While Aesop creates many of his own beats, Blockhead can be thanked for some of the best. His down-tempo style fuses a sour melancholic joy with thick resonating drumbeats and abstract samples. Listening to Blockhead's musical arrangements and spin sessions sends the most level-headed person into a heroin-induced stage of euphoria. He has released three solo albums, including "Downtown Science" and his most recent "Uncle Tony's coloring book".

His beats are intricate and backed with looping samples and a wide range of instruments. He often breaks them with high pitched over-sped voices that give the affect of a siren calling you back, as if he has sent you too far out to sea. And while doing all this, he is still a beat genius for Aesop Rock.

Over the years Aesop Rock has built a huge following in the underground scene. Making music for the "earthworms" he so often raps about. There is an unexplained truth to him, partly because much of his cryptic lyrics stream from a level of unconsciousness.

Thus, when he rhymes, he never seems to be out of place, or over extending his skill; he simply has it, owns it and consumes the song. It is as if he recognizes his talent, before he ever lays down a track. In the past, Aesop Rock has shown his skill as an M.C. and producer by creating albums that lurk in Hip-Hop legend. "Float" and "Labor Days" stand as calm reminders of how talented this M.C. truly is.

Like many artists Aesop has progressed, or at least changed. His newest album has a dynamite title track and enough secretive rhyme layers to leave the most dedicated fan stuck on repeat.

This may be the brilliance of Aesop Rock; he remains slightly ambiguous never quite giving the listener the comfort of knowing where he is going, what he is thinking.

It is here that Aesop finds his followers, those seeking to search way past the surface of a nice rhyme. Sometimes rap is just rhymes, gloating and word play. Aesop makes you work for his rhymes, and once you have put in the work you have a connection.

For all those not necessarily willing to put in the work, his rap at face value still outperforms most of his contemporaries. Except for the monsters of Wu-Tang, Gang Star and the villainess of MF Doom, it is hard to find a better M.C. His flow alone warrants listening, and once Blockhead's beat hooks you are bound to be a fan. Once you enjoy the sound than you will hear the lyrics only Aesop can imagine.

And for all his fans waiting on another down-tempo anthem such as "Daylight" don't get caught waiting. While his new stuff is different, that doesn't mean it isn't still Aesop. "None Shall Pass" is a mixing of hyped energy and lyrical mastery. It might be a little bit more thumping, a little bit more energetic, but maybe Aesop Rock is just happy these days.

Aesop Rock and Blockhead will be performing at the Pearl Street Ballroom on Tuesday, September 25. The show starts at 8:30 p.m., get there on time so you don't miss Blockhead's opening session.

Nick Miriello can be reached at nmiriello@student.umass.edu

COURTESY KAWAI BEAM

Aesop's musical talent is expanded with the help of DJ Blockhead, who has been creating beats for the rapper for the past 10 years.

Boston rockers come west

BURMA from page 4

records, "Signals Calls and Marches EP," "Vs," and "The Horrible Truth About Burma." These will most likely be released with b-sides, live tracks and other exciting tidbits of Burma's history.

Opening for the Boston legends are two local bands, Who Shot Hollywood, of Amherst, and The Bunnies, of Northampton. Who Shot Hollywood, formerly known as Bullseye, consists of four youngsters who know how to rock: Lucas Kendall, bass guitarist, age 13, Dana Kendall, drummer, age 12, Lucas Graham, guitarist, age 11 and Eamon Wick, keyboardist, age 13.

Bullseye, the original incarnation of the band, had their first big break in May of 2006 when The Fray asked them to be the warm-up act at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel in Providence, R.I. Last year's Flywheel benefit concert, at Pearl Street, featured Bullseye opening for Ted Leo and the Pharmacists. They have also played gigs with underground legends Throwing Muses and most recently with The Fleshtones. The band switched their name to Who Shot Hollywood earlier this year, after finding out about the copious amount of bands named Bullseye.

Their new four-song EP shows a growth from their original garage band style, pushing towards a more refined and mature sound. The Bunnies are a psych-rock quartet and also have made a name change in the past, formerly known as the Bennies. Jeremy DT799 guitarist, Jack Science, bassist, Prof. M. LeBunnie, drummer, and Robert Ives, guitarist/moogist, had the opportunity to open up for the Pixies on their reunion tour.

Frank Black, the lead singer of the Pixies and former UMass student, will produce their next album. The Bunnies were featured on the Dig for Fire tribute record, covering the song Alec Eiffel, originally recorded by the Pixies.

Mission of Burma, The Bunnies, and Who Shot Hollywood will be appearing at the Pearl Street Clubroom at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $20 in advance and $23 at the door.

Corey Charron can be reached at ccharron@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MATADOR RECORDS

Since joining forces in 1979, Mission of Burma has been known for innovative approaches to musical expression.

Not your typical action-packed movie person, referring to herself as a "stranger". In an attempt to somehow make things right, she journeys into a world enforcing her own form of justice, mowing down predators on the streets of New York.

FOSTER from page 4

Foster's performance in "The Brave One" is captivating and her character is the only one you will care about. The audience is given a chance to get deep inside her head and imagine what one would do if put into the same circumstances.

In the meantime, the supporting cast of characters is insignificant in comparison to Foster. Terrence Howard plays Detective Mercer, who forms an odd friendship with Erica, after briefly running into her following a press conference. As he gradually suspects Erica to be the vigilante of the city, he is not convincing enough to be the tough cop that he thinks he is.

His gut feelings are too spot-on to be considered realistic, especially given his weak track record of being unable to detain a man whose case he has been working on for years. Other characters, including Mercer's partner (Nicky Katt) and Erica's fiance (Naveen Andrews) do what they can in their very limited roles.

From Foster's great acting, to its intense action sequences, and intriguing storyline – the movie was worth the seven bucks. After all, there is not much out there right now that is even worth seeing. It is not perfect, by any means. "The Brave One" effectively puts the viewer in the victim's shoes.

From start to finish, it has non-stop action and a gripping story. One thing is for certain – "The Brave One" definitely is not a chick flick.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

In "The Brave One," Jodie Foster plays Erica Baine, a talk-radio show host whose life takes a sudden turn when tragedy strikes.

THE SOURCE

EXHIBIT: STAGED: SCENES FROM THE JAMES ELLIS THEATRE COLLECTION
THE EXHIBIT FEATURES SELECTED MATERIALS FROM THE COLLECTION OF RETIRED MOUNT HOLYOKE COLLEGE ENGLISH PROFESSOR, JAMES D. ELLIS. A VARIETY OF BOOKS, BROADSIDES, POSTERS AND LETTERS PERTAINING TO THE ENGLISH AND AMERICAN STAGE FROM 1750 TO 1915 IS ON DISPLAY AT THE LEARNING COMMONS.
SEPTEMBER 5, 2007-DECEMBER 31, 2007
LIBRARY LEARNING COMMONS
ADMISSION: FREE

AUTUMNAL EQUINOX AT THE UMASS SUNWHEEL
STUDENTS ARE INVITED TO SEE THE SUNRISE AND SUNSET WITH DR. JUDITH YOUNG OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ASTRONOMY OVER THE TALL STANDING STONES. THIS EVENT WILL MARK THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SUNWHEEL GATHERINGS.
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 2007-SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2007
SUNWHEEL, UMASS AMHERST CAMPUS
ADMISSION: $3 SUGGESTED DONATION

HOLYOKE BOUND
HOLYOKE BOUND IS AN ORIENTATION SESSION FOR STUDENTS INTERESTED IN INTERNING, VOLUNTEERING OR WORKING IN HOLYOKE. AN OVERVIEW OF HOLYOKE'S HISTORY AND POLITICAL ECONOMY WILL BE PROVIDED. A CITY TOUR AND INFORMATION ABOUT VOLUNTEER AND INTERNSHIP OPPORTUNITIES WILL ALSO BE AVAILABLE.
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 2007, 11:00 AM – 5:00 PM
FREE TRANSPORTATION FROM HAIGIS MALL: 11:10 A.M.
ADMISSION: FREE

ENVIRONMENTAL LECTURE SERIES: WATER SUSTAINABILITY
THE LECTURE TITLED "EMERGING CONTAMINANTS AND WATER QUALITY: ENDOCRINE DISRUPTORS AND PHARMACEUTICALS IN THE ENVIRONMENT" WILL BE GIVEN BY SHANE SNYDER, THE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROJECT MANAGER FOR THE SOUTHERN NEVADA WATER AUTHORITY.
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2007, 3:30 PM – 5:00 PM
STUDENT UNION, CAPE COD LOUNGE
ADMISSION: FREE

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
OCTOBER 6TH
From HBO's "Tourgasm" & Comedy Central's "Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn"
ROBERT KELLY
OCT. 27TH
From the movies "Norbit," "Deuce Bigalow" & "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
DEC. 1ST
Star of the HBO special "D.L. Hughley Unapologetic" and Host of BET's S.O.B.
D.L. HUGHLEY
OCT. 20TH
Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" & from FOX TV's "Fastlane" BILL BELLAMY
NOV. 3RD
From "The Howard Stern Show" and star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel: Unprotected"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL

Be A Local Hero Buy Locally Grown
Pick Your Own Apples
Apex Orchards
153 Peckville Rd.
Shelburne, MA 01370
Open Daily 9 - 5
Phone (413) 625 - 2744
www.apexorchards.com
I-91 to exit 26, Rt. 2 west 3.5 miles follow the signs to Apex Orchards

PEARSON
National Evaluation Systems (NES) is a leader in the testing industry, providing customized assessments for teacher licensure. NES is part of Pearson Education, one of the world's premier education companies.
PART-TIME TEMPORARY POSITIONS
We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately, pay attention to details, and be comfortable in a busy work environment. Various work schedules are available between 9:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. Additional ongoing positions are available during conferences at our Hadley office. Hours for these table assistant positions are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Preference will be given to individuals who can work 15+ hours a week. Pay rate starts at $8.00/hr.
(Req. #20165)
Applications accepted only at www.pearsoned.com.
EOE

Arts is looking for a new Assistant Editor

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.com 413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Massachusetts
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE Town of Amherst
Walk on anytime! No Tee Times Necessary!

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

UM ready for home

M. SOCCER from page 8

The freshman made the most of his fifth collegiate game, as he found the net with two minutes left in regulation for his first career goal.

Another injured player, freshman midfielder Jeffery Arn will be a game-time decision for the Minutemen.

Harvard's game-winning goal last weekend resulted from catching the Minuteman defense off-guard. The Crimson scored on a low shot from approximately 25 yards out in the center of the field. Junior goalkeeper Zach Summons got a late jump on the ball after being shielded by one of his defenders.

"There was some miscommunication among the backs," Koch said. "We overcommitted and got caught with two guys marking one and they sort of got in each other's way. So that wasn't the main issue."

However, Koch believes that improving the in-game transition between the three parts of the field will lead to longer possession and more chances.

"In training this week, we've been trying to work on closing the gap between the backs and midfield," Koch said. "It hurt against Harvard with too much space in front of our backs. Offensively when we win the ball, we need to make sure that we're pushing up together so that we have better support from the back players to the midfield and forward players."

But the Huskies won't exactly make life easier for the UM defense.

"They're a very aggressive team and they're a big sized team," Koch said. "They'll put you in a lot of pressure if you can't handle pressure, then they'll score a lot of goals."

NU's season on the pitch can only be characterized by two results: 4-0 wins or shutout losses. The Huskies opened the year by dropping games to Quinnipiac, Boston University and Providence, giving up a total of six goals and scoring none.

The team then destroyed Maine and Columbia by 4-0 scores on consecutive weekends. To round out Northeastern's inconsistent first half, it lost on Tuesday to Holy Cross, 1-0.

The squad favors to keep the ball in the air, a trait consistent with a team looking to slow the pace of play and create a physical game.

"They're good in the air, so they put the ball in the box from the air a lot," Koch said. "They'll throw the ball up there and see what happens. There's no set rhythm to their play, so you don't really know what they're doing. They play for set pieces, so we have to defend well in those situations and we have to be disciplined around the 18-yard box."

The first goal the Minutemen allowed against Harvard came off of a free kick. But the team defended well on corner kicks in that game, stifling all six Crimson attempts. UMass has only allowed a single corner kick goal this year.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

CHRISTIAN CARRIZO – COLLEGIAN

Sophomore forward Mike DeSantis has started all six games this season for the Minutemen. He has yet to record a point. In 2006, DeSantis tied for second on the team with three goals.

Canfield sparks win over Dartmouth

W. SOCCER from page 8

Dartmouth was able to come up with a few close calls, though.

In the second half, the Big Green's top goal-scorer, sophomore Maggie Goldstein, lined up for a free kick from about 30 yards out and smacked a rocket about a yard outside the goal's far post.

Dartmouth's Katie Davis gave one last desperate attempt to extend the game when she unleashed a long-range shot that sailed a foot over the crossbar.

It would have been the first thing in a while that got by UMass goalkeeper Kristin Walker, who was impenetrable in net.

In addition to notching five saves in the contest, the red-shirt senior recorded her second shutout of the season and has now held opponents scoreless for 267:59.

The Minutewomen's next game is a home matchup against Vermont. The Catamounts will be at Rudd Field Sunday to face UMass at 1 p.m.

Though sporting a 1-5-1 record, Vermont has kept it close in almost every game. The Catamounts' only victory was a 1-0 triumph against Central Arkansas in the season opener.

Since then, all but two games have been decided by one goal or less, and they brought George Washington (2-1 loss) and St. Mary's (Calif.) (1-1 tie) into overtime.

Vermont's leading scorer is Gabby Bonfigli. Six games into her collegiate career, the freshman has a goal and two assists.

Goalkeeper Eliza Bradley has made 60 saves and maintains a .823 save percentage, while having allowed 13 goals.

UMass is 14-6 all-time against the Catamounts, but have not won a game against them since 1994. The last meeting between the squads resulted in a 1-0 loss for UMass on Sept. 22, 2006.

Rudy takes his schedule one game at a time, so he hasn't thought much about Vermont yet. But when asked what he expected, he said what his soccer expertise and Vermont's numbers tell him.

"They haven't exactly torn it up. But my perspective with them is we felt we should've beat them the last two years, once at home and once away, and we didn't," he said. "We got beat by a goal each time. That doesn't sit well with us."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Minutemen welcome NU to Rudd Field

HOME FIELD from page 8

guidelines basically stand as suggestions: the field must not measure more than 120 yards long and 75 yards across. Teams develop a playing style and attract players based on the size of their field. A program with a smaller field may prefer a more defensive approach while a team with a larger field will look to attract faster players who work best in space.

Junior Prince Ofosu is easily the fastest of UMass's forwards and can exploit a defense in space as well as any player in the Atlantic 10. It's not surprising that some of his best games in his first two seasons came on Rudd Field. Two of his three goals in 2006 came at home and as a freshman he recorded a career-high two assists against Cornell on his home field.

Even in preseason scrimmages, both of which took place on Rudd, Ofosu looked more comfortable in the open field than he did in last Sunday's match at Harvard.

However, playing at home against a team like Northeastern certainly has its risks. Northeastern's best offensive asset is its ability to attack on the wings and send crosses into the middle. Rudd Field's width provides the NU forwards more space to maneuver free of UMass defenders.

The Minutemen do have a tactic in place to offset this. UMass coach Sam Koch moved sophomore Dan Lepone and red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport into his backfield before this season, increasing the overall speed of his backfield. The finesse defending of the smaller outside backs matches the size and strength of UMass's two center backs, Cook and red-shirt junior Chris Brown. Neither Lepone nor Rappaport played in the backfield for the Minutemen prior to this season as both were featured in the midfield.

"Dan's been great," Koch said. "At times, players have been able to use his size [5-foot-6] against him. But he's stepped in and played well; especially since he's never played there, at least not for us.

"Ultimately, the more positions you can play, the better. Since the game is, at times, position-less."

Seven of the Minutemen's final 12 matches and 5-of-9 conference games are at home. To get where they want, the Minutemen know they need to solve their woes on the road. Winning 2-of-6 away from UMass won't suffice. And if traveling to Burlington, Vt., and Orono, Maine, proved difficult, midseason flights to St. Louis and Charlotte, N.C., aren't going to get any easier.

The road trips explain UMass's lack of success, but it only goes so far. As does the advantage provided by its home games, sooner or later the Minutemen have to make some plays and score some goals, no matter where they play.

Joe Mehmi can be reached at jmehmi@student.umass.edu.

UMass expects big test against UConn

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

rity I normally wouldn't expect from a freshman, and I see her as the future of this team when our seniors leave. She has played great defense, so right now we're trying to get her to become a little more attacking."

The starting goalkeeper role for the Minutewomen has been shared by sophomore Sarah Williams and senior Becky Letourneau throughout the season. Williams currently has the better record, while Letourneau has been facing the tougher opposition. Sowry would not reveal who would start in goal against the Huskies, saying both goalies were playing well.

However, Williams played against Siena in the most recent game, so if the trend holds Letourneau would get the start this Saturday.

Offensively, the Minutewomen will plan to attack by putting pressure on the Huskies backfield and forcing them to make plays. The Huskies do have an excellent backfield leader in Jennifer Kleinhans, but coach Sowry feels that the best way to attack them is to force their backfield to make plays.

All season long, Cher King has been the playmaker on offense for the Minutewomen scoring five of the team's 10 goals. The team hopes to lean on her against the Huskies.

"She is probably the smartest player in terms of how we press an opponent. She's our leader. What she does, we follow," Sowry said. "She identifies when it's time to hold back in half court and she knows when to press, she also is important in our forward movement and getting the team into position."

The team will be using the UConn game to evaluate the work they put into improving its performance on penalty corners. All season long converting penalty corner chances into goals has been a major problem for the Minutewomen, and the team would like to shore up that weakness against the Huskies.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Senior Erin O'Brien and the Minutewomen hit the road this weekend to face the No. 4 Connecticut Huskies in a non-conference matchup.

Huskies hope history repeats itself

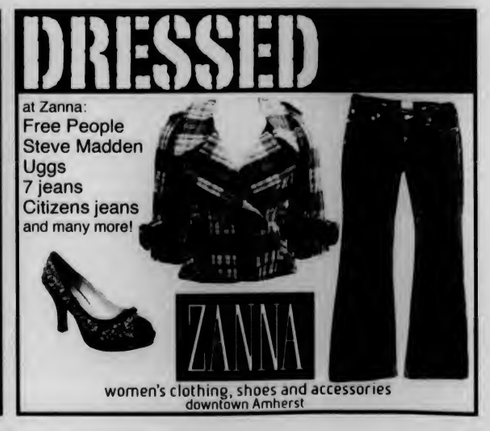
TEST from page 8

imperative for offensive success.

The Minutewomen have scored more than three goals only once this season, so the defense can not allow six goals like last season and expect to win.

However, Sowry acknowledges the offense will also need to create goal-scoring opportunities against the Huskies.

"From the front, the forwards have to work hard," she said. "They need to put pressure on their backs. They have a couple of talented backs. One is No. 18. She is very talented, she can hit a ball, and she can throw an overhead. We need to put a lot of pressure on that particular player, and hopefully with that non-glamorous work we can come up with more interceptions in the midfield."



The defensive player Sowry worries about is UConn junior Jennifer Kleinhans. Though she has two goals and two assists this year, the German received multiple accolades for her defense as well. She was last year's Big East Defensive Player of the Year, and similar to teammate Peijs, was named a 2006 NFHCA First Team All-American.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Freshman Therese Smith came off of the bench in yesterday's victory to record her first-career collegiate assist.

amherst cinema
FRI 9/21-THU 9/27

PEDRO COSTA
Acclaimed Director in person!
Mon, 8.00 - WHERE DOES YOUR HIDDEN SMILE LIE
Tue, 9:00 - BONES

OPENS FRI 9/21 Ten Canoes
Baby-Friendly Show! 9/25 3:00 3:00 7:15

WHEN THE ROAD BENDS: TALES OF A GYPSY CARAVAN 2:45 7:00

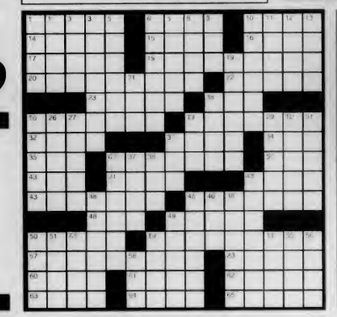
OPENS FRI 9/21
DEATH AT A FUNERAL
Fri, Sat, Wed, Thu 3:30 5:30 7:30 9:30
Sun: 5:30 7:30 9:30
Mon, Tue: 3:30 5:30
Paprika 5:15 9:10

MUSEUMS 10 - ART OF THE BLACK Charlotte's Web SUNDAY - 2:00
once 5:00 9:20

28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		1	5					3
		7			6	8		9 4
						2
5		6				7		8
					5
		7			9			3 6
				2
2	5			8	4		1
7						9	8



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Zodiac sign
6 Infrequent
10 Audible exhalation
14 Kind of lily
15 Daredevil Knievel
16 China setting
17 Mooring basin
18 Medusa
20 Scientific breakthrough
22 Tobacco overs
23 Comic-strip Dick
24 In place of
25 Designate
28 Conveyance
32 Rise on hind legs
33 Sot
34 Lady lobster
35 Anthropology focus
36 Cyclonic wind
39 Annex
40 Antiquated
41 Winter blanket
42 "Picnic" playwright
43 Arrived at
45 Inhabited by ghosts
49 Word on a towel
49 Trine amount
50 Artist's model
53 Chewed the fat
57 Hors d'oeuvre
59 Wear away
60 Garden vegetables
61 Crow's-nest support
62 Goes up
63 Frank or Rice
64 Hunter's quarry
65 Reeked

DOWN
1 Eichler's fluid
2 Hindu queen
3 Afflictions
4 Qualified voter
5 Zen enlightenment
6 Decide against
7 Cartoonist Trix
8 Lean (on)
9 Pipe bend
10 African tree
11 Sister/wife of Osiris
12 Heart of the matter
13 Cries of triumph
19 Hey there!
21 Delivery vehicle
24 Ward (off)
25 Knight's outfit
26 U.S. family of artists
27 Bamboo lover
28 By way of
29 Pharisaic
30 Rocky projection
31 Terminated
33 Opposite of ESE
36 Casual top
37 Singles
38 Gangster's gal
42 Receive by request
44 Monterey Jack, for one
45 Robust
46 Aerosol's industrious insect
47 Says
49 This and this
50 Bear dad
51 Uncork
52 Cross over
53 Winter Palace resident
54 Diva Ponselle
55 First lady in Garden?
56 Office station
58 Little devil

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Life is short. Eat your Cheez-its."

-An anonymous foxy lady

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"Am I a performer? But of course! I'm often called upon to perform a series of sobriety tests."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Never doubt that a small group of committed morons can ruin it for everyone.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
There is a very serious and often arrestable difference between waiting and lurking.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Profound revelations await you on page 13 of the first book that tickles your fancy.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
The key to your mental health lies in locally grown tomatoes and Nutella.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Request that the guy playing guitar by the campus pond play any song by "Wham!".

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Be nice to people that remind you of the Beatles classic "Eleanor Rigby." Why not?

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Roar.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You will sacrifice life and limb to acquire tickets for the Spice Girls reunion tour.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your dorm's bathroom door doesn't close, it groans. Don't anger the poltergeists.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your room is like a terrarium. It is in desperate need of natural light.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Keep a keen eye at all times. Let the other one wander in a bizarre and lazy manner.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your keys are locked in your car. See, I always keep my promises.

THIS FONT IS CALLED CREEPER... JUST LIKE YOU!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001 Lowest Prices on campus.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Free! Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom Townhouse. Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact caseofme@gmail.com

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

AUTO FOR SALE

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250. 413-323-6362

CHILD CARE

Drive children to and from school, some childcare too. Must have safe car, excellent driving record, love children. References required, 10-20 hours per week. Call Mary 549-5691

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Campus Rep Wanted $200.00 per week base salary for semester plus bonus. Flexible schedule, class talks, generate applications email: cchurch@collegepro.com www.collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your Ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voice-mail: 545-6837

FOR SALE

Queen Futon Frame, cherry, great condition $200.00 Greenfield 413-774-7679

HELP WANTED

Recreation Leader - After School Program. The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $8.60 to $9.03 hr, 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resources Dept. 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Lecuivre @ 259-3191. Equal Employment Opportunity/Affermative Action Employer.

MOTORCYCLE

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH: providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Call Brendan T Cherry about the SPRING Break of the century!!!! 508.335.0777 I only offer the best break at lowest price.

"#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES). We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

SEP 24 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Senior forward Britt Canfield continued her scorching play last night, scoring the game-winning goal for the Minutewomen against Dartmouth in their 1-0 victory. The goal, which came with under seven minutes remaining, was her third of the season.

Canfield plays hero again vs. Dartmouth

Senior lifts Maroon and White in thrilling win over Big Green

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team held off until the waning minutes of its game against Dartmouth last night before Britt Canfield deposited the first and only goal in a 1-0 win in Hanover, N.H.

With the tally, UMass (4-0-1) beat the Big Green (1-7) for the first time since 1995.

Canfield's goal came with about six minutes left in regulation.

In the 84th minute, UMass was able to get a ball out of the back to Vanessa Patry at midfield. The junior then played about a 10-yard ball to freshman Therese Smith, who quickly turned with it and sent a through ball to Canfield. Canfield beat the defense for the first time all game and connected with the ball – putting it into the net in a one-on-one with Dartmouth's goalkeeper, Laurel Peak.

Smith and Patry were credited with the assists.

"It was a high-paced game. [Dartmouth] was an aggressive team defensively," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "If you missed trapped a ball they were all over you and there was always a price to pay for errors. They were a very good team."

He said one of Dartmouth's most pressing aspects was its defense. Canfield – who Rudy said struggled a bit despite her game-winning goal – and the rest of the Minutewomen had a hard time getting anything through the defenders.

The Big Green defense batted down any attempt at a through ball and spoiled almost all of the Minutewomen's offensive hope for much of the game.

He added that part of the problem, however, was the weather.

"The field was very wet, a lot of dew on it," he said. "So, the ball was really hydroplaning and taking off on us. The balls would skip and then take off and their keeper would get it."

But, he was quick to add that his own defense held strong, too. Rudy said his defensive players did a superb job at clearing balls out of danger zones and at protecting their ground.

See W. SOCCER on page 6

Minutemen return to friendly confines

Koch and Co. excited to play at Rudd Field

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

A bus ride isn't the most physically taxing thing an athlete can experience. They could, for example, spend 90 minutes running up and down a 100-yard field. Now imagine having to do both – one after the other, three weeks in a row.

It's understandable why, after starting the season with six consecutive road games, the Massachusetts soccer team (2-4-0) is so happy to kick off its home slate against Northeastern (2-4-0) Saturday. This is the latest home debut for the Minutemen since 1979 when they defeated Williams, 4-0, on Sept. 26.

Not only does playing at home provide UMass the comfort of a field they know, but an extra day of training. Typically, the Minutemen travel for games a day in advance. Since most weekends begin with a match on Friday, the Minutemen hit the road on Thursday, losing a day of training. That does not, however, mean a day of rest.

"We usually leave on Thursday and by the time we get to whereever we are going to, we really only have time for a light training session," senior captain Kenny Cook said. "When we play at home, we get one more day to work on the things we need to work on. We don't have to worry about sitting on the bus for three hours and getting on and off it."

Playing at home also provides the Minutemen with the advantage of playing on Rudd Field, a field they're more comfortable and practiced with.

In soccer, the restrictions on a field's dimensions are not nearly as strict as they are in other sports. The

See HOME FIELD on page 6

Sophomore Mark DeSantis and the Minutemen square off against Northeastern Saturday at Rudd Field. It's their first home game of the season, following six consecutive road contests.

After six straight road games, home awaits

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The grass is still green and the field is ready to go. Having played only two preseason matches and a handful of practices on the surface, this Saturday will be the first opportunity for the Massachusetts men's soccer team to officially defend its home turf.

The Minutemen (2-4-0) take on Northeastern (2-4-0) at Rudd Field as the Atlantic 10 portion of the schedule looms in the near future.

Coming off a weekend that consisted of road losses to Harvard and Vermont, UMass coach Sam Koch acknowledges that his team needs to get back on track before Dayton comes to town on October 12.

"Hopefully we'll take what we've learned [against Harvard]," Koch said. "We've got to start getting it done now because we're four games away from [conference play]."

The Maroon and White is in the midst of a three-game losing streak, in which the team's aggregate goal total lies at one. Koch experimented with a 4-3-3 formation early this season to spark his offense.

However, an upper leg injury to junior midfielder Tony Bassett necessitated the change to a 4-4-2 lineup against Siena last Friday. Sophomore forward Mark DeSantis replaced Bassett in the upper-midfield against Harvard and Siena.

As Bassett will not play in Saturday's game, Koch will most likely start freshman Stuart Amick at the position. Amick relieved DeSantis during the 78th minute in the team's last game against Harvard.

See M. SOCCER on page 6

UConn will test UM's mettle

Sowry hopes her team is ready for matchup

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

This Saturday the Massachusetts field hockey team will face its sternest test of the season when it travels to Storrs, Conn., to take on Connecticut.

The Minutewomen are coming off a 2-1 victory over Siena. UMass coach Justine Sowry said it was difficult to evaluate the team's performance because the field conditions were horrendous, but she was proud of the team's persistence, even if the team's execution wasn't ideal.

Siena has yet to win a game this season in five tries, whereas No. 4 Connecticut is one of the top teams in the nation. The Huskies are 8-1 this season, and have beaten UMass nine out of the last 10 games. UConn won last year's meeting, 6-0, and is coming off an NCAA Final Four appearance.

Widely considered to be one of the top teams in the nation, the Minutewomen will have to play their absolute best in order to be in a position to win the game.

Sowry does not see the difficult matchup as a negative, but rather a chance to evaluate exactly how good the Minutewomen are this year, and the only way to do that is to play against the best.

"They are one of the best teams in the country," Sowry said. "They actually went to the Final Four last year. It just presents us with a fabulous opportunity to play against a quality team because that's where we want to be.

"We know it's going to be a tough game," she added. "But this is where we want to compete, so making sure that we want to work hard to try and get the ball. And then obviously if we get the ball in the attacking 25 that we're taking care of our forward movement and penetration in the circle."

Attacking the Huskies is easier said than done – UConn has 95 shots on goal this year compared to just 48 for the opposition. Led by forward Lizzy Peijs with six goals and three assists, UConn has scored 23 goals in nine games, so the first step the Minutewomen will have to take is keeping the ball out of the cage.

One piece of good news for the Minutewomen is that the team's major strength is their defensive backfield. Erin O'Brien and Kristina DeRosario are team captains and play excellent defense chasing down forwards and creating turnovers.

One key addition has been the outstanding play of freshman back Jamie Bourazeris. Bourazeris has started every game and has not been off the field even once this season, including during overtime games when only seven players per team are on the field. In regulation there are 12 players, including the goalie. Sowry had a lot of praise for Bourazeris' play.

"Jamie's been thrown into the deep end since day one" Sowry said. "She shows the kind of matu-

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Minutewomen hope track record vs. Huskies is history

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team started out the season with a promising 3-1 record and appeared to be on its way to a winning season. The Minutewomen then hit road bumps against Vermont, New Hampshire, and Boston University before evening their record at 4-4 with a win at Siena.

Tonight's game at Connecticut could be another potential road block for the Minutewomen.

At first sight, UConn's No. 4 national ranking would be an obvious reason that the Minutewomen have their work cut out for them, but there is more to this match up than what immediately meets the eye.

In the last 10 games between the teams, the Huskies hold a commanding 9-1 lead. The lone UMass victory came in 2000 in Amherst when Lindsay Abbott and Anke Bruemmer – both of whom are no longer on the team – scored goals in the 2-1 victory. The Minutewomen were ranked No. 9 at the time.

Since then, the Huskies are 6-0 against their border rivals, and have outscored them, 27-2. The Minutewomen have been Atlantic 10 champions in four of the seasons in which they lost to UConn. They have also been A-10 runner-up in three of those seasons.

Last year, the Huskies reached the NCAA Final Four, and their regular season included a 6-0 victory in Amherst over UMass.

This year's stingy UMass defense will go up against a UConn team that has netted 23 goals this season while only allowing 11.

UMass coach Justine Sowry knows that the defense will have to be in prime form if the team wants a chance to come out victorious.

"We must keep improving on our communication on our deep defense and the passing off of players to try to decrease, eliminate even better, their penalty corners," Sowry said. "They're pretty good in their penalty corners."

Senior Lizzy Peijs leads UConn's offensive attack this year with six goals and three assists. She terrorized opponents last year with 23 goals and 15 assists. For her efforts, Peijs was named a 2006 National Field Hockey Coaches Association (NFHCA) First Team All-American.

The Huskies have completely dominated their opponents in penalty corners this season. While UConn earned 78 penalty corners, its opponents have only taken 30. Since penalty corners create excellent scoring chances, Sowry has told her team all season that winning these corners is

See TEST on page 6

THE BIG E RETURNS TO WEST SPRINGFIELD | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 83 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2007

Casino track added at ISOM

Gaming gains speed at UM

By Sruthi Valluri
Collegian Staff

The Hospitality and Tourism Management department at the University of Massachusetts will launch a new casino management program. UMass will become the only university on the east coast to offer such a program.

The creation of the program coincides with Governor Deval Patrick's move to authorize three resort casinos in the state of Massachusetts. Patrick's proposal has caused a lot of debate, with opposition pointing out problems like the costs of gambling addiction and possible harm to the state's economy.

But while different factions wage war over this issue, UMass's Isenberg School of Management is quietly preparing to make an entrance in the furor by training students as industry executives and managers.

Chris Roberts, professor of Hospitality and Tourism Management and leader of this venture, thinks that Patrick has a very good chance of success.

"The plan would capture revenue and keep it home," said Roberts, referring to the near 32-percent citizen revenue that goes to out-of-state gambling each year.

It's a socioeconomic scenario that Roberts has seen before overseas.

Singapore, like Massachusetts, had to rely on foreign countries to find gambling venues. When it came time for Singapore's government to authorize gambling, Roberts was invited to train their Gaming Board Commission.

"Singapore had to deal with public perception, but they built a lot of community support," Roberts said. "The Governor's doing that now, and he has a good shot at success."

Governor Patrick is also putting forth plans for an integrated resort/casino – a large entertainment complex that offers restaurants, shops, entertainment and formal meeting facilities. This creates a new market for HTM students, who can choose from five undergraduate study tracks.

"We see a chance for all our majors to have careers in these integrated resorts," said Roberts. "There is tremendous opportunity here, and we plan to take part in it."

UMass's HTM department responds to industry trends and frequently changes its curriculum to meet demand with a steady supply of trained students.

Casino management classes cover a range of topics from the history to the psychological aspects of gaming.

UMass has built its expertise and reputation in this industry and attracts resorts like Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods to HTM's career day.

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at valluri@student.umass.edu

Site trades trash for cash

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students can now display to the world just how utterly repulsive dorm living can be.

The popular online shopping site, www.walldaddy.com, offers aid for students stuck in the ugliest dorm rooms with a national contest, The World's Worst College Rooms for 2007, in order to find the worst of the worst.

The contest, which runs from Sept. 4 until mid-October, asks full-time students living either on or off campus to send in pictures of the absolute worst dorm rooms and apartments.

Qualifications for the worst living spaces might include exceptionally bad design, broken-down furniture, ugly cement walls, repulsive color schemes or the all-too-common prison cell-sized room.

The leading online site for posters, calendars and décor prints, "Wall Daddy" created the dorm room challenge based on informal research the company conducted due to the shocking pictures sent in from customers.

Stunned by the horrific living conditions for students, the site decided to award the student with the most awful living space a gift card worth $300.

Ric Starost, the E-Business manager, describes modern dorm rooms and college apartments as being "out-dated."

"I even the vandalism was old and tired," Starost said. "What with 'class of' and initials carvings from the early '80s. We felt obligated to get these stories out in the open."

To enter the contest, University students can visit the challenge website at www.walldaddy.com/space.html.

The popular poster site is sponsoring a contest awarding $300 to the trashiest dorm room.

SIMULATION TURNS STADIUM GROUNDS INTO BATTLEFIELD

Cadet Mullen (top left) and Cadet Alston (right) during a U.Mass Arms ROTC medivac training exercise behind McGuirk stadium.

Trustees added to University board

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Governor Deval Patrick announced five new members to the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, continuing his strong support for the Commonwealth's public education system.

Announced in Boston last week, the new trustees – Dr. Kerri Osterhaus, Ed Collins, Phillip W. Johnston, James Karam, and Henry M. Thomas III, have already begun their five year terms.

Chairman Stephen P. Tocco, announced in a statement last week his support of the new trustees.

"I have worked hard with the Governor to advance his higher education agenda and look forward to working with the governor and his appointees in the future," he said.

Governor Patrick hopes the new trustees will "carry forward his vision for a comprehensive, coordinated education system in the Commonwealth," according to a press release.

UMass President Jack M. Wilson expressed his gratitude to the governor for work he has done for the University in a statement released after the announcement of the new trustees.

Wilson welcomed the new members, and said he will "look forward to the wisdom and enthusiasm they will provide during their years of service."

The new trustees bring a broad range of expertise and experience to the Massachusetts' university system.

Dr. Kerri Osterhaus, an obstetrics and gynecology physician with degrees from UMass Medical School, will fill the medical school's seat. Dr. Osterhaus completed her residency at UMass Memorial Medical Center in Worcester.

Ed Collins, a UMass alumnus from Springfield, was appointed to the labor seat on the board.

Collins, a former member of Westfield State College's Board of Trustees, is currently a member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers AFL-CIO & CLC.

Marshfield resident Phillip Johnston is a former chair of the Massachusetts Democratic Party, as well as a former state legisla-

See TRUSTEES on page 2

Faculty honored

Awards given at ceremony

Nationally-acclaimed University of Massachusetts faculty members received awards for bringing in grant money, submitting patents and, in one case, inventing "fish-flavored ice cream."

The UMass faculty convocation ceremony, held in Stockbridge hall on Saturday, called attention to eight professors' outstanding contributions to UMass academics.

The ceremony opened with remarks from interim chancellor Thomas Cole, who talked about his assimilation into the Amherst community.

"In the three weeks that I've been here, I felt the sense of community ... that I was a part of something," he said.

Cole described UMass's progress and qualities which distinguish it from other schools.

"UMass is a campus on the move," said Cole. "While other schools would stop and take a breather, UMass has kept right on, constructing three new buildings which we will celebrate the groundbreakings of later this semester."

The eight faculty members were each presented an Award for Outstanding Accomplishments in Research and Creative Activity.

Professor Eric A. Decker of the Food Science department received an award for four patents, including an ice cream creation that contains the beneficial Omega 3 fatty acids, a component primarily found in fish.

Professor John J. Clement of Teacher Education and Curriculum Studies was commended for his research in scientific instructional teaching methodology.

Professor Walter H. Denny of the Art department received an award for his research and expertise in Arabic Art and Architecture.

Economics professor Nancy Folbre was recognized for her research and publications on economics of gender and family.

Professor Patty Freedson was commended for her publication of over 100 kinesiology articles.

Music and Dance professor Jeffrey W. Holmes received an award for contributions to jazz ensembles and articles for JazzPlayer Magazine.

In the English department, associate professor Sabina Murray was given an award for writing four books, nine short stories and a screenplay.

The final recipient was James T. Watkins, a polymer science professor. He was celebrated for his work in nanotechnology, a field in which he has received six patents.

Devon Cureton can be reached at dcureton@student.umass.edu

The bustling W.E.B. Du Bois's learning commons is open 24-hours a day, seven days a week, but busier times frustrate students searching for seats. (Right) Staff make themselves available to studying students.

Space race at the library

Du Bois packs students into study areas

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Overcrowding at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library learning commons is an issue staff members are trying to alleviate during peak hours.

For guaranteed working space, many students decided reserving one of the library's 361 study carrels was a better option than searching for a seat in the commons.

"Space is at a premium," said Anne Moore, associate director for user services at the library.

However, since 2000, only graduate students are eligible to reserve a private carrel.

In the past, blocks of carrels were assigned to academic departments who gave the rooms to selected students.

The former policy resulted in a number of unused carrels.

The new plan came after the issue was brought before the Research Library Council during the summer of 2006. The council decided the best use for the carrels would be "for those who need to keep large quantities of library materials for consultation over an extended period."

This definition fits the profile of many UMass graduate students.

Moore is aware of demand for space.

"There are still areas that are quiet," she said.

The library features quiet-study on the second and third floors. First-come, first-served carrels are available for use on the seventh and tenth floors.

The fifth floor offers comfortable seating and current magazines and newspapers.

Moore mentioned that the science library in the Federal Graduate Research Center is the "best kept secret" for people looking for a quiet study spot.

Moore said the library is "constantly looking at every operation to organize it for how people use it today."

According to Moore, renovation is expensive and involves money the library doesn't have.

Some students have no trouble finding a quiet study area.

Eric Powers, a 5th year history student, said he's "never had problems getting a quiet place in the library. [If you look], you can generally find a space."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 15

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Staugh
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Scalvers
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melore
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' ACADEMIC YEARS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE ROUNDED A PENNY. THE PAPER BEGAN AS ABRAM LINCOLN, THE COLLEGE SCHOOL IN 1867. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IS FIRST PUBLISHED IN 1908. THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS FIRST PUBLISHED IN 1968. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCAST DAILY SINCE SEPT. 1968. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 AM AND 2:30 PM.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Board of Trustees welcomes newly appointed members for and cabinet member.

TRUSTEES from page 1

Johnston served as the New England Director of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services under President Clinton from 1993-1996.

UMass Dartmouth graduate James Karam is former chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees. He's currently President and founder of First Bristol Corporation, a development company in Fall River.

Henry M. Thomas III is familiar with UMass as a former visiting professor at UMass in the department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning.

He's also President and CEO of the Urban League of Springfield, and was a member of the State Board of Education from 2001 to 2007.

Governor Patrick has always maintained a strong public platform on the advancement of public education.

According to the governor's office, "The Governor has called for unprecedented levels of communication and interaction among all areas of the state's public educations system."

In addition to the new trustees, the Patrick created the Readiness Project, where about 180 Massachusetts citizens will work to create a ten-year plan to guide the future of Massachusetts education.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu

UN woman walks a thin line

Slackliner crosses spire

BY ALICIA PORTILLO
THE RENO SUN (U. NEV.)

Las Vegas — Libby Sauter, a University of Nevada, Las Vegas nursing school graduate, became the first woman ever to successfully highline the Lost Arrow Spire above the Yosemite Valley floor in Yosemite National Park, Calif. on July 17, 2007.

The Lost Arrow Spire highline, a Mecca for many high-liners, 2,890 feet high and equivalent to two stacked Empire State buildings plus 390 feet.

On the third and last day of her trip to the Spire, after nearly a dozen attempts, Sauter successfully walked the line becoming the first woman on record to do so.

Slacklining is the combination of gear borrowed from rock climbing consisting of stringing up nylon webbing and creating a line stretched between two anchor points.

Slacklining started about 20 years ago and originated by rock climbers in the Yosemite Valley. It consists of balancing and walking across the line.

Highlining refers to the slackline being located high above the ground.

Since slacklining has began, it has become a shared extreme sport worldwide.

Looking for a diversion from rock climbing, Sauter began slacklining in late 2005 at the Nevada Climbing Center.

Sauter, who now resides in San Francisco, works as a registered nurse in the Cardiovascular intensive care unit at Children's Hospital in Stanford.

"I was invited by Damian Cooksey, one of the best slacklinners in the world, how could I say no," said Sauter on her decision to attempt Lost Arrow Spire.

Cooksey was the first to go on record for the longest slackline in history.

"We are walking thousands of feet up, if the line doesn't hold, that's it. You have to know what you are doing," Sauter said. "For safety, everything is done in redundancy."

Slacklining requires an immense amount of safety precautions taken prior to highline attempts.

The anchors [ends of the line] use multiple pieces of climbing equipment and have known strength ratings. The amount of tension put on the line is calculated to eliminate too much stress on the anchors.

Harnesses are worn that are tethered to the line and consists of a leash made of climbing rope that is threaded inside webbing connected to the line.

"A few people have actually walked the Spire without wearing the back up leash, but everybody on this trip played it safe," Sauter said about her July 2007 record making trip.

"At one point I remember telling Damian that I wished Julia, one of the other girls on the trip, had already sent the line so that the record wouldn't be an issue and I could relax and have tun with it," Sauter said.

However the thought of becoming the first woman on record was not far from her mind.

"I tried not to think of the first woman aspect, but it didn't really work," Sauter said. "In the end though, I was there just to have an adventure and a great time with a group of friends."

Staying focused while walking a highline at 2,890 feet above the ground while the line is swaying and moving takes motivation, points of interest and the advice of some well-known slacklinners.

"You pick a fixed point at the end of the line, and stare at nothing but that point," Sauter said.

Elderly protest for doughnut rights

Senior-citizens protest the removal of dessert donations, which officials said were setting a "bad nutritional precedent."

BY JAY FITZGERALD
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MAHOPAC, N.Y. — It was just another morning at the senior center: Women were sewing, men were playing pool — and seven demonstrators, average age 76, were picketing outside, demanding doughnuts.

They wore sandwich boards proclaiming, "Give Us Our Just Desserts" and "They're Carbs, Not Contraband."

At issue is a decision to refuse free doughnuts, pies and breads that were being donated to senior centers around Putnam County, north of New York City. Officials were concerned that the county was setting a bad nutritional precedent by providing mounds of doughnuts and other sweets to seniors.

The picketers said they were objecting not to a lack of sweets but that they weren't consulted about the ban.

"Lack of respect is what it's all about," said Joe Halkowski, 75, a former labor union official who organized the demonstration.

He said officials had implied that seniors were gorging themselves on jelly doughnuts and were too senile to make the choice for themselves.

C. Michael Sibilia said, "I'm 86, not 8."

Inside, some seniors said they missed the doughnuts but others said they were glad to see them go.

"It was disgusting the way people went after them," said 80-year-old Rita Jorgensen. "I think the senior center did them a favor by taking it away."

Stan Tuttle, coordinator of nutritional services for the county's Office for the Aging, said the program had gotten out of control. As many as 75 cases of breads, cakes and pastries were delivered, by various means, to the William Koehler Memorial Senior Center each day. Some were moldy, and some had been stored overnight in the trunks of volunteers' cars, he said.

Caregivers there and elsewhere say the doughnut debate illustrates the difficulty of balancing nutrition and choice when providing meals to the elderly.

"Senior citizens can walk down to the store and buy doughnuts. Nobody's stopping them," said Michael Jacobson, executive director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest in Washington.

Write for News News@DailyCollegian.com

Ask not what the Collegian can do for you, ask what you can do for the Collegian

The Environment as a Catalyst for Peace in the Middle East

A presentation by Israeli, Palestinian and Jordanian alumni of the Arava Institute for Environmental Studies

The Arava Institute is the premier environmental teaching and research program in the Middle East, preparing future Arab and Jewish leaders to cooperatively solve the region's environmental challenges, based on the belief that nature knows no political borders.

Monday, September 24 at 7:30 p.m.
Campus Center, Room 165
UMass Amherst

Free and open to the public

For more information visit www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST

Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs; Brit Tzedek v'Shalom: The Jewish Alliance for Justice and Peace; and Beit Ahavah, the Reform Synagogue of Greater Northampton

Enter to win a sweet deal!

Drawing to be held on September 28th

Simply fill out the entry form with your name, e-mail address, year of graduation, telephone number, and your guess ofthe number of jelly beans in the jar

The person guessing the exact number or closest to the exact number will win the jar of jelly beans.

Entrants must be UMass students on the meal plan

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2007

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it."
Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No excuses for hired guns

Ted Rogers

Iraq: on Sunday the Sept., 16, a group of Americans shot and killed nearly a dozen Iraqi citizens. What makes this story interesting, if not totally uncommon, is that these Americans weren't U.S. soldiers. They were contractors from the private security company Blackwater U.S.A. In short, they were mercenaries.

In other news, I really wish that defecting to another nation was still an "in" thing. The fact is, we as Americans should be ashamed. If our government – Democrats and Republicans alike – puts aside money to hire people to kill indiscriminately, I can safely say that we've lost all the principles that once governed America.

After no weapons of mass destruction were found in Iraq, the official reason that we invaded the country was to spread freedom to an oppressed people. Unlike most people whom I go to school with, I can actually see that as a worthy endeavor. I find the idea of us now trying to rebuild a country that we had invaded under suspect pretenses to be entirely more admirable than not even trying to solve the problem we created.

However, hiring out some of the dirtiest jobs to soldiers of fortune destroys the creditability of what we are trying to accomplish. The people at Blackwater, along with two other "private security companies," do not share the values that we should be trying to spread. Neither do they share the same rules. Operatives from these companies are not subject to military tribunals, court marshals or any of the number of reprisals designed to keep the military in check.

If we are claiming that we are trying to spread democracy and lawfulness in order to make things safer for Iraqis while using mercenaries that do not follow lawful conventions, one big question arises: just who the hell are we trying to fool?

Certainly not the Iraqis.

In the wake of the massacre on Sunday, where Blackwater operatives killed eleven Iraqi citizens, including a police officer, Prime Minister al-Maliki says he wants Blackwater out of the country immediately. Of course, Condoleezza Rice, who met with the prime minister recently, said that although a probe would be launched, the U.S. could not do without the company in Iraq.

Truthfully, we'd probably be better off if we didn't take them with us in the first place. Federal prosecutors are starting an investigation to see whether or not employees of Blackwater are guilty of smuggling guns into Iraq. To make things even worse, these weapons ended up in the hands of a group of Kurdish rebels that the U.S has deemed to be terrorists. Officials from Blackwater, the Pentagon and the State department have all declined to comment.

I really wish that defecting to another nation was still an "in" thing. The fact is, we as Americans should be ashamed.

I let's get this straight – in a war where we are trying to get a country to follow the "American model," we bring in mercenaries who do not follow the conventions of war and sell weapons to our enemies to boot. I get a twitch in my eye just thinking about it.

The worst part of it all is the silence on the subject by everyone in the government. It would be easy just to blame the current administration for the dismal situation, but that wouldn't be honest. The fact is that it seems that no one in Washington – Republican or Democrat – seems to really care.

A disturbing trend I've noticed coming out from my more liberal friends is the idea that this is Bush's war. Most of them, at heart, would rather enjoy watching the President flounder than try and think about what could be done to make the situation better. Whether we like it or not, we are all in this now.

As for the Democrats who now hold a majority in Congress because they promised to clean up the current state of affairs, their refusal to stop the practice of hiring killers is repulsive. Outright ending the war and withdrawing might be too lofty a goal to achieve, and would open up a new can of worms. But cutting out a company that betrays our values, mows down civilians and aids our enemies? That would be an easy political battle, and the only right thing to do about the situation. The only problem is that, apparently, the Democrats really don't care about improving the ordeal – on the Hill, politics are continuing as usual.

We can only hope that Blackwater succumbs to the wishes of al-Maliki and leaves the country. Seeing as how our government claims that we cannot make do without the company, voluntary withdrawal seems unlikely. I just hope that when we are finally out of Iraq, some of the things the Iraqis pick up on are the principles of fairness and respect that once made our country great. They won't get very far with the ones we have now.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at trogers@student.umass.edu

SUBMIT LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

REPLIES? REBUTTALS?
LET US KNOW WHAT YOU THINK

SEND AN EMAIL TO:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Enough is enough

Stephanie McPherson

This was a banner year for Hollywood. Lindsay Lohan was charged with a D.U.I and put in rehab. Nicole Richie played the Roxie Hart card and avoided a long stint in jail due to a visit from the stork. Lindsay Lohan was charged with a D.U.I and put in rehab – again. Britney Spears proved the range of her talents – from driving with a baby on her lap, to lip synching so lackadaisically that she moved an entire VMA audience to discomfort. Lindsay Lohan landed herself in rehab, just to mix things up a little. And who could forget the Paris Hilton in jail – out of jail – in jail again fiasco? Now, O.J Simpson is in some more trouble with the police. Those poor little rich people!

But why do we have to hear about all the trials and tribulations of their difficult lives? Why do we go on MSN com or flick on the news to see their issues played as a top story? Is it really that important?

This June 26, one reporter took a bold step that resulted in praise from around the globe. Mika Brzezinski was getting ready to read the news on the Morning Joe show for MSNBC. She looked down at her lead story – what they would prioritize above all other news for the day – and felt sick to her stomach. It was a story on Paris Hilton's release from jail, leading off the morning news.

She looked down at her lead story and felt sick to her stomach. It was Paris Hilton's release from jail, leading off the morning news.

Brzezinski tried to read, but the words kept getting stuck in her throat. She finally said, "I hate this story and I don't think it should be our lead," and then proceeded to the second story.

A few minutes later, Paris popped up on the teleprompter again, and Brzezinski snapped. She actually attempted to burn the script before throwing it in the paper shredder, crying "I'm not doing it! I'm not doing the story...especially on a day like today!" She was referring to Senator Richard Lugar's statement that Bush's strategy for Iraq wasn't working.

Now that's real news – news that affects Americans. Who cares if Paris struts out of jail? If it's really that important to some people, leave it to the entertainment news – just don't put it in the headlines!

The big question is, however, why are people so obsessed with celebrity? Is it because their lives are so much more glamorous than the rest of America? Why do people care if Britney feeds her babies Doritos or not? Again – it can be entertaining, but it's also sad.

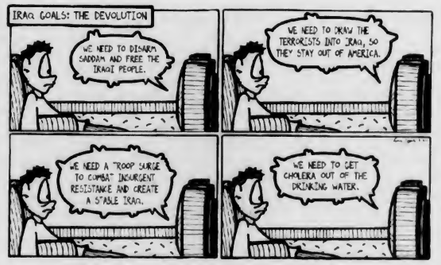
Every minute detail of these people's lives is scrutinized. How hard it must be to get a crumbling career back on track while an entire nation watches, almost rooting for a downfall.

Then, there are the celebs that, yes, are falling apart, but really have no career to get back to. Why is Paris famous?

Seriously?

True, she gave a riveting performance in the deep and mind altering "House of Wax," and her one summer single was so moving and meaningful that I can't remember its name. And of course, her sex tape was quality family entertainment.

What do these stars-by-birth have to offer, other than being terrible role models for young girls across the country? The question begs to be asked again – why are we obsessed with celebrity?



If a star does something newsworthy, truly newsworthy, then of course it deserves coverage. O.J Simpson breaking and entering and stealing deserved the news coverage it got. But now, on MSN. com, they have an article entitled "Who is O.J's girlfriend?" Enough is enough!

There are other stars actually doing some good in the world, which don't get nearly the amount of coverage as Lindsay's "I'm holding it for a friend" plea.

Brad Pitt is working down in New Orleans to rebuild the absolute mess that remains after Katrina. He is a tabloid favorite, but they focus in on various aspects of the Jolie-Pitt-Aniston love triangle. Leonardo DiCaprio works extensively for the environment, but that is hardly ever mentioned. Maybe he should crash his hybrid into a telephone pole and channel Mel Gibson by drunkenly blaming Jews for global warming.

Celebrity obsession is getting ridiculous. America should take a step back and take a page from Mika Brzezinski's book, tear it out, burn it, shred it and get to the news.

Stephanie McPherson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

Poorly executed jokes

Dan Castro

The glory days of politically incorrect humor have come and gone. No longer are we graced with perceptive skewerings of the unspoken cultural divides, as executed by Dave Chappelle, but instead we must put up with the regurgitated faux-humor of Comedy Central's vastly inferior Carlos Mencia. This change of hands illustrates the very heart of the problem with politically incorrect humor the unfunny think they can pull it off too.

Last year we saw countless celebrities pierced by the gaff of trying to be that edgy sort of funny they see get laughs on a regular basis. Who could forget Michael Richards flipping out in a racist tantrum, Don Imus reaching back to the seventies for descriptive words, or John Kerry effectively calling soldiers stupid (as if he had actually attempted the Mencia trademark dee-dee-dee joke.)

For every Dave Chappelle proudly stepping back and forth across the line of sensibility, there's a Carlos Mencia senselessly spilling over it.

The off made argument that an offensive brand of humor forces society to confront suppressed prejudice crumbles when the very people it tries to reach are too dumb to follow the argument. Instead, it works to trivialize different cultural experiences, promoting truly formed stereotypes without highlighting the asterisk of "except for when it isn't true." In a world suffering from pandemic map shortages, is it really safe to leave this as a given? And is it really fair to argue that centuries of ethnic persecution and prejudice can be understood via dosis a poop joke? Even the best poop jokes can't cleanse the smear inside by affirming that the worst aspects of each culture are on par with the best.

For every Bill Maher deftly handling a Heather Mills joke, there's a Rush Limbaugh mocking Michael J. Fox's Parkinson's. Every socially conscious Howard Stern gives way to a socially unconscious Opie and Anthony. For every Dave Chappelle proudly stepping back and forth across the line of sensibility, there's a Carlos Mencia senselessly spilling over it. And it has nothing to do with the fragility of the audience. This is not a concern that someone somewhere might be offended somehow, while I get to be surrogate offended for the day.

I'm not worried about the minorities. They can fend for themselves pretty well. I'm worried about the majority. The dumb, the illiterates, the Comedy Central post-Daily Show demographic. Not that there is anything wrong with being "retarded." Frankly, if you're not mentally challenged, you're not trying hard enough. But that doesn't mean you should be on the writing staff of any show other than According to Jim.

According to a Mencia related blog, an intern working for Comedy Central had the opportunity of meeting Mencia, his head just as big in person as it is on TV. He remarks, "Get ready, because the next time I see you I'm going to say something really offensive." The intern smiles, and goes back to work. He sees him again later, and Mencia says "watch out, I'm going to say something really offensive." Time goes by. Nothing is said. Not a single joke exchanged. Running into him later, Mencia begins to open his mouth, but our intern explodes: "For fking say it already!"

Case and point. Being offensive is not to be confused with being funny. It has similar characteristics, but it doesn't have the same thoughtful construction, the same skillful delivery, the same resounding verisimilitude to life. It is merely another in the long caravan of bandwagons that the talentless jump on to ride their way to fame. It's a tool the socially awkward use to carve their way through a conversation that's way over their heads. It's a crutch, and it's about time we kick it out from underneath the intellectual gimps.

So even though it's easy to want to be entertained by our entertainment, is it really socially responsible to promote, imitate and reward those entertainers who build their careers off exaggerating and belittling cultural differences? Political incorrectness is a science. It's working with highly combustible materials over the intensely flammable fabric of our society. The last thing we need is an accelerant. Offensive humor should be left to the people who can pull it off – the actually funny, or the senile.

But don't be totally disheartened – it's still 100 percent okay to make fun of fat people.

Dan Castro is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at dcastro@student.umass.edu

Our defining struggle

Brad DeFlumeri

Immediately after September 11th, we were uniformly told to believe that the next terrorist attack on the U.S. was inevitable. It would surely come, it was repeatedly asserted, and the only questions were its exact location(s) and the extent of the damage it would cause. Many and concerns about domestic security were, understandably, at an all-time high.

Many liberals in the media, academia and the political world were increasingly willing to question America's dependence on Middle Eastern oil and other resources, as well as our formidable military presence in the region. They held up these factors as potential justification for the terrorist strikes – as if we operate in a world where the wishes of cold-blooded, inhumane mass murderers should even be looked at as diplomatic negotiation tactics – in the same way that Osama bin Laden justified September 11th and threatened future catastrophic strikes if we did not re-deploy our troops from Saudi Arabia.

Nevertheless, it has been the Bush Administration and other national GOP leaders that have been denigrated and resilient in the light for the continued survival of our civilization in the face of strengthening calls for our withdrawal from Iraq and Afghanistan. The war on terrorism has emerged as the defining struggle of our time, in the same way that World War II came to define "coolness" and "golden our grandparents' generation. It is indeed a fight we can't walk away from, and a crisis we cannot avert. The alternative – allowing Islamic extremists to sense our blood in the water and rally around our potential defeat – would spell disaster and doom in a calamitous way that would render our homeland increasingly susceptible to attack. Those calling for our precipitous withdrawal from the Middle East do not have the slightest sense of how much this would reinvigorate al-Qaida's cause and enliven its sense of triumph.

Regretfully, our actions and intentions – military, political, diplomatic, humanitarian – need to be right and just 100 percent of the time for us to claim the moral or ethical high ground and consistently prove to the world that we are fighting this war on our terms, and not on the terrorists' terms. Conversely, the extremists who so selflessly and maliciously expend energy in the pursuit of our unequivocal annihilation need only be correct 1 out of 100 times to exact the type of devastation and destruction which brought our nation to its collective knees six years ago this month. In this way, we are – of course – winning this struggle in the sense that we have denied the terrorists the means to successfully attack our homeland since September 11th occurred. Similarly, we have gone abroad politically and intellectually and destabilized terrorists' strongholds and financial organizations with such stunning success that al-Qaida mostly is a shell of its former self. All the while, our collective national attention has been fixed not on them but on Iraq for the last four years.

Our response to this formidable threat has so far been commendable. Under President Bush's leadership we have not been attacked since September 11th.

And, given the fact that President [illegible] is the first American President who has [illegible] against Islamic fanaticism with the proper [illegible] and combative resources – and has [illegible] established a military more than capable [illegible] – there is no reason to believe that we as a country will not continue to keep the homeland safe. [illegible] historians years from now will find [illegible] a much higher esteem than current opinion [illegible]. Despite the [illegible] blunders in Iraq in the past [illegible] the overwhelming broad and swift response to September 11th [illegible] Bush undoubtedly got the attention of [illegible] Commanders for America's demise. [illegible] strengthened our collective [illegible] ing was and woke us up to the [illegible] and will be at war indefinitely [illegible] and hell-bent on our obliteration [illegible] their own young men to achieve [illegible].

As a result, we now live in a [illegible] world, a world where a [illegible] thought of as a [illegible] simply because it is not [illegible] become a global superpower [illegible] our economic and military [illegible] month to our prosperity [illegible] the caves of Pakistan [illegible] well, and are therefore [illegible] ensure that we remain [illegible].

Our response to the [illegible] commendable and claims [illegible] leadership we have not [illegible] And, despite his many [illegible] indeed possess the [illegible] ventional enemies – [illegible] and multifaceted [illegible] and kill them.

Our next President [illegible] Democrat, may not [illegible] the superpowered [illegible] principles of democracy [illegible] or not we, correctly, identify [illegible] Iraq, the war for our [illegible] wage on our criminal [illegible]

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS.

SEND AN EMAIL TO:
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SEP 24 2007

SEP 24 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The official start of fall underway

Big E unites New Englanders

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

WEST SPRINGFIELD – It's rare for a single event to have something to offer everyone. But with the aid of perfect New England fall weather, The Eastern States Exposition accomplishes just that.

Its appeal lies in the spectacle's diversity of attractions and ability to annually evolve to meet the changing desires of fairgoers. While many come for the food and atmosphere, others tolerate the huge crowds and endless expenses to explore all that the fair has to offer.

The Big E was founded in 1917 to feature the region's agricultural accomplishments. Though the exposition still remains true to its roots, most visitors experience the 17-day event without even acknowledging the presence of anything relating to agriculture.

But many people are still attracted to the fairgrounds by the prospect of seeing prize farm animals and produce. The spirit of the fair's agricultural appeal is competition. Visitors can witness daily vegetable and livestock contests, featuring 1,000-pound pumpkins and perfectly groomed brown Sussex cows.

"The animals are probably my favorite part of the fair, but I like it all," Worcester native Bill Peluso said last Friday afternoon while navigating salespeople in the Better Living Center. "[The agricultural aspect] definitely gets overlooked by many of the fairgoers."

For greater excitement, visitors can stop by The Big E Coliseum for a glimpse of day-long horse competitions. The complex's stadium design also provides fairgoers a respite from the crowds and an opportunity to rest weary legs.

The animals also appeal to the fair's young visitors, as it is the first exposure of many suburban children to rural life. But inevitably, hordes of children flock to the fair each year to experience the amusement of the Midway. The area's impressive collection of temporary rides, attractions and money pits rival that of near-by Six Flags.

Ultimately, the fair is a chance for each New England state to showcase what it has to offer and to establish its identity. For example, Maine's potato and lobster roll booths maintained perpetually long lines, despite the exorbitant prices. Similarly, Rhode Island prominently featured its crab cakes and Vermont its famous maple syrup.

One of Rhode Island's representatives, Paul Mellin, appreciates the opportunity to connect with fairgoers and boast about his state.

"I think it's a place where you get a good mixture of people," Mellin said. "Everybody seems to enjoy the food and the atmosphere. The weather this year's been great for the fair."

The only state not to play off its traditional stereotypes was Connecticut. The state highlighted its "Connecticut Own – Texas Sized Spud Meal," an inherently contradictory dish, as its primary vehicle for attracting fairgoers to the building.

Meanwhile, near New Hampshire's front walls, Bruce White, also known as "The Horseshoe Guy," peddled his hand-crafted creations. He was one of many artists and vendors representing his state to visitors.

"I've been coming down here forever. They asked me to come down for the day," White said. "I've been doing this for about 12 years, but I started doing the furniture about five years ago," referring to his collection of practical horseshoe art.

In fact, the mass of vendors and salespeople is one the fair's main attrac-

See BIG E on page 6

One of the popular attractions of the Big E Fair is the ferris wheel named The Midway. Besides rides, Big E has many other attractions to offer like food from all the states in New England.

Published poets read at UMass

By Brian Wood
Collegian Correspondent

On Thursday, Sept. 20, the University of Massachusetts was graced with the presence of two renowned American poets, Graham Foust and Rod Smith. Both Foust, an educator at St Mary's College in New York as well as the author of three collections of poetry, and Smith, who's nine published works have been translated into six different foreign languages, took to the stage and delivered their brands of poetry. Their works have been categorized by many as having a flair for the avant-garde.

"I like exploring multiple stylistic issues," noted Smith during a brief post reading question and answer session. "I like bumping multiple styles together, and I like the friction."

During a brief introduction, Smith's works were described as a form of "aural rioting," causing a certain "sound and sense collision course." Smith lived up to that billing. Smith's selections varied from harried, choppy poems consisting of repetitive and rapid noun usage, to works of theatrical storytelling that bordered on near lunacy.

In the poem entitled "My Commercial," Smith used his story-telling approach on an episode of the Mary Tyler Moore Show, illustrating an allegory for the current state of American affairs, and elicited some shocked responses and quite a few laughs in the process. One of the more comical moments of the evening was his reading of Boober the Toad, a tale so abstract that even the most serious in attendance were helpless to fight the laughter.

In contrast to Smith's flair for the stylized dramatics, Foust took a more somber and monotone approach on sharing his works.

"I hate saying things in between the poems, shut up, just read the poem," Foust said. "Poetry takes place in real time – this kind of f-cum is at odds with the art itself."

Despite his distaste for theatrics, Foust still managed to elicit a range of emotions from the audience, as well as his share of laughter. His monotone projection almost added a level of reality to some of his more haunting poems, as well as an added level of amusement to his more light hearted works.

In some of his more serious works, Foust displayed a deep emotional struggle. In "My Graham Foust," he listed the wide variety of things that have vanished from his life and concluded that, "He's nobody's autobiography, whose are you?"

In "Life Story," Foust writes that he is "staring at good red meat like it's a mirror." In "After the Red" he claims to

See POETRY on page 5

Graham Foust is an educator at St. Marry's College in New York. To date Foust has published three collections of poetry.

The great country music debate

Long have I pondered this question and yet still the answer seems to allude me. It was not so long ago when country music was a footnote at the end of most jokes involving the decrement of one's bad musical taste. Even now, as you read, you may be thinking to yourself, "no one listens to country music." But oh how it seems the tables have turned.

Peter Rizzo

While many were turning their heads and filling their iPods listening to hip-hop and regular Top 40 music it seemed that country music had succeeded in the unthinkable. The genre that was once the radio equivalent of a senior home in Florida, a refuge for only those unable to travel in the fast lane of pop music, did the unthinkable. Country music became cool.

In denial? Sure, we all are. Country, the one genre that for years had ensured you would be ridiculed by your fellow peers, is now popular? As a young child, even I was forced to make fun of my best friend after discovering his life-size Garth Brooks cutout poster, and though it was removed, it could never be lived down.

It has been a long, strange road and if you weren't paying attention along the way you may have missed the signs. While other genres struggled to stay vital, country became the unlikely musical underdog that has slowly been building up steam. This summer it seems to have finally garnered enough attention to start making waves.

It must first be noted that as of 2007, Country Music Television has over 83.2 million subscribers nationwide, a number that has doubled since 2000. Now it is a

See COUNTRY on page 5

Shania Twain's mainstream success is speculated to be one of the reasons why many of todays music fans enjoy Country music.

Russian literature inspire Texas band

Okkiveril River is a memeber of the prominent sub genre of indie rock named "lit rock." The band has recently been featured on NPR.

Smart lyrics stand strong

By Allie Roth
Collegian Staff

Right off the bat, Austin, Texas-based Okkervil River may seem like a typical "lit-rock" band, like The Decemberists. For one, their name comes from a short story by Russian author Tatyana Tolstaya that is about a forgotten female singer. But really they are more than that.

This multi-faceted folk-rock outfit is made up of Will Sheff, Jonathan Meiburg, Patrick Pestorious, Brian Cassidy, Scott Brackett and Travis Nelson. Since they began to play together in 1999, they have released several full length albums, including that year's "Stars Too Small to Lose," 2002's "Don't Fall in Love with Everyone You See" and 2003's "Down the River of Golden Dreams."

They released "Black Sheep Boy" in 2005 and "The Stage Names" in August of this year. Except for "Stars Too Small to Lose," all the albums were released on the Indiana-based label Jagjaguwar. Interestingly enough, Okkervil River self-released "Stars Too Small to Lose" and it scored them a spot at South By Southwest, Austin's annual music festival and conference that in the past has showcased bands like Cold War Kids, Spoon and Yo La Tengo.

In early September, they were featured on NPR's All Things Considered. Right now, they are on tour with Seattle-based singer-songwriter Damien Jurado. On Wednesday, Sept. 26 they will be playing in the Pearl Street Ballroom, located in Northampton.

One of the most notable things about Okkervil River is their song-writing style. Although their new album, "The Stage Names," is only nine songs long, each song is a clear example of just how rare a band like Okkervil River is. Many of their songs talk about tragic situations, but they are done in a smart way. Sheff employs literary techniques like

See RIVER on page 5

Mission of Burma show for the ages

A new hope for music fans

By Corey Gilbert

Mission of Burma is coming out performing. Friday night was a great rock 'n' roll was made in the Pearl. the kind pretentious and hard-hyped found in the world of underground music. Mission of Burma is a quintet of the post-punk movement. Formed once in Pearl Street's heyday, it's enough to witness such a band's second coming. the best concert Northampton has seen all year.

Starting the night's set came the middle-school rockers Who Shot Hollywood. The four-piece foursome played to maybe 40 people, nothing considering the celebrated reputation of the main act. It was to their credit, the youngsters proved their musical chops were more than adequate for an opening act.

Formerly known as Bobby the Toad, had to shed with catcalls from an audience member requesting their old hit, "Mick Jagger's Birthday Bash." But the band has moved away from that garage punk sound, going for more of a post-punk, artistic style. Much of the half-hour set borrowed from their new self-titled LP and other new material yet to be recorded. A band on the rise, Who Shot Hollywood will be the warm-up act on Oct. 5 for Man Man, also at Pearl Street.

One peculiar aspect of Friday night's atmosphere was the various ages found throughout the crowd, from cagey old musical veterans gathered in the back, to the young-ster sporting an ill-conceived Indian Park t-shirt up front, to the college-aged hipsters scattered around the room.

The Bunnies, the second opening band, were what the Pixies and Deerhoof's love-children, illegitimate psycho-child would sound like. Their set, between 15 minutes and an hour, included some of the goofiest antics ever witnessed.

The Flaming Lips obviously come to mind when a band presents such a ridiculous amount of props, costumes and overall spectacle. Sitting on the left of the stage, a woman dressed in a black ninja costume wrote out algebraic equations on an overhead, mostly about ellipses. It remains unclear what exactly the math lessons had to do with the music being played, and frankly, it was quite silly.

To the right of the ninja stood the moogist guitarist, decked out in pajamas and, occasionally, a skeleton mask. A woman in a wheelchair took center stage, and was featured on vocals and guitar. The bass player/moogist/vocalist looked like a younger Henry Rollins, and was nearly as intense, although it's nearly impossible to reproduce the energy level of the former Black Flag lead singer.

A strobe light flashed during the entire performance, located center-stage. In front of the pajama-wearing guitarist a fake fireplace was laid out, and in the back a spinning dress sparkled throughout the night.

Musically, the Bunnies had moments of brilliance, taking les-

See BURMA on page 6

Missions of Burma is one of today's leading indie rock bands. Their performance this past Friday in Northampton was one of the year's best concerts.

Stars lack luster on latest LP

Album hits internet first

By Jon Strada

STARS

IN OUR BEDROOM AFTER THE WAR

ARTS & CRAFTS

4/5

is heard a lot more here, often outshining Torquil Campbell, who has been lead vocalist in the past.

From the acclaim Millan received from the band's third album, "Set Yourself on Fire," it was not much of a surprise to hear more of her. She is an essential component of Stars. Without her contributions, Stars would not have the killer boy-girl dynamic for which they are notorious. While Amy croons on pop songs such as "My Favorite

See STARS on page 6

Is country music turning pop?

COUNTRY from page 4

known fact that country has not always been America's number one music. However, even that is now changing.

Recently, Carrie Underwood's "Before He Cheats" hit pop stations and if you managed to stay away from that song you must have had your radios and television sets off. Does it not say something that America elected a country musician as its idol? How else can you explain the 95 weeks that she has been on the charts? Bear in mind there are only 52 weeks in an entire year.

Another sign of this up and coming surge was when Gillette Stadium witnessed Kenny Chesney sell out in less than 15 minutes. Every seat. Still unimpressed? Similar excitement swept my town when Rascal Flatts drew even my friends in on the basis that there would be "mad chicks" there. Even after my joke that they would all be over 40, I was soon taken aback that the vast majority of the said crowd were, as a book catalog might call it, "young adult" women.

While many have had their backs turned, country has slowly been drawing in fans. Gone are the old crooning country stars of old and here to stay are the candy-glossed pop country stars of today. Flipping through CMT, one can easily see the transition. The music which was once old and dusty has been revamped by branching out from this old image. It now seems as if the only thing separating today's country stars from the pop ones are cowboy hats. This is witnessed by anyone who has ever heard Taylor Swift or seen Cowboy Troy's "Thick Chicks" video, the latter clearly a hip-hop song sung by men in cowboy hats.

This transition is easy to blame on one person – Shania Twain. While there will never be enough scientific evidence to prove it, she remains the best example of how country was able to become cool. With pop hooks and southern appeal, in came the dollar.

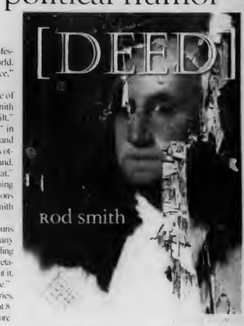
This was not lost on those who saw her arrival as a chance to push the genre back into the main stream. It seems however that this is not due to the stars themselves but perhaps a cultural shift in general. With classic rock coming back and our generation being labeled as "neo-traditionalists," it is easy to see why the non-offensive nostalgia of today's country music is so appealing. It seems that in the face of an age of over-driven punk guitars and techno-heavy club hits, the acoustic guitar became something radical in itself and has staked its claim on today's airwaves.

Now it remains to be seen how long country can stay vital, but in the coming weeks, indications will be made. With all the press surrounding 50 Cent and Kanye West's battle for the hip-hop crown, I for one wouldn't be surprised if Kenny Chesney beat them both. Only time will tell. There is no denying that country music has pulled off a mighty achievement, and dare I say it's not just socially acceptable, but cool.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

Poets showcase political humor

POETRY from page 4



be timeless in the red. His works are littered with personal confessions and references to frustration with the surrounding world. "She dimmed the lights for something they call ambience," Foust writes, "He just wanted light, damn it."

Where Smith branched away from Foust was in his use of social commentary and political unrest in his readings. Smith used metaphors such as "the good house must be rebuilt," and unleashed the phrase, "manifest destiny, yum, yum," in a selection of his readings. In addition, not so subtle jabs and one liners such as "Daddy, why didn't the democrats buy voting machines too?" (delivered in a naïve toddlers voice) and, "excuse me officer I thought you were a shape shifting rat," illustrated Smith's aforementioned love affair with clashing styles during his readings. Smith was asked of his allusions to politics. "[They are an] ongoing concern of mine," Smith responded, "and they enter the work as a result of that."

It was a night where words wandered and collided, words ricocheted off walls and laughter broke out in packs. Many were perplexed, others were inspired, while many left feeling a surreal mixture of the two. At an event such as this, interpretations were sure to be vast and varied, but as Graham Foust put it, "You are hallucinatory . . . you are right until proven otherwise."

The event was a part of this year's Visiting Writers Series, which will continue on Oct. 4 with fiction writer Joan Scott at 8 p.m. at the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center. All future events are free and are open to the public.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

Rod Smith has published nine collections of poetry in six different languages.

Write for Arts & Living

For more information e-mail us at Arts@dailycollegian.com or come to the newsroom for an application

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

FRESH, LOCAL & ON THE DC MENU
At UMass Dining
Tuesday, September 25
5-9 pm • All DCs
MEET OUR LOCAL FARMERS
ENJOY LIVE FIDDLE MUSIC!

MENU FEATURING:
Butternut Squash Soup (local)
Roast Turkey (local)
Herbed Roast Pork
Swordfish
Ratatouille (local)
Stuffed Peppers (local)
Harvest Fall Vegetable Medley (local)
Fresh Corn on the Cob (local)
Salad Bar (local)
Warm Sour Cream Apple Crisp with Local Ice Cream

GUEST FARMS:
1. Australis
2. Bart's Homemade Ice Cream
3. Bashista Orchards
4. Clarkdale Fruit Farm, Inc.
5. Cold Springs Orchard
6. Cook Farm
7. Cook Honey
8. J. Czajkowski Farm
9. Lightlife
10. Mapleline Farm
11. North Hadley Sugar Shack
12. Nourse Farms, Inc.
13. Pine Hill Orchard
14. Rao's Coffee
15. Warm Colors Apiary
16. Diemand Farm, Inc.

DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Something for everyone

BIG E from page 4

tions. With two buildings dedicated to shopping and endless rows of booths, there are countless options of goods ranging from the practical, to the creative, to the odd.

However, crafts remain the exposition's primary commodity.

"I've been at the Big E for years and years – it's a very nice fair," said Lois Bartholomae, of Pittsburg, Penn., a craft exhibitor in the Young Building. "It's how a lot of us make money – traveling from fair to fair. I've been doing this for 30 years and I wouldn't do it if I didn't like what I'm doing."

There's also no shortage of people eager to sell you household items. From titanium cook wear imported from Germany, to a hybrid mop-broom, there's little one can do to escape the appeal of the unique merchandise sold on the grounds.

Nestled between the state buildings and the Midway lies an unassuming cluster of 19th century buildings centered around a green. Storrowton Village's structures were transferred to their present location shortly after the fair's founding and are staffed by knowledgeable tour guides each September.

"I've been volunteering at Storrowton for eight years, so I enjoy it," said Andrea Witek, a West Springfield native. "A lot of people come through and are surprised that it's even here because they've never seen it before. I love talking about the house and how it was to live in the 19th century; a lot of kids don't even know what took place back then."

After experiencing the quaintness of the one-room schoolhouse and the grimy labor of the blacksmith shop, a foreigner may be surprised to find booths featuring real-world anomalies scattered along almost every walkway.

"It's a big fair," said John Ivain of Goshen, Conn., a veteran carny. "We get all different kinds of [reactions], but usually it's a surprise that things can be as big or small as they are."

Ivain's booth promised "An eight foot long, 1,000 pound pig, with barns 100 pounds each and enough sausage to feed 100 people."

Though the opportunity to observe a massive pig or a miniature horse may not whet an individual's appetite, the fair has enough cuisine options to satisfy even the pickiest eater. Just bring a full wallet and some self-control. With an unnecessarily large number of vendors selling deep-fried Twinkies and Oreo cookies, temptation lies at every corner.

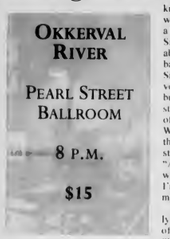
"It's delicious and very filling," said Joyce Ragusa of Stamford, Conn., while dining on a Big E cream puff, the fair's signature dessert.

"It's probably my 30th year coming here," added Joyce's husband John. "My favorite part is definitely the food," he said, referring to what keeps him coming back.

To keep the fair fresh every year, The Big E features different exhibits and performances throughout the grounds, including a few well-known musical acts and a five shark exhibit.

As fairgoers return to their vehicles at the end of the night under The Big E's towering spotlights, it's almost a certainty that they will come back next year.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.



COURTESY BIG E MEDIA RELEASE 2007

Big E is located in West Springfield and its entertainment quality rivals the entertainment of Six Flags. Big E is also more affordable for families and college students alike to visit.

Song-writing skills still matter most allusion, intricate story telling, extended metaphor, five-dollar words and quotation marks. Even though many of the songs are not autobiographical, Sheff puts himself into the story and injects his own brand of intelligence. The most recent album, "The Stage Names," contains many examples of his unique approach to songwriting and storytelling.

RIVER from page 4

For example, a song called "Savannah Smiles" tells the tale of the suicide of adult-film star Shannon "Savannah" Wilsey. Sheff takes the role of Wilsey's father as he reminisces about Shannon's life. He sings, "Photos on the wall...she's my baby... she's my baby doll... Is she someone I don't know at all?" The theme of not knowing the ones we love is relatable, even though it explores the aftershock of a specifically singular event.

"John Allyn Smith Sails" is another extremely tragic song. It is about John Allyn Smith, also known as poet John Berryman, who ended his life by jumping off a bridge in 1972. As in "Savannah Smiles," Sheff is empathetic about his subjects. Right off the bat, he put himself in the place of Smith and sang, "By the second verse, dear friends, my head will burst and my life will end." The story continues with descriptions of conflicting feelings about life. With Sheff's voice paired with the rhythm electric guitar, the story reaches a climax, saying "And so I fly into the brightest winter sun of this frozen town... I'm stripped down to move on, my friends; I'm gone."

Not every song is completely serious though. "Plus Ones," off of "The Stage Names," was Sheff's attempt at writing a "novelty song."

According to an interview with Pitchfork Media, "Plus Ones" was written on the last day of SXSW. Sheff was fatigued from the grueling schedule and one night was listening to "96 Tears" by "?" and the Mysterians." He started to laugh as he pondered the title of the song and how no one would want to hear a song called "97 Tears." The song begins on a scathing note with "No one wants to hear about your 97th tear...So dry your eyes or let it go uncried, my dear."

"96 Tears" is not the only song Sheff addresses. He also refers to Nena's "99 Luftballons," Paul Simon's "50 Ways To Leave Your Lover," The Cresta' "16 Candles," R.E.M.'s "7 Chinese Brothers," David Bowie's "TVC15" and The Commodores' "Three Times a Lady."

The show begins at 8:30. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

Allie Roth can be reached at aroth@student.umass.edu.

Okkerval River's "lit rock" covers many subjects. Their songs, Savannah Smiles" is about an adult film star.

Stars latest album rebuilds melodies

STARS from page 5

Book" and "Today Will Be Better, I Swear!" Campbell belts it out giving everything he has to give. This is why Campbell is the heart and soul of Stars, which has been the case on previous albums. His confessional lyrics, tenderness, raging passion and crisp articulation heard on "Barricade," "Personal," "In Our Bedroom after the War," and others make him the star.

Digressing from the vocals, the instrumentals on "In Our Bedroom" are quite a shocker. In the past, Stars has produced some of the most poignant sounds heard in indie pop today. The melodies are infectious and have the aptitude to make you melt. This feeling was most likely rendered by their orchestral pop sound, which is far more prevalent on "Set Yourself on Fire" than on "In Our Bedroom."

To be blunt, this album is less eclectric than "Set Yourself on Fire" by a landslide. The melodies are still likeable, but are lacking that edge everyone knows they are capable of. The band tries to compensate with more Millan to create that golden pop sound, but isn't fooling anyone. Stars does not play to their full capacity, and it is saddening. If anything, Stars' mainstream instrumentals parallel more their work on "Heart" than on any other album. So there must be some glorious ulterior motive here for their decisions; it is Stars, for Christ's sake.

"Listening to this album, it is clear to realize their need to rebuild love and find redemption following their last album. In order to achieve such things, they needed to recreate the sound of immature and rapidly growing love that is heard on "Heart." Although you may consider this a step back for Stars musically, it is all a part of their eternal quest.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF ARTIST

Stars's latest album has little growth from their previous releases, but is still a worthy pick up anyway.

Latest rock 'n' roll mission complete sons from the hard rock side of Deerhoof. The Bunnies' drummer might have been their biggest asset, and luckily they took advantage of his talent, featuring him in great quantities throughout the set. Occasionally their music would drag, as the band seemed unsure when to end one song and start another. Condensing their songs, and cutting down a bit on the sometimes distracting theatrics, could conceivably lead the Bunnies to stronger gigs.

BURMA from page 5

Mission of Burma breathed some fresh air in the room, wearing street clothes and lacking any type of prop. Roger Miller, bassist Clint Conley, and drummer Peter Prescott looked like someone's cool uncle who, incidentally, was in a profound rock band.

Mission of Burma started their set off with two excellent tracks from their last album, 2006's "The Obliterati." "1001 Pleasant Dreams," the fifth track on the record started the over two-hour set off. The album's first track, "2wice," came next, one of the band's more pop-oriented recordings. Other songs played during the night featured tracks from 2004's "ONoffON," including "Falling" and "Dirt," and 1983's "Einstein," from the record "Vs." Mission of Burma didn't forget their roots, and reached back to their first EP, "Signals, Calls, and Marches," to bring the house down with "Academy Light Song," during their first encore.

All three members of the band took part in vocal duties, although Prescott, the drummer and leading jokester, only sang on two or three songs. Most of the time he was trading jibes with members of the audience between tunes, creating a playful and laid-back atmosphere.

Mission of Burma hit their stride mid-way through their set, around the time they started up "Set-t-p," a track from "ONoffON." Encapsulating the crowd with their musical chops and enthusiasm started a kind of symbiotic relationship, as the band starting feeding off the crowd's energy. Embracing their inner punk, but still keeping focus as immensely talented musicians, Mission of Burma convincingly displayed what it means to be rock heroes.

The band seemed genuinely happy that their fans were singing along to music written 25 years ago. By the time the last song of the first set wrapped up, "Spider's Web," from "The Obliterati," the crowd was won over and then some. And of course, after such a strong performance, Mission of Burma came out to finish the night with two encores. Mission of Burma successfully showed Northampton what rock music should sound like.

Corey Charron can be reached at ccharron@student.umass.edu

WHAT'S YOUR DESTINATION?

DEPARTURES

Airline/Flt. No.	Destination	Gate	Time	Remarks
JAPAN AIR. 061	MARITA	105	2:00P	DEPARTED
AMERICAN 7211	MARITA	106	2:00P	DEPARTED
LAN CHILE 601	LIMA-B. AIRES	107	2:10P	DEPARTED
AMERICAN 7709	LIMA-B. AIRES	110	2:10P	DEPARTED
THAI AIR 773	MARITA-BANGKOK	114	2:10P	BOARDING
ASIANA 201	INCHON	115	2:30P	BOARDING
UNITED 4661	INCHON	121	2:30P	BOARDING
VARIG 8839	SAO PAULO-RIO DE JA	121	2:30P	BOARDING
AERO CALIF 133	DURANGO-TORREON	122	2:30P
SINGAPORE 011	MARITA-SINGAPORE	123	2:30P	BOARDING
LUFTANSA 457	FRANKFURT	103	2:55P	BOARDING
SWISS 041	ZURICH	104	2:55P	BOARDING
AMERICAN 6211	ZURICH	105	2:10P
AIR FRANCE 065	PARIS	106	2:10P
CHINA AIR. 005	TAIPEI	107	2:10P
AIR PACIFIC 811	FIJI	110	2:30P
AERO CALIF 147	LORETO-LA PAZ-GUAD.	114	2:30P
TAHITI NUI 021	PAPEETE	115	4:10P

STUDY ABROAD FAIR
Today at 4PM, Student Union Ballroom
Sponsored by the International Programs Office

MOVING ON?
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's rateable cars
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

PEARSON
National Evaluation Systems (NES) is a leader in the testing industry, providing customized assessments for teacher licensure. NES is part of Pearson Education, one of the world's premier education companies.
PART-TIME TEMPORARY POSITIONS
We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately, pay attention to details, and be comfortable in a busy work environment. Various work schedules are available between 9:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. Additional ongoing positions are available during conferences at our Hadley office. Hours for these table assistant positions are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Preference will be given to individuals who can work 15+ hours a week. Pay rate starts at $8.00/hr. (Req. #20165)
Applications accepted only at www.pearsoned.com.
E.O.E.

For a good time visit our web site www.daily-collegian.com.
You will be glad you did.

Upset attempt fails

Late UConn goal squashes hopes of Minutewomen

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts field hockey team's upset bid against No. 4 Connecticut was crushed when the Huskies' Lauren Aird broke a 2-2 tie with a late second half goal in Storrs, Conn., on Saturday afternoon.

UMass	2
UConn	3

The Minutewomen (4-5) drew first blood on a Lauren Gillespie goal six minutes before halftime. The junior forward took a Mary Shea pass and snuck it in the left side of the cage past UConn goalkeeper Andrea Mainiero.

Gillespie scored 13 goals last season off the bench for UMass, but this was her first of the 2007 campaign.

UMass forced Mainiero to make four saves in the first half, while Minutewoman goalkeeper Becky Letourneau only had to make one.

Although they were unable to create shots on net off of its penalty corners, UConn (9-1) did hold a 4-1 advantage in the opening half.

UMass will try to get back to .500 on Wednesday night when they host the winless Brown Bears at 7 p.m.

Gillespie's goal was the extent of the scoring in the first half, but the Huskies responded with an equalizer from Jennifer Kleinhans just over 15 minutes into the second half. The 2006 Big East Defensive Player of the Year earned a penalty stroke and was able to shoot high stick-side to beat Letourneau.

UMass freshman Jaime Bourazeris responded less than four minutes later with the first goal of her UMass career.

Back Kristina Do Rosario found her teammate in front of the net to put the pressure back on the Huskies.

The pattern of alternating goals continued, and exactly four minutes later UConn's Melissa Gonzalez scored off one of her own rebounds to even the game at two. UMass midfielder Kara Murphy was able to dive in front of the net to save the shot, but Gonzalez collected the rebound and found the back of the net.

With five minutes remaining, the Minutewomen had a chance to regain the lead for a third time, but Gillespie's shot clanged off the right post.

No more goals were scored until Aird connected off a rebound with 1:17 left in the game. The junior's first goal of the season gave the Huskies their first lead, but it was well-timed and UConn earned another win in its impressive 2007 season.

Had UMass won, it would have been the first time it beat a ranked opponent in seven years. The loss was the fourth in the last five games for the team.

The Minutewoman offense did pressure Mainiero to make five saves on the game. UConn only registered five shots on goal, but Letourneau let three by her guard.

The loss dropped the senior's record to 1-4 and save percentage to .652.

UMass was not without its chances to win the game. Junior Katelyn Orlando had a goal called off when the official ruled that it had rolled off her foot.

The Minutewomen only had three penalty corner opportunities, but Orlando's chance to score came off a Mary Shea penalty corner.

Just minutes later, Katie Kelly came up the left side and got a shot on net that Mainiero saved. Rachael Mervine, who led the team with three shots on goal, was in position to pepper the goalie with two rebound shots, but Mainiero was up to the challenge on both.

Cher King has paced the Minutewoman offense with five goals on the season, but is on a four-game scoring drought.

Without any shots on goal from their offensive leader, UMass lost the shots-on-goal battle 7-6 to the Huskies.

Mike Connors can be reached at mconnors.student.umass.edu.

UM defense dominates Maine

FOOTBALL from page 10

Association) were particularly successful in the first two minutes of the game – scoring on a 62-yard run from Lawrence on their second play from scrimmage, and scoring again 15 seconds later on a 2-yard touchdown pass following a Maine (1-3, 0-2 CAA) fumble.

After Coen completed a 15-yard pass to J.J. Moore, Lawrence busted through the line on the next play, breaking a number of tackles en route to the end zone and a career-long 62-yard run.

On Maine's first play from scrimmage following the Lawrence touchdown, tight end Matthew Mulligan fumbled the ball after being hit by safety Jeromy Miles. The ball fell right into the hands of fellow safety, Michael Meggett, as he returned the ball to Maine's 2-yard line.

Coen – who Brown wasn't sure would play due to a left knee injury – gave his team a 14-0 advantage on the next play, completing a pass to the wide open Chris Zardas for the touchdown. Wearing a knee brace, Coen finished the afternoon with 142 yards passing and completed 15-of-19 – including one touchdown and one interception.

Following Coen's touchdown pass, Maine's drive went backwards and they were forced to punt. The Minuteman offense went right back to work, as Rasheed Rancher caught a 29-yard pass and Lawrence totaled 23 yards of offense in a drive that resulted in his second touchdown run of the game.

Lawrence added his third touchdown of the afternoon in the third quarter – a 1-yard run that gave the Minutemen a 31-0 lead.

The Black Bears had trouble sustaining any drives on offense, particularly through the air, as quarterback Adam Farkes threw for 67 yards on 6-of-15 passing. Maine had some success on the ground, with 176 yards rushing – but the majority of those yards came deep within its own territory. Three Black Bears ran for over 50 yards (Farkes, tailback Jhamal Huelen and fullback Anthony Cotrone) but none of them topped 60 yards.

"I thought we did extremely well," Brown said, referring to his defense. "When [Farkes] did try to throw, he had no time. They made their yards, but we never fell out of a comfort zone."

Maine finally broke through offensively in the fourth quarter, when Farkes hit a wide open Mulligan for an 18-yard touchdown. It was his first-career touchdown pass, and the first that Maine had thrown this season.

That was the lone bright spot for the Maine offense, specifically in the passing game as Farkes got little help from his receivers. Of the six times Maine receivers got open and caught a pass, they fumbled and turned the ball over twice. In fact, they fumbled the football on each of their first two completed passes.

"They can reduce the field to 9-on-9 with those corners," Cosgrove said. "We're not good enough to challenge [UMass cornerback Sean] Smalls."

"Our thought process all week was to play a 60-minute football game," Brown said. "It was really a 60-minute effort. We were quality in all three phases.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw.student.umass.edu

Maroon and White display discipline for first time in '07

RICE from page 10

ties, dropped passes, fumbles, and interceptions were abundant – but the Minutemen did what good teams do on rough days. They found a way to win.

It's a no-brainer that ugly wins are better than pretty losses, but eventually, ugly football catches up to you, and you start losing ugly as the opponents get tougher.

Against the Black Bears, the Minutemen won pretty, and they needed to start doing so to prove they are still part of the class of the Football Championship Subdivision. During the first three weeks, UMass looked like an unfinished product.

Holy Cross turned a blowout into a game too close for comfort with a trio of touchdowns in the second half. After UMass jumped out to a 37-9 lead, the Crusaders got the Minuteman defense reeling, and got within a touchdown of tying the game.

The defense tightened up late in the fourth, and a late field goal assured UMass would hold on against its Patriot League opponent.

However, meanwhile in Ann Arbor, Mich., Appalachian State – the team UMass fell to in the championship game last December – was busy completing possibly the biggest upset in college football history.

Two teams that were so close – tied going into the fourth quarter – appeared worlds apart in Week 1 of the 2007 season.

At Colgate, a rough second half against Holy Cross carried over into a rather unpleasant first half, in which the Minutemen could not accomplish anything.

Once again though, UMass found a way to win, capitalizing on a fumble recovery and an interception with two touchdowns. Despite getting outplayed, the Minutemen took a lead into the half, and came out swinging in the third quarter, running away with the win.

Then last week, the Minutemen got closer with a strong performance against Towson, but still struggled with penalties and miscues. The game was never close, as the defense completely stifled Sean Schaefer and the Tiger offense, but things still weren't quite right.

It was clear following all three games that Brown wasn't thrilled with his team's performance, and neither were the players. Special teams plays were sloppy, the offense never really had a rhythm and the defense looked like its best games were still to come.

Everything came together at Maine. UMass committed just four penalties (compared to 13, 13 and 15 in the first three games), one interception – which was nullified by an exceptional defensive performance – and was fundamentally sound. There were no fumbled punts, dropped passes or unnecessary penalties – just solid, dominant football.

The game was not supposed to be so one-sided. This is the same team that, with the Atlantic 10 title on the line in 2006, came within an extra point of overtime against the Minutemen.

This is the Maroon and White squad that fought past everyone on its way to the NCAA championship game last year. And it couldn't have arrived at a better time.

The Minutemen have a date with No. 14 Boston College in Chestnut Hill Saturday, which will likely be their biggest test this season. While it doesn't count for anything in the standings, if UMass plays well against a very good Howl Subdivision team, the momentum could build and carry the team through the rest of the regular season.

A bye week follows the BC game, but after that, the CAA season is in full swing. Chestnut Hill is no place to try to find yourself, so the Minutemen are fortunate to have seemingly solved most of their problems before visiting the Eagles, and before hitting the meat of the conference schedule.

Brown acknowledged the team's struggles in the first three games, but never appeared worried.

It's clear now why he never sweated the 41 penalties. He could tell things were coming together.

He defended his players, saying that the penalties were mostly due to aggression, something he certainly would not try to curtail, but the mental mistakes there was no excuse for. Yet, Brown seemed confident in every interview.

The press conference after the win over Maine explained it. He pointed out the four penalties, Coen's quiet but efficient day (15-of-19 for 142 yards), and an outstanding running game that bowled over the Black Bear defense like no one has done in a long time.

Like I said, it couldn't have come at a better time; UMass was running out of time to figure things out. Now the Minutemen can go into BC and their bye week with confidence and come back for the final six weeks of conference play.

If Maine was any indication, there should no longer be any doubt that this team deserved its preseason prediction to win the inaugural CAA championship.

UMass needed to make a statement before heading into a game they will likely need a handful of miracles to win, and they did just that.

Now, regardless of what happens in Chestnut Hill, the Minutemen ought to be feared by the rest of the CAA when they return to the field two weeks later.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jeremy.s.student.umass.edu

Defense saves UMass early, offense picks up slack late

SOCCER from page 10

ent game," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "[Simmons's] performance today was crucial for us to get the victory."

The first half ended with the teams still scoreless. At halftime, Koch and his team made some changes to adjust to the Huskies's physical play. And 10 minutes into the second half, the adjustments paid off.

Sophomore Mark DeSantis won a 50-50 ball and headed it to the left of the penalty area. Arikian gathered the ball and patiently waited for a teammate to come open for a cross. Hogan located Arikian and situated himself in a seam between two Northeastern defenders directly in front of the NU goal.

Arikian saw Hogan and drew another of the NU backs toward to him, giving Hogan more room to work with. He sent the ball into the box and Hogan went after the ball in the air, getting to it at his peak and lining it past NU goalkeeper Mahmoud Talaat to give the Minutemen a 1-0 lead in the 56th minute.

"I saw [Arikian] coming down the sideline and every time the ball goes down the sideline I have to find a way to get open in the box," Hogan said. "The cross was pretty much perfect and it found my head, so I just tried to get something on it and it went in."

Moments later, the UMass attackers beat Talaat for the second time and again, it all began with a play made by Mark DeSantis. The forward blistered a shot at Talaat who made a great save and forced the ball out of bounds to his left, giving the Minutemen a corner kick.

Red-shirt junior Doug Rappaport served the ball into the box and center back Kenny Cook got to it first. Talaat stopped Cook's header attempt and two other shots were blocked before the ball came to Mike DeSantis. The junior collected the ball parallel to the end line to the goal's right. He slid the ball toward the net and past Talaat.

Initially, officials awarded the goal to Hogan because it looked as though he nudged it home just as it approached the line. After the match, the officials changed the ruling and Mike DeSantis received credit for the goal.

UMass didn't slow down after getting its first 2-0 lead of the season. Freshman Stuart Amick and junior Prince Ofosu combined for two great chances late in the game but failed to convert.

Amick gathered the ball and streaked into UMass's offensive third on the left side. Ofosu mimicked Amick, starting a run of his own in the middle of the field. Amick crossed the ball in to Ofosu who tried to redirect the shot, but whiffed and the ball rolled harmlessly out of bounds for a goal kick. In last Sunday's match with Harvard, Ofosu found himself in similar circumstances, receiving chance after chance without capitalizing.

"You can bang your head against the wall or you can laugh about it," Koch said. "You've just got to keep trying. I think [Ofosu] is doing a great job. He's dangerous. As you saw he can make things happen and sometime he's on and sometimes he's not."

GAME NOTES

Junior midfielder Tony Bassett missed his third consecutive game with a bone bruise, but will be ready for next Saturday's match with Boston University, according to Koch. Simmons's shutout gives him 15 for his career and puts him one shy of the school record of 16 set by Bryan O'Quinn in 2001.

Arikian's assist was the first point of his collegiate career.

Joe Mallozzi can be reached at jmelozzi.a.student.umass.edu

Toughness on display in win

PHYSICAL from page 10

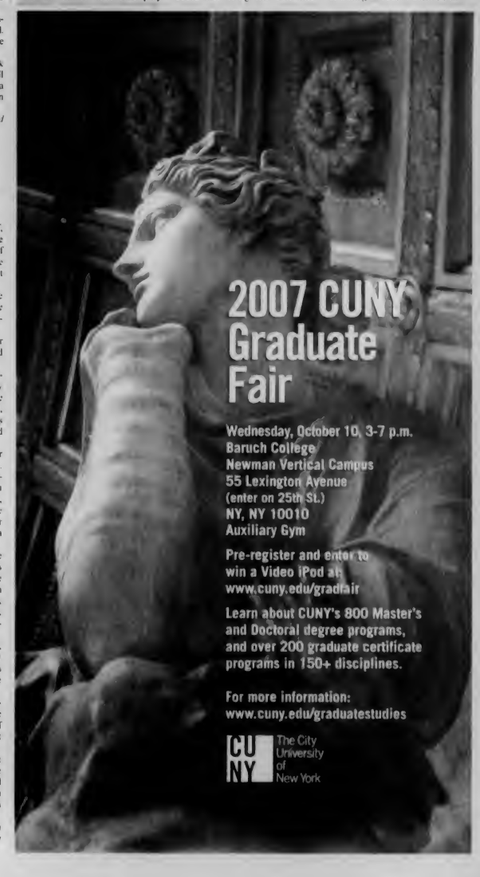
where they use their aggressiveness to their advantage. The first half I thought we didn't do it as well, the second we did better at it."

The team further adjusted its play during halftime to take better care of the ball in the face of NU's aggressive play.

"We just talked about playing the way you face," Koch said. "When the ball comes to you and you have your back to them, you've got to play it back to the people that can see the field in front of you so you can keep possession."

The Huskies preferred to kick the ball into the box from the air, rather than ease play up the field. These kicks typically resulted in physical contact with players jockeying for position near the landing area.

But red-shirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons collected several balls that overshot their intended recipients. The long hang time on most kicks allowed Simmons to get good reads and intercept the ball before Northeastern had a chance to react.



"I felt comfortable; they were trying to keep it away from me I think," Simmons said. "It's something I've really been trying to get comfortable with."

With NU trying to limit UMass's chances in the middle of the field, the Minutemen could not bring the ball into the penalty area without being hassled for possession.

"We had a lot of space outside, but I just had a tough game trying to hold onto the ball, because it was really clustered in the middle," Hogan said. "My job was just to knock it out wide or knock it back to the midfield."

Koch also made a higher number of substitutions than usual – an obvious effort to keep his players fresh. The coach removed Hogan five minutes after the team's second goal in favor of junior Prince Ofosu. Hogan returned to the pitch in the 81st minute with the two forwards finishing the game.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

SEP 24 2007

Three-goal half carries UM

Offensive outburst leads to win in non-conference finale

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Three first-half goals were all the Massachusetts women's soccer team needed to defeat Vermont Sunday afternoon at Rudd Field.

After a Jessica Becker goal in the sixth minute gave Vermont (1-7-1) an early surprise lead, the Minutewomen (5-4-1) scored three unanswered goals to secure a 3-1 victory.

"We started out giving them a little too much room to play to their front runners feet," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "It took us a while to get that solved so that goal really changed the mindset [of Vermont]."

Becker's strike beat UMass goalkeeper Kristin Walker to the bottom left corner and gave the Catamounts their only lead of the day.

Only 23 seconds later, sophomore Sydney Stoll received a pass from Katie Ruggles and fooled Vermont goalkeeper Eliza Bradley before finding an empty net to shoot at.

Rudy said the quick response was key to his team's success.

"If we had to play from behind another 10 or 15 minutes, it probably would've given them strength to continue and maybe expand their game," he said.

UMass	2
Vermont	0

With her first half conversion, Stoll now leads the team with four goals.

Britt Canfield nearly scored her fourth goal of the season in the 13th minute. She dribbled past Bradley but didn't put enough velocity on the ball before a Vermont defender was able to come back and clear it away from the empty net.

UMass would eventually capitalize in the 25th minute when Kelsey Andersen hammered home a Vanessa Paltry shot Bradley mishandled. The attack came after a UMass free kick was served into the middle of the field. Jenny Roehrig and Canfield registered assists on the goal.

The final goal of the afternoon came off a corner kick from Roehrig. She served a perfect ball into the middle, Canfield redirected. The flick, went straight to Christina Nunes, who headed the ball into the upper-right hand corner of the net.

After the UMass defense gave up the quick goal early, it tightened up and limited the Catamounts' offensive chances.

"In the beginning, they had a great ball," Walker said. "The girl had a great touch on it and had a shot off a one-time ball, which was an excellent shot. There really wasn't much the defense could've done about that. After that, we just buckled down and did awesome."

While Walker was pleased with the defensive play in front of her, Rudy continues to praise his goalie's consistency.

"She's been steady and I'll say that until she graduates," he said. "She's the steadiest keeper we've had here. There's no highs and lows. It's all in between, but it's on an upper level."

Walker made eight saves in the game, but the one Vermont goal ended her goals against streak at 273:59.

"I was bored, but a bored game's a good game," she said of her performance today. "I love just watching us play, especially when we own the game, which we basically did today."

The second half didn't include as much action as the first, but the Minutewomen controlled possession and found themselves with multiple scoring opportunities.

Less than three minutes into the half, Roehrig sent Bradley diving to her right to make a save. She nearly scored again in the 57th minute on a free kick that hit the crossbar.

Rudy was pleased with finishing the non-conference schedule undefeated, but he is now focusing on a difficult conference schedule.

"Not to diminish the other teams that we've played, but we haven't played a really, really strong schedule," he said.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor at student.umass.edu.

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll scored her team-high fourth goal of the season in the Minutewomen's 3-1 win over Vermont on Sunday. The win improved UMass's record to 5-0-1 on the season, the remainder of the Maroon and White's games come against Atlantic 10 opponents.

Nunes returns in time for A-10 play

Senior works back from injury, caps UMass rally against UVM

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Before the season started, senior Christina Nunes was entering her final year with the Massachusetts women's soccer team, but unfortunately, she suffered a minor set back after spraining her medial collateral ligament in the preseason.

Almost a month later, Nunes is back to near perfect form as she played 45 minutes in UMass's win over Vermont on Sunday. She notched her first goal of the season, putting the Minutewomen on top, 3-1, late in the first half on Sunday.

"I still have a lot of work to do, I still have to get there, but it felt good to get out there," Nunes said. "The knee feels good. I just need to work on my agility and give it another week of training and I should be 100 percent."

Not discouraged by the injury, Nunes saw her first action after three weeks of rehab against Hartford, where she played five minutes. The following week UMass coach Jim Rudy bumped her minutes up to 19, as she began to feel stronger.

"This is her first serious time she's played and she got that nice flick on the corner from Britt Canfield and buried a header, which is great for her," Rudy said. "You can see she's still not real fit, not real quick, but she will get there as we go."

With 6:08 remaining in the first half, UMass was leading, 2-1.

Senior midfielder Jenny Roehrig had a corner kick and she hit the ball in front of the net towards Canfield. Canfield's header was deflected near Nunes as she knocked the header into the net to put UMass up for good.

"Britt made her run in tight and kind of flipped it over the defenders and I was just at the right place at the right time. The keeper was coming one way and I headed it the opposite way the keeper was coming," Nunes said of her third career goal.

The goals are coming from different people and everyone is getting a chance to contribute on the offense. Canfield is one of the top scorers on the team, but this season she continues to find open teammates who are putting away goals, and she leads the team with six assists. Sophomore Sydney Stoll has been the benefit of most of those passes, as she leads the team with four goals.

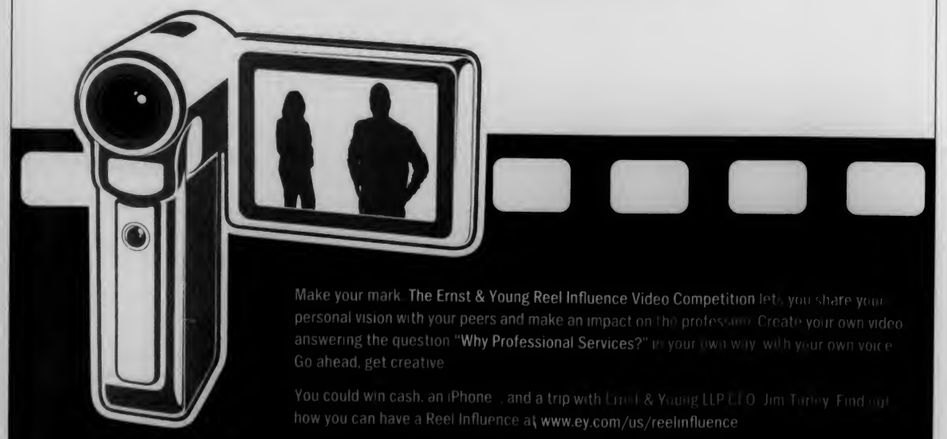
"Getting your first ball connected early, receiving and getting it moving quickly before other teams can shut it down," Rudy said about the keys to getting the offense going.

Nunes is 1 of 6 players to have scored for the Minutewomen. They have scored eight goals in their last three contests, after starting the season slow with four goals in the first three games. Nunes was excited about the goal, however she also noticed that she has more work to do.

"It felt great. I personally don't think that I had the best technical game, but that goal lifted my confidence for a little bit," Nunes said. "It's good to contribute back to the team, they worked hard all season and it felt good to give something back to my teammates."

Rudy said with Nunes back on the field the team is "relatively healthy," and it came at a good time as the Minutewomen will start playing their Atlantic 10 opponents. The Maroon and White have 11 regular season games left over the next seven weeks.

Nunes looks forward to the challenge ahead of her and she will rely on her teammates to support her play on the field.



"I really think that [my teammates] are helping me out, keeping my confidence up and they're doing a lot of great stuff on the field, so it's just a matter of me connecting to them and letting them do all the pretty stuff."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames at student.umass.edu.

Win Cash, an iPhone™, and More!

Reel Influence

Your Future. Your Vision. Your Video.

Make your mark. The Ernst & Young Reel Influence Video Competition lets you share your personal vision with your peers and make an impact on the profession. Create your own video answering the question "Why Professional Services?" in your own way, with your own voice. Go ahead, get creative.

You could win cash, an iPhone™, and a trip with Ernst & Young LLP CEO Jim Turley. Find out how you can have a Reel Influence at www.ey.com/us/reelinfluence

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

Ernst & Young
Quality In Everything We Do

© 2007 Ernst & Young LLP

Don't be Frontin'

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		6		3	5			2
				7			9
9		5				7		1
						3		6
	8	7				4	5
5		9
8		3				1		7
	6			8
7			3	6		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 It all falls
5 Harvest
9 Univer- haircuts
14 Ghostly greetings
15 Lowell or Talbot
16 ___ gotta
17 Boxing match
18 Collectors' groups
19 Walt Disney's middle name
20 Sound of a wet impact
22 Van Helfin film: "Heroes"
24 "Shop ___ You Drop"
26 Juliet's lover
27 Store of weapons
31 Springs
35 Snakelike scarf
36 Modern lute
39 Screwdriver, e.g.
40 Tempe sch.
41 Makes possible
43 John's Yoko
44 Immoral deeds
46 Baby's birth
47 Gullible person
48 Soundness
50 Stone and Hardy
52 Vicinities
55 Gasteyer of SNL
56 Courses of action
60 Put in office
64 Sin
65 Bump off
67 Reverberation
68 Followed a trajectory
69 Austen novel
70 Brit's streetcar
71 Second decade
72 Assigned work
73 Phoenix live

DOWN
1 Flows back
2 Aerobatic stunt
3 "Heart and ___"
4 Will's contents
5 "Kidnapped" sush
6 Looks at 7 Holy table
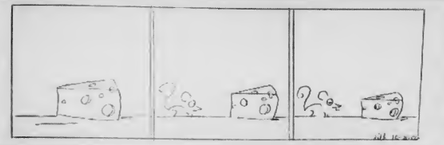
8 Basil concoction
9 Sound setup
10 Didn't yield
11 La Scala showstopper
12 Go-with- anything color
13 Give tip to
21 Bares fore
23 Bumbershoot
25 Liftoffs
27 Put to shame
28 Comic O'Donnell
29 Dry-heat bath
30 False witness
32 Hangman's knot
33 Germanic god
34 Pig's dinner
37 TV guide abbr.
38 Play of "Battle Cry"
42 River of Rouen
45 Slow down
49 Trampoles
51 Gentlemen's gentlemen
53 Valuable quality
54 Diamond of "Night Court"
56 ___ du jour
57 Not common
58 Back then
59 Houston and Hull
61 Hosiery shade
62 Detective Charlie
63 Male cats
66 Tibetan beast

Sixty-Six Down: Tibetan Beast

Submit your comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!



(413) 545-3500

Quote of the Day

"Freedom's just another word for nothin' left to lose..."

-Janis Joplin

Ecology By Jen Fill

Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson

